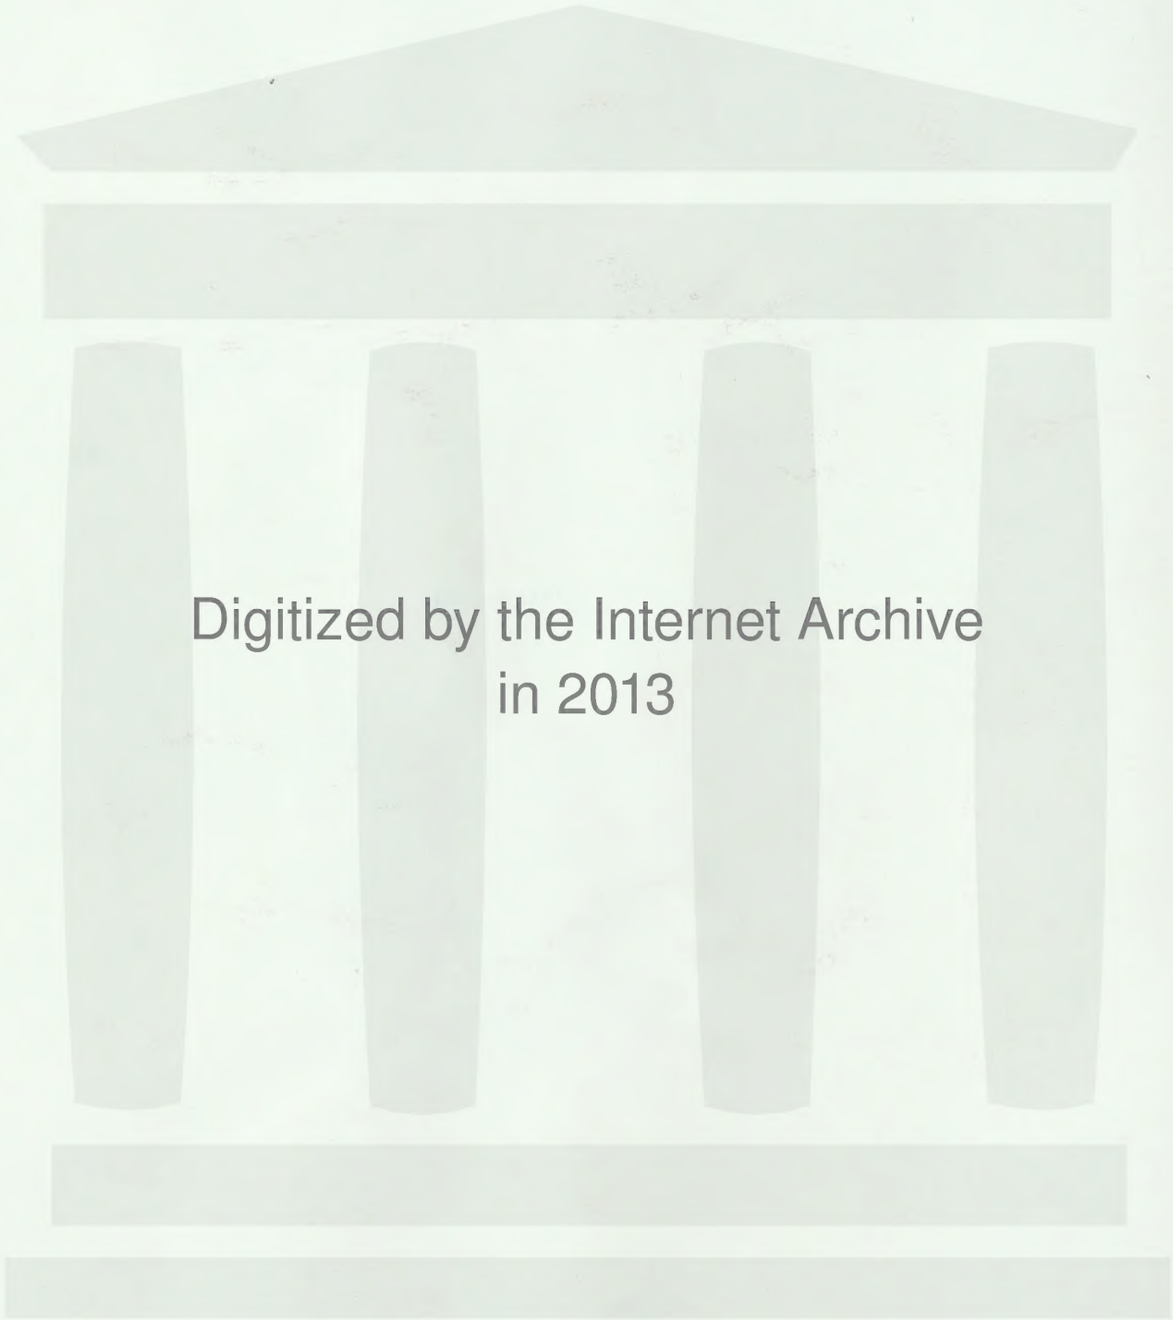
$z = 2\pi i = 4$



For Reference

Not to be taken from this room

√238169

Every person who maliciously cuts, defaces, breaks or injures any book, map, chart, picture, engraving, statue, coin, model, apparatus, or other work of literature, art, mechanics or object of curiosity, deposited in any public library, gallery, museum or collection is guilty of a misdemeanor.

Penal Code of California, 1915, Section 623.

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2013

http://archive.org/details/ladieshomejourna65julwyet

HOME

THE MAGAZINE WOMEN

JOURNAL

238169

BURLINGAME
PUBLIC LIBRARY
Burlingame, Calif.

MRS JOSEPHINE READY
1513 FLORIBUNDO
BURLINGAME CALIF
JAN 50
TNG

GAY PURSUIT · A COMPLETE NOVEL BY ELIZABETH CADELL

CONDENSED IN THIS ISSUE

SHORT STORIES BY GEORGE BRADSHAW · MARY HASTINGS BRADLEY · CHARLOTTE EDWARDS

Manufactured by AYLORD BROS.
Syracuse, N. Y.
Stockton, Calif.

PRAGAN STUDIO

RICHARD ARVAY

When Vichy France handed over 100,000 Jews to the Germans for deportation to Poland, Richard Arvay escaped. After fantastic adventures he reached Rome and was one of 982 fortunate enough to be taken on a troopship to the United States (Fort Ontario.) One day Mrs. Roosevelt visited the refugees. He told her he was a writer, the author of many European plays and movies. "When you publish your first story in English," she told him, "send me a copy." Here it is: A Story Without a Moral.

MARIE HANSEN

Quote, the photographer who did the Italian family for People are People: "I've twisted about to take pictures before Presidents Roosevelt and Truman, Holland's Queen Wilhelmina, France's President Auriol and General de Gaulle, Spain's Dictator Franco, Italy's ex-King Alberto, Molotov, Picasso and Margaret O'Brien. U. N. Security Council Delegate Warren Austin commented: 'Watching you take pictures is like watching a beautiful woman play a harp.' What a wonderful man!"

CHARLOTTE EDWARDS

"As woman's editor of a newspaper I once dispensed knowledge of beauty, fashion, food and love, all of which were new to me then and the first two remain a puzzle. Following my marriage in 1934 I wrote radio continuity for six years. Millions of words, all gone, gone. Now at last I find myself free (when my young son, Tommy, is sleeping) to worry about such things as Posies for Pamela, while my husband goes about his baby-picture-taking business."

JOURNAL CONTENTS

JULY, 1948
Vol. LXV, No. 7

NOVEL CONDENSATION COMPLETE IN THIS ISSUE PAGE

GAY PURSUIT . . . . . Elizabeth Cadell 34

FICTION

A LITTLE MADNESS IN THE SPRING . . . . . George Bradshaw 38
POSIES FOR PAMELA . . . . . Charlotte Edwards 42
MR. CROSBY AND THE FIFTH FREEDOM . . . Mary Hastings Bradley 48
A STORY WITHOUT A MORAL . . . . . Richard Arvay 50

SPECIAL FEATURES

ENDS, MEANS AND VALUES . . . . . Dorothy Thompson 11
RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITIES 11
THE LAST LAUGH . . . . . Louis Untermeyer 31
PEOPLE ARE PEOPLE THE WORLD OVER . . . . John Godfrey Morris 36
DO WE NEED ADULT EDUCATION? . . . . . Lyman Bryson 40
FRENCH ART . . . . . John Walker 41
IF YOU ASK ME . . . . . Eleanor Roosevelt 44
THE ALCOHOLIC AND HIS WOMEN . . . . . Harold Maine 45
HOW AMERICA LIVES: THE CURTINS KNEW WHAT THEY WANTED Dorothy Cameron Disney 117
HAPPILY MARRIED THOUGH HOT-TEMPERED Leslie B. Hohman, M.D. 124

GENERAL FEATURES

OUR READERS WRITE US 5
UNDER-COVER STUFF . . . . . Bernardine Kielty 14
HOMEMAKER SERVICE IN HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT 23
SUBSTITUTING FOR MOTHERS . . . . . Margaret Hickey 23
REFERENCE LIBRARY 24
MAKING MARRIAGE WORK . . . . . Clifford R. Adams 26
LOOK WHO'S TALKING (THE SUB-DEB) . . . Edited by Maureen Daly 28
FIFTY YEARS AGO IN THE JOURNAL • JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN 33
ASK ANY WOMAN . . . . . Marcelene Cox 88
PROTECTING YOUR CHILD FROM POLIO . . Dr. Herman N. Bundesen 149
THIS IS A SNIPPER . . . . . Munro Leaf 153
DIARY OF DOMESTICITY . . . . . Gladys Taber 160

FASHIONS AND BEAUTY

THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT HER . . . HER EASY WAY WITH CLOTHES Wilhela Cushman 52
YOUR COLOR PERSONALITY . . . . . Dawn Crowell Norman 54
COOL AND BEAUTIFUL . . . . . Ruth Mary Packard 56
THE DRESS THAT TAKES YOU EVERYWHERE . . . . Nora O'Leary 127

ARCHITECTURE

ALEXANDRIA . . . . . Richard Pratt 46

FOOD AND HOMEMAKING

FOR FREEDOM'S BIRTHDAY . . . . . Ann Batchelder 58
ALL THIS—AND A FREEZER TOO! . . . . . Gladys Taber 60
LINE A DAY . . . . . Ann Batchelder 62
CONVERSATION PIECE . . . . . Ruth Mills Teague 108
YOUR CHILD AND HIS FOOD . . . . . Louella G. Shouer 128
QUICK AND EASYS FOR TWO . . . . . Louella G. Shouer 136

POETRY

THE MAGNIFICENT MARTHA . . . . . James M. Black, Jr. 12
DRY SEASON . . . . . Kit Wright 73
THE SKY WALKER . . . . . Cosette Middleton 85
FOR ROBERT, GOING PLACES . . . . . Marjorie Lederer Lee 93
A GARDEN FOR ANN-ELISABETH . . . . . Eve Triem 113
GRANDFATHER AND THE CHILD . . . . . Helen Howland Prommel 132
CHANGE . . . . . Rhina P. Espaillat 138
THE YEAR BETWEEN . . . . . Cathleen M. Carpenter 143

Cover Design by Wilhela Cushman

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, copyright 1948 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries.

Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICES: U. S. and Possessions, Canada, Newfoundland, Labrador, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas, 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTY. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company, Walter D. Fuller, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President and Treasurer; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Robert E. MacNeal, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Send your Journal change of address to

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

eauty cream shampoo

hair more beautiful

all 3 ways!

STARLET
Myra Matthews

currently seen in Robert S. Golden's production, "Texas, Brooklyn and Heaven", doubled her appeal after a Shasta Beauty Cream Shampoo.

Lovely Myra reports, "Even the camera 'sees' the difference Shasta makes in my hair. Lots more highlights than I ever knew I had. My hair's easier to fix, too, and so soft."

zing
poo.
asta
eaus no one will k!

has
ried

out. Shasta is safe, kind to hair. Makes mountains of lather even in hardest water. Removes flaky, unlovely dandruff, too. And doesn't spill or run into eyes.

Hurry! For more beautiful hair all three ways—get Shasta. Convenient sizes. All toiletries counters.

PROCTER & GAMBLE'S

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Shasta BEAUTY CREAM Shampoo

New! The Bronze Angel Look — a glowing, velvety summer tan. Never "cakey"... never shiny!

l of e-up!

Angel

Face

-tan

softer mask-y!

watery Smooths
s!

spill over make-up tucks bag.

e Angel.

plus tax.

Our Readers Write Us

Waited Fifty Years—Still Feels Same

West Palm Beach, Florida.

Dear Editor: More than fifty years ago, Mr. Bok sent me the kindest letter I have ever received. I was very young, and had asked if I could write a piece for his paper. He said, "Wait fifty years and let's you and I write on what we think of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL." It's been more than fifty years, and I say there is no other magazine that has ever given as much for the education and uplift of all the women of the world. Sincerely,

MRS. J. W. GILMORE.

Judgment: 1998

Urbana, Illinois.

Dear Goulds: Fifty Years Ago in the Journal is fun, but will you, who edit now, read as silly in fifty years? Your judgment seem as insipid? Your assurance as amusing and unjustified? The chance is yours for real greatness—or criminal failure.

Sincerely,

(Name withheld by request)

If anyone realized how silly he'd look in fifty years, he'd start blushing now. ED.

What About Us Capitalists?

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Dear Editors: I have yet to find a How America Lives article on a capitalist. You know, those people who own their own business. We are one of those. Lou, my husband, never washes a dish, hangs up his clothes or dumps the garbage. Yet in him I see America's opportunities at work. He owns a small sheet-metal shop where he develops and carries out a hundred ideas at once. He struggles with material shortages, union regulations and customers' impatience. And he enjoys every minute.

At home he fixes the radio or the plumbing. He is even building our house. What he doesn't know about mechanics, he learns. For me he is perfect. I wouldn't swap a mother's helper for a handy man any day.

Sincerely,

MILDRED LUCKHARDT.

You were foolish to give your right name, with a man like that. ED.

Best Part of the U. S.

Arkansas City, Kansas.

Dear Editors: One sentence in How America Lives made me stop and think: "To some people in small towns it may seem strange that the Sullivans have such a struggle on an income of $2800 a year." Suddenly it dawned on me what lucky people we are! We are making $2800 a year, more than ever before. But we have always owned our own home—even on $17.50 a week and one baby.

All our friends do as well, some a lot better. But we do live in the very best part of the U. S.; and we have a rich heritage of economy, thrift and "making do"! Of course we split our sheets, and make old towels into washcloths. All of us sew and patch. We were taught that a good housewife does that, no matter how much she could spend. Naturally there are things we want: new equipment, money for vacations, a safe margin for schooling for our youngsters. But we're not "lower middle class" because we don't have them!

Sincerely,

VIRGINIA SPRAY.

"Us Men" Like It Too

West Plains, Missouri.

Dear Sirs: You call yourselves "The Magazine Women Believe In." But what about us men? There were 72 articles in a recent issue that men could, should and do enjoy (76 7/18%) and only 17 articles which would appeal exclusively to women. How about "The Magazine Folks Believe In"?

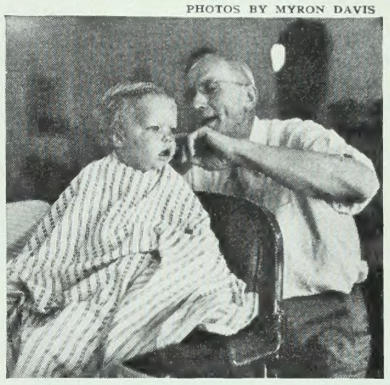
Cordially and most sincerely yours,

CARL B. IKE.

We don't mind men reading over women's shoulders, but it's driving the editor of True nuts. ED.

First Haircut

Brookfield, Illinois.



Dear Editors: This is how our son, Glenn, took his first haircut. He stood it better than we expected. He didn't mind the scissors or clippers, but near the end the barber's brush made him whimper.

Like many parents, we kept postponing the day. His father hated to see the curls sheared worse than I did and insisted on waiting until he could record the process with his camera.

Very truly yours,

CLEMENTINE D. DAVIS.

PHOTOS BY MYRON DAVIS

"Only so much do I know, As I have lived," . . .

. . . says Emerson. Losing your curls for the first . . .

. . . time can be harrowing as Glenn found once, but . . .

as with some things, the end more than justified the means.

(Continued on Page 6)

NEW!

Shasta beauty cream shampoo

leaves your hair more beautiful

all 3 ways!

STARLET

Myra Matthews

currently seen in Robert S. Golden's production, "Texas, Brooklyn and Heaven", doubled her appeal after a Shasta Beauty Cream Shampoo.

Lovely Myra reports, "Even the camera 'sees' the difference Shasta makes in my hair. Lots more highlights than I ever knew I had. My hair's easier to fix, too, and so soft."

NEW! Procter & Gamble's amazing Shasta—the beauty cream shampoo.

NEW! Fragrant, satiny Shasta cream-cleanses your hair . . . beautifies your hair all 3 ways—as no soap—bar or liquid—will! In one Shasta shampoo, your hair will have

- that lustrous "alive" look!
- that sm-o-o-oth-as-satin look!
- that soft, caressable look!

YES, ALL 3! Yet your hair has "body"—it's not limp, not dried out. Shasta is safe, kind to hair. Makes mountains of lather even in hardest water. Removes flaky, unlovely dandruff, too. And doesn't spill or run into eyes.

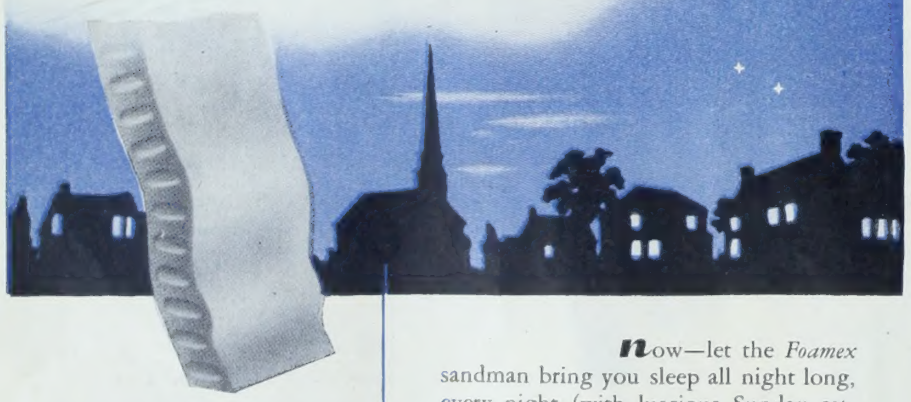
Hurry! For more beautiful hair all three ways—get Shasta. Convenient sizes. All toiletries counters.

PROCTER & GAMBLE'S Shasta BEAUTY CREAM Shampoo

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

magic sleep

the whole night through on a



Firestone FOAMEX* mattress

☆ Full-depth Foamex mattress—Luxurious, air-cooled comfort tailor-made to cradle you with millions of buoyant air-and-latex cells.

☆ Foamex-pad-over-springs mattress—Offers the exquisite comfort of resilient Foamex at a truly moderate cost to you.

see what we mean!

FREE — a sample of this amazing new material—Foamex. Use it for a complexion sponge, make-up sponge. Caress your cheek with its softness and imagine what it's like to sleep on a whole mattress of Foamex! Go to the furniture department of your favorite store or write Firestone, Akron, for your free sponge.

*TRADE MARK © 1948, FIRESTONE TIRE & RUBBER CO.

Now—let the Foamex sandman bring you sleep all night long, every night (with luscious Sunday catnaps for good measure). ☆ ☆ Firestone Foamex mattresses are tailor-made to your slumber needs. Choose the one that suits you best—then enjoy such sleep-perfect nights, you'll wonder how you ever put up with old-fashioned complicated stuffings. ☆ ☆ Ask to be shown a Foamex mattress, and while you're in the furniture department, sink into the luxurious depths of a Foamex-cushioned easy chair.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

BEST TODAY··· STILL BETTER TOMORROW

LISTEN TO THE VOICE OF FIRESTONE MONDAY EVENINGS OVER NBC

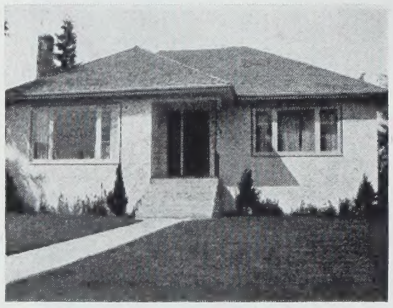
Children's Journal

Mecca, California.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Gould: Munro Leaf has done more, in a pleasant way, to eliminate Nibblers, Bed-Jumpers, Party-Spoilers and what-nots from this household than we could ever have managed alone. The JOURNAL is the only magazine our daughters, eight and six, either know or anticipate.

Sincerely,
R. P. WHITE.

In short, every month they turn over a new leaf. ED.



Housewife Builds a House

Vancouver, B. C., Canada.

Dear Sirs: Discouraged of ever being able to have my dream house built by a contractor, I have just built it myself, or at least supervised the building of it.

It has six rooms, is all electric, is in the very best residential area. It was built in 5½ months (a far shorter time than a contractor would take), and will cost us only $21.98 per month for interest and amortization.

I didn't know a piece of 2" x 4" from a lath when I started, but I do now! The work was all done by the men. I did nothing but get materials when they needed them. If we had had a car, it would have been a lot easier.

"Stolen" from the Journal

My husband works in a bank and let me do all the planning and thus take all the responsibility of the house. We had each saved $1800 while he was with the Tactical Air Force overseas, so all we needed was a small mortgage.

The house was practically planned out of the pages of the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. The carpenters were rather fed up with me showing them pictures from your magazine as to how I wanted the cupboards, fireplace, etc., built by the time we finished. But I don't mind telling anyone that my black-and-red-and-chromium kitchen and glassed-in dinette are straight steals from the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. I have kept a scrapbook of your homes for ten years and another scrapbook of food decorations and another for clothes.

There must be hundreds of American women who could do the same thing I did, and do a better job. When I hear women complaining about how terrible their living conditions are, and how their marriages are being broken up because of it, and see them spending their war savings foolishly, I wonder why they don't build a simple, well-constructed house themselves.

I found a broad-brimmed picture hat and high-heeled sandals a very successful working outfit! And my very washable summer dresses, by the grace of Wilhela Cushman, would start out in the morning visiting huge lumberyards and brick foundries and end up just as fresh while I cooked dinner for my family.

I had a lot of fun building it, and discovered that although my education was complete, even to a finishing school in England, it did not teach one how to get workmen to dig a six-foot sewer through hardpan on a hot day.

We saved $5000 by building without a contractor.

Sincerely yours,
(Name withheld by request)

"Just a Housewife"

Wrentham, Massachusetts.

Ladies: You might be interested in one sidelight on the apologetic "just a housewife" attitude forced on so many women.

When I ordered my JOURNAL through a readers' service, the man who confirmed the subscription asked the head of the household's profession. Yours truly said, magnificent new

(Continued on Page 8)

Wincraft

A collector's treasure of forty-seven distinctive art pieces, each a separate and fascinating style . . . hand-painted under glaze in rare tints of Apricot, Chartreuse and Azure Blue. At gift shops and department stores.

"How to Decorate with Art Pottery."

send for this booklet

24 pages profusely illustrated with outstanding examples of tasteful art pottery settings. Send 10c for this valuable booklet.
ROSEVILLE POTTERY, INC.
Dept. L-78, Zanesville, Ohio

Roseville
decorative art pottery

The added note that makes Rooms Sing with Color

READY TO PUT ON Roley Poley
CUSTOM FIT
SLIP COVERS

Tailored the exclusive Roley Poley way to fit and look like expensive custom-mades. But what a difference in the cost! Smartly styled with box pleats and cord-welt seams. Exciting new patterns. Finest, pre-shrunk, washable fabrics. Available for most styles of chairs, sofas, davenos, studio couches and ottomans.

Beautifully finished all around. Two-piece construction—fully adjustable to perfect custom-like fit. Patented anchored back insures smooth, sculptured, stay-put perfection.

FREE PAMPHLET
Write for interesting pamphlet on Roley Poleys and name of your nearest Roley Poley dealer.
Roley Poley Mfg. Co., 219 Institute Pl., Chicago 10
AT BETTER DEPARTMENT STORES

Nashua

the "magic" blanket

–guaranteed against moth damage for 5 years*!

Only $7.95

FOR 72" x 90" SIZE

ALL these advantages, too!

- *Money back if your Nashua Purrey blanket is damaged by moths within 5 years
- Warmer than many blankets costing nearly twice as much
- Deep, "frosted" nap—light as a cloud
- 9 gorgeous colors—and white that stays white
- Rich rayon satin binding
- Washable in mild suds

72 x 84—$6.95
72 x 90—$7.95
80 x 90—$8.95

HERE'S MODERN MAGIC...a warm, beautiful blanket that moths won't eat! Yes, you can store it without worry about moth damage.

A Nashua Purrey† blanket is different from any other blanket you've ever used. Its deep, fluffy nap is designed to give you warmth without weight, luxury without high cost. A patented blend of scientifically processed rayon fibers and wool makes a Nashua Purrey blanket warmer than many costing much more.

Just feel its fleecy-soft surface—notice the rich, beautifully matched rayon satin bindings that say "quality" at a glance.

Leading stores all over the country feature these "magic" Nashua blankets. Ask to see them at your favorite store today.

Patent 2,208,533 †Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

NASHUA MILLS, DIVISION OF TEXTRON Inc.,
ALSO MAKES BLANKETS OF COTTON AND MIXED FIBERS • COMBED PERCALE AND MUSLIN SHEETS • INDIAN HEAD† COTTON • SHOWER CURTAINS • HOME FASHION FABRICS

NEW

Miracle deodorant ends your perspiration worries!

1. ETIQUET actually ends under-arm perspiration odor—safely—surely!

2. ETIQUET—made by specially patented formula—really checks under-arm perspiration!

3. FLUFFY-LIGHT AND SOOTHING—Etiquet goes on easily—disappears in a jiffy! No gritty particles!

4. MORE ECONOMICAL TO BUY—Etiquet won't dry out in the jar!

5. NO DAMAGE TO CLOTHING when you use Etiquet—famous cloth-test proves!

COPR. 1948 LEHN & FINK PRODUCTS CORP

Etiquet

THE SAFE-AND-SURE DEODORANT

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

(Continued from Page 6)

"This is a co-operative marriage; there is no head of the household."

Whereupon he informed me that his firm does not consider housewifery a profession. So I said I was a chemist and my husband an engineer. He wrote down "chemical engineer." After which he disappeared, rapidly.

The episode was amusing, but more than a little discouraging. Housewives are slapped down by this attitude all the time. When I go out on household, my husband's or my own business, I am spoken to as though I were a young child or a candidate for the State School for the Feeble Minded. I mention that I'm a research chemist, and what a change! The business is transacted quickly and easily on an adult level. I'm treated as a person.

It is a little item, but a humiliating one.

Sincerely yours,
LORRAINE N. NICHOLSON.

No Small Family for Her

Evans Mills, New York.

Dear Editor: I am the mother of 11 children. The oldest is 15 years, the youngest 5 months. My fun is the JOURNAL and the radio.

We live in a Government-owned house of 10 rooms and there's never a dull moment. I do my own work, have 6 children in school, and my husband works on heavy road equipment. That makes 7 lunches to pack every morning. Every summer we can from 300 to 400 cans of vegetables and fruit.

Don't tell me anything about small families. I wouldn't trade my place with anyone in this world. I'm only 34 and expect to stay young with my family.

Sincerely,
MRS. A. PLUMADORE.

Gives Her a Lift

Benton City, Missouri.

Dear Editors: The JOURNAL has long been a fixture in our home as a month-to-month luxury which I always felt I couldn't afford, but which I never could resist. So you can imagine my joy when my husband (who has always been quite superior about women's magazines, until he discovered that there were vivid sermon illustrations to be gleaned from the JOURNAL's pages) presented me with an unexpected year's subscription.

Things contributing to my partiality to the JOURNAL are the food stories, the fashion pages, Doctor Adams' clinic, the excellent public-affairs department—but I believe what I like the best is that there is no objectionable advertising of any sort.

Most sincerely,
CATHERINE A. HILLS.

Thanks for Letters and Packages

The Duke's Cottage, Rudgwick, England.

My dear Bruce and Beatrice: The Utility life has its bright moments. A girl went to the sales and bought a really alluring white wedding dress cheaper than she had hoped. It was made of some sort of nylon, and she got bridesmaids' frocks of the same stuff. All went well till the wedding photographs were delivered. The material seemed transparent to the camera.

I have had so many parcels of clothing, etc., that I have earmarked the old playroom in the garden as a sorting house, and have two people in the village and three in other places helping me find the sort of families the senders want. It is not always easy to find a farmer's wife with three children, or someone who was a nurse before marriage, with one child. Or a lady lawyer (hips, bust and waist measurements given) to correspond with another lady lawyer. I don't believe I ever solved that one!

I now get at the rate of twenty letters a week. Very few of the people who write to me and send parcels are fabulously rich as Americans are commonly expected to be by so many of us, and I have done a broadcast pointing this out, and giving extracts from some of the letters I get.

Later. I expect you hear conflicting stories about the food situation over here, and here's why. There are really two food situations. Those who live in the country and can still stand on both feet and hold a spade don't do badly.

With love,
DOROTHY BLACK.

helena rubinstein says:

"over 30? you can look younger!

ESTROGENIC HORMONE CREAM"

"If you are over-30, there is one cream you should never be without—my ESTROGENIC HORMONE CREAM. Why?

"Because estrogenic hormones are one of the best substances yet known to science that can make your skin look younger...

"Because I experimented until I found the right formula that would bring you the fullest benefits of these amazing substances...

"Because thousands of women in their 30's, 40's, 50's, 60's already have found that daily use of this remarkable cream can truly smooth out fine lines and wrinkles.

"Use ESTROGENIC HORMONE CREAM faithfully for 30 consecutive days and see how quickly your skin responds to its dynamic action. See how much younger your skin can look!" 3.50

"PASTEURIZED" FACE CREAM SPECIAL—massage daily to texturize as you cleanse. Cream away flaky dryness. Soothe! Soften! Refresh! 1.00 plus tax

helena rubinstein
655 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 22

Take it with you . . . It's part of your passport to popularity!

YOU'RE going somewhere this summer! A wonderful vacation! Swimming . . . gay music . . . dates and dancing. You've got pretty clothes and a dilly of a bathing suit. Yes, the stage is set for romance, and you have all the props . . .

. . . But have you?

Is your breath sweet and fresh? If it isn't, charm, good looks, pretty clothes may get you nowhere. So, if you want to play leading lady in the role of romance . . . do not fail to take this extra-careful precaution against non-systemic bad breath (halitosis).

Merely rinse your mouth with Listerine Antiseptic night and morning, and before every date. Quick, quick, quick, it leaves your breath cleaner, fresher, sweeter, less likely to offend . . . keeps it that way, too . . . not for seconds, not for minutes, but usually for hours.

You go forth with that wonderful feeling of greater assurance that people are going to like you. Really, Listerine Antiseptic is part of your passport to popularity.

You'll want Listerine Antiseptic, too, for lots of little vacation uses. It's a reliable first-aid for scratches, minor skin infections, insect bites and stings. Keep a bottle in your week-end bag.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY, St. Louis, Missouri

Before any date

LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC

to help you be at your best

Another Pal on your vacation is the new Listerine Tooth Paste with the clean, minty flavor

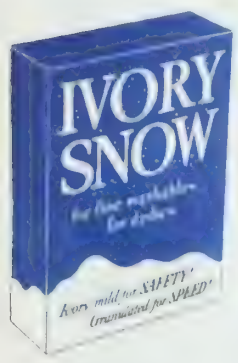
Your Hands will tell you why!

IVORY SNOW KEEPS LOVELY LINGERIE LOVELY LONGER

Prove it!



MAKE THE HAND TEST

Let your hands tell you why Ivory Snow keeps lovely lingerie lovely longer! This week just wash dishes with Ivory Snow—and when you see how it pampers your hands you'll know it's extra kind to dainty lingerie.

No finer soap made! So mild! 99 44/100% pure! The only soap both Ivory-mild and in granulated "snowdrops" that burst into instant suds in safe lukewarm water—even in cool water.

To keep lovely things lovely longer—just follow directions on your package of wonderful Ivory Snow!

No other soap like it!
...for Lovely Lingerie

A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM
—her frilly ballerina petticoat, her lacy camisole . . . Ultra-feminine furbelows that she'll keep lovely longer with wonderful Ivory Snow!

IVORY SNOW – The only granulated soap that's Ivory-mild

LADIES' HOME

Journal

BRUCE GOULD

AND BEATRICE BLACKMAR GOULD, Editors

MARY BASS, Executive Editor

LAURA LOU BROOKMAN, Managing Editor

Associate Editors: HUGH MAC NAIR KAHLER, BERNARDINE KIELTY, ANN BATCHELDER, WILHELA CUSHMAN, FRANK ELTONHEAD, ALICE BLINN, RICHARD PRATT, HENRIETTA MURDOCK, LOUELLA G. SHOUER, MARY LEA PAGE, MAUREEN DALY, DAWN CROWELL NORMAN, JOHN GODFREY MORRIS, JOAN YOUNGER, LONNIE COLEMAN, MARGARET DAVIDSON, NORA O'LEARY. Contributing Editors: GLADYS TABER, LOUISE PAINE BENJAMIN, GLADYS DENNY SHULTZ, BARBARA BENSON, MARGARET HICKEY. Assistant Editors: JOHN WERNER, CHARLOTTE JOHNSON, ROBERT C. ATHERTON, DONALD STUART, RUTH MARY PACKARD, RUTH MATTHEWS, ALICE CONKLING, JUDY BARRY, JUNE TORREY, LILY GLENDINNING, DOROTHY COUNSELMAN SELBY, JOSEPH DI PIETRO, ANNE EINSELEN, GLENN MATTHEW WHITE, BETTY NILES GRAY, KATHLEEN EDGELL, JAN WEYL. Editorial Assistants: KATHERINE W. MILLER, SELMA R. BURGESS, ALICE KASTBERG, IRIS WILKEN, BETTY COE, JEANNE LENTON TRACEY, MARGARET ARCHER, DOROTHEA CORNWELL, CYNTHIA McADOO, MARY McILHENNY, JEANNE SCRIBNER, HELEN WAHLBERG, ELEANOR POWNALL SIMMONS, ADRINA CASPARIAN, VIRGINIA PRICE, MARION PLUMMER, MARY JEAN STRAIN, LOIS WITHERSPOON, ALEXA CARROLL, PHILIPPA HERMAN, JEANNE STILES.

Rights and Responsibilities

ONE hundred years ago the first Women's Rights Convention was held at Seneca Falls, New York. In a general declaration of the rights of women, prepared by Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Lucretia Mott and several others, the right of women to vote was seriously proposed for the first time.

"All men and women are created equal" was their foremost and most radical assumption. In 1848 a single woman was a social nonentity. She possessed neither title nor dignity. But a married woman was only a living ghost. She had no control over her own property or even the guardianship of her own children. She was the chattel of her husband and no more obtrusive than any other furnishing in the home. The women of Seneca Falls could no longer tolerate being irresponsible persons, "civilly dead." They signed their "Declaration of Sentiments" and launched the movement to improve the status of women.

By 1920, when women were granted the right to vote, the chief aims of the early feminists had been attained, at least by statute. Today 27 per cent of all workers are women. Women are important and respected members of every profession. But no one is so deceived as to believe that women today enjoy complete equality with men in all fields of human enterprise. Due mostly to social forces of tradition and custom, they are still discriminated against because of sex only. The greatest attainment so far is the growing ability of women to look outward rather than inward, to know themselves as responsible participants in human affairs. That women should have no interests or responsibilities outside the home now seems a quaint idea. The extent to which women participate in the shaping of policies affecting public welfare depends not so much upon the rights they hold as upon the responsibilities they are willing to assume.

Ends, Means and Values

By Dorothy Thompson

IT seems to me that, fearing international war, we overlook a more likely catastrophe. In 1945, when I visited George Bernard Shaw in his country home in England, I asked him to predict the future. "Three hundred years of a new Dark Ages," he answered quite blithely. "But after that things will be better than now."

When one is childless and moving toward one's centenary, it is, perhaps, easy to contemplate a new Dark Ages. And Shaw's words must never be taken without several grains of salt; his is an impish mind. But others have feared the same, and more soberly, one of them being a man I greatly admire for his exceptional courage and character: the British publisher, of Jewish race and religion, and most Christian spirit—Victor Gollancz, who has recently published a timely little book, Our Threatened Values.*

It is not my purpose here to review that book, but only to recommend it to a wider circle of readers than it might normally find. It does not say a great many new things, but it does call attention, and by way of vivid illustration, to precious old things, illustrating how shockingly, in our times, these have been forgotten.

Among the values of our civilization he puts, first, respect for human personality, and recounts many of the frightful assaults upon it, first of all in Fascist standards and practices—and especially in Nazism, which was the most ultimate and revolutionary form of fascism—and also in the "new" democracies, whose essence is the ruthless subjection of the individual person to the conception of the "general welfare" as embodied in the totalitarian state. But neither does he exempt the free democracies.

Mr. Gollancz does not make the mistake of identifying fascism and communism, and neither should we. The former is a plain and simple justification of the will to power, by any and every means. Communism, on the contrary, has as its basic goal the establishment of a human society in which wealth and labor shall be used, not for the profit of relatively few people, but for the welfare of the whole. That is an intrinsically noble idea, and in basic harmony with the aim of our civilization, which is to establish justice and happiness.

No one honestly contemplating our civilization can assert that it satisfies our consciences. No one can really believe that the untrammeled competition of persons operating wholly in self-interest can work out for the best of all possible worlds. The casualties of the competitive capitalist system are enormous; the tendency toward centralization and monopoly is indubitable; the appeal which it makes to the baser nature is a fact. One needs only to compare the faces one sees—a mathematician testifying before a Congressional committee, his thin face marked with thought, humanity, self-discipline, and a "gray" marketeer called on the carpet—to realize how devotion to truth ennobles and competition in greed dehumanizes.

Why, then, one may ask, has communism, impelled originally by acute and justifiable criticism and intrinsic

*Published in 1947 by Henry Regnery Company, Hinsdale, Illinois

"Whenever there's a choice, I always buy foods packed in glass!"

says MRS. THOMAS R. PALMER
436 EAST 77th STREET, NEW YORK, N. Y.

"So convenient to store and heat baby's food, in the same glass jar"

"Glass jars save lots of bother. If there is any food left over, you simply put the jar back in the refrigerator."

"ALL foods deserve the same protection as baby foods"

"I feel what's better for baby is better for the whole family. I like all the foods I buy to have the advantages of glass protection."

WHEN YOU BUY IT IN

Duraglas JARS

YOU CAN SEE HOW GOOD IT IS!

Owens-Illinois Glass Company, Toledo 1, Ohio

nobleness of objective, failed to establish human happiness, and become, instead, a movement of menace to mankind?

It has become so, first, because it denied initially the fact of individual human personality, and second, because it was willing to achieve its purposes by the most brutal means.

It denied human personality by denying the existence of God and insisting that a man (or woman) has no separate existence apart from his social class. This is so palpably untrue that it is belied by every great man who ever lived. It is impossible to explain any of them—Buddha, Confucius, Jesus, St. Thomas, Gandhi, Jefferson, Lincoln, Spinoza, Michelangelo, Einstein, Beethoven—in terms of social "class."

In pursuing its purposes, it was correctly aware of intransigent enemies. No one can even attempt to reform society of even the most obvious injustices without encountering powerful and ruthless enmity from those who profit by things as they are. This makes the course of social progress slow, and tends to harden basic injustices into revered institutions.

But the communists, in their drive for Utopia, decided to answer ruthlessness by even greater ruthlessness. It was not sufficient to suppress "reactionary" parties, but to suppress all who disagreed, not only regarding aim, but regarding means. It was not only considered necessary to dispossess the well-to-do of all their property, however acquired—and in every case lawfully—but to dispossess them without the slightest compensation, creating out of them a penniless pariah class.

It was considered not only necessary to break up the great landed estates, but to suppress the more successful farmers who emerged from the division of the land.

It was not only considered necessary to smash the existing economic order, but to suppress or subject all other institutions.

All these measures, engendering, as they did, most terrible human miseries, produced in turn, and by automatic reaction, the seeds of widespread revolt, which threatened the revolution and in turn called for even harsher countermeasures, which could be carried out only by the most ruthless men and the most bestial and servile underlings. So, gradually, it was men of such nature and character who rose to the top, too savage, even, for their very colleagues who started with them and taught them their methods, and who, in turn, had to be annihilated. To make a long story short, the end was overcome and obliterated by the means, and what has emerged is not a just, humane and "classless" society, but a despotism whose goal is to keep itself in power and extend its power over servile and terrorized societies.

There is a much more profound lesson to be learned from the development of communism than from Nazism. In Nazism ends and means were both evil and fitted to each other. In communism evil means have conquered an originally noble objective. In the end the two societies are hardly distinguishable from each other in their despotism, inhumanity and expansionism.

Both sacrificed the deepest values of civilization: respect for human personality and therefore for human variation, and freedom; truth—in both the lie became the chief instrument of subjection by persuasion; beauty—of life, manners, content and form, which always reflects the very essence of the society; and goodness. In Nazi and communist societies, goodness—sympathy, pity, righteous indignation, civil courage, generosity, tolerance and God-fearingness—simply dare not be cultivated lest they challenge the whole basis of the state.

But since these values are the very basis of human civilization and happiness, their slow corrosion or willful destruction brings exactly a new Dark Ages.

Therefore it becomes incumbent upon us to inquire concerning our leaders in every field of life, not only "What do they want to achieve?" but "How do they intend to achieve it?"

For what they actually will achieve will depend upon how they go about it. THE END

★ ★

The Magnificent Martha

By James M. Black, Jr.

(A CINEMATIC STUDY OF AMERICAN HISTORY)

I always failed in history;
So much I didn't know.
The past was such a mystery,
What happened long ago
Much to my shame was just a guess,
A guess not even good.
But knowledge came and I confess
My debt to Hollywood.

I lately learned that Washington (who looked somewhat like Gable) Adored the Widow Custis (she was played by Betty Grable).
His friend, a General Arnold, she rejected as a suitor.
She liked him as a brother, but she thought that George was cuter.
Well, Arnold (Basil Rathbone) simply leered, "I'll see you later."
I discovered to my horror he was secretly a traitor.
He stalked out of her parlor in such haste he left his coat,
And Martha, going through it, found some letters that he wrote
That showed his true intentions, so she got her horse and went on A ride right through the British lines to George attacking Trenton;
She swam across the Delaware, she braved its wintry waters,
Arriving in the nick of time at Washington's headquarters.
It saved the day. The Redcoats ran; the battle scene was great,
Especially the duel in which Arnold met his fate.
Then Jefferson, who through it all had been a strength and solace
(He looked like Don Ameche and behaved like Henry Wallace),
Said, "Martha, you have won the day. This victory celebration Won't be complete till you have wed the Father of our Nation."
So this was done, they settled down to matrimonial bliss;
On the piazza of Mount Vernon was the final fade-out kiss.

So here's to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer!
Hail to the Warner Brothers!
To RKO and Paramount
And likewise all the others.
In re-creating past events
They aren't bound by the actual.
May they consistently defend
The fancy from the factual.

Here's another wonderful NEW FRIGIDAIRE REFRIGERATOR made just for you!

Frigidaire gives you more of what you want in a refrigerator! People have always known that, they know it now. That's why more Frigidaire Refrigerators serve in more American homes than any other make.

More dependability, because only Frigidaire has the Meter-Miser — and the Meter-Miser is the simplest cold-making mechanism ever built!

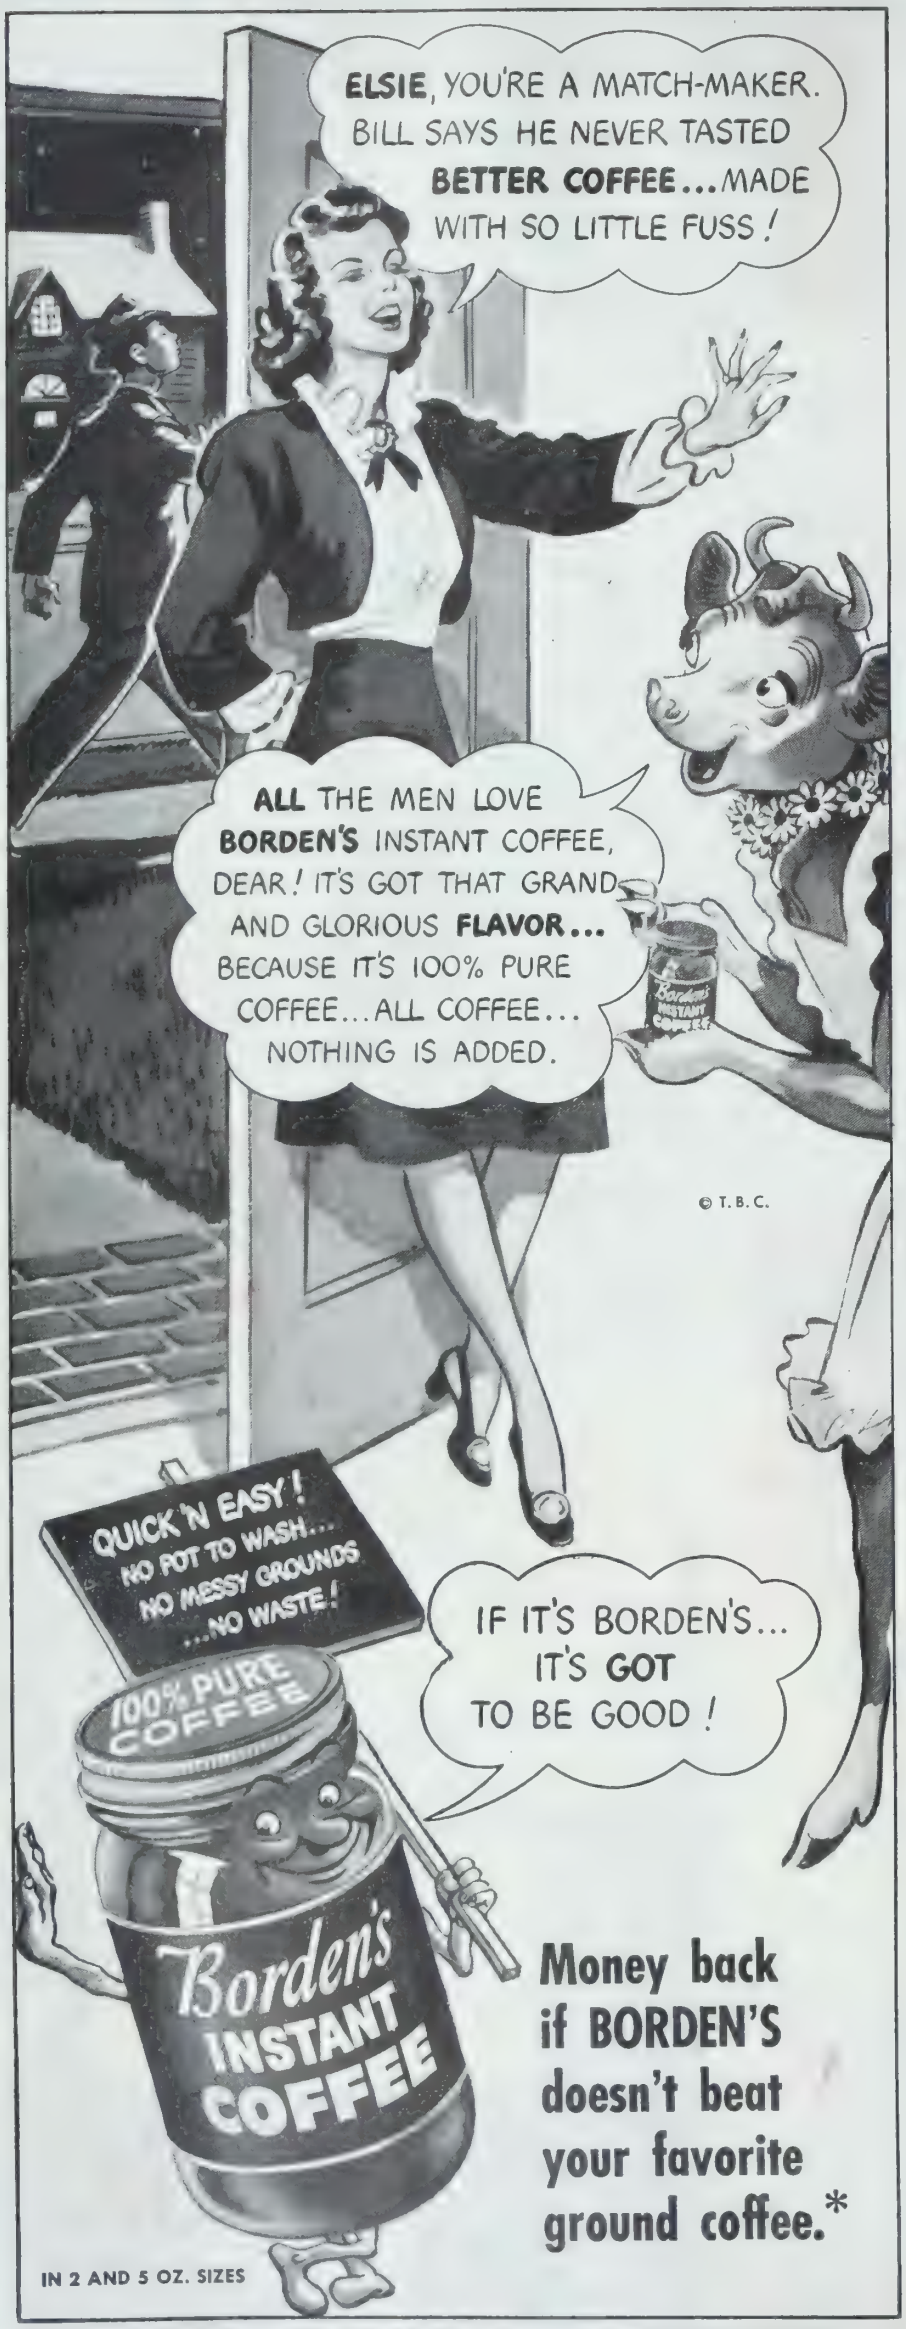
More economy — the Meter-Miser uses only a trickle of current.

More features — exciting new advantages that you will see for yourself, when you visit your Frigidaire Dealer.

More models. Frigidaire makes a type and size of refrigerator—9 models in all —for every type and size of family.

More confidence. Everybody wants to be sure about an important purchase, and when it comes to a refrigerator—

You're twice as sure with two great names



FRIGIDAIRE
MADE ONLY BY General Motors

NEW FRIGIDAIRE DE LUXE

Big Super-Freezer Chest for frozen foods. Full-width Hydrator: moist-cold storage for fruits, vegetables. Basket-Drawer for eggs, small packages. New design: more storage space in same kitchen space. 7, 9, 11 cu. ft.

See your Frigidaire Dealer. Find name in Classified Telephone Directory; or write Frigidaire, Dayton 1, Ohio. Leaside 12, Ont.

Listen to Frigidaire's "Man Called X," Sunday nights. See newspaper for time and station.

* Use at least half a jar of Borden's. Then, if you don't agree it tastes better than any coffee you ever used, send us the jar with the unused contents, and we'll refund your money. The Borden Co., 350 Madison Ave., N.Y. 17, N.Y.

UNDER-COVER STUFF

REPRINTED COURTESY COLLIER'S

"And bacon too!" VIRGIL PARTCH

By Bernardine Kielty

ELEANOR LOTHROP, author of THROW ME A BONE, would argue with those persons who claim that honeymoons are overrated. Hers, she admits, wasn't all fun, but it wasn't dull and she never had time to be bored. She married an archaeologist, and not only was her honeymoon an archaeological trip, but it included her husband's boss. Whether or not the honeymoon has lasted till now she doesn't say, but for eighteen years she and her husband, Sam Lothrop, have continued to go on archaeological trips—to Chile, to Peru, to Guatemala, to Panama, to Costa Rica. The Lothrops left Costa Rica this spring on the last plane before the revolution.

THROW ME A BONE is her hilarious record of how an archaeologist's wife reacts. It is an account of what you and I would do without running water or a bed with springs or a proper frying pan, and how we would combat insects, Chilean cattle, crocodiles, natives on all-night parties, and amorous English colonels. Eternally hopeful, she looked each time for glamour. She'd outfit herself at the smartest sports store with jodhpurs and shorts and topee, only to have Sam return the lot and reduce her eventual wardrobe to three pairs of men's duck pants, two pairs of old sneakers, some old tennis socks, an ancient straw hat and (the one store item kept) polo shirts. Eternally she hoped to find treasure. And once she did—a 1 x 1½" emerald weighing 189 carats.

"Each time we wind up an archaeological trip I look forward to the same things. No scratching. Lying in bed late, soaking in a hot bath. Plumbing. Ice water and fresh milk. Raw celery and lettuce. Plumbing. Movies and the theater. Plumbing!" And then, after about a month, she looks at Sam in his comfortable chair in his comfortable bugless apartment. "This is the life!" she says. "It's wonderful; but when, oh, when, are we going where?"

• • •

If you are willing to be made appallingly self-conscious about your English

(Continued on Page 16)

BY PERMISSION, COPYRIGHT THE NEW YORKER MAGAZINE, INC.

"Au secours! Sauvez-moi! Au secours!"

"If he's not a Frenchman he's certainly an awful snob."

PLATTER FOR PATRIOTS

Picture this on your holiday buffet. Extravagant? Not a bit! For think how many meals the ham will provide. (See Martha Logan's after-the-party ideas below.) No cooking either—this ham is Ready-to-Eat Swift's Premium. Yes, it comes completely cooked, yet with all the matchless flavor you expect of America's traditional favorite. You just score the fat and spread with marmalade! Salads are almost as easy: Mold well-seasoned tomato aspic in a flat pan which has been rinsed with cold water. Cut in shield shapes, using a paper pattern. Decorate with cream cheese, slightly thinned with milk. Here's bounty fit for the 4th! For Swift's Premium Ham—with its mellow Brown Sugar Cure—is, for fact, the best-liked ham of all!

HAM AND CELERY SANDWICH SPREAD: Mix ¼ c. prepared mustard, 2 tsp. sugar, ½ tsp. vinegar with 1 c. ground cooked ham and 1 c. finely chopped celery. Fills 4 sandwiches.

HAM CASSEROLE: Arrange 4 thinly-sliced apples and 1 to 2 c. leftover ham pieces in alternate layers in greased baking dish. Add 2 tbsp. brown sugar, ¼ c. orange juice. Top with sweet potatoes (No. 2½ can), mashed and seasoned. Bake about 40 min. in mod. oven (375° F.). Serves 4.

Holiday treat without heat...

America's traditional favorite

Swift's Premium Ham*

* READY-TO-EAT VERSION

Swift's Premium HAM
FULLY COOKED
SWIFT'S PREMIUM
Ready to Eat
FULLY COOKED
A SWIFT QUALITY FOOD

2 STYLES! The Red Label brings you ham that's fully cooked—ready to eat. For easy cooking at home, look for the Blue Label. Both kinds are Brown Sugar Cured and smoked Swift's special way over genuine hardwood fires.

How to be a GREAT COOK
in 3 minutes!

Taste the WONDERFUL DIFFERENCE in Heinz
57 Soups

(Continued from Page 14)

(temporarily only, one hopes), and at the same time enjoy yourself no end, try thumbing through one of the authoritative handbooks on English language usage. It is an engrossing pastime.

We got started by way of a new book, HOW TO SPEAK BETTER ENGLISH, by Norman Lewis. Mr. Lewis does not depend altogether upon his own judgment, but has appealed to such English users as Bennett Cerf, Walter Winchell, Leonard Lyons and Louis Bromfield, among others. He gives the pros and cons of these gentlemen on such sentences as these:

"Betty Grable is different than Zazu Pitts."
"If anyone is waiting, let them come in."
"The reason I love her is because she is so pretty."
"Can I have another piece of cake?"

It is a good book, but once a real problem comes up you turn to the older and more searching works. You pull out COMMON ERRORS IN ENGLISH AND HOW TO AVOID THEM, by Alexander M. Witherspoon; HOW TO SPEAK ENGLISH EFFECTIVELY, by Frank Vizetelly; and that most readable and most profound of them all, A DICTIONARY OF MODERN ENGLISH USAGE, by H. W. Fowler.

When you start on Fowler, your morning is gone. Take Hackneyed Phrases, for instance. "The hackneyed phrases are counted by the hundred. . . . Each of them comes to each of us at some moment in life with the freshness of novelty upon it: but we forget that of any hundred persons for whom we attempt this good office, though there may be one to whom our phrase is new and bright, it is a stale offense to the ninety and nine." Out of his long list we have chosen at random:

"Sleep the sleep of the just."
"Conspicuous by his absence."
"A consummation devoutly to be wished."
"But it was not to be."
"More sinned against than sinning."

Of French Words he has this to say: "Display of superior knowledge is as great a vulgarity as display of superior wealth—greater, indeed, in as much as knowledge should tend more definitely than wealth towards discretion and good manners. . . . To use French words that your reader or hearer does not know or does not fully understand, to pronounce them as if you were one of the select few to whom French is second nature when he is not of those few (and it is ten thousand to one that neither you nor he will be so) is inconsiderate and rude." After which appropriate sermon Mr. Fowler gives pages of French words commonly used in English, with meanings and pronunciations. He does not, we are pointing out, avoid the issue.

REPRINTED COURTESY COLLIER'S

"The President must be right—he said just what John has been saying."

Never Underestimate the Power of a Woman. Sixty years ago the only women allowed in the White House

(Continued on Page 18)

Perfect with KRAFT French Dressing

It's America's Favorite

Smartest of all is the "tossed" salad . . . and most dependent on the dressing. Kraft French Dressing has the perfect seasoning you are looking for. Made with really fine ingredients; Kitchen Fresh; America's most popular brand.

NOTE: Kraft has another brand, Miracle French, for those who like just a tantalizing touch of onion and garlic.

IF YOU LIVE IN AN ORANGE GROVE
you can make ORANGEADE
like this

You'd pick only the select, tree ripe fruit, of course. Otherwise, you just order GREEN SPOT Orangeade—produced at the groves, delivered fresh bottled by your dairy to your home or store. A family favorite, try it!

Individual Bottle 5c
Family Bottle 15c
In most places

REAL ORANGEADE
Ask your Milkman or Grocer

Jellied Peaches

Here's an easy-to-fix dessert that's heavenly-delicious, as only genuine Jell-O can make it! (Jell-O's "locked-in" flavor is always rich and deep!)

- 1 package Orange Jell-O
- 2½ cups hot liquid (peach juice and water, or all water)
- 2 cups drained sweetened sliced peaches
- 2 tablespoons lemon juice

Dissolve Jell-O in hot liquid. Add peaches and lemon juice. Chill until thickened, stirring occasionally as Jell-O sets, to give soft—not firm—jelly. Serve in sherbet glasses. Garnish with whipped cream and mint leaves. Serves 6 to 8.

*Fresh, canned, or quick-frozen peaches may be used.

Neapolitan Vegetable Salad

Perfect for a party—this sparkling layered salad loaf! Dissolve Jell-O in hot water. Add vinegar and salt. Divide Jell-O into three parts and chill each part until slightly thickened. To first part, add carrots and turn into a 10 x 5 x 3-inch loaf pan; chill until firm. To second part, add cabbage and turn out over firm layer in pan; chill until firm. To third part, add onion and spinach and turn out over firm Jell-O in loaf pan; chill until firm. Unmold. Cut in slices and serve with mayonnaise. Makes 12 servings.

- 2 packages Lemon Jell-O
- 4 cups hot water
- 3 tablespoons vinegar
- 3 teaspoons salt
- 1½ cups finely chopped raw carrots
- 1¾ cups finely chopped raw cabbage
- 1 teaspoon minced onion
- 1½ cups finely chopped raw spinach

Company coming? Serve a special treat!

Orange and Pear Mold

You'll use this grand recipe often—to serve as salad or dessert! So colorful, with pears and orange sections set off by shimmering Lime Jell-O! So wonderfully good to eat!

- 1 package Lime Jell-O
- 2 cups hot liquid (pear juice and water, or all water)
- ¾ cup sliced drained canned pears
- ¾ cup orange sections, free from membrane

Dissolve Jell-O in hot liquid. Chill. When slightly thickened, fold in fruit. Turn into a 1-quart mold. Chill until firm. Unmold. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

NOTE: For a large mold, double above recipe. Use only 3¾ cups liquid.

Pink Chiffon Jell-O Whip

An exciting new Jell-O idea—Jell-O squares and whipped Jell-O together in one glorious dish! Dissolve Jell-O in hot liquid. Add flavoring. Pour half of Jell-O into a small loaf pan. Chill. When slightly thickened, fold in fruit. Chill until firm. Cut in 12 rectangles. Arrange 6 in a serving bowl.

Then chill remaining Jell-O until slightly thickened. Place in bowl of ice and water; whip with rotary egg beater until fluffy and thick like whipped cream. Fold in cream. Pile lightly on firm Jell-O. Arrange remaining Jell-O rectangles on top. Chill until firm. Makes 6 servings.

- 1 package Raspberry Jell-O
- 2 cups hot liquid (fruit juice and water, or all water)
- ⅛ teaspoon almond extract
- ⅔ cup drained canned fruit cocktail, or mixed fresh fruit
- ⅓ cup cream, whipped

JELL-O IS A REGISTERED TRADE-MARK—THE PROPERTY OF GENERAL FOODS CORPORATION

SAVE MONEY ON MEALS

Try This Delicious, New England Food

Are you worried about how much money it takes today to feed the family? If so, try serving more frequent low cost, supremely delicious and hearty meals such as have brought fame to New England cooks . . . meals of genuine, old-recipe New England baked beans. Do this as simply as getting B & M Brick-Oven Baked Beans today from your Grocer's. They're baked (not steamed) for you all day long with lots of juicy pork, and spicy, old-time sauces, baked tender and mealy and extra-appetizing with that "home-kitchen-kind" of good, old fashioned flavor. Try this real "thrift" meal today from Burnham & Morrill's famous ovens "Down East" in Portland, Maine.

In Glass or Tin

(Continued from Page 16)

offices were relatives of the staff, occasional sight-seers, and the cleaners. Now, according to Merriman Smith, in A PRESIDENT IS MANY MEN, it is like a harem, with women far outnumbering the men. Every President these days has a Girl Friday who knows more state secrets than his wife, knows the size of his bank balance, knows months ahead whether or not he is going "to run," and who will be the new ambassador to Great Britain.

REPRINTED COURTESY THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"What this country needs, Armbruster, is somebody in the White House that absolutely nobody likes. Then we can all unite."

Theodore Roosevelt's Josephine Strieker called herself "the safe-deposit vault of his thoughts." Miss LeHand, F.D.R.'s personal secretary, was said to have great influence. A politician who had "Missy" on his side, says Mr. S., was three bases on the way home to a run if she thought his recommendation was one deserving presidential attention. Her successor, Grace Tully, could play gin rummy most of the night with a reporter or an ambassador without letting slip a single bit of information on anything in the world—except the score of the game. President Truman's secretary is Rose Conway, known as "zipper lip." Her day begins at 6:30 A.M., when she makes her coffee, and gets under way when she reaches the White House at 8 and finds the President already hard at work. The President knocks off at about 4:30 or 5, but Rose still has two hours ahead of her.

When Mme. Chiang visited the White House, the Roosevelt housekeeper, Mrs. Nesbitt, was in a dither because the Chinese lady insisted on having the linen sheets of her bed changed several times a day. The sheets were large and the cost was $7.00 each to launder. But Mr. Smith unearthed what he believes to be the fact: that instead of having the sheets washed each time the madame took a brief rest, the maids merely took them to the basement, had them ironed out and put them back on.

• • •

Gladys Taber fans will be glad to know that THE BOOK OF STILL-MEADOW is now out (Macrae Smith Co., 225 South 15th St., Philadelphia 2, Pa.). It is based on the Diary of Domesticity and is a month-by-month record of a happy, busy life.

• • •

Just when we're in a mood to settle down to work in the garden, we read something like this: "A medium-range turbojet transport carrying 25 to 30 passengers and flying at a cruising speed of 500 to 525 miles per hour is an extremely likely development for use on the routes of the major airlines by the close of the year 1950." And somehow the delphinium seems trivial. . . . The prophecy is from JET PROPULSION IN COMMERCIAL AIR TRANSPORTATION, by Robert E. Hage.

(Continued on Page 21)

MAN AMAZED

by that distinctive tangy flavor of CHEEZ-IT crackers!

America's largest selling cheese cracker!

A Quality Product of Sunshine Biscuits, INC.

U-ALL-NO Richardson's PRODUCTS

When Guests Are Fussy Be Sure to Serve Richardson's

U-ALL-NO Richardson's AFTER DINNER MINT

Pure CANE Sugar plus Natural MINT for Flavor

Thos. D. Richardson Co., Philadelphia 34, U.S.A.

OUT FOR FAMILY FUN!

"Fresh up" with Seven-Up!

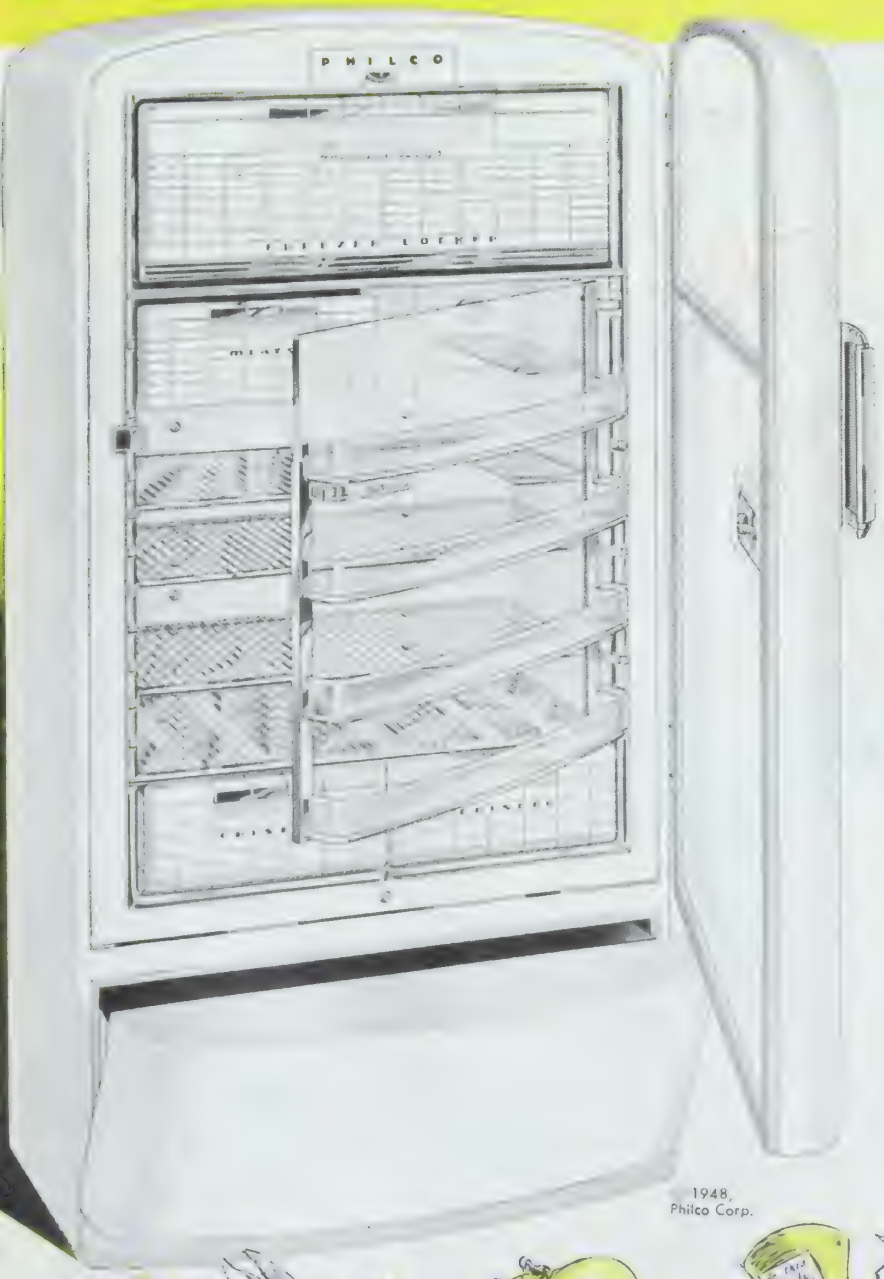
ENJOY FAMILY OUTINGS
BE A "FRESH UP" FAMILY!

On vacation trips to faraway places, you have to give a thought to the purity of what you drink! With 7-Up along, that's no problem . . . you're all set with a drink you like, and one that likes you—wholesome, fresh-flavored 7-Up!

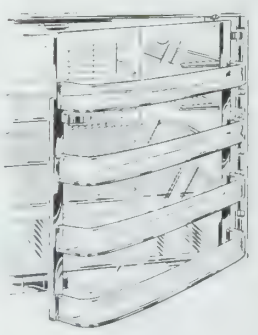
Clean, crystal-clear 7-Up is the all-family drink. You, and your youngsters, too, can enjoy the happy "fresh up" feeling it gives.

Be a "fresh up" family. Take along a case of 7-Up on your family jaunts or pick up a case along the way. You can get 7-Up wherever you see those bright 7-Up signs on display.

COPYRIGHT 1948 BY THE SEVEN UP COMPANY

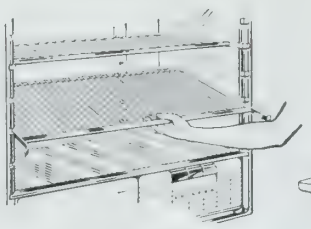


YOU LIKE IT  IT LIKES YOU!



Philco Balanced Humidity

with Summer-Winter Control



*U*pon a teeter-totter, Tweedledum and Tweedledee Show Humidity that's Balanced just as neatly as can be;
A Summer-Winter lever you can move from time to time,
Adjusts the moisture-content to the season or the clime.
Advanced Design by Philco offers this and many more Amazing Philco features that will thrill you to the core.
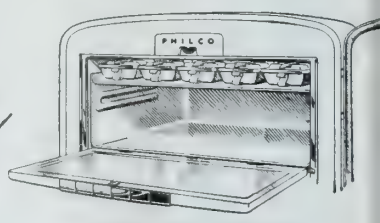
To help in planning better meals, to save you time each day,
You really need this Philco. See your dealer . . . don't delay!

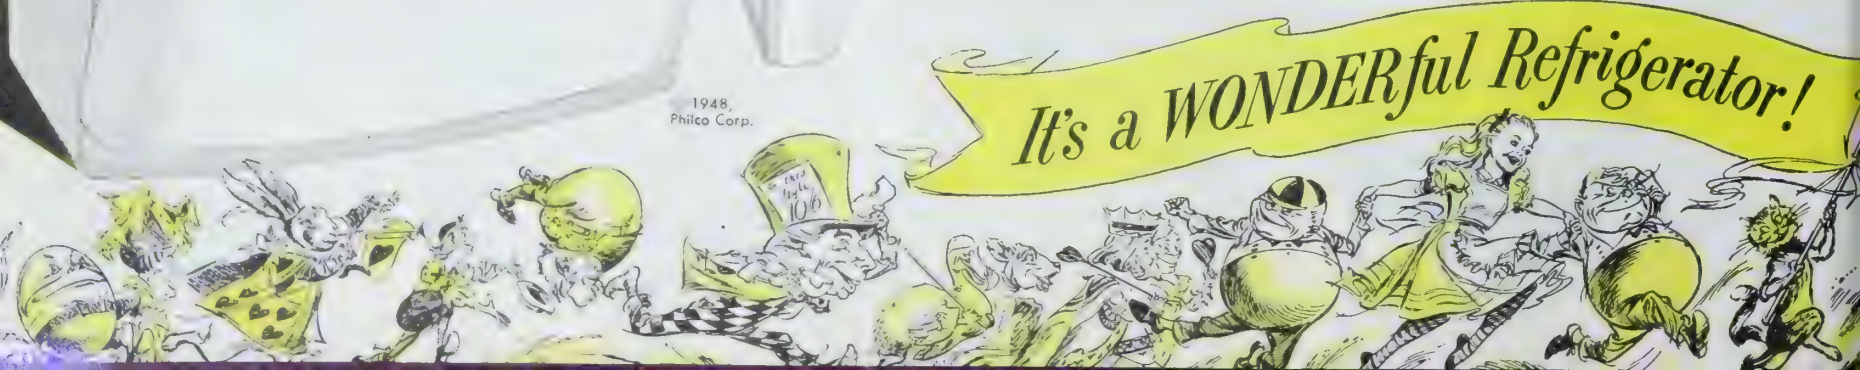


TRANSPARENT CONSERVADOR

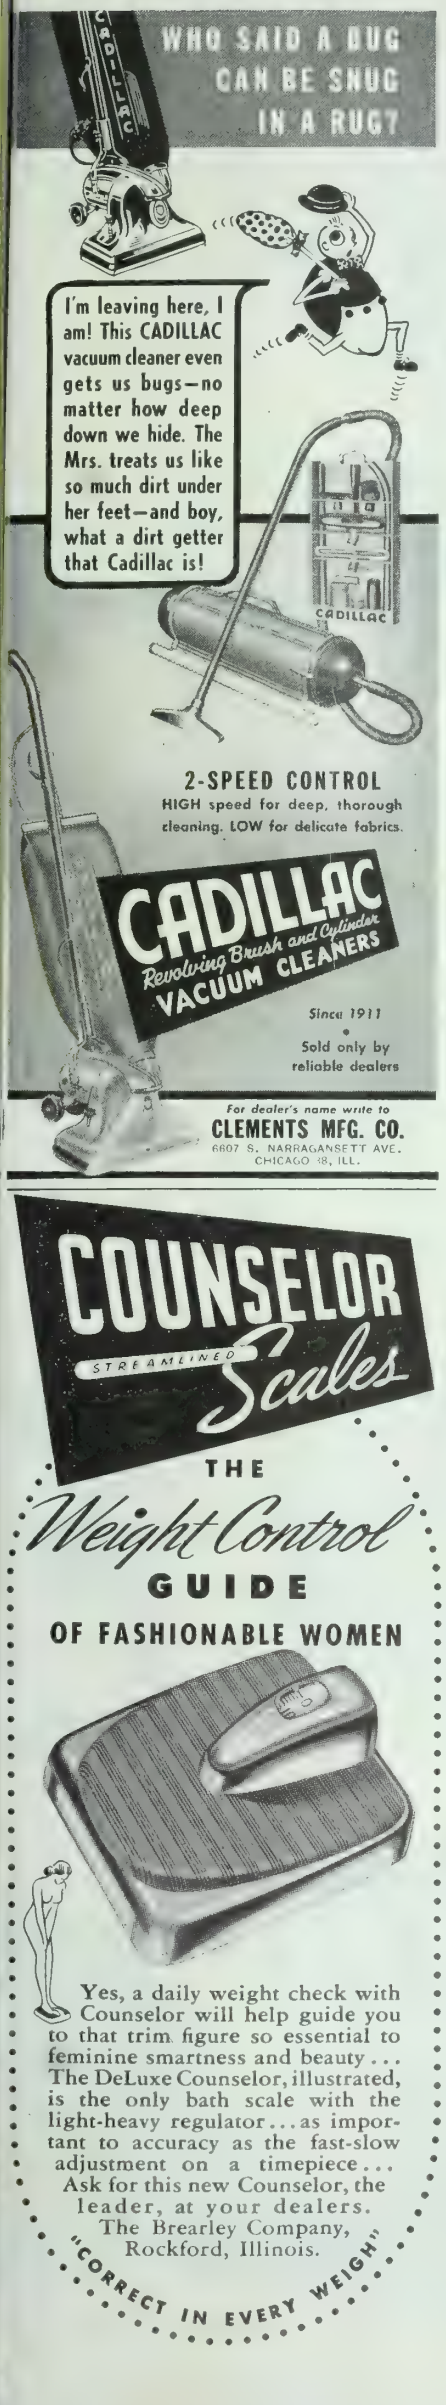
Ingenious, shelf-lined inner door keeps foods you use most often at your finger-tips. Only Philco has the Conservador!

SHELF-CONTROL

Most flexible system of shelf arrangements ever invented. Suits all sizes of foods. Only Philco has it!



GIANT FREEZER LOCKER



A huge, clear space for frozen foods. Ice trays on a separate, super-fast freezing shelf. More room than ever!

PHILCO

Famous for Quality the World Over

1948, Philco Corp.

COUNSELOR
STREAMLINED Scales
THE Weight Control GUIDE OF FASHIONABLE WOMEN

Yes, a daily weight check with Counselor will help guide you to that trim figure so essential to feminine smartness and beauty . . . The DeLuxe Counselor, illustrated, is the only bath scale with the light-heavy regulator . . . as important to accuracy as the fast-slow adjustment on a timepiece . . . Ask for this new Counselor, the leader, at your dealers.
The Brearley Company, Rockford, Illinois.
"CORRECT IN EVERY WEIGH"

(Continued from Page 18)

The National Boy of the Year, chosen this year by the Boys' Clubs of America, is Frank Harrison. He is fourteen, supports a family of six, gets a B-plus average in school, and has time for football, basketball and baseball. He gets up at three-thirty every morning and covers a newspaper route before going to school.

INTERNATIONAL

National Boy of the Year.

• • •

You know how it is when you can't remember the name of one of your guests: you just slide over the introduction by mentioning only the other one's name, and then pass quickly on.

That's the way it was at the party given by the Greek princess in Athens, to which Willie Snow Ethridge was invited. The guests were seated informally around a table. The first introduction—to a man—was the one where the hostess slipped up, and unfortunately, when the round was completed, Mrs. Ethridge found herself back beside him. She herself is from Georgia and an easy talker, but she was at a loss now for a topic of conversation. The man spoke English and looked like a Britisher. "Are you staying long in Greece?" she asked him politely, feeling her way. "Or are you just here for a few months like the rest of us?" The man blinked. Then he told her that, yes, he did come and go. He stayed as long as the people would let him. He was, as a matter of fact, the King of Greece!

Willie Snow Ethridge is the wife of Mark Ethridge, chairman of the American delegation of the U. N. commission that studied the Greek border incidents. After he had gone over to Greece, Mr. Ethridge sent for his wife, and Willie, ebullient and more than willing, sold a cemetery lot for cash for her passage, and went off to join him. IT'S GREEK TO ME is her account of their experiences.

Some people will say that these Southern belles would do better to stay home, or at least not write a society column about a country like Greece. But the interesting point about this book—and this woman—is that underneath the good-natured foolery there is such a fund of information and what sounds from this distance like wise judgment. If Mrs. Ethridge can find a few laughs in poor tragic Greece, so much the better!

• • •

Observed at the Museum of Modern Art, where old movies are shown daily: Marlene Dietrich looking at The Blue Angel, in which she starred with Emil Jannings in 1930—with tears in her eyes.

safer... HOME CANNING

large... MEAL COOKING

faster... easier... more economical always with a National PRESSURE

COOKER-CANNER

Millions of busy homemakers know through their own experiences that they can depend on a NATIONAL PRESSURE COOKER-CANNER for safety, speed, economy and simplicity in home cooking and canning. NATIONAL PRESSURE COOKER-CANNERS are made by the pioneers in the pressure cooking field, and backed by 33 years of scientific research, thorough testing and pressure cooker manufacturing experience. Both sizes come completely equipped with inset pans, rack, wire canning basket, and a copy of the valuable recipe and instruction book, "The Modern Guide to Home Canning and Cooking". Insist on a NATIONAL PRESSURE COOKER-CANNER for best results in cooking and canning.

It's ideal for quantity cooking of meats, vegetables, fowl, fish, etc.

It's most economical for canning meats, fish, fowl, vegetables, etc. It enables homemakers to can foods when they are plentiful and thus serve delicious meals at times when those foods are normally scarce.

It cooks large hams to delicious tenderness in only 6 minutes per pound, less expensive beef roasts in just 10 minutes per pound.

It prepares 2 gallons split pea soup in 15 minutes.

It cooks an entire peck of potatoes in just 10 minutes.

The U. S. Dept. of Agriculture and leading food authorities say pressure cooking is the only safe way to process non-acid foods, including vegetables, meat, fish and fowl.

The No. 7 canner has a canning capacity of 7 quart jars or 9 pint jars, and a liquid capacity of 16 quarts.

The No. 8 canner has a canning capacity of 5 quart jars or 7 pint jars, and a liquid capacity of 12 quarts.

AVAILABLE WHEREVER QUALITY HOUSEWARES ARE SOLD
NATIONAL PRESSURE COOKER COMPANY, Eau Claire, Wisconsin
MAKERS OF WORLD FAMOUS PRESTO COOKERS
COPYRIGHT 1948 N. P. C. CO.

NEW tiny diamonds of Lux

give you faster, richer suds...

keep colors lovely up to 3 times as long!

Here's the really new way to care for your nice things! New diamonds of Lux!

They were discovered during the war, but new machinery was needed to make them. Now they're here!

Just pour out these tiny, sheer, delicate diamonds! You've never seen anything just like them. Turn on the water. See how they burst into suds! They're so much faster.

And they bubble into the richest suds ever! Thick, abundant, long-lasting suds. Compare them with any other suds you've ever used. They're richer!

They do more for you, too. Remove soil which other kinds of suds can't—leave fabrics cleaner, fresher.

Use these wonderful new diamonds of Lux for all your nice washables...your rayons and cottons, sports and playtime clothes, pretty sweaters, blouses. See how they sparkle! With Lux care, colors stay lovely up to 3 times as long, tests show. Your clothes have that "new look" for ages—you can have more without spending any more! So it's smart to avoid harsh washing methods. Get your new Lux diamonds today. Anything safe in water is safe in Lux.

These new diamonds of Lux are another triumph of the world-famous Lever Laboratories

PUBLIC AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT

Edited by MARGARET HICKEY

HOMEMAKER SERVICE... In Hartford, Connecticut

SUBSTITUTING FOR MOTHERS

by MARGARET HICKEY

"BUT who will take care of my children if I go to the hospital?" asks a worried mother. "There's nobody I can ask to see after the babies when I go to work," is a fearful father's dilemma. "Mamma's sick—what's going to happen to us?" question the insecure children. Such crises constantly threaten to break up the homes of young children, temporarily or permanently. Placing the children in shelters or foster homes has been tried. Sometimes this is the only possible solution. But social agencies consider far more desirable the protection of the home. At the present time about sixty agencies are offering "Homemaker Service" that provides temporary mother substitutes to keep families with young children together.

The homemaker goes into a stricken home to do for the family until things are normal. She attempts to preserve the natural tempo of the home, never to change it radically unless there is something very wrong. She is not a maid, nor is she a nurse. Neither is she a trained social worker, although her duties are carefully outlined for her by the case-work agency that employs her.

The Junior League of New York City was a pioneer in the homemaker movement. Beginning in 1934, when it discontinued its Children's Shelter, it started what it called a "housekeeper service." Under this program, which was affiliated with the Children's Aid Society of New York, experienced housekeepers were sent to families where the mother of several children was ill or temporarily hospitalized. The League, after sponsoring and financing the program successfully for several years, turned it over entirely to the Children's Aid Society. Over the past thirteen years, this agency has a record of helping 2288 families and keeping 8999 children in their own homes. This has been accomplished at an average cost of only $1.99 per child per day.

Another program, called the "Mother's Aide Service," is directed by the Department of Welfare of New York City. The "mother's aides" are civil-service employees selected on the basis of personality, ability and interest in children. They are given a physical examination and literacy test before appointment. And before assignment to a home they are given an eight-day training course. They receive a starting salary of $1860 a year and an increase of $120 after each of the first two years of service.

The Boston Provident Association, which has had a homemaker service since 1940, carefully defines the homemaker's duties. She must dust and tidy up the home, plan nourishing meals, supervise the children, wash for the infant or preschool child. She does no family washing, no heavy cleaning, works an eight-hour day.

Like many other good things, the supply of homemakers does not measure up to the demand. The agencies undertaking this humanitarian service find themselves at a loss to secure enough competent women for the families needing them. One Chicago agency provides the service only for families on relief. In that city, the Salvation Army has set up a three-year demonstration project of the homemaker service with finances provided by the Community Fund. During April, 1947, four Chicago agencies employed 154 homemakers who served 183 families.

Community groups concerned with the needs of children will find homemaker service a highly important program they might well encourage. The Children's Bureau, in a very helpful new publication, Homemaker Service: A Method of Child Care, by Maud Morlock, cautions careful study before undertaking such a plan. The National Committee of Homemaker Service has the guidance and blessing of the Bureau, the Family Service Association of America and the Child Welfare League of America. THE END

MOST parents of young children can appreciate the helpless feeling which comes when the mother is unexpectedly taken away from home. Who can help? Who will keep the home going?

Such a crisis faced a young factory worker, the father of four children, in Hartford, Connecticut. John Danner (we will call him) tried to tell the visiting nurse of his worries. His wife had grown increasingly deaf, but the doctor held out hope for improved hearing following an operation. "The doctor says it's the chance of a lifetime for my wife. He thinks the odds are twenty to one that he can restore her hearing. But," he asked, looking ruefully about the room, "who's going to take care of the four kids?" Three of the young Danners were playing in the kitchen about their mother. "I don't want to put them in an institution, even for two weeks," Danner said. "But I can't afford to take time off from the shop."

"Don't worry," the nurse reassured Danner. "You go ahead with your plans. I think Homemaker Service can provide someone to care for the children."

Fortunately for Danner and many others like him, Hartford has such a service, directed by the Family Service Society. This agency talked the situation over with Danner. A few days later a pleasant-looking, plump, middle-aged woman in a blue-and-white-striped uniform arrived to take over for the time his wife had to be out of the home. For two weeks the homemaker kept the Danner household going. The shyness of the children disappeared in a few hours. They ate as well, were as cleanly dressed and in general were as well taken care of during the period of their mother's absence as under her own care. When Mrs. Danner came home, her hearing greatly improved, she was delighted with what she found. She told the homemaker with deep sincerity, "I'm not going to try to tell you how grateful I am. That would be impossible. But this is your home anytime you want to come here."

(Continued on Page 100)

MORRIS ENGEL

This little girl begins to learn from her substitute mother two valuable lessons: the performance of simple household tasks and the joy of helping.

It's easy to loaf in beautiful, comfortable Daniel Green Cubans!

Babette—delicately petalled rosette points up this cuban heel style; in wine, royal blue, poppy red, blossom pink, heaven blue, black or white satin. $6.50

Lure—a continuous bow rounds the vamp; in heaven blue, blossom pink, poppy red, wine, royal blue, black or white satin. $6.50

Priscilla—buckled slipper with an un-Puritanical sauciness; in blossom pink, heaven blue, poppy red, wine, royal blue, black or white satin. At better stores everywhere. $6.00

Daniel Green

COMFY SLIPPERS... Famous since 1882

REFERENCE LIBRARY

Little Miss Fashions

MOTHER has special fashions; college coeds and teen-agers have designs created just for them. But what about little Miss Under-Six? Clothes are important to her, too, and these are the adorable patterns she loves! Crisp smocked dresses, direct from Paris; and sweaters in soft, pastel shades—even her own apron and a bathrobe!

Patterns

2338. SUMMER SUN DRESS. 25c.
Smocked top. Sizes: 1, 2 and 3.

2335. SMOCKED-YOKE DRESS. 25c.
Tiny puffed sleeves. Sizes: 1, 2 and 3.

2334. SAW-TOOTH SMOCKED DRESS. 25c.
Available in sizes 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6.

2337. SMOCKED-WAIST DRESS. 25c.
Patterns in sizes 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6.

2336. LATTICEWORK SMOCKED DRESS. 25c.
May be ordered in sizes 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6.

2285. KNITTED PULL-OVER. 5c.
Includes directions for sizes 2, 4 and 6.

2389. JIFFY-KNIT SWEATER. 5c.
Instructions include sizes 2, 4 and 6.

2266. LITTLE GIRL'S APRON. 15c.
Available in sizes 4, 6, 8 or 10.

2287. CARDIGAN AND SLIPOVER. 5c.
Sleeveless slipover. Sizes: 6, 8 and 10.

2142. CROCHETED BATHROBE. 5c.
Shell stitch. Includes sizes 2, 3 and 4.

2284. KNITTED REEFER. 5c.
Pattern includes sizes 4, 6 and 8.

2279. SLEEVELESS PULL-OVER. 5c.
Cable-stitch stripes. Sizes: 2, 4 and 6.

1913. KNITTED SUSPENDER DRESS. 5c.
Two-piece dress in 2-to-2½-year size.

Other Features

Lists are sent free on request. They give the title, number and price of all our booklets and patterns.

2008. LIST OF DEPARTMENTAL BOOKLETS. About the home, the garden, child care and training, beauty, entertaining.
1695. SUB-DEB BOOKLET LIBRARY.
1660. LIST OF JOURNAL HAT AND BAG PATTERNS.
2333. CHILDREN'S PATTERNS LIST.
2076. THINGS-TO-WEAR PATTERNS. Aprons, blouses, accessories.
1571. CHECK LIST OF PATTERNS FOR JOURNAL KNITTED AND CROCHETED ARTICLES.
1752. MAKE-IT-YOURSELF PATTERNS. Handicraft for your home, your children, yourself.

We will gladly send any of these booklets and patterns if you'll order by name and number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of stamps, cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes or Savings Stamps. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

Independent Tobacco Experts Again Name

LUCKY STRIKE FIRST CHOICE

*over any other brand!

*An impartial Crossley poll covering all the Southern tobacco markets shows that more independent tobacco auctioneers, buyers and warehousemen smoke Lucky Strike than any other brand.

Certified by Crossley, Incorporated
Archibald M. Crossley, President

So, for your own real deep down smoking enjoyment remember—

L.S./M.F.T.

LUCKY STRIKE MEANS FINE TOBACCO

So round, so firm, so fully packed — so free and easy on the draw

MAKING MARRIAGE WORK

The secret of perpetual honeymoon is one everybody knows and few practice.

BY CLIFFORD R. ADAMS

Ph.D., The Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

AFTER THE HONEYMOON

DURING the honeymoon, a couple have their first opportunity to concentrate their whole attention on each other, undistracted by outside obligations or personalities. Often the romantic effect is heightened by a degree of luxury beyond their customary experience.

Thus the return from the honeymoon often highlights, by contrast, the problems of ordinary existence. The transition from spacious hotel to tiny apartment, or trailer, or rooms with in-laws, may be an unpleasant shock. Nor is it a welcome sensation for a bride to feel herself demoted from the central role in her husband's life to that of a supporting character. No wonder the phrase "the honeymoon is over" has come to symbolize the end of illusion.

The adjustment during the first few weeks or months after the honeymoon can direct a marriage toward success—or toward failure. And the greater responsibility for choosing the direction falls on the bride.

When she'd been home from the honeymoon a month, Emily was deeply discouraged. Though she loved Stan, she began to wonder if either of them were cut out for marriage.

An inept housekeeper and indifferent cook, she was apt to attempt too much in a single day; Stan often came home to an exhausted bride, a disordered house and no dinner. No matter how she tried, she couldn't seem to assemble a meal properly; she burned the toast while waiting for the coffee, or the entire dinner cooled while she made gravy.

Though Stan tried to be patient and good-natured, he couldn't conceal his annoyance when she forgot to restock such routine supplies as soap and tooth paste; and she found herself growing defensive and short-tempered.

Gone were the long carefree hours of companionship. Evenings, Stan's attention was no longer focused exclusively on Emily; he wanted to read the paper, or he brought work home, or attended to household chores. He seldom felt like going out during the week, and since they were strangers in the neighborhood, Emily lacked daytime diversion as well.

Emily recognized the problem as one she had to solve. To be a good wife, she realized that she must become a skilled homemaker.

- Her first step was to plan the week's work, with both routine and special duties for each day. But other tasks were planned around Stan's home-coming, with enough margin for error to make sure the house was in order and dinner under way when he returned.
- She mapped out—and followed—a systematic plan for improving her cooking, practicing and perfecting fundamentals before attempting complicated menus.
- No matter what his inclination, Stan obviously hadn't time to provide all the companionship she needed. So she made it her business to develop a social life in which he could share. She cultivated the neighbors, joined the church, and gradually made a place for herself in the community.
- Recognizing that if she wanted Stan's companionship she must earn it, she deliberately tried to interest herself in the subjects and activities that appealed to Stan, and to make her activities interesting to him.
- Most important of all, she accepted the fact that the honeymoon was over. She had married Stan, not for a holiday, but to share his life, and she set out to make the most of her opportunity.

Emily's problems, though common, are not the only ones which confront brides.

Money matters are often troublesome. Every young couple should have a definite financial plan; if one was not evolved during the engagement, right after the honeymoon is not too soon to start.

Household chores can be a source of friction. If your husband enjoys pottering about the house, you are lucky; if not, avoid nagging, and encourage him to learn. Even such humdrum tasks as taping an extension cord become less irksome if you both think of them as steps toward perfecting your home.

Accept your husband as he is. Don't expect him to give up little habits that annoy you; instead, train yourself to ignore them.

If a real issue arises, face it squarely and frankly, in a co-operative spirit; together, you're almost sure to find a solution.

This month nearly a quarter of a million brides will come back from wedding trips. Those who, like Emily, accept the problems as well as the privileges of marriage will not be dogged by the specter of divorce.

MAKING PEOPLE LIKE YOU

DIFFICULTY in getting along with people is responsible for a variety of troubles. At least two thirds of all job releases are due to personality flaws rather than to technical incompetence. Many a divorce grows out of the inability of a couple to develop a real friendship with each other. Other marriages, even though they don't end in divorce, lack real happiness because one or both partners don't know how to be friendly.

Though a capacity for friendship is no guaranty of happiness in marriage, it improves your chances. Friendships are rewarding in themselves; in addition, the qualities, attitudes and habits that make other people like you will also make you more attractive to your husband—or wife.

There is no short cut to friendship. To make people like you, you must make yourself likable. But by putting a little thought on the ways we meet and treat people, we can easily improve our relationships with them. Here are a few suggestions, equally effective in business or social life:

1. When you first meet someone, be sure to get his name right, and address him by name during your conversation.

2. Be a good listener. To do this, you must also be a good interrogator. By asking questions, get the other person to discuss his interests, tastes, hobbies, rather than doing the talking yourself. Then show your attention by making comments.

3. While encouraging the other person to talk about himself, avoid prying questions. People cherish their privacy, and resent a "nosy" attitude.

4. Give credit. If the other person has a quality you admire, say so. To admit his superiority to you in some respect will not lessen your apparent value; it will only enhance his own.

5. Asking another to do you a small favor is good psychology. A person who helps another feels his own importance increased.

6. Differences of opinion are inevitable; they need not cause trouble if tactfully handled. Perhaps the most valuable suggestions here are negative. Don't take minor disagreements too seriously; if the issue is unimportant, or if no decision is required, it may be better to keep your opinion to yourself. And don't take it for granted that you are right. You stand a better chance of persuading the other person if you sincerely give him a chance to persuade you.

7. Let other people outshine you some of the time. When we are too eager to win, whether it be in an argument or a bridge game, we don't make people like us.

8. Cultivate good manners. Such details as using the right fork are less important than fundamental courtesy, which is always based on consideration for others. Punctuality, for instance, shows respect, not for the clock, but for other people's convenience.

9. Last but not least, treat other people as you wish them to treat you. The basis of real friendship, as of all pleasant human relations, is the ability to put yourself in the other person's place—and act accordingly.

Ask Yourself

DO YOU FEEL INFERIOR?

A feeling of inferiority is a handicap in making people like you. Answer each question "yes" or "no" in terms of what is true most of the time.

1. Do you mind people watching while you work?
2. Are your feelings easily hurt?
3. Do you get pretty discouraged at times?
4. Are you self-conscious at a social function?
5. Do you get "rattled" rather easily?
6. Are you often afraid others will not like you?
7. Do you hate to lose at cards or games?
8. Is it hard for you to make new friends?
9. Do others' opinions matter greatly to you?
10. Are you rather shy or bashful?
11. Do you blush—or get embarrassed—easily?
12. Are you ever lonesome even with other people?
13. Do you usually keep your feelings to yourself?
14. Are you easily upset by things people say?
15. Do you often feel lonely and neglected?
16. Are you optimistic about your future?
17. Do you find it easy to talk to strangers?
18. Are you usually in good spirits?
19. Is it easy for you to get rid of a salesman?
20. Are you a "good mixer" at parties?

Add the number of no answers in the first 15 questions to the number of yes answers to the last 5 questions. If you had 15 or more correct answers, you do not feel inferior and you probably get along well with your many friends. A score of 11 or 12 is average. With a score of 8 or less, you are missing much of the fun in life. Join some clubs, do some entertaining, try to meet new people, and practice "making people like you."

DO YOU AGREE?

Is it true that worry can make a person either stout or thin?

Yes. Some people, when depressed or emotionally upset, have poor appetites or are too tense to eat; others turn to food for satisfaction, and overeat as a result. Your doctor can help you achieve your correct weight; discuss the whole situation with him, and follow his advice.

THE END

Open wide— and say "aaah!"

You've a front row seat on the scenery in this Observation Car! Touch a button — down goes the top. That's all there is to it! And just to make life easier when you take out the luggage — the top of Plymouth's trunk compartment lifts at a finger-touch, too. Stays put — tumble-proof — a Plymouth nicety!

You're ready for ANY road — even the washboard variety! To soften the bumps, each wheel's equipped with bigger, fatter Super-Cushion Tires and special shock absorbers like those on huge airliners. Blowout hazards are minimized because your wheels wear new, wider Safety Rims. Only Plymouth has 'em in the lowest-priced bracket!

Yes, it's the perfect companion for your play-hours— and a hundred things make it so! Smooth, easy Floating Power—more responsive Safe-Guard brakes on which you can rely. So — wherever you go, here's your best guide:

Plymouth

the low-priced car most like high-priced cars

Look who's Talking!

THE SUB-DEB ★ EDITED BY MAUREEN DALY

"WELL, shut me up and call me Garbo"—you haven't said a word all evening! Just what's your trouble? Does it mean that you're going to be shy and short of conversation all your life? Not at all. If you're an average teen-ager, you're just suffering from an average ailment—that old "but what shall I say now?" malady.

Generally speaking, fellows and girls will agree that it isn't so difficult to keep up a conversation—it's the getting started that stops them. And they want some helpful suggestions that are new, lively and practical. After all, when you're introduced to a new boy on the edge of the dance floor or are sitting next to a sharp character at a doggie roast, you can't start off a beautiful friendship by saying, "Read any good books lately?" What a gal needs to have on the tip of her tongue is something quick, casual and friendly.

So just to help you put in the good word (and the right one!) at the right time, here are some "tricks" to help you start a conversation going.

No. 1 trick is a variation of the "aren't you tall, dark and handsome" technique, but it's much more subtle. Suppose you've just been introduced and all you know about each other is first names and the fact that you're going to be alone together for at least the next few minutes. Lead off with, "I know your real name, but what's your nickname?" and whether he already has one or not, proceed to find him a new descriptive nickname. For instance, if he's a big fellow—the football-player type—you might dub him "Shoulders"; if he's one of the crew-cut boys, you can call him "Clipper-Top" or "Dutchy"; a partner with a bow tie can be "Frankie" or "The Necktie." The possibilities are endless—and you're talking!

For No. 2 trick you will need a bit of imagination! Allow about three minutes' talk time for you, and then joe boy takes the floor. "Do you know anything about dreams?" you ask solemnly. "I had the funniest dream last night and it's been on my mind all day. Maybe you can tell me what it means." (All right, so you didn't dream last night. You must have had a good dream sometime.) Add a few touches about long, mysterious winding stairways and Guy Madison stopping in for a pancake breakfast—and then listen to see what Doctor Freud, j.g., can make of that one!

Try this talk technique at a party, big or small, if you and a strange guy get stranded with nothing to say to each other. You suggest something to get on the move, suggest it quickly and suggest you do it together—and then follow up with a line of chatter about what you're doing! "I never learned how to rumba, but let's try this number anyway!" . . . "Bet I can beat you at ping-pong; come on, let's try." . . . "How about making me a ham sandwich while I get some punch?" Keep moving, keep talking and never let yourself get stuck sitting down with a silence!

Here's a natural to help make light chatter with any boy who's having financial troubles trying to buy orchids and dance bids on a movies-and-malted allowance. Put it to him this way: "Somebody asked me the other day what I'd do if I had a million dollars. I've been thinking about it—what do you think you'd do?" It should take some time for you both to go yacht shopping, buy up a couple of full-size swimming pools and personally look over a monogrammed Cub plane, and think of the fun you can have doing it together!

Remember the old saying: "Two heads are better than one"? Well, four heads can be better than two if you're caught in the middle of an awkward silence with a slow schmoe or a shy character who needs a little prodding. Come out with this bright suggestion: "Come on—I'd like you to meet my best girl friend!" Then trot across the room or the dance floor to where Sally is sitting with her date for the evening. Four people together can always make more noise than two!

This next trick will take all your best wide-eyed ingénue acting ability to put it across. Next time a new man comes into your life and you get him off by yourself, give him your biggest smile; then turn thoughtful, and say demurely, "You remind me of someone—did anyone ever tell you you looked like a movie star?" Deciding just "who" can take time (with plenty of room for flattery), for you can mull over the whole movieland glamour list.

And now, "the best for the last." Here's a talk technique that's fun and foolproof, whether you're Sub-Deb or sixty. Start things off with the leading question "Have you ever been psychoanalyzed?" Then begin the "treatment," using just six questions. Ask all the questions and then make your analysis (use a bit of colorful imagination here) from the explanations given below. Here's how:

1. What would you rather do than anything else? (If answered specifically—such as "play golf, write short stories"—this means a person who knows his own mind. If answered generally—"just relax, take a vacation"—he is apt to be an undecided, vague type.)

2. What would you rather see than anything else? (Specific places or things show the determined type. "To see magnificent scenery" or "foreign countries" indicates a wandering, amiable or romantic nature.)

3. What would you rather feel than anything else? (If you think of "feel" as an emotion you are far more emotional than those who think of "feel" as a sense of touch. For instance: if your answer is "happy," you are the conservative type; "rain"—natural, simplicity of character; "success"—driving force, ambition, and so on.)

4. What would you rather eat than anything else? (Raw foods, or those easily prepared, show a natural, unaffected, unselfish nature. Difficult dishes show a lazy nature. "Steak, beef"—common sense; "ice cream, candy"—the eternal child, and so on.)

5. If you had to turn into a bird what bird would you choose? (Caged birds show inferiority complex. Soaring birds show ambition and self-attainment. Colorful birds show love of color, a bit of a show-off.)

6. If you had to turn into an animal, which animal would you choose to be? (Domestic animals indicate home-loving type, sincere, even disposition. Wild animals show the love of conquest, ruthlessness.)

Even as the questioner, what would your "analysis" add up to on these questions? Just ask any boy—he'd say, "She's a smooth gal, amusing and smart enough to make bright conversation with anybody!"

AND NOW FOR THE 864 QUESTION

Do you have a date for Friday night? If the answer is "yes," you're a lucky gal, and have fun. If the answer is "no," you could use a hint or two on how to get date-happy. Get the Sub-Deb booklet, How About a Date? No. 2269, just 5c from the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

THE LAST LAUGH

By Louis Untermeyer

A FEW days ago I received a circular from a de luxe cemetery, urging me to make reservations early, as their plots were being snatched so rapidly I might be left out in the cold. Enclosed with this warning were views of their sumptuous burial grounds showing the choice spots, including southern exposure. They were all so formal and impersonal, I could not help contrasting them with the sprawling ruins of the cozy country cemetery.

Our ancestors accepted death with neighborly understanding. Epitaphs collected in the United States and Great Britain show the almost affable way the Grim Reaper was received.

Brevity is proverbially the soul of wit—especially on a marker. Probably the shortest epitaph is the one about a workhouse pauper. It contained just two grim syllables:

Thorpe's Corpse.

Here in America the inscriptions are often irreverent. In the days of the California Gold Rush, an unfortunate and unknown gambler received this brusque adieu:

He called Ed Smith a liar.

Another shooting affair is commemorated in a sentence which, because of a misplaced phrase, twists a tribute into absurdity:

Here lies John Sargent
Accidentally shot
As a Mark of Affection by his Brother.

A tragic event is made ridiculous because the stonecutter took a phrase from the Bible—and took it too seriously in the wrong place:

Sacred to the memory of Major Bush,
Royal Artillery
Killed by the chance Discharge of a Pistol
By his Orderly
Well done, Good and Faithful Servant.

A classic example of perfect self-contradiction, a pure Irish bull, has been preserved in rhyme for posterity:

Under this sod lies Johnnie Round
Who was lost at sea and never found.

I particularly relish this pun to the memory of a Captain Underwood, who, like Johnnie Round, met his death by drowning:

Here lies free from blood and slaughter,
Once Underwood—now under water.

My collection of tombstone trivia includes more than a hundred punning epitaphs. Two of the choicest are:

Here lies a certain Elizabeth Mann
Who lived an old maid and died an old Mann.

Here under this sod and under these trees
Is buried the body of Solomon Pease.
But here in this hole lies only his pod;
His soul is shelled out and gone up to God.

Somewhat more technical is the one to a Mr. Partridge, for here it must be remembered that no true sportsman will hunt birds out of season:

What! kill a Partridge in the month of May!
Was that done by a sportsman? Eh, Death, eh?

Another pun on another bird, an architect named Nightingale, emphasizes its point by a reference to Sir Christopher Wren, architect of St. Paul's Cathedral:

As the birds were the first of the architect kind,
And are still better builders than men,
What wonders may spring from a Nightingale's mind,
When St. Paul's was produced by a Wren!

Ancient tombstones enshrined sentiments which were often more critical than complimentary. Unfortunately for romance, dispraise of married life is more in evidence than glorification of the connubial state. The first trenchant example was written almost three hundred years ago by the English poet, John Dryden; the second is by that much quoted authority, Anonymous:

Here lies my wife. Here let her lie.
Now she's at rest. And so am I.

Here lies my poor wife without bed or blanket.
But dead as a doornail. God be thankèd.

Nevertheless, there are also a few posthumous proofs of wedded fidelity. A succinct testimony of constancy stood for years in a Paris cemetery. On the wife's stone is engraved:

I am waiting for you. A. D. 1827.

while on the husband's is found:

Here I am. A. D. 1867.

Epitaph composers delighted in being specific as to the precise cause of the untimely passing, and their homely verses may have served as warnings to those left behind. For example:

Here I lie with my three daughters
All through drinking Seidlitz waters.
If we had stuck to Epsom salts,
We wouldn't be buried in these here vaults.

Here lies, cut down like unripe fruit,
The wife of Deacon Amos Shute;
She died of drinking too much coffee,
Anno domini, eighteen-forty.

It cannot be established that the dentists' patients and the landlords' victims had anything to do with the following curt disposals, but there can be little doubt that they would have relished them:

ON A DENTIST

Stranger, approach this spot with gravity:
John Brown is filling his last cavity.

ON RICHARD DENT, LANDLORD

Here lies Richard Dent
In his cheapest tenement.

Browsing about moss-covered tombs and musty tomes has even started me on making a series of epitaphs, not for departed souls, but for still extant friends. I have not gone very far in my ghoulish project, but I have a formidable few up my sleeve. Here is one all ready to be cut into the headstone of a colleague who, although a charming companion, is an unconscionable liar:

Even my tombstone gives the truth away.
It says to all who face this little hill,
Hic jacet: Here I lie. But it should say
Here I lie—still.

Many twentieth-century authors have facetiously suggested their own epitaphs. Hilaire Belloc wanted it to be said that "though his sins were scarlet, his books were read." Dorothy Parker recommended this modest line for her remains: "Excuse my dust." Nobel-prize winner Pearl Buck might have over her verdant turf a line which incorporates the title of one of her most outstanding books: "Here lies Pearl Buck's Good Earth," while Ogden Nash could echo the monosyllabic rhyme with:

Nash's
Ashes.

For although the stony chuckle may be brief, it is always the last laugh that lasts.

THE END

A BEAUTIFUL PIANO WITH A MAGNIFICENT TONE

LESTER Betsy Ross Spinet

at home everywhere

For apartment or house . . . for small or large room . . . the Lester Betsy Ross Spinet is the ideal piano because of its distinctive styling and compact size.

For children or adults . . . for beginners or accomplished players, America's most famous Spinet is the perfect choice because of its glorious tone, responsive touch and rich volume.

Built with infinite care of the finest materials, the Betsy Ross Spinet is moderately priced; guaranteed for ten years. Made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company Inc., builders of world renowned Lester Grand Pianos.

ONE name quality price

Sold by America's Foremost Piano Dealers

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET 2-K

Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home. (Enclose 10c for postage.)

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ Zone No._____ State_____ 2-K

LESTER PIANO MANUFACTURING CO., Inc., LESTER 13, PA.

Foreign Sales Representatives: H. A. ASTLETT & CO., 27 William Street, New York 5, N. Y.

Picture yourself with a Lovelier Skin with your First Cake of Camay!

MRS. LAWRENCE H. BURCHETTE
the former Barbara Alexandra Gunn of Yonkers, N. Y. bridal portrait painted by Schumm

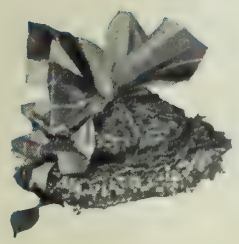
MEET MR. AND MRS. BURCHETTE!

True to her Scottish ancestry, Barbara dances the highland fling as well as the rumba and fox trot! She met Larry Burchette only four days before he went overseas—but both knew when he left it was the real thing!

A lovely skin is the beginning of charm! And you can win a smoother, softer skin with your first cake of Camay! Do this! Just give up careless cleansing . . . begin the Camay Mild-Soap Diet. Doctors tested Camay's daring beauty promise on scores of women. In nearly every case, their complexions grew softer and smoother with one cake of Camay! If you'll follow the directions on the Camay wrapper, you too can win a lovelier skin!

Barbara's coloring is unusual. Dark brown hair. Grey eyes. A fair (and indescribably lovely) skin. Camay helped! "My first cake made my skin clearer and smoother," Barbara says.



THE SOAP OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

Both tall and active, the Burchettes are a tough team to beat at mixed doubles, and Barbara's expert at beauty as well as tennis. Heed her advice. "Go on the Camay Mild-Soap Diet for a really lovelier skin!"

Fifty Years Ago in the Journal

IN July, 1898, when the temperature in Baltimore stood at 104 degrees, Teddy Roosevelt's Rough-riders were storming San Juan Hill. Bismarck died. 560 lives were lost when a British and a French steamer collided.

In an article about Pres. William McKinley in the July, 1898, issue, the JOURNAL notes his tender regard for his mother. "During her lifetime, no twenty-four hours were allowed to pass without some communication between her home in Canton, Ohio, and the governor's mansion or, later, the White House." The President, the JOURNAL also noted, was never seen without a pink carnation.

Writes correspondent Lilian Bell from Czar-ruled Russia: "You travel, rest, eat, sleep, wake or dream, tracked by the Russian police." On Russian women: "They seem to have no pride about the appearance of their feet, for they are now wearing the common gray felt boot of the peasants, the top reaching the knees. The most hideous and unshapely object the mind can conceive."

Ruth Ashmore, on Intense Friendships Between Girls, tells her readers: "You greet with a rapturous kiss and close embrace . . . exchange valuable gifts of jewelry with some loving quotation engraved upon them. Bad manners, girls, bad manners!"

Fashion note: "Ruffled skirts will undoubtedly be worn all summer. Those of black organdy over colored silk are extremely effective."

The home dressmaker: "Begin at 18 months to make your boy's dresses more boyish, but keep him in frocks until he is two, when the kilt skirt, short jacket and white blouse may be substituted."

Editor Bok on etiquette books: "To believe that a man must dress for dinner, that no calls are made after six o'clock except in full evening dress, is simplest bosh. Not one half of one per cent of American men dine in evening dress. It is a young man's heart that makes him a gentleman, not an etiquette book."

JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN

Corn is big business at Coney Island—half a million dollars last year.

YOU may get the impression that between the Yankees and the Dodgers and the Giants, more New Yorkers spend summer afternoons and evenings at the major-league ball parks here than at any other local place of outdoor diversion; but that would be way, way off. Close on to 6,000,000 fans a season go to the big games in town, whereas 40,000,000 people go to Coney Island, where the amount of money spent on food and refreshments is fabulous. And if you have the impression that the 285 stands selling hot dogs, hamburgers, popcorn, ice cream, frozen custard and pizza are the most popular, you should take a look at the half a dozen stands that sell fresh hot corn on the cob: 2,000,000 ears last season, at from 20 to 25 cents apiece. The man brushes each ear with butter, leaves on part of the husk and hands you a paper napkin to keep you from burning your fingers. You help yourself to salt and pepper. . . . Pizza, by the way, is an Italian cheese-and-tomato pie; and if you're interested, it's creeping up on the popularity of corn.

At a party recently, Frank Capra, who made that amazing picture, State of the Union, was telling Mary Bass how he happened to get into the movies—mostly because, just out of college, back in 1924 in San Francisco, he was absolutely broke. He'd lived in Los Angeles, right in the midst of the film industry, but had never set foot in a studio; which didn't, however, stop him from answering an ad for a technical assistant in the making of a movie short—and got the job. "But how did you manage to get hired?" Mary asked him. "Well, I just announced myself as 'Frank Capra of Hollywood,' and the 'Hollywood' did the trick; the rest was bluff and luck." Mary asked him of which of his productions he was proudest. He pulled a little bottle from his pocket and showed her the label: Fallbrook Olive Oil; Produced by Frank Capra. "That's just a sample," he said. "Last year from my olive ranch we sent out seven thousand gallons."

Frank Capra—of Hollywood, sir.

Heaped around with all sorts of flowers and straws, it looked just like summer in the John Frederics workroom here when the fashion department was having the hat designed which Evelyn McBride* is wearing on this month's cover. But what the city looked like outside was something else again. Twenty-six inches of snow. The biggest blizzard since 1888.

A Dr. Craig Earl has just informed us that the pupils on radio quiz programs will generally top their teachers nine times out of ten; also that while housewives come in for considerable ribbing, they're the brightest people to interrogate on the air. And he ought to know. He's Professor Quizz himself.

Lincoln, Illinois, is the only city named for Lincoln before he was President. He christened it himself in 1857 by breaking a watermelon over a pile of lumber. . . . A husband in Alabama was recently fined $27.50 for kissing his wife in public. . . . Women in the U. S. spend 5 hours, 41 minutes a week cleaning their homes; 53 per cent of this time with dust mop, dustcloth, brushes and brooms. An average of 9.78 ounces of dirt per home is removed per week. . . . Mary Lyon, who founded Mount Holyoke College in 1835, taught school for seventy-five cents a week, and raised her first $1000 from housewives in Ipswich.

We didn't know it until Nora O'Leary* told us, but we're in the midst of the biggest home-sewing boom in history: nearly one third of the home sewers being young women in their teens who've discovered how to make their own clothes from the more than 170,000,000 patterns turned out a year. "I knew there were more sewing machines than bathrooms in the country," said Nora, "but now I understand there are even more sewing machines than telephones."

Dawn Crowell's been telling us about a new beauty service here with 35 operators who answer calls for treatments anywhere in the city—to actresses in their dressing rooms, to busy women at home or in their offices; among them Judith Anderson, Faye Emerson, Ethel Merman and Mrs. Winthrop Rockefeller. To men, too, for haircuts, shaves and manicures. One male client phoned in awhile back, a socialite who'd been picked up for drunken driving, and wanted a haircut and shave in his cell.

Band leaders couldn't be busier, just leading their bands, but somehow they manage to do a lot on the side, like Lombardo with his boat racing, Cugat with his caricatures and Heidt with his hotel. The busiest of all, however, must certainly be Fred Waring, with whom Margaret Davidson had a visit the other day. For as millions of radio listeners know, he is one of the most active musicians on the air; and in addition, as Margaret knows, he's the developer of the famous blender that bears his name, and now of a new steam-dry iron as well. While whipping up a frosted beverage, he showed Margaret his collection of recipes for his mixing machine, many of them his own, and took down one of Margaret's—the smoothest and fluffiest mushroom soup you ever tasted.

DI PIETRO

Waring—busiest of the bandsmen.

Gossip about people you know, editors you like and what goes on in New York.

Gay Pursuit

The time comes when the thing a girl wants most to lose is her independence.

The Journal's complete-in-one-issue novel by Elizabeth Cadell

MRS. WILLIAM ROME sat in a blue-plush alcove of London's famous Skylark Club and looked about her. It was a glittering scene. There were bright lights, gaily dressed women and a band dressed in coats of the club's predominating color—a bright blue.

The musicians were working very hard. Mrs. Rome thought that they looked thoroughly nice young men, and wondered how they could sit, night after night, blowing upon trumpets in a stuffy room, when there were so many healthy, outdoor professions they might have chosen—farming, for example, or the Navy.

At the thought of the Navy, Mrs. Rome's thoughts paused. The Navy had come into her life and changed it—it had changed her name, her circumstances, and tomorrow it was to change her address.

She was no longer Mrs. Natalie Forrester, a widow, with a grown-up daughter, Helen, living in a small flat near Sloane Square and shopping and cooking and washing up. She was Mrs. William Rome, wife of Capt. William Rome, of the British Navy, and tomorrow she was to leave London, to leave Helen, to leave the flat which, eight years ago, had seemed so unhomelike and which was now so familiar, and betake herself to Devonshire. It was a fearful prospect, and even more dreadful was the thought of going alone—to make a new life among strangers. At forty-two, Natalie Rome was still timid, retiring and utterly unable to shoulder a way through life. She was not weak; she could do whatever she considered right, but matters which the majority of women thought straightforward and commonplace became, for her, difficult and full of pitfalls.

Her present problem was simple: her daughter was twenty-two, competent and independent; her husband's people, he had told her, were affectionate, kind and eager to welcome her. But in spite of all these reassurances, Mrs. Rome felt nothing but apprehension.

She listened to the band's unmelodious sounds and wished herself at home, where she could be quiet—and weep. She wept a good deal; try as she would, nothing could check her tears when she was touched or distressed. They brimmed, they gushed, poured, cascaded in spite of all her efforts to stem them.

Mrs. Rome knew that it was to keep her from weeping that Helen had insisted upon their coming out on this, their last evening together. She acknowledged that Helen was always right—to stay at home would have been a strain on both of them. It was far better to be gay.

If the evening had not been exactly gay, it had at least been a change. Helen had chosen Maurice Hunter, one of the most pleasant of her many young men, to accompany them, and they had gone to a theater and seen a good play. Also, a fourth member was to be added to their party, a young man whom Mrs. Rome had never met but who had recently become engaged to her stepdaughter, Lucille Rome.

Mrs. Rome glanced at her watch and saw that he was late. A little disturbance beside her roused her with a start and she looked up to find a young man standing at the table and waiting, a little awkwardly, to attract her attention. "I think you must be Mrs. Rome," he said. "I'm sorry I'm late." (Continued on Page 64)

★ Copyright, 1948, by Elizabeth Cadell. This is a condensation of the novel soon to be published by William Morrow & Co. ★

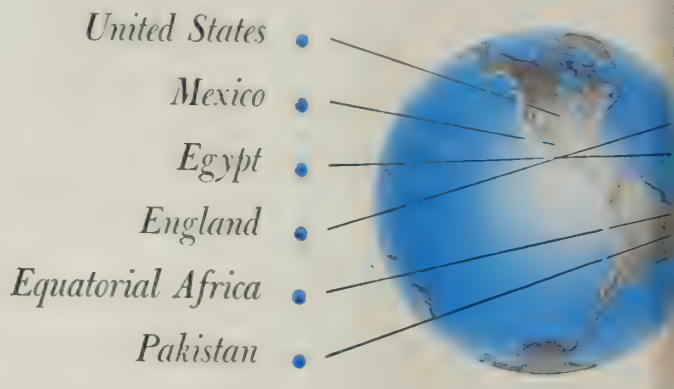
ILLUSTRATED BY AL PARKER

Third of a JOURNAL Series

PEOPLE ARE PEOPLE THE WORLD OVER

FRANCE: Julien Redouin took over a poor farm in the Loire Valley ten years ago, and has made an outstanding success of it despite the loss of last year's winter-wheat crop. The boy wearing the beret is 11-year-old Bertrand, who hopes to be a farmer like father.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA: In good times and bad, Mrs. Anna Balogh (left) lends a hand with the potato harvest. Her husband Joseph works barefoot. Working the row between them is their 14-year-old daughter Maria. Both mother and daughter wear gay peasant blouses.



UNITED STATES: In the flat field out by the Northwestern tracks, Don Pratt harrows in preparation for planting. Farming is fun on a fine Iowa day, and the boys, Dick and Bruce, love to hitch a ride on the tractor, while Arleen rides bareback on her beloved "pony."

MEXICO: In a field bordered by cactus, Pablo Gonzalez turns a fresh furrow with his wooden plow with its iron share. Up till now he has depended on his team of oxen, but the government is bringing in tractors which the farmers can rent. His principal crop is corn, basic ingredient of the tortilla.

JAPAN: During the tea har all the Okamotos work, even Naoo (right). The women their kimonos, and the big

THIS IS THE WA

IF the men on these pages were to meet in one of the world's wayside inns, they would find much to talk about, though they speak eleven different languages. For they are all patient farmers of the earth, and their common words concern the soil, and rain and drought, weeds and insect pests. They know the humbleness of sweat, and the heartbreak of losing a crop in a sudden storm.

There is a special hazard for every climate and season. In Mexico, Pablo Gonzalez complains that there is never enough rain—until the rainy season, when there is too much. At the Equator in Africa, Chief Zamba Aluma is deluged with so much rain that occasionally his entire village picks up and moves. In Egypt the fields of Hag Zaki el Gamel are irrigated by the Nile, but there are cotton worms to plague him. In Germany it is the potato beetle, and in China it is bandits. Mohamed Usman, of Pakistan, is apt to find the temperature 126° in the shade, while 4000 miles away in Slovakia the Baloghs are suffering early frosts.

Days are long in the growing season, and the sun keeps the clock. In Japan, Koichi Okamoto arises at 5:00 A.M., as have his ancestors for seven generations. He works among the tea plants till sundown, for this is the month of the second 1948 tea harvest.

CHINA: The tiled farmhouse of Ho Fu-yuan has stood for two centuries, and he faithfully follows the way of his ancestors. Here he is raking wheat to be threshed by hand. Ho has no machines save a wind-driven water wheel, no fertilizers save night soil and seaweed. He borrows a buffalo from his uncle.

ITALY: The Guercinis are ten farmers of a huge estate in T cany, and the men work c munally—Armando with which have been worn since feudal times. The Okamotos also raise rice, wheat, sweet potatoes. They prize their Korean cow.

EGYPT: Feeding the animals gives Mustafa el Gamel, the eldest son, a welcome chance to get into the shade. The el Gamels also raise cows, donkeys and sheep, but no pigs, as the Moslem faith forbids eating pork. Crops are cotton, maize, wheat, beans, rice and tomatoes, and a few fruits such as melons.

- Germany
- Japan
- Czechoslovakia
- France
- China
- Italy

by JOHN GODFREY MORRIS

THE WORLD FARMS

In Iowa, Don Pratt is milking his Guernseys at 6:30 A.M., and blessing the milking machine that lets him sleep an extra half hour. In Egypt, Mr. el Gamel rides off to the fields on his donkey at 6:00 A.M., and returns for breakfast an hour later. In Italy, work sometimes continues until 10:00 P.M., but the Guercinis siesta during the midday heat. Their land is rocky, and the fields are cleared with dynamite.

The farmer must rely more on muscle than on money. The Chinese family, almost the poorest of all, was worth $20,000,000 (Chinese) at last reckoning. But with painful slowness, machines are beginning to relieve the farmer's drudgery. Pablo Gonzalez can now rent new American tractors through the Mexican government. In France, M. Redouin now shares a tractor with two other farmers, and has a new plow. In England, Thomas Hiatt has a tractor, but with it a new worry: spare parts. Where there are no machines there are children to help with the harvest.

With the world hungry for food, these twelve farmers bear more than family responsibility. But they find it often perplexing. There are landlords and taxes, crazy prices and sudden shortages. And since the war, a German official has paid a monthly visit to the barn of Heinrich Stieglitz at milking time, to set a quota for his cows.

PHOTOGRAPHS for the Journal by Horace Bristol (Japan and China), Larry Burrows (England), Robert Capa (United States and Czechoslovakia), Marie Hansen (Italy), George Rodger (Egypt, Pakistan and Equatorial Africa), Phil Schultz (Mexico), David Seymour (France and Germany)

ENGLAND: Thomas Hiatt farms 230 acres with the help of this tractor, two hired men and son Peter, who learned to drive the tractor at the age of five. When the harvest is in, Hiatt takes his gun and goes after rabbits. Last year he bagged 83 in a single afternoon.

PAKISTAN: Ankle-deep in water, Mohamed Usman and his eldest son Sumar work in their rice field, which requires constant irrigation from the River Indus. The working farmer's life in Pakistan is a grim struggle for existence against weeds, erosion, heat and landlords.

GERMANY: The white-faced team of Heinrich Stieglitz heads into the barn with a huge load of hay, while young Richard and his dog race alongside. The Stieglitzes farm 28 acres of fertile land close to the River Rhine, and grow potatoes, sugar beets and grain.

plow, Armido and a cousin from Florence breaking up the sod, Raffaello pruning the olive tree. Their grapes and wines are famous.

EQUATORIAL AFRICA: Zamba Aluma, a chief of the Kaliko tribe, hacks away at the elephant grass which constantly encroaches on his clearing in the bush. He grows maize, beans, simsim, cassava, bananas and peanuts. He is plagued by locusts in November, and by marauding elephants and buffaloes.

A little madness in the Spring

A little madness in the spring
Is wholesome even for the king,
But God be with the Clown,
Who ponders this tremendous scene—
This whole experiment in green,
As if it were his own!

—Emily Dickinson

By George Bradshaw

MISS WHARTON laughed. "The westering spirit. The pioneer still stirring in blood."

"No," John Stevenson said. "No pioneer would even admit acquaintance with my blood. Still ——"

"John, don't worry so. Use a little philosophy."

"I hardly think that's necessary."

"You forget," Miss Wharton said, "the business of philosophy is to justify our doing the things we want to do."

"Of course," John Stevenson said. "I had forgotten. How comforting."

They were walking home from the library, where both of them were employed, to Mrs. Burnett's house, where both of them lived. It was a night in spring and the air was lazy.

"And I beg your pardon," John Stevenson said, "for going on so about a mere holiday trip to California. It's not really such a problem as all that."

"No," Miss Wharton said, "it's not."

"I guess what actually bothers me is my cottage up at the lake. This is the first year it's really been furnished. I ought to enjoy it. Still ——"

"Still?"

"I am thirty-eight, Janet. I want to see the West while I can still think of myself as young and reckless."

"Young and reckless? Oh, John."

John Stevenson laughed. "I know. I'm neither, and I never have been."

They turned into the polite street on which sat Mrs. Burnett's polite house; the air was faint with the odor of young leaves.

"Still, one must begin sometime to be young and reckless," John said.

"Of course. You take your trip."

"And how would you like," John said, "to use the cottage for your vacation? It's small, but ——"

"John!" Janet said. "I would love it."

John Stevenson sat in the patio of his hotel having breakfast. The view was typical of Southern California: bright flowers and a swimming pool and, farther off, hazy mountains. John Stevenson drank his orange juice and pondered a double irony: what Janet Wharton didn't know, and what he did know. For certainly if she knew what he knew, she would consider him immensely young and reckless; yet he, knowing, felt neither young nor reckless.

A bellboy threaded his way through the palm trees and stopped at John's table. "The car will be here at eleven to take you to the studio," he said.

"Thank you," John said.

John Stevenson was exactly what he seemed to be: the librarian of a good library in a small city in Connecticut. He was, as he had said, thirty-eight; outwardly there was nothing very extraordinary about him; but what terrified John Stevenson was that he was obliged to admit that there was nothing very extraordinary about him inwardly.

It was not a recent fear. Two years before, on his thirty-sixth birthday—that most appalling of days, when forty seems over the nearest hill—the fear had become so acute that he had decided to do something about it. That decision was why, now, he was in California. John had written a book.

The fear of losing one's youth is, of course, epidemic. The symptoms vary with the temperament: face lifting, an interest in golf, a visit to the divorce courts; but all victims of the disease appear to have this in common, a desire to retain the feeling of youth.

John's case was different: he wished not to retain, but to acquire those feelings. His fear was that his life would have come and gone, and (Continued on Page 138)

John loved the picture. It was what his life should have been.

ILLUSTRATED BY JON WHITCOMB

DO WE NEED ADULT EDUCATION?

Hanging on the wall of our minds is the wrong picture of the American family: adults now outnumber children two to one, have two thirds the education and carry all the responsibility. ★ By Lyman Bryson

IF WE POSE the question, "Who in this country needs education?" we find that there is only one answer: "Everybody." There are few among us who could say honestly that we have learned all we need to know—or even all we want to know. All of us have felt at some point that life is baffling. All of us have felt, at one time or another, the hope that there is somewhere in the world the information or skill or wisdom that will help.

Yet we Americans are so deeply interested in education and so proud of our real achievements that we often overestimate what we have really done. We think of ourselves as a nation of educated adults. As a matter of fact, we are far from it.

Planned adult education is necessary to bring us all to a level of effective citizenship and to make it possible for us to go on learning in order to keep up with the changing world.

For the great expansion in high-school enrollment in the United States has been quite recent. While eight of ten of our teen-agers are now in high school, the average number of years of schooling for an American adult is still only a fraction more than eight years, and about 20,000,000 men and women have had only six years of schooling, or less. We have an impressive number of college graduates—but we have more illiterates than bachelors of arts. We can begin to understand something of the job that needs to be done if we consider that the average American parent received four years' less education than his children are getting.

In a world like ours today, parents, instead of waiting for their children to learn what every adult knows, have to learn fast to keep up with their children. This applies to everybody, including college graduates and members of the professions.

Part of their need is made up by agencies like the newspapers, magazines, radio, movies, museums, libraries and clubs. But in this discussion we are concerned chiefly with our agencies of public education, including not only public schools but colleges, libraries, extension services, and the other institutions that are paid for with public money, and with what they are doing—and not doing—to bring education to our adult population.

Now, no program can succeed or should be introduced unless it can generate its own momentum, and no adult should be enticed or dragooned to enroll in adult education, nor bribed by the offer of any degree. Adult education should be self-education, sought only from an inner sense of need.

Most citizens will admit that education pursued in this spirit brings richer returns, not only to the students but to their communities. Before citizens can be expected to discuss plans or programs, however, the answer must be found to the basic question: How many adults are there who, after their day's work, are willing seriously to devote their free evenings to classes and study? The answer is that the number is much larger than ever before and is steadily increasing.

A GALLUP POLL was taken in 1944 to find out how many American adults wanted to enroll in some kind of study group when the war was over; 34 per cent said they would. In July, 1947, 41 per cent, or two out of every five adults of voting age, said they wanted to engage in some kind of study. That this was not mere wishful thinking has been proved by actual practice. Where the opportunity to study appropriate subjects has been offered, adults have responded eagerly and earnestly. Some of our communities have explored the deeper needs of adults today and are developing new agencies to meet them. There is, for example, the junior college or community college, where both young people and adults can enroll. The community college usually offers two years of college work and a wide variety of studies for special needs. President Conant, of Harvard, in a previous article has indicated how urgently this kind of school needs to be multiplied, and any American community now planning a two-year college should, of course, bear in mind that it can serve the needs of adults as well as of recent high-school graduates.

DURING the years 1937–41, there was a general increase in the number of colleges of this type, but the increase in adult students, where they were admitted, was disproportionately large. In Connecticut, for instance, there was an increase of 125 per cent in total enrollment, whereas the adult-education enrollment increased 225 per cent. In 1944–45 about two thirds of the total number enrolled in all our community colleges were special students seeking "adult education." One such college had a daytime student body of 3000, but an adult enrollment in the late afternoon and evening of 25,000. The state of California now serves a million persons a year in approximately 120 evening high schools and junior colleges set aside entirely for adults.

Private motives support the public need. Our society has now more adults than children, and as modern medicine lengthens the span of life we have a growing group on whom great decisions rest. But there is also a widespread sense of frustration, and many who feed the machines seek refreshment and access to the deeper human interests in adult education. There are new vocational opportunities. The shorter workday, pension systems, earlier retirement give us new leisure—and a new need for learning.

This overwhelming demand for more education is the greatest tribute ever paid to our educational system. During this century we have greatly extended educational opportunity to all our people. The appetite for learning grows by what it feeds on. It would appear as though we had started something—like a chain reaction: the principle is this: the more education you give (Continued on Page 132)

REPRODUCED COURTESY CHESTER DALE COLLECTION, NATIONAL GALLERY, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Venice, Palazzo da Mula, painted by Monet

CLAUDE MONET, 1840-1926. In Venice, substance often seems to dissolve into reflection while light appears as material and palpable as the object it falls on. Then churches, palaces and bridges are transmuted into curtains of colored light, wavering and trembling in their aqueous mirror; and Nature, transformed by this amphibious atmosphere, becomes the imitator of art, creating scenery as insubstantial and evanescent as the most Impressionistic painting. No wonder Claude Monet, when he finally reached Venice in 1908, exclaimed, "All this unusual light! It is so beautiful! I am spending wonderful moments here and can almost forget I am as old as I am."

But looking at Venice, Palazzo da Mula, the question arises: Has Monet gone too far in his interpretation of this light? At twilight did he actually see Venice as an architecture of amethysts, turquoises, emeralds and rubies? Or is such a vision of intense color only a poetic invention and the reality much less colorful, much closer to the gray and black the average person sees? The answer is complicated and goes to the heart of the problem of Impressionism. What we see in the field of vision are relationships of areas of color and of light and shadow. These relationships the Impressionist painter wished to express, but he was hampered by the limitations of pigment. In the present scene, for instance, no oil paint could give the luminosity of the darkening water or the blackness of the velvety shadows as they actually appeared. Therefore many of the Impressionists, and Monet especially, decided to compensate for the deficiencies of paint, its narrower range of contrasting values, by using contrasting colors of an intensity greater than those they observed in the scene they were painting. From this point of view the Palazzo da Mula is true to Nature's organization of tones; but it is a transposition into another key, one with a more limited scale of light and shadow but, as compensation, with a greater brilliance of color. Thus, though Monet never saw a building like this, a palace made of a rubble of precious stones, his canvas is still a close approximation to the relationship of light, shadow and color in Nature.

—JOHN WALKER, Chief Curator, National Gallery of Art

Posies for Pamela

LARRY THOUGHT HE KNEW ALL THE ANSWERS—THEN THE RIGHT GIRL ASKED THE WRONG QUESTION ★ BY CHARLOTTE EDWARDS

ALL RIGHT, so maybe my shoulders aren't constructed like the span of the Memorial Bridge. There are other things in life. The fact that a man stands six-four, with snake-dancing muscles, doesn't prove much. In some fields, that is. As my war record will testify, much as my modesty deplores quoting past performances.

Of course, the minute a boy begins to attain man's estate and discovers that he's not going to have Atlas' stature, he prepares himself for self-defense. Not in a vulgar fashion always. Not with his fists. But he learns to have a quick tongue. He learns to stay away from the dangerous situation. And he learns to pour on charm with the ladies.

It leads straight to the ladies, of course. What doesn't?

My mother was a very quick and busy woman, and quite a beauty too. Somehow, loyalty to her own sex was left right out of her nature. Which was a good thing. Not only did my father worship her till the day she died, but she gave me some tips which have been very useful to me in my business.

"Women can't help it, Larry," she'd say. "When a great dark giant comes walking toward them with the Stone Age look in his eyes, they just wilt. But let them hook the giant for keeps and they fret all over the place. First off, they know other women wilt when he's around. Which does not make for peace of mind. Then, after a while, almost all women like to have a man they can talk to."

I learned to talk to women.

My mother also made the statement, "It may be trite to say that women love little courtesies and attentions and good manners. But like a great many trite things, it's also terribly true. Many a woman has stood by a scoundrel simply because he managed to make her feel like a queen."

I learned to make women feel special and precious.

My mother knew whereof she spoke. Even if she did draw her deductions as vicarious praise of my father, a small neat man, with beautiful manners and a real deference for womanhood.

It worked. It started working in high school. Girls who practically clawed one another to streamers for the privilege of being escorted to dances by the football players would spend the greatest part of the evening in my arms. I learned a few tricky steps that football players' big feet couldn't seem to navigate. I also learned a few tricky phrases that, whispered into a shell-pink ear, had nothing to do with signals or training or muscles.

All of which in turn has little or nothing to do with Pamela Crane and the love which opened like a water lily in my heart when she first walked into my shop.

I had the shop before I went away. I came back to it and civilization, filled with a zest which ignored rehabilitation. The minute I opened the door and smelled the sweet flood reaching out to me, I was at home. Maxie—she was my helper before the war, and she kept things going in fine shape while I was away—said that I turned white around the gills with pure sensuous pleasure, and maybe she was right.

Did I mention I own and operate just about the rosiest little flower business in Anchor City? No puns intended.

Anyhow, the first time I saw Pamela it was winter outside, spring inside, and peaceful as all get out. That is, until that moment when I stepped out of the back room where we do the fancy finger stuff, bows and blending and snipping, and looked up at her.

I am sorry to have to report that I looked up. It always seems a great disadvantage. Not to me, of course. But to the general public. Ludicrous. Mr. and Mrs. Henpeck. Be not fooled. Napoleon was no slouch, off as well as on the battlefield. But there I am, on the defensive again.

Anyway, the quiet peace went out of me like a snuffed candle. In its place came a blaze that I can only liken to a prairie fire on the rampage. For a moment, the heat and (Continued on Page 103)

"You can have every blasted flower in my shop," I thought. "It's worth that to look at you."

REPRINTED COURTESY THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

"You left at seven-forty-five. Kids stopped crying at seven-fifty-five. Henry wanted a glass of water, seconded by Alice and Stephen. Phone rang at seven-fifty-seven. Wrong number. Eight-oh-one: Alice wanted cookies, seconded by Henry and Stephen. Stephen fell out of bed. Henry escaped downstairs, Alice hid in the attic. Eight-oh-five . . ."

If You Ask Me

BY ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

★ Like many women in their twenties, I am beginning to face and fear a future alone with no husband for love and companionship. What advice would you give those of us who do not marry, to permit us to lead full and happy lives, free of the fear of loneliness? Do you think overeducation which lifts a woman above the intellectual level of the people she meets is ill-advised?

I should advise any young woman who does not marry to take a deep interest in young people, so that she will have the same satisfaction with other children that she might have had with her own. I should also advise her to build up very warm friendships and cultivate her interest in some kind of work which will tie her down to obligations, so that she will never find time hanging heavily on her hands and feel that her existence is profitless.

There is no such thing, from my point of view, as overeducation, nor being above any people because of formal education that you might have been fortunate enough to acquire. Anyone with character and the opportunity can acquire a formal education, and many people who have not had a chance for book learning are wiser than those who have had. If education hasn't given you enough understanding so that you can get on with people around you and appreciate their quality, and perhaps help them through your opportunities to more opportunities of their own, so that their interests may coincide with yours, then I am afraid your education has done you more harm than good.

★ During my husband's life I had plenty of this world's goods, including household help. After his death I had to be father and mother and, due to financial reverses, I had to go to work at office positions and sales. Now I am past sixty, and younger people are filling such positions. I am considered a good cook and have taken a position doing housework, just as I required it of those in my employ. It suddenly occurred to me that there is no security to work of this sort. Don't you think there should be Social Security for those who do housework?

Yes, I have always felt there should be Social Security for those who do housework. It is rather complicated to work out because the collections come from so many people, but Great Britain has done it by a stamp system, and I think we will eventually work it out here. There is agitation every year to have household workers and farm labor included in Social Security, but so far the pressure hasn't been great enough on Congress to get them to do so.

★ I am 16 years old, and my problem is that my parents can't see the teen-age way on entertainment. I enjoy sports and traveling to neighboring cities for our school games. My parents absolutely can't see it. It seems they want me to stay home six days a week and like it. I go to church and a show on Sunday. I don't mind staying home, but even here my entertainment is fenced in; no murder-mystery books or radio—anyway, my father monopolizes the radio in the evening. What should I do? Just go against my mother's will? How can I show her I need and enjoy going places?

No, I certainly would not go against my mother if I were you. I think probably if you introduced to her whoever is to be with you as a chaperon, when you go to neighboring cities for school games, she might be more willing to let you go. Perhaps in time your father and mother may give you a little radio which you can use in your own room, but they are right, I think, in not wanting you to waste your time on murder-mystery books or too much listening to the radio when you should be doing other things. At your age, there are many things which still are an obligation to do every day. You might plan with your parents for some free time when you could do as you wish, and that would allow you to listen to such radio programs as you wanted during that time. If you make sure that your parents know the people with whom you want to "go places," they probably will be more willing to have you go; and if you show them that your taste in people and in reading and in radio is good, that will probably make a difference in their allowing you more freedom of choice.

★ Please explain why it is that the nineteenth-century liberals fought for the liberation of the individual from the control of the state or government, while today's liberals seem to be always on the side of more government controls over the individual.

Because in the nineteenth century the individual had comparatively few liberties. There was no recognition that the government owed an individual certain things as a right. There were charities, but at that time the government was not conceived as doing away with charity. Now it is accepted that the government has an obligation to guard the rights of an individual so carefully that he never reaches a point which needs charity.

Nowadays the government controls which are advocated by the liberals are all to safeguard, in a modern and very complicated world, some of the things which individuals have come to feel they have a right to achieve. For instance, we insist that the government must see that every man who wants to work is able to get work suitable to his ability and at a wage on which he and his family can live. The nineteenth-century liberals did not have to face that problem and therefore no regulation was needed. Regulations have come only as our complicated civilization has made them necessary.

★ More than a year ago I read your book, This is My Story, and I want to read more. Have you ever thought of writing a continuation?

I am now busy writing the second volume of my autobiography and I hope to be through in the course of the next few months.

Letters should be addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, c/o the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. It should be understood that Mrs. Roosevelt's answers reflect only her own opinions, and are not necessarily the opinions of the Editors of the JOURNAL.

THE ALCOHOLIC AND HIS WOMEN

BY HAROLD MAINE

The woman is waiting, and crying softly as she waits. He should have been home to supper three hours ago. She knows where he is; that's why she's crying. She doesn't know, of course, just which bar he's in at this moment. She is the wife of an alcoholic. We have all known her by some name. We have pitied her or we have been irritated by her or we have respected her superloyalty. We have had every reaction except to understand her. Which is not strange, since she herself—so much closer to the horror—probably does not understand either.

I have known these women—there were two of them in my own life as an alcoholic. And I have certainly known the alcoholic pattern itself.

Such a woman may well feel herself in a trap that she had no warning of. The change in the man she loves is insidious. The borderline between social drinking and pathological drinking is not always clearly marked, and its crossing may not be recognized until the disease has a firm grip on its victim. When it is noted, the woman may believe that it is due to some failure in herself, which is rarely if ever the truth. Bewildered, she looks back over their life together to spot her shortcomings.

If she does this, she is tightening the web around herself, and perhaps around her husband. For the alcoholic will take advantage of her attitude to excuse his drinking more freely. He welcomes this willingness of his wife to take upon herself some of the guilt. He can now cry into his bourbon as he tells his bar cronies how misunderstood he is at home. And resentment always demands more bourbon.

So the wife finds herself walking farther and farther into the trap. Already her friends have applauded her loyalty, and she feels that she must live up to it. She now has a public yardstick for a loyalty that is instinctively hers, even though it may have limits. When pushed beyond these limits, she becomes a martyr. Now she transfers the full guilt to her husband. And thus, feeling the full guilt, he is in a very bad spot as an alcoholic, for alcoholism feeds on guilt, real or imagined.

But I think the more common type of drunkard's wife we see is she who has married a man believing that love would cure him. She is sure that once she shares his life, there will be no need of drink. These women are the drunk's easiest victims.

And the bottle may fall right into the midst of the honeymoon. If it does, or if it appears later, is the bride going to admit she has made a mistake? Most often many bitter years will pass before she does.

While these years pass she will find, most likely, that she is undergoing the change, rather than the man she would have saved. All the responsibilities of marriage eventually fall on her shoulders. She earns the living, meets the creditors, protects a cowering man. Sober, her husband obeys her like a child; drunk, he depends on her like one.

I have seen such women become shrews. Those who do not become shrewish pay in a different way. They must live in a constant tension. Every time their husbands are missing they can envision them as being run over, committing crimes, contracting disease, running into debt. Once conditioned to this vigil, they must continue it even on the days of the husband's sobriety, never knowing until he comes home whether he is drunk or not. They have developed an anxiety they'll carry to the end of their lives, with or without an alcoholic husband. Often they develop an emotional block that prevents their ever again giving themselves fully to love.

From all this it might seem that I take a dim view of the power of love. I do when it is applied as a cure for alcoholism. The belief that love will conquer alcohol is based on ignorance of the disease, an ignorance growing out of the years when we considered drunkenness a moral problem. Once we considered other diseases immoral too. Such an attitude toward alcoholism is simply a hang-over from medieval thinking. Few of us would expect love to cure tuberculosis, cancer or diabetes. Yet some still expect it to cure alcoholism.

If not love, what then? Must the woman contemplating marriage with an alcoholic, or a suspected alcoholic, simply and realistically refuse to take the step? From my own experiences I would say yes. Especially should she do this if the man refuses to admit that it is a problem. Such refusal is an indication that the problem is there. If the man does admit the problem, she should insist that they consult a psychiatrist and then take practical steps toward solving the problem. And all this should take place before marriage.

What of the woman already in the trap, who has lost the chance to choose whether she will take the risk of marrying a drunkard? Is there any hope for her? Yes, a little. There is some hope for her if she will try to understand the real nature of her husband's disease, and if she will follow some suggestions that have proved valuable to alcoholics whose disease has been arrested.

To the wife who is in doubt I would put these questions: Does your husband drink secretly, especially secretly from you? Does he have a bottle in his desk drawer at the office, or in the garage, or in the basement, where he can get a drink when the furnace "needs coal"? Does he need a bracer to meet routine situations, situations that he was formerly able to meet without a drink? Do you notice that though formerly a controlled drinker, able to stop with the drink that seemed to him one too many, he now seems to you (not to himself) unable to do this? Does he need a drink any time before noon? Finally, if after you have seen some of these red flashes and have tried to discuss them with your husband, he refuses to admit that he has a problem, insists that he can stop any time, after giving evidence to the contrary—then you should know that the disease has a grip on him.

A wife must know that her alcoholic husband has an overabundance of sensitivity—a characteristic most attractive to many women. Even supercapability in trade or profession is a part of his disease. He well realizes that he must be more than other men to make up for his failures during the drunken episodes. As he moves toward success, time after time, he will resent plodders about him. And when he resents, he is actually on his way to the next drink.

The woman who nags him about his "vice," who engages in recriminating arguments with him, makes him build a thicker wall of alcohol. Rather, she must treat him like the sick person he certainly is. She must never be angry about his illness. She must never condemn him. The moment she does, she is bending his elbow for the next drink.

She must never tell him what he should do about his drinking. Resentment is sure to follow, and more alcohol to drown it. But she can discuss the problem with him co-operatively, when he is sober. She can try to interest him in alcoholism as a disease for which there are, if not cures, palliatives that will allow a life near enough to the normal to look like the real thing from the depths of alcoholism.

And what are these palliatives? Alcoholics Anonymous is one of them. It is a great organization that has done unmeasured good. If you are skeptical, talk to a few of its members. It has not, of course, lifted the problem of alcoholism from our shoulders, public misinformation to the contrary.

Let Alcoholics Anonymous speak from its own wide experience. Of the estimated three million current cases of alcoholism in the country, 20 per cent are mental defectives who are hopeless because they can never be responsible beings. Another 20 per cent are psychotics. In these, alcoholism is secondary, cannot be treated until the psychoses are removed, and so at present are beyond the help of Alcoholics Anonymous. The remaining 60 per cent can possibly be aided by this group.

There are still some limitations. The man who can be helped must recognize and admit that he is powerless against alcohol, that he cannot win his battle alone. He must admit that it is impossible for him ever to drink normally.

Here, then, is a function that the wife can really fill, and with some hope. If her husband is not psychotic, is not mentally defective, she can try to lead him to acceptance of this first essential. She may be successful only if she stands beside him, never over him; only if he has willed the admission, never if he thinks it forced upon him, however lovingly or tactfully.

This, then, is the hope that I can hold out to the woman who is trapped with an alcoholic husband. If it seems too slim, you are probably not the woman who can be of real help to him. The job calls for nearly superhuman strength, love and patience. And if this seems beyond your strength, or if after trying all that is possible you have failed, you should leave this alcoholic. It may be that he is not salvageable—not all alcoholics are. At least you are not capable of helping him. And your staying with him, eventually becoming as bitter as he, as psychologically scarred, will be helpful to no one.

Many of my alcoholic brethren will feel that I have betrayed them by writing this. But I think not. If I have helped one woman to deal realistically with her alcoholic husband or husband-to-be, then I have saved that man from the burden of guilt which makes it impossible for him to feel the weight that really oppresses him—a weight that must be lightened by himself and for himself alone. THE END

ALEXANDRIA

By Richard Pratt

Architectural Editor of the Journal

TWO hundred years ago this summer, on a pleasant piece of land sloping down to the Potomac, a young man of sixteen, lugging one end of a surveyor's chain, was helping to lay out the site of a town to be named after a John Alexander, who in 1670 had bought the 6000 acres for 600 pounds of tobacco. Fifty years later, a few miles up the river, Congress was naming the new Capital of the United States after the former surveyor's assistant, who in the meanwhile had become famous as the Father of his Country. By that time, Alexandria had grown to be one of the most beautiful of the early American cities, and so it remains. For there are sections, like the two whole blocks of Prince Street at the right, which are still intact, with even the cobblestones as they were when they were laid by the Hessians just after the Revolution; and almost everywhere you turn in the older parts of town there is some handsome architecture to be seen.

These two blocks of Colonial and Federal houses on Prince Street have no equ

EXTERIOR PHOTOGRAPHS BY RICHARD PRATT-JOHNSON

HOLLAND HOUSE

BUILT by a British sea captain in 1751, the present particular pride of this mellow old home down near the river is the dining room. The extraordinary table, set here for formal luncheon, is composed of four Chippendale tilt-top pedestals; the chairs, Chippendale; the hunting board, Hepplewhite. The table lace is point de Venise; the china, Queen Victoria's favorite pattern; the rug, a handsome Chinese replica. The setting and flower arrangements are by the owner, Mrs. Berenice Fleming-Holland.

here for period completeness.

The drawing-room furniture is Sheraton; the chest and four-poster in the bedroom are American Chippendale.

DUANE HOUSE

INTERIOR PHOTOGRAPHS BY WESLEY BALZ JOYCE, INC.

This house was forty-one years old in 1824, when, on the occasion of a parade in his honor, the elderly but still debonair Marquis de Lafayette appeared at its doorway to address the throng and give a toast to the town. Within, as a labor of love, the richly carved interiors have been splendidly restored and preserved by its present owners, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Joynt, and furnished to perfection with the finest pieces of the period, making the house one of the choice examples of early American elegance in the United States.

Mr. Crosby and the Fifth Freedom

IT'S REALLY NECESSARY — BUT HARD TO EXPLAIN TO A WIFE ★ BY MARY HASTINGS BRADLEY

"BEIGE and rust, I think," said Mrs. Crosby dreamily.

"Bathe and rust?" Mr. Crosby was startled. Mrs. Crosby had just been advocating reducing exercises and his wits scrambled to know how he was to rust.

"Or henna," Mrs. Crosby murmured.

"Henna?" Mentally he changed trains. He said vigorously, "Now don't do anything to your hair! It's all right the way it is—that gray hardly shows."

"My hair? I'm talking about curtains for this room."

"Oh!" Mr. Crosby subsided into his book again. Then he said, "What's the matter with the ones we have? They look all right to me."

"Those old things?" said Mrs. Crosby, with gay scorn. "I only kept those up till I could get some decent fabrics again. And now they've got the very thing over in town. Sometimes these small towns have the very best selections. Of course the price is horrible."

Mr. Crosby opened his mouth, but on swift second thought closed it soundlessly. As long as Mrs. Crosby continued to be interested in renovating this cabin, so long would the Crosby family continue to enjoy the summers there. Mr. Crosby was a teacher of anthropology and a fisherman. This cedar cabin on a northern lake, fringed by hemlock and white birch, was to him the noblest place in the world. His father, an even more passionate angler, had built it when the lake was lonelier and so lovelier, when there were no new cottages tucked behind the point on the left or the Hutchinses' big place beyond

(Continued on Page 142)

ILLUSTRATED BY PRUETT CARTER

There was a sense of escapade in him, of buoyant escapade, only faintly tinged with uneasiness.

A STORY WITHOUT A MORAL

Any woman knows that it's better to love well—than too wisely. ● By Richard Arvay

AT a recent auction in one of the largest New York galleries an incident occurred which for many days remained the focus for amused conversation among art dealers and collectors. Not one among these daily visitors to the auction rooms, whose occupation or passionate activity is the never-ceasing chase after art treasures, could remember a similar episode.

On the day in question I myself had come with the intention of bidding for a Boldini. But as soon as I entered the overcrowded gallery I realized that this would be no day for bargains. The public was there—the outsiders who senselessly drove the prices high, for they bought pictures with no idea of their value, but merely because they appealed to them.

As I stood near the door, studying the crowd, my rambling glance became fixed on a man in one of the back rows. I knew that head, so much was certain, but when and where had I seen it before? I had always been proud of the fact that any face, seen even only once, was registered in my brain as if on a photographic plate, classified according to name and other data. Who was that man in the back row?

The auctioneer started proceedings at last with his customary monotonous drawl. Three clerks observed closely and reported the gestures and cries of the bidders. The day was, as I have said, taken over by the outsiders. Prices were called out by members of the audience, whereas in the usual gathering of dealers and collectors not a sound was heard. A head nodded gently, a hand moved—that was all. A lift of the eyebrow was sufficient. The clerks, familiar with the faces and habits of the bidders, were able to interpret the minutest muscular activity.

Surprisingly enough, the first pictures brought relatively low prices. A fairly good Courbet went for only $2100. A Casarelli, a fifteenth-century Italian master, was turned over to its new owner for the ridiculous sum of $600.

Perhaps I would have luck with my Boldini? Perhaps the prices would not go so high as I had feared? The atmosphere in the galleries was not the one that the outsiders usually brought with them. The tension, the excitement, the gambling-room fever, which was sometimes diffused through the room like a red mist, upsetting the most cool, calculating brain and seducing to bidding, was missing today.

The next picture presented for bidding did not really belong on the day's schedule. It was a copy.

"Number twenty-seven," announced the auctioneer." Copy of a painting by Alessandro Magnasco—The Temptations of Saint Anthony."

It seemed to me that despite the objectivity with which he made his announcement, an attentive listener could detect a certain contempt in his voice. Or perhaps it was only my imagination.

"May I open at fifty? Do we say fifty? Who will make it fifty? . . . Well, then, twenty-five?"

A hand was raised.

"We have twenty-five. . . . Thank you, sir. Is there any advance?"

"Thirty," corrected one of the clerks, who had somewhere detected the movement of an eyebrow or some other signal.

"Thirty is the bid. . . . Is there any advance? I have thirty. . . . May I say thirty-five?"

And then the fantastic happened.

The man in the next-to-the-last row, whose identity had so puzzled me, got to his feet and announced, "I bid ninety-four hundred and fifty-two dollars and forty-seven cents for this picture."

There was a moment of complete silence. Everyone turned toward the back of the room to stare at the bidder. Murmured conversation and laughter began here and there. People asked one another who the stranger was.

"No jokes, please," said the auctioneer. His tone was solemn, reproachful. And he repeated, "Number twenty-seven, copy of a painting by Alessandro Magnasco. Thirty dollars is the bid. . . . Is there any advance?"

"I bid ninety-four hundred and fifty-two dollars and forty-seven cents," repeated the man at the back. He raised his voice and was quite obviously annoyed that his bid had not been taken seriously.

There was another pause. The three clerks looked in bewilderment at the auctioneer, who was himself so dumfounded that he required time to recover his speech. The man was unquestionably insane.

"Thirty dollars is the bid."

"I bid ninety-four hundred and fifty-two dollars and forty-seven cents."

"Well, then, if you insist, ninety-four hundred and fifty-two dollars and forty-five cents."

"—— and forty-seven cents," the madman corrected.

"—— and forty-seven cents. Is there any advance? Last call? Sold at ninety-four hundred and fifty-two dollars and forty-seven cents."

At a signal from the auctioneer one of the clerks hurried over to the victorious client at the back and began to whisper with him. We understood, of course, what was happening. He was asking for a deposit as a guaranty that he would actually take the picture.

"A check!" we heard the madman scream. "Out of the question."

(Continued on Page 151)

ILLUSTRATED BY ANDREW LOOMIS

"I won her sympathy completely by telling the story of my unhappy love for Giselle."

THERE'S SOMETHING

beige tweed skirt, cashmere ters and pearls, calf pumps.

Cool, dark and simple for trips to town: tie-silk suit, rough straw hat, straw bag.

Mrs. Clark had her favorite dinner dress made by a local seamstress. It is green shantung, simple, timeless. When her favorite camellias are out of season, she wears geraniums or carnations.

Fresh blue chambray for spring or summer morning, in Middleburg or Cooperstown.

ABOUT HER . . .

her easy way with clothes

She has a natural liking for simple, intrinsic fashions. She always has a seasonless gray or beige wool suit, a pastel summer linen dress, a collection of cashmere sweaters, silk shirts, cotton shirtwaist dresses, a basic dinner dress. She goes from tweeds or cottons to evening clothes, never worries about having "nothing to wear" because the clothes she likes have an invariable and a lovely fitness to the country life she lives. . . .

Mrs. Stephen Clark, Jr., has always lived in Virginia, in the sweet, rolling land that is the heart of the riding country. Her interests are genuine and uncomplicated: her husband, her two-year-old daughter Susan, their two homes—one in Middleburg, the other a farm near Cooperstown, New York. She entertains naturally and constantly—a few guests almost every night—often doing a quick (and delicious) casserole or soufflé and salad herself. She goes to Washington and New York for a week or two at a time. This summer she will take an active part in the International Girl Scout meeting in Cooperstown.

Mrs. Clark is likely to choose the same kind of clothes over and over, and the same colors. She loves green, yellow, blue. She wears yellow shirts with her gray tweeds, big natural straw hats with a linen dress or a tie-silk suit. Her favorite dinner dress is a basic green shantung which she wears with pearls, fresh camellias, geraniums or carnations. She likes her day skirts fairly short and easy to walk in, loves long full ones for evening. She needs and has lots of dinner and evening dresses, the kind that stay in fashion. She plays tennis and gardens in shorts, likes blue chambray for mornings on the farm. She loves cool simple jewelry—crystals, blue moonstones, cultured pearls—dislikes an armful of jangling bracelets. Her clothes are country America, today and tomorrow, at their simplest and best. ★ BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

Fashion Editor of the Journal

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

Mother in white organdy, with appliquéd black paillettes, ready for a party. Daughter in pink-flowered printed challis, ready for bed.

Summer linen, basque style, the color of her garden daffodils: the kind of summer evening dress Mrs. Clark adores.

PHOTO BY HAL REIFF

PHOTO BY JOHN ENGSTEAD

YOUR COLOR PERSONALITY

By Dawn Crowell Norman

Beauty Editor of the Journal

You are a brunette with fair skin. Your coloring gives you a look of delicacy with dash! Use a creamy or eggshell powder. If your skin has natural pink undertones, choose a powder with a hint of pink in it. Avoid the dark or yellow-tinted make-ups which may give you a sallow look. Use the palest rouge (if any) as a soft reflection of your lipstick shade. You can wear many lipstick colors—so let the color of your clothes help you decide. The pinky-rose colors look new with navy, gray, turquoise and all the pink-to-purple shades. True reds complement beige, yellow and all shades of green. If you wear red, use a harmonizing red on your lips. Brown eyes are lovely with a touch of violet eye shadow. Blue eyes respond to blue shadow or a soft chestnut brown. Keep your hair immaculate and glossy, and don't allow bunchy little hair "bouquets" or frivolous ornaments to detract from its dark beauty. IF YOUR SKIN IS OLIVE, try a powder base with a golden glow to bring it to life. Follow with an all-over fluff of clear beige powder. Watch out for the too light powders which will give you a mask look. The crimson and poppy-red lipstick colors are becoming to you. Avoid the purply tones. Try gray-green eye shadow for evening. Test the shades of summer white against your skin to see whether the creamy or blue-white tones are becoming. Then combine that white with clear vivid colors to add fresh clarity to your skin—vivaciousness to your over-all look!

You are a true redhead or "strawberry blonde." Your make-up and clothes colors can turn you into the outstanding person your hair intends you to be. Play up your milky-white skin by wearing a translucent powder with flesh-to-peach undertones. Your make-up should never be dark or opaque. If you are freckled, try a soft flesh shade of protective cream as a powder base and follow with a creamy powder. For evening, try a green or bronze eye shadow, dark brown mascara. Your orange lipsticks and nail polishes are put away in favor of the new reds flooded with gold. Protest the old pattern that redheads "look best in green" by avoiding the obvious. Summer beige, smoky gray, lemon yellow and pink in a pale and delicate shade are subtly flattering. For contrast, go in for the dramatic with brilliant turquoise or deep electric blue. IF YOUR HAIR IS AUBURN, you follow this formula with some variations. Your make-up is light, too, but with more beige tones. For a change in your lipstick try the light, bright pinks. Beige, gray and forest green will make your hair seem richer and your skin clearer—but be careful in choosing browns, which may look somber on you.

The most becoming shades of make-up and the effective use of color in your clothes can help bring out your best personality — as well as your prettiest features.

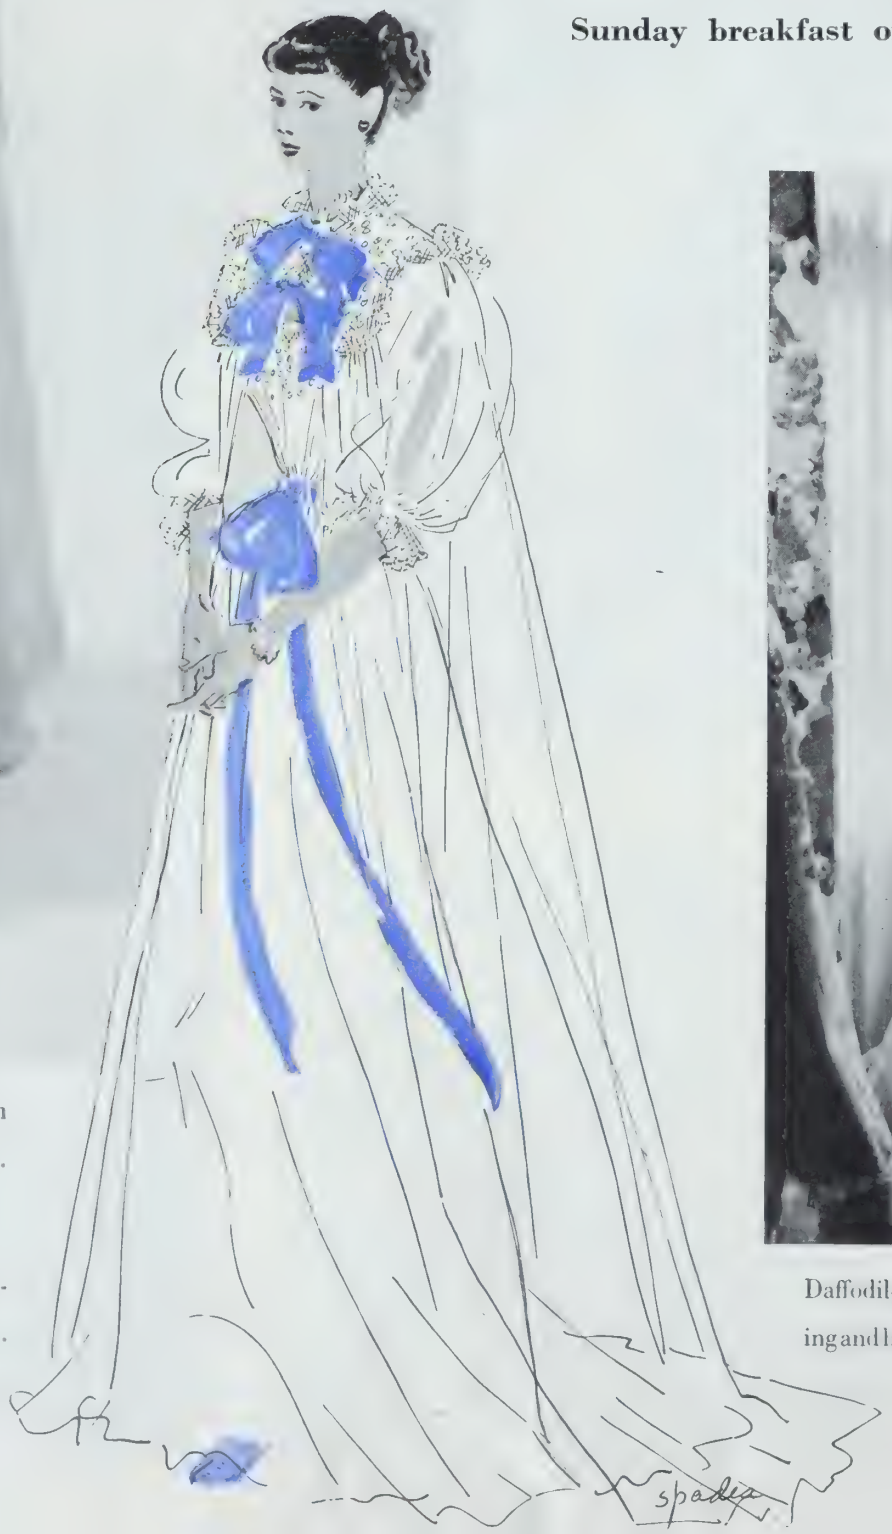
PHOTO BY HAL REIFF

You are a brunette. Your eyes are somewhere between dark brown and bright blue. Your skin is medium. Your hair is neither blond nor brunet, but just plain brown! Janet Leigh, Hollywood starlet photographed on the right, illustrates the way you can dramatize and highlight your typical American coloring. Take advantage of your neutral background. Use bright accents in gay scarfs, ribbons, handkerchiefs or other accessories against monochromatic basic colors. You like variety. If your color accents are vivid reds or blues, yellows or greens, choose a vivid lipstick and nail polish (not harsh!) in geranium, crimson or coral red. Soft pastel accents in your accessories can be enriched with pink-to-ruby-red color in your lips. Shadow your eyes in relation to the colors you wear. A touch of green on your eyelids may be lovely when you wear gray, green or brown. If your skin is dull, animate it with a beige powder with a pink or peach undertone. Let the summer sun tint you a becoming golden color and then progress to a darker, richer make-up. Try to encourage a surprise of high lights in your hair through regular shampoos, lemon or camomile rinses. You may find hidden flecks of gold or copper or red!

Your hair is silver or ash blond. You have a feminine, flower-petal look. With the clever and restrained use of make-up you can enrich the uniform lightness of your skin and hair to give full bloom to your face. Use a flesh-toned powder base followed with the sheerest film of peachy-beige powder. (If you tan, try a bisque powder over a slightly darker base.) A violet or misty-blue eye shadow will add depth of color to your eyes. Accent your eyebrows and lashes with a fleeting brush of warm brown. Your lipsticks run from blush pinks to cherry reds (coral is pretty with a tan), but too-bright colors are a shock to your fair skin! In summer the pale beige and sandy colors are flattering neutral backgrounds for your most becoming accessory colors . . . emerald green, sapphire blue, tortoise, purples and mauves. When your skin is especially fresh and glowing, you are outstanding in black. YOUR HAIR IS GOLDEN OR HONEY BLOND, the color of sunlit wheat fields. Your skin has a healthy pinky-brown color in it. Try a golden-brown powder. If your eyebrows and lashes need "bringing out," try golden brown on your eyebrows, darker brown on lashes. The coral-red and red-gold lipsticks are flattering to you—but with pastel shades (especially pink) try the vibrant pinks and rosy reds.

PHOTO BY JOHN ENGSTEAD

Glamour bed jacket of white eyelet organdy, puff sleeves, satin ribbon.



Cool and

The pretty fashion for frothy cottons, ruffles, ribbons, sashes and petticoats is at its prettiest in midsummer negligees. This is the summer to possess them, to allow yourself the luxury of looking and feeling utterly feminine. Some for brides and country vacation, others for any Sunday breakfast or quiet supper at home.

BY RUTH MARY PACKARD

Blue-and-white dotted swiss with Victorian push-up sleeves, washable, not expensive.

Sheer white batiste, lovely revival for nightgown and robe, with eyelet yoke, puff sleeves.

Daffodil-yellow organdy with old-fashioned bea ing and black velvet ribbon, worn over white musli

Beautiful

For summer evenings, white-ground print, ruffled and appealing. The long ribbon sash is of black velvet.

(Right) White crinkled organdy with cool, short sleeves with deep cuffs, black velvet ribbon sash knotted with a rose.

Mauve organdy, tied with matchi sash, showing three pretty pet coats, lilac-trimmed satin slippe

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FONSSAGRIVES

For Freedom's Birthday

By Inn Batcheldor

For that immortal masterpiece, the Declaration of Independence, we have a birthday celebration every year on the Fourth of July. It is one day on which it is well to think about what freedom means. Hunt up a copy of the Declaration of Independence and take time to read it through. Gather around the piano and sing The Battle Hymn of the Republic and My Country, 'Tis of Thee as they should be sung. From these great and beautiful words of the past renew the courage and the conviction that our forefathers had.

And for the menu of such a birthday dinner give a little thought to those days. Life wasn't just red-white-and-blue bunting and paper napkins then. There are a thousand books, I suppose, written and being written about our colonial beginnings. What they wore, what they ate, those aristocrats of our early days. And without waiting another minute I may tell you that they did themselves well. Such royal Dresden china, such superb linens, the magnificence of their mahogany and (Continued on Page 130

PHOTO BY STUART POWLER

★ ★ Menu ★ ★
Ham Whets
Boiled Salmon Sauce Verte
Pease
Watermelon Pickles
Pickled Walnuts Whigs
Geranium Jelly
Dressed Salad
Blancmange With Fruit
Poundcake Tea
(Serves 6–8)

Meals of frozen foods from the freezer across the room are cooked quickly. But any meal is conveniently prepared in the new U-shaped cooking center.

All this— AND A FREEZER TOO!

By Gladys Taber

MY friends call me the Freezer Fanatic, because I continually extol the fun of freezing. But Mrs. T. will be another now! In winter when she cannot pick her own crisp, fresh vegetables or use fresh fruits in season, she'll have last summer's, or Mr. T. can bring home frozen foods from town and tuck them away. Besides, when there is extra curried lamb or beef stew or mince pie or light rolls—into the freezer they go in a jiffy and more meals are ready for heating and serving. I make several pies and cakes at a time and put down part of them. Or freeze dough for cookies or rolls.

And my freezer is down in the cellar. In 1690, when they built my house, they didn't know about freezers and the only place for it was downstairs. So I knew exactly how the JOURNAL reader felt who wrote that she was at her wit's end.

"Our home was built in 1914," Mrs. T. wrote. "We have lived here for three years and love it—except the kitchen, which was built thirty years ago, thirty years too soon. It isn't geared to modern living . . . the purchase of a (Continued on Page 114)

PHOTOS BY STUART-STEPHENSON

Thirty years ago, kitchen was modern; now poor plan, low cabinets, small windows outdate it.

Laundry area is compact; automatic washer uses plumbing of former washstand.

Next to upright freezer are cabinets for freezer supplies. Counter is handy "landing deck."

FOR FREEZER USERS

■ Budget Freezer Space. A freezer is a food checking account—not a deposit vault. Don't hoard quantities of the first foods available and have no space for favorites later.

■ Chart the Contents. Near the freezer keep an inventory of foods and their location for easy mealtime selections. Use oldest packages first. Plan to keep it nearly full all year.

■ When You Freeze. Use fresh foods, and package promptly. Freezing preserves, but does not improve quality. Proper packaging protects foods from drying in below-freezing air. Select cartons and wrappings designed for freezer use—ordinary refrigerator wrappings are unsuitable. Label and date each package.

■ When You Buy Frozen Food. Go to dealers who have special cabinets to keep foods solidly frozen. Look for timely sales and discounts for quantity orders.

■ Plan for Variety. Wide assortments of frozen foods add interest to meals—but it's wasteful to freeze many dabs. For quick meals, plan frozen foods for complete menus.

LINE A DAY

1 Lolling under the cherry tree
Is a very good way to spend the hours
Of a July day—and smell the flowers,
And dream of those to be.

2 Dream dish in two parts: Prepare a package of macaroni or spaghetti by boiling, draining well and at once putting in a double boiler with a quart of rich cream sauce. Keep this hot. Heat and grease as many individual casseroles as you need. Use pretty deep dishes. Now put a layer of macaroni in the casseroles. Salt and pepper.

3 This goes on: A chopped sardine goes in each next, all very fine, then a slice or two of ripe tomato sprinkled with basil. One or two broiled mushrooms are cut up and added. Now very carefully break a fresh egg on top of the tomato; don't break the yolk. Cover them with cream sauce and finish your casseroles with macaroni and sauce, broiled bacon, cut crosswise, four pieces to a casserole. Cover with fine crumbs and Parmesan cheese and brown in the oven or under the broiler. Be sure they're bubbling hot and served with water cress and orange-and-onion salad. There's something here.

4 Now you can get a whole shore dinner, Maine style—and that means lobster and clams—all ready for your beach party or clambake. They come sea-fresh, right from Christmas Cove. And plenty for a crowd. Best eaten in the full of the moon.

5 What do you know? I hear that up in Vermont they aren't going to call it "sugar bush" any more. It's going to be "sugar vineyards." Wonderful people, those Vermonters.

6 One for that coming-up party—and you know they will be coming, nice weather, new car and everything. Make a really thin griddlecake mixture with cream added. About like heavy cream is the ticket. Bake it large—the size of your griddle or heavy iron pan. Bake on one side only.

7 Second Stanza: Lay each one aside. Prepare a very fine chopped-mushroom filling in brown sauce, quite thick. Spread it on a slab or platter to cool itself off to lukewarm. Spread the browned side of the cakes with this and roll up. Cut up in two-inch pieces, dip in beaten egg and very fine cracker crumbs and fry in deep fat. How well little things repay one.

8 Why not, for a change, serve with the soup course (hot or cold) little Parkerhouse rolls, homemade, I hope, about the size of a silver dollar? Have them hot and buttered.

9 Sandwiches you asked for, here are two. One sweet for the don't-cares, one the other way for the watch-it brigade. Maple sugar, butter and finely chopped walnuts made into a paste, spread on thin slices of whole-wheat bread, rolled up and cut into little rounds.

10 The turn-the-other-cheekers get this: Take thin slices of bread, brush one side with melted butter or margarine. On the other lay thin slices of ham, the same of sharp cheese. Roll up. Skewer with toothpicks. And these, my lambs, are put in the oven to get nice and brown and as crisp as ever was. Remember the buttered side is outside. Men may come along and eat them all, but what can you do? Nothing.

11 Answer to query: My dear Estella: Petite marmite is definitely not French for "little mamma." It's a soup—with carrots and things. A vegetable soup. Often served in little crocks. Now you go on calling mother mother and the marmites can take care of themselves.

12 But getting my mind on soup more or less, that elegant cream of mushroom soup makes a great sauce for spaghetti. Add a few fresh mushrooms, a small onion, a piece of garlic, all chopped fine and sautéed. Add the spaghetti, put in a casserole. Sprinkle with cheese, bake to a bubble. Bread? French loaf. Salad? Green.

13 We used to cool melons in the melon patch by covering them with leaves. We do better now, via refrigerators. Melons are wonderful all around the clock. For a dessert, cut melons in thick rings, fill with jellied fruit, add an umbrella of vanilla ice cream.

14 Blueberry muffins are the queen of muffins—if they are queens, I mean. Have plenty of berries in the batter—a cup to your muffin receipt is about right. Don't overlook blueberry pudding and blueberry griddlecakes either. They are among those summer dishes we can't do without.

15 Early apples are about, the little come-earlys. Make up a batch of fritters and serve them with hot raspberry sauce. And this sounds good enough to eat.

16 For the hors-d'oeuvre tray or whatever, stuff some of those big jumbo prunes with chutney, then wrap in thin bacon slices and broil until the bacon is crisp. Have to hook them up with toothpicks.

17 Got to have something extra for Sunday-morning breakfast. Broil some thick slices of ripe or green tomatoes, sprinkled with basil, and serve a poached egg tottering precariously on top. Have extra slices and plenty of bacon too. Or broiled ham.

18 From an old cookbook: "At our ladies' meeting one of our members reported that her husband had said that he and his friends called doughnuts sinkers. We had a good laugh and one lady asked 'But do they eat them?' 'I'm afraid so, but never in my house.' We all echoed her sentiments." There's one break the boys got themselves.

19 Cut Italian squash in thin slices and fry until tender. Peel and slice some mushrooms and sauté them too. Take them both out and put them together in layers in a casserole with Parmesan cheese between. Cover with buttered crumbs and cheese, add little pieces of butter or margarine and put in a hot oven to brown. This is delicious, and not a carrot in sight.

Travel Note

Travel north, travel south,
East or west,
And you will find home's best.

Take a little flier to the moon or Mars,
Visit the Pleiades, those seven sister stars.
You have my permission so far to roam
And you will find this star dust right here at home.

20 One of my favorite favorites is coffee jelly. I like it strong and flavored with vanilla and not too stiff. Plain cream or whipped is all right with me. But—I got a surprise the other day. Had coffee jelly with pineapple sauce. And liked it.

21 You might try glazing fruit with maple sugar. Take apple rings, for instance. Cut them fairly thick. Leave the skin on. Cook the sugar and water down to a heavy sirup, then put in the apples. Turn occasionally. And with ham or bacon, what could be sweeter than they?

22 Serving a tomato aspic for luncheon? When you chop it, add a tablespoon or two of finely chopped, well-drained and chilled cucumber.

23 If by chance you should come by a real coconut, you'll get a lot of advice as to what to do. Don't do most of it. But for one thing, you might grate it, put the grated coconut (or the moist canned variety) in a big bowl, fill the bowl with vanilla ice cream and cover the whole thing with shaved chocolate.

24 Did I tell you of chicken rice pudding? If I did, in some far-off time, what of it? Twice-told tales are twice as good—maybe. So for this chicken-rice business, prepare a chicken, as for a chicken pie, with plenty of gravy.

25 Cook some rice and use it to line a greased glass baking dish generously. Fill it with the chicken and gravy, well seasoned, and set to bake in the oven until it bubbles and the sides and bottom get a little brown.

26 It's handy sometimes, like having a piece of string in the car (I do, always, just in case), to have a really keepable cheese spread in the refrigerator. Use it for canapés or sandwiches. Covered up tight, it will stay a spread for several days and not an old lump to be forever making trips to the double boiler.

27 This is the way to make this spread: In the double boiler put three quarters of a pound of sharp American cheese. Cook it till it's smooth with a little dry mustard, one half cup of milk, salt to taste, and an egg beaten so it can see daylight stirred in at the last.

28 Fruit cup for a hot day: Roll well-chilled, drained grapefruit segments in sugar, then in finely chopped mint. Serve in sherbet glasses very cold with sprig of fresh mint in the center.

29 Boil some of those tiny new and unworldly potatoes. They are about as desirable as things come. Carefully take off their jackets. Have some butter or margarine fairly hot in the pan. Put in the potatoes. Keep them moving until they're nice and brown all over. Serve with fish, meat or chicken.

30 A reminder: Always add the juice of a lemon when you make a jellied fruit salad with ginger ale. And it doesn't take all the Roquefort cheese there is to make a wonder-working Roquefort salad dressing. Just a little piece does it.

31 It's July and hot and I wish you could see my garden. Be that as it may, here's my garden note for the month. When you look at a leek you think you're looking at a leek. Well, you are not. You are looking at an Allium porrum. Try to remember, won't you? But perhaps you'd better not try it at your market.

BY ANN BATCHELDER

DRAWING BY R. C. ATHERTON

"—and Mmm—good!" say millions. TRY IT!

CAMPBELL'S CONSOMMÉ—Served Jellied

LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL

Not long ago, jellied consommé was a specialty of fine restaurants, a rare and unusual treat known to a relative few. But more and more people tried it and liked it—until now jellied consommé is a favorite of millions, a regular summertime dish on family tables all across the country. And America's favorite consommé is Campbell's. Have you tried it—jellied to a cool, sparkling amber? You'll taste the deep flavor of beef. You'll notice how the flavor is pointed up by tomatoes, celery, carrots and parsley—all strained to a clear broth. It's no trouble to serve. Follow the directions on this page and on the label.

Campbell's CONSOMMÉ

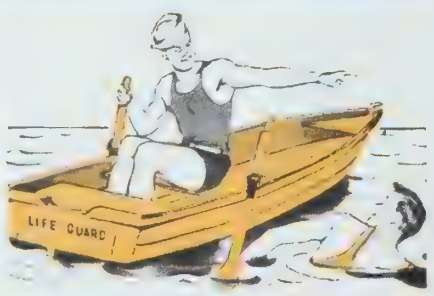
SO EASY TO FIX

Place cans in refrigerator, immediately below the freezing compartment.

Any time after 4 hours, remove, open and heap the gleaming consommé in cups.



FOR A HAPPIER, HEALTHIER SUMMER

1. Choose the outdoor exercises that are best for you.

Summer weekends and vacations are ideal times to enjoy healthy outdoor exercise. You should, however, be careful not to over-exercise.

The businessman in the middle years of life who works in an office all week and over-exerts on weekends may do himself more harm than good. So choose activities that are suitable for your age. Better still, see your doctor for advice about the exercise you can enjoy safely this summer.

2. Follow common sense rules for safety in the water.

Swimming is excellent exercise, for you use nearly every muscle in your body—but every swimmer should remember a few precautions.

It's best to swim where there are lifeguards, as even the strongest swimmer may suffer a cramp and need help. After a full meal, it's wise to wait two hours or so before you go in the water; and prior to diving, find out if the water is deep enough for safety.

3. Be careful about getting your summer sun tan.

Sunburn can be painful and serious. For a safe tan, doctors usually recommend starting with a short period (about 10 minutes), and gradually lengthening the time of exposure.

While most sun tan oils or creams help you tan safely, you may still get a sunburn if you stay too long in direct sunlight. Over-exposure to the sun, especially when you are exercising strenuously, may also lead to sunstroke, or heat exhaustion.

4. Remember that many summer hazards can be avoided.

A bad case of poison ivy can spoil your vacation, so learn to recognize this plant, and stay away from it. If you give prompt attention to cuts and bruises, you can help prevent the start of infection.

In spite of all your precautions, accidents may still occur, so it's wise to have a well-equipped first aid kit available. In addition, following the rules of good health will also help you to a healthier summer.

To help you enjoy your summer, Metropolitan has prepared an envelope of summer health suggestions. It includes leaflets on First Aid and vacation hazards. Send today for your envelope of Metropolitan's "Summer Health Suggestions," 78-J.

COPYRIGHT 1948—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

TO VETERANS—IF YOU HAVE NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE—KEEP IT!

GAY PURSUIT

(Continued from Page 35)

"Mr. Macdonald? I'm so glad," said Mrs. Rome. "Won't you sit down?"

Mr. Macdonald sat down and gave a glance round the club. It was obvious to Mrs. Rome that he disliked it all very much indeed. His eyes turned to her, and, with great relief, she saw their expression change. Timid as she was, she could not help feeling sure that Mr. Macdonald liked the look of her.

Mr. Macdonald did. She was the antithesis of what he had expected to find. Duncan Macdonald had found nothing exhilarating in the prospect of meeting his future stepmother-in-law. But this woman was no fat, flashing, bejeweled hag. She was slim, pretty and quiet and—yes, she was actually shy. Thank God, she was all right.

Mrs. Rome, less vehemently, reached exactly the same conclusion about Mr. Macdonald. He was a little gauche and looked as out-of-place as herself in these surroundings, but he was sturdy, with hair the shade of red she most liked, and his eyes were brown and steady.

"We were very glad you rang up," she said. "It's such a pity I'm going off tomorrow. You don't live in London, do you?"

Mr. Macdonald looked surprised and a little annoyed at this extraordinary suggestion. He had always lived, and would always live, in Scotland. In the Highlands of Scotland. He would not dream of living anywhere else. He worked in a firm of lawyers—of which his father was the head—at Fort William. He came to London seldom, reluctantly, and always on his father's business.

"And I'm always thankful to be back," he said.

The music stopped and Duncan turned and looked toward the dancers.

"Which one," he asked, "is your daughter?"

"There—with the tall, fair man," said Mrs. Rome. "The dark girl in white."

"I see. She's very pretty, isn't she?" said Duncan sincerely.

Mrs. Rome could only agree. It was stupid to deny that Helen was lovelier than any other girl in the room. She watched her as she drew near—cool, slender and graceful.

"Helen, this is Mr. Macdonald," she said as her daughter came up.

HELEN glanced at Duncan. Copper top; wide shoulders; on the clumsy side and probably heavy in hand. "How d'you do," she said.

Mr. Macdonald eyed her. He didn't like dark and assured beauties. He liked them tender and blue-eyed and ——

"Mr. Hunter—Mr. Macdonald."

Nothing much, thought Duncan. One of the usual about-towners. Looked quite at home on the blue plush.

The two returned to the dance floor, leaving Duncan to continue his conversation with Mrs. Rome.

"You haven't," he said, sincere pity sounding in his voice, "you haven't met Lucille?"

"No," said Mrs. Rome. "I shall see her tomorrow—she's going to meet me. And you," she added with a sympathy that equaled Duncan's, "have never met Lucille's father."

"No—pity," said Duncan. "But you see, the whole thing was—well, it was awfully sudden. I don't want to bore you, but ——"

"Please tell me," said Mrs. Rome.

Duncan, only too delighted, poured out his tale, and Mrs. Rome listened with absorbed interest.

He had set out, not long ago, on what he had regarded as a routine business trip. He was to inspect, for one of the Macdonald clients, a large studio in London which was being sold by an artist. The artist —— Duncan paused and put a question.

"You haven't met Lucille's brother?"

Mrs. Rome shook her head, regretting the timidity which had moved her to plead for the quietest of weddings, with only Helen present.

The artist, Duncan went on, had turned out to be a young man about his own age—twenty-four. He had bought the studio a short time before and, finding London uncongenial, had decided to sell it and return to his home in Devonshire.

The business had soon been concluded. The interview over, Mr. Rome invited Mr. Macdonald to stay to tea. The two gentlemen were joined by Mr. Rome's sister, Lucille, who was on a visit to the capital.

AT this point, Mr. Macdonald's narrative appeared to come to an end. He stared at Mrs. Rome absently, and for so long, that she was finally compelled to prompt him.

"Lucille came in ——" she said gently.

"Yes," said Duncan slowly. "She came in. I tried to get up, but I couldn't, and I just sat there and—well, I sort of stared at her. She looked like—like ——"

His voice died away and after a long pause, during which the band had time to play two encores, Mrs. Rome learned that—in the course of the next five days—the engagement of Lucille and Duncan had been "all fixed up." A small matter of Lucille's half-engagement to a young man living near her home had been dismissed by Mr. Macdonald as a "sort of boy-and-girl affair."

Mrs. Rome's blue eyes were wet as the story came to an end. She promised Duncan to convey his love to her stepdaughter. "But you'll soon be down yourself," she said.

"Yes," agreed Duncan. He paused and seemed to have a little difficulty in framing his next sentence. "I'm glad I met you," he said at last. "I mean, I'm glad you're—well, like this. Lucille's very gentle and I was a bit worried for fear—well, as a matter of fact, I wanted you to be just as you are."

One should never think of death, one should think of life. That is real piety.

—DISRAELI.

Mrs. Rome looked at him gratefully and felt that he had done much to bridge the gap which lay between her and her new relations. She was beginning to express something of this feeling, when the music stopped and the dance ended. Soon Helen was making preparations for departure.

As the two men rose, Natalie realized with a sick feeling that the last evening was over. Tomorrow—today—she was to go away and leave Helen behind.

Helen, watching her mother anxiously, saw with concern and a touch of impatience her fleeting look of panic and wished that the parting was over and done with.

It was, thought Helen, fantastic. For over ten years she had managed her mother, arranged her affairs, augmented her slender income, tried to turn her from a tweed-clad little mouse into a well-turned-out townswoman. She had never asked her mother's advice on any matter whatsoever, and had stood firmly on her own feet since her father's death. She was young, successful, sought after and utterly self-sufficient. And her mother still needed to be convinced that she was not doing wrong in going away and leaving her. Mothers, decided Helen, were impossible.

Six hours' sleep served to restore to Mrs. Rome some of the courage which had ebbed the night before. She lay for some time forming a determination to fix her mind upon practical matters. Her eyes went from the suitcases, packed and ready on the floor, to the clock on the wall, and her face whitened. She longed desperately for the quality of self-possession that all other women of her acquaintance seemed to possess, and wondered whether her parents had omitted, as Helen so often asserted, to pour enough stiffening mixture into her composition.

She had been born and brought up in a quiet, remote country rectory. An only child, and delicate, she had not been sent to school; her father gave her a sound education and

Your Shoes are Showing!

Embarrassing, isn't it?

YOU NEED SHINOLA

● In SUMMER, Shinola White will keep your shoes really white and new-looking. This scientific white shoe cleaner is made of the whitest white pigment available. And all YEAR ROUND, there's a Shinola product for every type and color shoe. You'll find it pays to KEEP 'EM SHINING WITH SHINOLA.

In Canada It's 2-in-1

Rinse Hair Off Legs IN 5 MINUTES

...without rubbing or risk of bristly razor-stubble!

mazing improvement—is the new Neet ith lanolin. Creamy, pleasantly scented, eet works faster, better. You simply spread eet on, rinse off in 5 minutes, then thrill o the super-smooth feel of your lovely hair-ee legs...to their sleek as satin look. eet removes hair closer to the follicle itself o avoid prickly razor-stubble. And just ee—each time you use Neet—how long it eeps your skin hair-free! Get Neet Cream Hair Remover at drug or cosmetic counters. e sure—get it today!

FRIENDLY SOCIAL VISITS BRING YOU BIG CHRISTMAS CARD PROFITS

33 DIFFERENT BOXES · ODD CARDS 2½c UP

UP TO 100% PROFIT FOR YOU

Show 21-card $1.00 Christmas assortments. Christmas Carol, Panorama, Gift Wrapping boxes. Send at once for FREE SAMPLES personal cards—including special line name imprinted in silver, FREE STATIONERY SAMPLES and feature Christmas samples on approval. Special Offer. Cash bonus.

FREE SAMPLES 50 for $1.00 PERSONALS

NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS, North Abington 155, Mass.

her mother taught her that she must behave with gentle courtesy to all people at all times.

The country rectory, the gentle parents were replaced, almost insensibly, by an even more remote rectory in which there was a kind, gentle husband and, soon afterward, a delightful little daughter. For eleven years Natalie Forrester's life continued its smooth course. Her husband taught the little daughter—not only her lessons, but to ride, to hunt, to milk cows, judge cattle and even to bowl straight. Natalie was approaching the task of making her behave with gentle courtesy when, without warning, her world turned upside down. Her husband, after only two days' illness, died, and Natalie found herself with nothing in the world but a small daughter, a smaller income, good teeth, sound lungs and a shy, retiring manner.

For a few months life went on uneventfully and then Helen Forrester, who was just over twelve, informed her mother that this, in her opinion, was no way to live and that they must immediately live in some other way. Natalie, looking into her daughter's intelligent, calm brown eyes, invited Helen to make some suggestions as to the proposed changes. From that moment Helen, taking the reins of the modest family buggy into her small, capable hands, had driven it where she would.

THEY had moved almost at once into a pretty little house in the middle of a near-by town, the rent of which was covered by the acquisition of two mistresses from the school as paying guests. The next journey was of Helen herself to a boarding school, and three years later the pretty house was given up and Mrs. Forrester found herself in a small flat in London.

Natalie settled down and accustomed herself to the new life, while Helen presented herself at the firm of Maybelle et Cie and was given a post as junior saleswoman.

It was only, said Helen, a beginning—and so it had proved. At twenty-two, Helen Forrester was holding an important position in the firm and drawing a salary which her mother considered almost too much for a young woman. There was nothing of the country about Helen now except her clear skin and delicate color; in everything else—perfection of grooming, elegance and finish—she was a townswoman.

It was natural that she should be admired, and Natalie had more than once wept secretly at the despair of young men who loved without hope of return. But she had never seen any man who was, in her opinion, worthy of her daughter. Never, until ——

Until William Rome appeared.

Helen met him at a large party given by Mrs. Creech, the head of Maybelle, to celebrate her daughter's engagement. The bridegroom-elect was a cheerful young lieutenant in His Majesty's Navy and Captain Rome, in London on business, had agreed to look in for a moment to drink a toast to his lieutenant's bride. The toast drunk, William Rome threaded his way determinedly through the throng and to the exit, where he found an extremely pretty girl about to take possession of the only taxi in sight. He proposed dropping her at her destination and going on to his own, and Helen agreed, only stipulating that they should call for her mother at her dressmaker's on the way.

Natalie was called for and in the course of the next fortnight William Rome, his business forgotten, paid daily visits to the little flat. Natalie became miserable at the conviction that Helen was going to break the poor man's heart. The thought of William Rome wretched gave her a feeling of depression and she waited for the outcome of the affair, confused and bewildered at the realization that she would be equally miserable to learn that Helen was to marry a man twenty-five years older than herself—a widower, moreover, with a grown-up son and daughter—or that she was to refuse him and break so manly a heart.

At the end of the fortnight, Captain Rome, after a consultation with Helen, called at the flat, found Natalie alone, and asked her to become his wife.

STOP CORNS!

END PAIN INSTANTLY!

Never wait. Apply Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads at the first sign of sore toes or tender spots from tight shoes. Pain ends instantly and corns are stopped before they can develop! But—if you have corns, callouses or bunions—thin, soothing, cushioning, protective Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads will stop painful shoe friction at once and lift pressure from the sensitive spot.

REMOVE CORNS, CALLOUSES

You'll marvel, too, how Zino-pads quickly remove corns or callouses when used with the separate Medications included. No other method does all these things for you! No other gives you so much for so little. Super-Soft Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads are flesh color, waterproof. Do not come off in bath. Get a box today! Sold the world over.

Have You Any Other Common Foot Troubles?

Dr Scholl's

AIDS FOR THE FEET ARE GUARANTEED TO GIVE QUICK RELIEF

FALLEN ARCHES

Dr. Scholl's Foot-Eazer and exercise relieves tired, aching feet, rheumatic-like foot and leg pains, due to weak or fallen arches.

ATHLETE'S FOOT

Dr. Scholl's Solvex relieves itching, kills fungi it contacts, aids healing of red, raw, cracked skin. (Liquid, Powder or Ointment).

TENDER FEET

Dr. Scholl's Foot Powder relieves tender, chafed, hot, perspiring feet. Eases new or tight shoes, helps prevent Athlete's Foot.

PAIN HERE?

Dr. Scholl's LuPad relieves pain, callouses, burning at ball of foot. Loops over forepart of foot. Featherlight, washable.

HOT, TIRED FEET

Dr. Scholl's Foot Balm relieves tired, aching, hot feet from fatigue. Very soothing, refreshing.

BUNIONS

Dr. Scholl's Bunion Reducer of soft rubber, relieves painful shoe pressure, helps hide the bulge.

Stokely-Van Camp, Inc., Indianapolis, and Stokely-Van Camp of Canada, Limited.

The effect of this proposal on the unprepared Natalie was so shattering that it took all Helen's and William's patience and affection to bring her to a point at which she would even consider the matter. She admitted to Helen—almost in parentheses—that yes, of course she loved William. But to leave Helen was unthinkable.

It had been difficult, but William had held on and in the end had his reward. They had married and William had gone on what he intended to be his final voyage. Natalie was to go to his home—Romescourt, near the village of Dummerton, in Devonshire—and choose one of the two available cottages which his father was holding for them.

It was, perhaps, neither William's pleading nor Helen's arguments which finally succeeded in overcoming Natalie's hesitation. William, in a moment of inspiration, had pointed out to her that he had a son—a son who was young, handsome and heart-whole. Jeremy was now living with his grandparents at Romescourt; and what, William asked craftily, could be more natural than Helen, on a visit, and meeting Jeremy—well, who knew?—probably ——

Who knew, indeed? Mrs. Rome, lying and staring at the ceiling on her last morning in London, recalled this heartening possibility and, strengthened, she rose and dressed.

Helen, hurrying in from her own room, peered into the mirror over her mother's shoulder and turned to flick a few imaginary specks from her skirt. Mrs. Rome looked at her with gentle approval.

"That's a lovely suit, Helen," she said. "You oughtn't to have put it on to come to a smoky station."

"I wouldn't, normally," said Helen. "I wanted you to take away a picture of me looking my most ravishing." She hurried on to safer topics. "Are you sure you've got everything, mother? That letter with the instructions about how to get there—where's that? If you haven't got it, you'll get lost."

Mrs. Rome groped inside her bag and produced a sheet of note paper. "It's here," she said.

The doorbell gave a shrill, sustained note which lasted until Helen had opened the front door. On the threshold stood the small, prematurely aged boy who answered to the name of Slippy and who combined the functions of lift boy, errand boy and general attendant to the occupants of the block of flats.

"Coo!" he ejaculated. "Crickey! Another of the noo season's bargins, combinin' the beauty o' the latest line with the elegance of the noo waistline and the flattering 'ip contours."

"The suitcases," Helen informed him coldly, "are over there."

SLIPPY eyed her suit critically. "In a suit of spring green, duchess, you'd look ——" He broke off to greet Mrs. Rome, and voiced his sentiments on her impending departure. "Place won't seem the same without you, Mrs. Rome," he informed her, "but I'll tell you something—you've made 'istory in the block."

"I have?" said Natalie, astonished.

"'Istory," repeated Slippy, ushering them into the lift and pressing the ground-floor button. "We've 'ad births and deaths and quite a lot of weddin's, but never"—he gave Natalie a look of gratitude—"never a mother gettin' 'erself 'ooked up before 'er daughter. An' such a daughter," he ended, rolling his eyes ecstatically at the taxi driver.

Helen ignored him, requested the driver to go to Paddington Station and seated herself beside her mother.

With Mrs. Rome settled comfortably in a carriage Helen felt that things had not gone too badly.

"God bless you, darling—take care of yourself."

Natalie, in spite of her resolve to part from Helen without tears, found them coursing down her face. She leaned out the window waving farewell as the train drew out of the station. Helen's face, young and lovel Helen's figure, slender and graceful, wer receding—were out of sight. She was gon but it was impossible not to hope—it w impossible not to feel that if Jeremy had an eyes in his head at all —— Surely, pray Natalie, the parting would not be for lon

The journey to Dummerton, though lon was not tedious. The green of the fiel seemed fresher every hour, and Natal realized that there was one advantage in h new life which she had entirely overlooke that of living once more in the peace an freedom of the countryside. It was a chee ing thought, and made her feel almost happ when finally the bus to which she ha changed stopped at a crossroad and th driver informed her that she was at h destination. He lifted her suitcases fro the luggage rack and carried them acro to a large shelter in which was a lo wooden bench.

NATALIE sat for some time upon the woode bench. She was not disturbed by the fac that nobody had come to meet her; th busses passed once every hour and no doub Lucille had understood that she would be o a later one.

She was roused by a curious sound an saw an extremely large black car—so larg that she mistook it, at first, for a hearse The driver was a girl, and, with a feeling o mingled panic and pleasure, Natalie recog nized her stepdaughter, Lucille Rome.

Lucille Rome was twenty and looked six teen. Her hair was straw-colored and he eyes deeply blue. Her skin was flawless. Bu Natalie saw only that the face before her wa as gentle, as sweet as an angel's. The voic which murmured "How nice to see you" wa low and soft, and Natalie who had been preparin to brush aside explana tions and apologies, foun Lucille's hand slippe lightly under her arm an felt herself guided gentl down the path in th direction of the car.

Consideration for woman is the measure of a nation's progress in social life.
—GREGOIRE.

There was silence for a moment and the Lucille spoke in her soft, slow voice. "Di you have a good journey?" she inquire She turned her head as she spoke and the ca moved slowly but steadily toward the middl of the road.

Natalie, clutching the side of her seat, gav a hasty nod and a "Yes, thank you," an Lucille, turning her eyes toward the roa once more, drove on in silence. A little late she turned with a further query.

"I hope Helen won't miss you too much?"

Natalie, watching the car heading towar the low stone coping beyond which was drop of fifty feet, squeezed her handbag int a knot and tried to return a truthful answe "Yes—no," she said. She resolved that whe Lucille looked at her again, she would kee her own eyes fixed determinedly on th road—perhaps that would indicate that sh thought drivers ought to look where the were going. Hearing Lucille ask whether sh would miss London, she stared straigh ahead and answered, "No, I don't thin so"—but she saw that the car had gone of its course for even longer than before.

Staring ahead, however, had brought som comfort to Natalie, for she noticed tha whatever they passed had drawn up as clos to the side of the road as possible. At on point, a party of children had clambere over the low wall and were looking over i with expressions of anxious foreboding. I was evident that Lucille was known on thi highway. Not for nothing did the engine giv its warning to all within hearing.

With relief flooding through her, Natali felt equal to making a few remarks of he own. "I met your fiancé," she said.

The brows went up and Lucille appeare to be wondering who her fiancé was. "M fiancé?" she said. "Oh! Oh, how nice."

Natalie waited for eager questions, an Lucille spoke.

"Granny gave me a message," she said "but I forgot. It must have been about he not being able to meet you. Don't you thin so?"

Take the mystery out of French Dressing!

It really is so simple to prepare a delicious, tasty French Dressing quickly. Follow basic recipe below and vary to taste by adding Worcestershire sauce, horseradish or chili sauce. It takes Pompeian to get the best out of your French Dressing! Pompeian is the genuine, imported olive oil, famous for its clear, golden color and nutty flavor.

How to make
BASIC FRENCH DRESSING
So easy to make—½ cup Pompeian Olive Oil, ¼ cup vinegar or lemon juice, ½ tsp. salt, ⅛ tsp. paprika, 1 tsp. sugar. Place in glass jar, shake and serve.

POMPEIAN
Great name in olive oil
Pompeian Olive Oil Corp., Baltimore 24, Md.

PINAFORE ONE WHOLE CHICKEN

Pre-cooked Ready-to-eat

• 79 QUICK 'N EASY WAYS TO SERVE PINAFORE •
• Color recipe book—79 delicious ways to prepare PINAFORE in minutes. Special summer menus. Send 10c. •
CHICAGO WESTERN CORP., 56 E. Walton, Chicago 11

New Easy Way to GET $25

Show Doehla Christmas and Greeting Cards, Stationery to friends, neighbors, co-workers. Make $25 on only 50 $1 boxes. So lovely they sell on sight! NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED — FREE BOOK shows any beginner how to make money! Write for 2 sample boxes on approval. If friends don't snap them up, return at our expense. HARRY DOEHLA COMPANY, Dept. L24, Fitchburg, Mass.

FREE SAMPLES
"Name-Imprinted" Christmas Cards Sell them at only $1 for 25

AT LAST! SOMETHING NEW AND SENSATIONAL IN CHRISTMAS CARDS

MAKE Extra MONEY FAST

Gorgeous Satin & Velour Designs Show Rich New Satin and Velour Cards never before offered. Amazing Value! Gets orders fast! Gorgeous Christmas Cards with name, 50 for $1 up. Pays up to 100% profit. Imprinted Stationery 20 others, 60c to $1. Samples on Approval.

50 FOR $1 With Name

PURO CO., 2801 Locust, Dept. 813-J, St. Louis, Mo.

Natalie felt a little confused. She tried to imagine Helen zigzagging along a road and forgetting messages. What, she wondered, would Helen think of Lucille? What would she think of a pair of battered jodhpurs, a yellow polo sweater which had been darned with brown wool, and a riding jacket which, though well tailored, was obviously outgrown? What would she say to Lucille's gloves, which did not match?

Lucille saw her stepmother's eyes on them and smiled. "I lost one of each," she explained. "I had a message from Jeremy, too," she went on. "He sent you his love and says he'll be back tonight. He has to go to a flying club once a week—three friends of his started it and Jeremy is one of the instructors." She turned the car, as she spoke, into an avenue lined with splendid beech trees.

Natalie saw an Elizabethan manor standing against a background of gently sloping hills. It made a perfect picture in the evening light, but the signs of neglect and desolation filled her mind to the exclusion of everything else. Overgrown terraces, straggling lawns and gardens, all told of the beginnings of decay. It was not difficult for Natalie to picture the house in its former state. She felt a wave of pity for the two old people in whose lifetime the melancholy change had taken place.

Lucille steered the car through the innumerable ruts and pits in the road and, coming out onto a smoother drive, drew up at last before the house.

"We'll find granny in the garden somewhere, probably," she said. "Round here."

She led Natalie to the other side of the house, through an opening in a thick hedge and into a large walled garden. At the far end, a woman's figure was bent over a newly dug bed. Lucille raised her voice in a high, childish call.

"Granny!"

Lady Rome straightened and turned. She was tall, broad and—even at seventy—an erect and unstooping figure. She wore a brown skirt, a knitted coat and a large pair of rubber boots which had been sawed off—very sensibly, Natalie thought—just above the ankles.

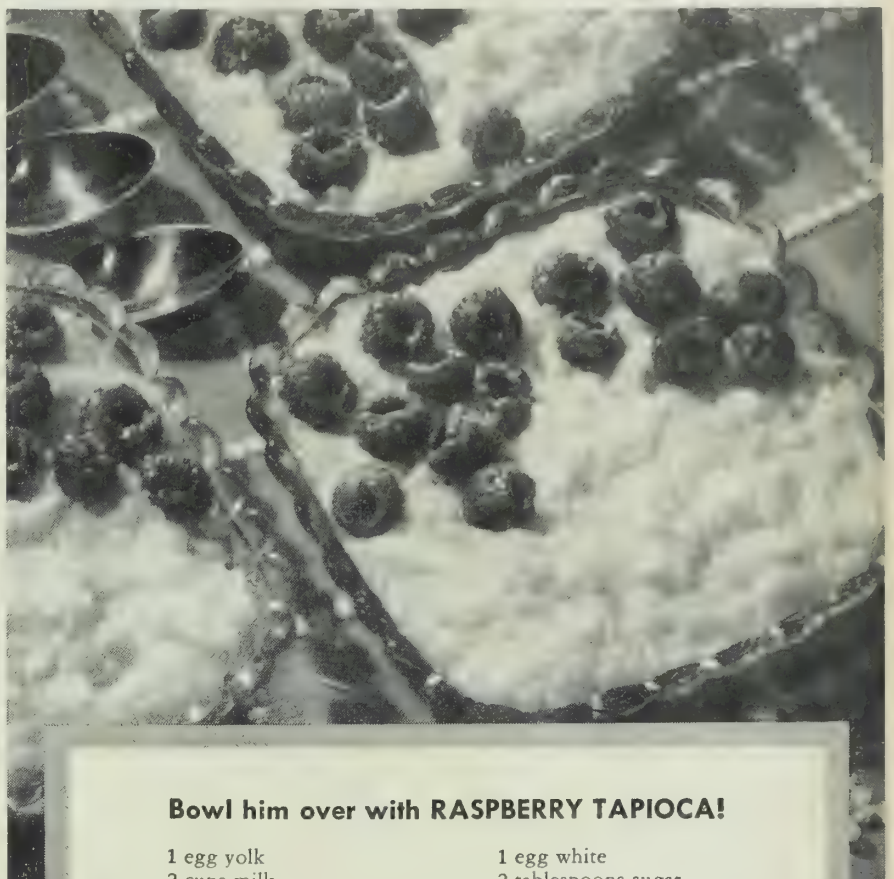
"How nice, how nice," shouted Lady Rome. "So nice to see you, so nice to have you with us, so very nice."

She threw her garden implement carelessly into a barrow by her side and held out welcoming hands to Natalie. Natalie noticed, without surprise, that the gloves did not match.

"Let me see you, let me see you," Lady Rome trumpeted. "William said we must look after you very well and take care of you because he said that you were shrinking—like clothes, don't you know—and not used to rough winds. Did Lucille tell you that Jeremy isn't here? And I don't know what's become of your father-in-law—he wasn't in to tea. Tea!" ejaculated Lady Rome in a deeper boom than ever. "Of course you must want some tea yourself, and we're standing chatting in this chilly air."

There was a pause long enough for Natalie to admit that she would very much like some tea.

"Of course," agreed Lady Rome. "Don't stand there, Lucille, my dear—if you look round you might see something of your grandfather."



Lucille went away with her usual light, unhurried tread. Lady Rome waved a hand round the enclosing walls.

"There's a lot of work here," she said, "and of course I can't hope to do it all. Like a horse's teeth, I always say—you can tell my age by the patches under cultivation. Your father-in-law says that we should all grow food, and he's quite right, but he carried it to quite an alarming extent, and I had to have a little talk with him and tell him that we really couldn't have corn waving outside the drawing-room windows. But we mustn't stand in this cold wind; of course you'd like some tea—I ought to have asked you before. Won't you have a nice hot drink?"

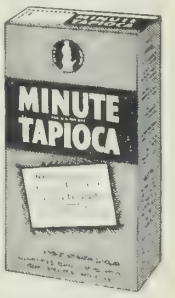
Natalie said she would very much like a nice hot drink.

SHINE, LITTLE BRIDE! MINUTE TAPIOCA IS BACK!

(REAL PREWAR TAPIOCA—GENUINE MINUTE TAPIOCA)

Bowl him over with RASPBERRY TAPIOCA!

1 egg yolk
2 cups milk
3 tablespoons sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons Minute Tapioca
1 egg white
2 tablespoons sugar
½ teaspoon vanilla
Fresh or quick-frozen red raspberries



Mix egg yolk with a small amount of the milk in saucepan. Add remaining milk, 3 tablespoons sugar, salt, and Minute Tapioca. Place over medium heat. Cook until mixture comes to a full boil, stirring constantly—this takes 5 to 8 minutes. (Do not overcook . . . mixture thickens as it cools.) Remove from heat.

Beat egg white until foamy throughout; add 2 tablespoons sugar, 1 tablespoon at a time, and continue beating with rotary egg beater until mixture will stand in soft peaks. Add hot tapioca mixture, stirring constantly. Add vanilla. Cool, stirring after 15 to 20 minutes. Chill. Garnish with raspberries. Makes 4 to 5 servings of delicate, luscious Minute Tapioca—guaranteed to make him, as well as your guests, beam!

More bright ideas! Learn all the exciting ways you can use versatile Minute Tapioca. Makes juicy fruit pies that won't run over! Stretches main dishes, thickens soups. Minute Tapioca has dozens of uses—from soup to dessert. See box for recipes.

Flash for Brides!

Ask your mother, or any expert prewar cook! They'll all tell you—"Real genuine Minute Tapioca is in a class by itself when it comes to making really elegant desserts." Then try Minute Tapioca yourself! For truly glamorous desserts, you can't beat Minute Tapioca.

A Product of General Foods

ADD A GAY NOTE TO YOUR TABLE with "Hostesset"

• SANITARY PLASTIC
• SAFE TO WASH AND SCALD

FEDERAL Practical HOUSEWARES

Smartly modern in design . . . comes in complementary colors, red and ivory. Molded of long-life plastic that can be washed and scalded — safely — without effect on material or color. A popular, practical gift.

Mfd. by Federal Tool Corp., Chicago 12, Illinois

AT DEPARTMENT, HARDWARE, 5c to $1 STORES

MAKE MONEY FAST!

ETCHINGS · WRAPPINGS · 50 for $1.00 · STATIONERY · PLASTIC CARDS · EVERYDAY · SAINTS 'n SINNERS

SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS

Take easy orders from friends, neighbors, others. Amazing profits, bonus. Full or spare time. No experience needed. SPECIAL OFFERS. Fund-raising opportunity for organizations. Mail postal today for Feature 21-card $1.00 Christmas Assortment on approval and full information.

MAIL COUPON for SAMPLES

HEDENKAMP & CO.
343 Broadway, Dept. Y-1, New York 13, N.Y.

NAME .....
ADDRESS .....
CITY ..... STATE .....

It's summer again!

CUT YOUR COOKING TIME!

Dixie Salad Bowl

LESS THAN 22¢ A SERVING*

Small watermelon
½ lb. grapes — 1 lb. plums
4 Oranges — 1 Cantaloupe
Peach halves
Cream cheese — Lettuce
Sprigs of mint

Cut top from watermelon. Scoop out watermelon and cut into cubes and balls. Combine with fruits in watermelon "bowl." Arrange peach halves and cream cheese on lettuce. Serve with Ann Page Salad Dressing, Mayonnaise or French Dressing. Garnish with sprigs of mint. Serves 8.

1. Ann Page Salad Dressing . . . tart-sweet, creamy-smooth . . . made with generous amounts of egg yolks and oil.

2. Ann Page French Dressing . . . a masterful mixture of vinegar, oil and rich spices.

3. Ann Page Mayonnaise is like the real old-fashioned kind . . . flavor-rich with eggs and oil.

*Cost based on average prices of ingredients in A&P Super Markets at time of going to press.

A&P

Cut your food budget, too

Salads are the thing now . . . and A&P Super Markets are bulging with the best of Nature's fresh fruits, and vegetables for them, and they're attractively priced. So when you serve salads as main courses, you not only cut the time you usually spend on meal preparation, but you cut corners on your food expenses, too.

And to make your salads really delicious and distinctive, A&P offers its 3 finest dressings . . . Ann Page Salad Dressing, Ann Page Mayonnaise and Ann Page French Dressing. Each is a superior dressing, made painstakingly, with truly fine ingredients—and to time-tested recipes. And because they are rigidly freshness-controlled from our modern Ann Page Food factories right to you, they're really fresh to assure top flavor.

Better get acquainted with all Ann Page Foods now! Their quality is high among the best of America's leading brands—yet, they cost less,

for your finest dishes

ANN PAGE FOODS

A&P's Finest

Among the quality-famous Ann Page Foods are also such favorites as Sandwich Spread, Olives, Preserves, Jams, Jellies, Peanut Butter, Macaroni Products, Beans, etc.

"Well, we'll go in, then," said Lady Rome. "Where did I put my trowel? Oh, in there in the barrow. We must find Jason—Lucille won't find him, of course, because she's such a silly little thing and forgets everything. I don't know what sort of wife she's going to make."

Natalie, whose head felt less clear than it had earlier in the afternoon, remembered something that had some connection with Lucille as a wife. "I met her fiancé," she told Lady Rome. "He seemed very nice."

"He's quite a nice young man," agreed Lady Rome, leading the way out of the garden. "Not too much character, perhaps, but then Lucille hasn't much either."

"But"—Natalie's confusion grew—"I thought he told me that—that he had never met you, any of you."

"Now that's a nonsensical statement," boomed Lady Rome, entering the house through a long window which led directly into a small sitting room. "If he'd never met any of us, he couldn't have got engaged to Lucille, could he? Sit there, Natalie, my dear, and take some things off and be comfortable. You'd like some tea, I'm sure, wouldn't you?"

Natalie, in whom hope had died, shook her head gently. She put tea out of her mind and frowned in an endeavor to clear up the problem of her acquaintance with Duncan Macdonald. "He said—at least, I was quite sure that he said he'd never met you," she said, taking the chair offered her.

"He must have been thinking of somebody else," said Lady Rome. "He does, sometimes. I've often noticed that he has a bewildered look when I'm talking to him. Philip's a good deal more sensible than his two dreadful sisters, but ——"

"But," put in Natalie desperately, "you said 'Philip.'"

Lady Rome sat in a chair close to Natalie's and looked at her daughter-in-law in surprise. "Of course I said 'Philip'. Aren't we talking about Philip?"

"Well—no," faltered Natalie. "At least—I was talking about Lucille's fiancé."

"That's all right," said Lady Rome. "I thought for a moment that we were at cross purposes."

"Perhaps Philip," suggested Natalie, "is one of his other names."

"Whose other names, my dear?" inquired Lady Rome kindly.

"I mean—it all seems rather confusing," faltered Natalie. "I met a very nice young man last night—his name was Duncan Macdonald and he ——"

"Oh, now, of course, we know where we are," shouted Lady Rome. "No, no, no—he doesn't live in London at all; he's up in, I can't remember whether it was Edinburgh or Glasgow."

"But isn't he," pursued Natalie, "Lucille's fiancé?"

"Oh dear me, no," said Lady Rome. "Goodness gracious me, no. All that's over and done with. And now, my dear Natalie"—Lady Rome rose and held out a hand—"come along and I'll find Lucille to take you to your room—that's if you feel you wouldn't rather have some tea before you go up?"

Natalie had only one desire: to find a place where she could be alone until she had recovered from the confusion of the past hour.

The door opened and Lucille's flutelike notes fell sweetly on her tormented ear. "I can't find grandfather," she announced, "but Jeremy telephoned to say he'll be back soon after dinner. He sends you his love," she added, turning to Natalie. "Did granny give you any tea?"

"I've been trying to persuade her," said Lady Rome, "but she refused."

Lucille gave a little murmur of regret. "You should have had some," she said, leading Natalie out. "It's two hours to dinner and dinner, you'll find, isn't very substantial."

Natalie followed her stepdaughter up one side of a double flight of stairs, along a wide gallery and through a heavy oak door. An opening in the corridor disclosed another flight of stairs carpeted in a beautiful shade of blue, and at the top of this Lucille stopped and opened a door.

"Daddy said we were to put you in here," she said. "It was his room and all his things are in it." She smiled at Natalie. "Now I'll leave you. There's a bathroom just next door. Can I do anything else?"

Natalie thanked her and shook her head. She was longing to question Lucille about her engagement. "Lucille"—she looked at her appealingly—"I'm so puzzled about your—your fiancé."

Lucille, for a moment, looked as puzzled as her stepmother. "Philip? Oh, you haven't met him. Well, yes," she added, "I think you said you had."

"I met—I met somebody called Duncan Macdonald," said Natalie, "and ——" She stopped. A delicate flush had overspread Lucille's features and there was a cloud in her eyes.

"Duncan?" she murmured. "Yes, we were engaged. When I went up and stayed with Jeremy, I—I don't know what happened, but ——" She paused for a moment and then continued, "I was half engaged to Philip

(Continued on Page 70)

"I picked it up in an antique shop—it's simply wonderful for mixing the color into margarine!"

Pantry-Shelf Meals for just you two!

No two ways about it—cooking-for-two is twice as easy as it used to be! Armour Star Pantry-Shelf Meals make it so simple to plan a small-family meal—and to fix it, too! There's no waste of meat when you buy these delicious meals—no waste of your time, either. And they're so kind to a young-married budget. With a pantry shelf well-stocked, even a bride has right at hand a hundred different ways to vary her menu effortlessly—for breakfast, lunch or dinner.

Keep on discovering exciting new ways to serve Pantry-Shelf Meals that are old favorites with you—and discover one or two that are new to you, next time you're in the Armour Canned Meat Department of your food store!

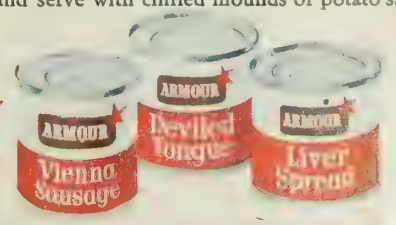
THEY'RE ALL ARMOUR STAR PANTRY-SHELF MEALS

Tune in HINT HUNT—CBS Monday through Friday afternoons

Breakfast—Baked Deviled Ham 'n' Eggs

Set ham 'n' eggs before him differently tomorrow—serve deviled ham for a heavenly breakfast. Heap Armour Star Deviled Ham—it's all-ham and plenty nippy—around the edges of buttered or margarined bread and break a Cloverbloom egg in the center of the ham. Bake in shallow pan 15 minutes at 400° F. One tin serves two—deliciously.

Lunch—Frankfurter Toasties



Yes, it's luscious as a "pin-up"—this lunch-for-two of plump, juicy Armour Star Frankfurters, the pantry-shelf kind! Spread bread with horseradish-mustard, wrap around frankfurters, pin corners with toothpicks, and bake in 400° F. oven until toasted. Top toothpicks with small white onions! M-m-m! Refrigerate the other frankfurters—serve 'em tomorrow with scalloped potatoes!

For additional recipes for Pantry-Shelf Meals, write Marie Gifford, Dept. 302, Box 2053, Chicago 9, Ill.

Dinner—Twosome Ham

Ham dinner in a hurry? It's easy as picking Armour Star Chopped Ham off your pantry shelf. Just slice this ready-now ham—it's all-ham, you know, sugar-cured and pressure-cooked—and serve with chilled mounds of potato salad.

The best and nothing but the best is labeled ARMOUR

I'm a safety-first girl with Mum

Smart work, sugar! Staggering the stagline is easy when Mum protects your charm the whole thrilling evening. You'll never let a dream man down with a fault like underarm odor.

A bath washes away past perspiration—brings you up-to-date in sweetness... but Mum prevents risk of underarm odor to come.

Product of Bristol-Myers

Mum safer for charm

Mum checks perspiration odor, protects your daintiness all day or evening.

Mum safer for skin

Because Mum contains no harsh or irritating ingredients. Snow-white Mum is gentle—harmless to skin.

Mum safer for clothes

No damaging ingredients in Mum to rot or discolor fine fabrics. Economical Mum doesn't dry out in the jar. Quick, easy to use, even after you're dressed.

(Continued from Page 68)

before I went to London," she said, "so I shouldn't have got engaged to somebody else."

"But ——" began Natalie.

"When I came back and said I was engaged," went on Lucille, "everybody congratulated me, but they all thought it was Philip. Nobody seemed to believe that, just in a week, I'd met somebody else, and I can't go on disagreeing with people for very long—I mean I can't argue and quarrel—perhaps you don't understand ——"

"Yes, I understand," said Natalie.

"And so," ended Lucille, "I—well, Duncan and I aren't engaged any more."

"But," said Natalie, "he still thinks ——"

Lucille shook her head gently. "No—I wrote," she said. "I only wrote the other day and I addressed it to his home, but they'll send it on to him and he'll know by now."

Natalie's heart sank. She had liked Duncan—how much, she had scarcely realized until now. She looked at the girl standing in the doorway. Her eyes were dreamy, but she did not look seriously distressed. She looked, Natalie thought, like somebody who was wondering where she had left her keys.

Left alone, Natalie unpacked her suitcases. She found herself murmuring a prayer that Sir Jason would speak more quietly than his wife. If she had to sit through dinner with two people shouting at her ——

Her prayer was answered to the full. Not only did Sir Jason speak quietly; he scarcely spoke at all. His greeting, though kind, was conveyed in as few words as possible and no speaker and no subject could hold his attention after the first sentences.

Dinner was, as Lucille had predicted, unsubstantial. Natalie found herself looking sadly at a plate on which rested a small slice of chicken, some thinly cut, crisp potatoes and a spoonful of green vegetables. She would, she hoped, be able to appease her hunger on whatever followed. What followed was a small helping of trifle flanked by two squares of lemon jelly. There was nothing else except some excellent Madeira and, later in the large, chilly hall, some coffee.

She studied Sir Jason's thin, lined face with the long white mustache and faded blue eyes and found as little trace of William there as upon Lady Rome's large, flaccid countenance. She longed to see Jeremy, but the evening wore slowly on and he did not appear. Sir Jason, looking at her tired face, broke into his wife's description of the new houses which were to be built between Hunnytor and Dummerton West.

"Yes, yes, yes," he said. "Natalie ought to go up to bed."

"Of course she ought," agreed Lady Rome. "She looks completely worn out and she can see Jeremy in the morning. Lucille, take Natalie upstairs and see if they've done everything properly. Good night, my dear." She put her face close to Natalie's and closed her eyes, waiting for her daughter-in-law's kiss. "Sleep well and come down whenever you please and don't worry about breakfast. We never have a very substantial breakfast."

With this knowledge to cheer her, Natalie said good night and made her way to her room by means of certain landmarks which she had memorized. She closed her door and began her preparations for the night. She was to stay here—to sleep here, far away from Helen, far, far from William. She was cold and tired and she was also very hungry.

A knock sounded on her door and Natalie, pressing her hands together, struggled for self-control. The knock was repeated and, rising, she went to the door and opened it.

For a moment she stared stupidly at the young man on the threshold. William's head—she had loved to take it between her hands; William's eyes and nose and firm, kind mouth; William's . . . William's son.

Jeremy Rome saw his stepmother's eyes, blue and bewildered in the sweet face. The next moment they were drowned in a rush of tears.

"Oh," she gasped. "Oh, Jeremy."

Jeremy stepped into the room, closed the door, and took his stepmother into a firm embrace. He stood still and let her weep, his hand beating a soothing tattoo on her shoulder. "There, there," he murmured. "There, there, there. Welcome home."

Jeremy Rome was a young man to whom success had come early. A good artist, he had for some time been undecided as to how seriously he would devote himself to his art. While he was debating the matter, he went up to London, bought a secondhand car of doubtful merit and proceeded to drive it the two hundred miles separating him from his home. Less than fifty miles from London, the car broke down with a thoroughness which made its new owner fear that it was now only fit to be broken up.

He found a room at an inn called the Huntsman and discovered that its host was one of the companions of his earlier and wilder youth. There followed a night of cheerful revelry with the landlord, his charming young wife and several choice spirits hastily summoned from twenty or thirty miles round.

The pleasure of the evening was a little marred by the host's disclosure that he was losing money fast and found the competition with the large neighboring hotels ruinous and crippling.

This, Jeremy pointed out, waving a tankard of beer, was because nobody could be expected to know by instinct that behind the opulent hotels on the roadside, a humbler but infinitely finer sort of hospitality was to be found. Why, he inquired, didn't the host take down that silly little outdated board swinging outside and put up something that would tower against the sky line and bring to every passing traveler knowledge of the Huntsman's existence?

"I," said Jeremy, draining his tankard, "shall paint the largest huntsman in England—and his horse—and man and beast shall tower to the skies and draw the gaze of all travelers."

When the hunting season began, the Stettesbury Hounds met at the Huntsman Inn, and Jeremy, with a showman's instinct, decided to put up his Huntsman to coincide with the event.

The scenes which followed the appearance of the gigantic sign were recorded and pictured in every newspaper in the land. Extra police were drafted to the district to deal with the traffic as motorists, cyclists, mothers with perambulators and fathers with eager little boys came to see the towering figure on the magnificent hunter, to note with wonder that the horn was no mere painted one, but real. The horse's mane was real, too, and blowing in the wind.

The sign, the Huntsman Inn and Jeremy sprang into prominence together. Jeremy found that owners of inns and hotels throughout the land were anxious to commission him to put up better and brighter signs. He bought a studio in London, selected an inn which promised the most scope for his genius, and settled down to find out whether he would like to become a sign painter for life. He thought that he would.

His second sign was as successful as the first, and the only cloud in his sky was the deep distaste he felt for life in London. This developed into loathing and Jeremy sold the studio, turned his back on the capital and returned to make his home in Devonshire.

He was soon to leave Romescourt; his furniture and a large part of his effects were installed in his new home. His studio, however, was not yet ready. Two of the rooms of the farmhouse had been made into one, and new windows added. The work was done and now only the decorating remained.

It was as well for Natalie that Jeremy was at Romescourt during her first week. Jeremy took her under his wing with a thoroughness for which his father would have been grateful, and there sprang up between him and his stepmother a deep affection and respect.

Natalie soon learned the ways of the household. The work was done by an aged butler, his wife, Emmaline—who did the cooking—and two daughters so gaunt and bony that Jeremy christened them Emmaleaner and Emmaleanest and referred to them as the skeleton staff.

Lady Rome scarcely ever left Romescourt. The old chauffeur, Shearer by name, had long since retired, and lived in a cottage in the grounds. His greatest use was in providing a convincing excuse for Lady Rome to stay at home. "Shearer isn't well enough to drive me" meant that Lady Rome, and not Shearer, was indisposed.

Natalie soon settled into a quiet, placid routine. Jeremy spent a good deal of time with her and she was grateful for this chance of cementing their friendship before they had to part—he to take up his residence at his farm and she to get a home ready for William.

Lady Rome had asked her several times if she would like to go and look at the cottages and Natalie had given an eager affirmative; but, as with all Lady Rome's proposals, there were kindness and warmth, repetition and even pressure, but no fulfillment. Jeremy brought the subject up during one of the long, lazy mornings he and Natalie spent together.

"When are you going down to see those places?" he asked. "There are three of them now. Grandfather's chucked some tenants out of a house in the village, and if I know him—and I do—he's going to offer the house to you. But if he does, tell him you won't have it."

"What's the matter with it?" asked Natalie.

"Nothing—inside," said Jeremy. "But outside, it's the most shocking bit of work you ever saw. It's an appalling yellow-painted affair right on the village street."

Natalie studied the long, lazy figure at her feet affectionately, but with a reluctant admission that there were one or two things about Jeremy which Helen might not like. Helen didn't, for example, like men to be flippant, and Jeremy was scarcely ever anything else.

Women are never stronger than when they arm themselves with their weakness.
—MME. DU DEFFAND.

"What's that you're doing?" Jeremy examined with interest the soft folds of the blouse she was sewing.

"It's for Helen," said Natalie. "She wears a lot of black and when the weather's warmer she likes to have these white things—they look dainty and they suit her."

"What's she like?" inquired Jeremy. "I wanted to come to the wedding and be your page and walk down the aisle with Helen, but you dished all that by shutting us out." He saw the color come into Natalie's cheeks, and smiled. "I believe you're sorry now," he went on. "Now that you've seen how nice we all are."

"Yes, I am," admitted Natalie.

"I thought so. But you needn't," said Jeremy, "reproach yourself. Grandfather regards every hour away from his crops as so much time thrown away, and granny—well, I think it was just about that time that Shearer had one of his worst goes. I'd have come, though—and Lucille."

AT this mention of her stepdaughter, Natalie wondered—not for the first time—whether she could bring up the subject of Duncan Macdonald. It was today that Duncan was to have come to Romescourt, and Natalie wondered what he had done on hearing the news. He would no doubt return to his home—not, this time, in joyful triumph, but sadly. There could be no harm in bringing up the subject with Jeremy. She was wondering how she could open the topic, when the door opened and Lucille entered. She smiled at her stepmother, stepped over her brother and curled herself on the end of Natalie's sofa.

"Granny sent me," she explained. "She says you haven't been out since you came, Natalie, and if you want to go, I'm to drive you."

Natalie thanked her and replied truthfully that she thought the day too cloudy for pleasant sight-seeing. Lucille agreed that it was, and got up to let in two dogs that were clamoring for admittance. Scarcely had she regained the sofa when the door opened once more and Natalie saw a tall, fair young man enter. His coming caused no stir. The dogs thumped their tails twice upon the floor, Jeremy pulled an imaginary forelock and Lucille gave him her gentle smile.

"Hello, Philip," she said.

"Come and meet my new stepmother," invited Jeremy. "She ill-uses me and she beats Lucille. . . . This is Philip Bellamy, Natalie."

Philip studied her briefly and spoke in a pleasant but formal tone. "We've all looked forward to your coming, Mrs. Rome," he said. "I hope you'll be very happy down here."

He listened to Natalie's hesitant thanks politely and with studied patience, and she found herself wishing that his manner was less polished. She was surprised to hear that Philip had come over to keep an appointment to ride with Lucille. Natalie wondered what would have happened if she had agreed to go for a drive, and decided that her stepdaughter would have taken her with the same readiness with which she rose at her fiancé's suggestion and prepared to accompany him.

LUCILLE turned and held out a hand to Natalie. "Come and see Flashlight," she invited. "I left him just near the drive."

Flashlight displayed equal affection for Lucille and Jeremy and nodded his head in a knowing way at Natalie.

The riders were about to mount when a loud shout rent the air. From far away, round the distant curve of the drive, came a horse and cart. Another loud hail followed the first, and the four on the drive strained their ears to distinguish the sounds.

"What's he shouting?" asked Jeremy.

Nobody knew. The cart came nearer, and it was seen that, besides driver and passenger, it contained cases of some kind.

"Can't make out a word," commented Philip. "Russian or Chinese, perhaps—or Gaelic."

The last word, carelessly spoken, had a curious effect on the three listeners. Jeremy's eyes narrowed slightly, and Natalie felt horror creeping into her heart.

Three more minutes and there could be no further doubt. Jeremy spoke evenly. "It's Duncan," he announced.

There was a slight pause, and Philip turned toward Lucille. "What," he inquired, "is the fellow doing down here?"

Lucille's blue eyes were wide. "I don't know," she said. "I did write to him, but perhaps he didn't get the letter. I gave it to Jeremy to post."

Three pairs of eyes turned upon Jeremy, and Jeremy, for the first time in Natalie's knowledge of him, looked at a loss. He turned to his sister.

"I'm sorry, Lu," he said. "I forgot every bit about it."

The cart lumbered up and the driver reined in his horse, but before it could stop, Duncan Macdonald had leaped lightly to the ground. He took four long, unhesitating strides toward Lucille, folded her in his arms and pressed his lips to hers.

"You didn't write," he said reproachfully. "I got worried." He released her and held out a hand to Natalie, who took it speechlessly. "'Lo, Mrs. Rome," he greeted her, and turned to address Jeremy. "Look, Jeremy, when I come and stay with people, they come and meet me. I stood on that exposed piece of ground for more than an hour. The cart," he ended simply, "will cost six and six. Pay it."

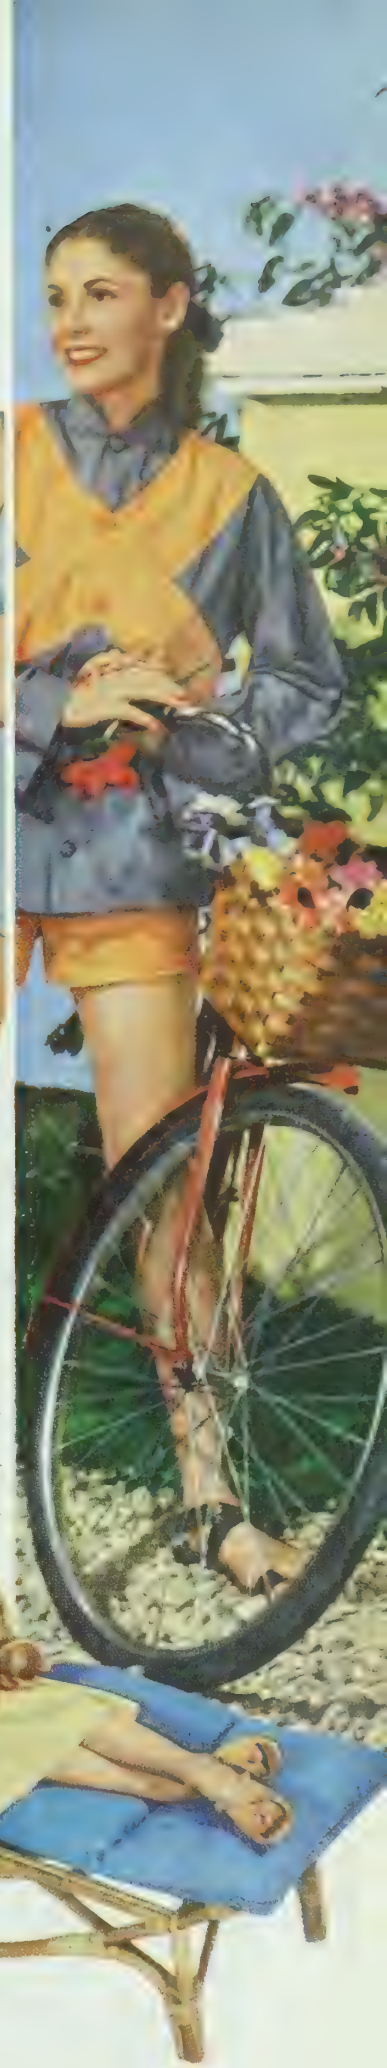
Jeremy, glad to have something to do, lifted out Duncan's suitcases and paid the driver. Duncan looked expectantly at Philip and waited for Lucille to effect an introduction, and Lucille gave a little sigh.

"I'm so sorry, Duncan, I'm so sorry. I did write to you, but the letter—well, it didn't get posted."

"It doesn't matter now," said Duncan simply. "I'm here."

"Yes," said Lucille. "Yes." She stopped and turned to Jeremy with a look of appeal. "You tell him, Jeremy."

Play safe with your play clothes!

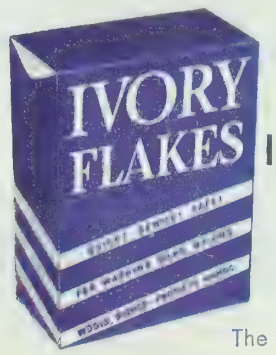


There's a summer of play days ahead . . . lots of need for pretty play clothes. So give yours safe care and they'll see you through summer in style.

Keep your gay washables away from strong soaps and rough handling. Remember—just one wrong washing can spoil them. Play safe! Give nice things (those that show and those that don't) gentle care with pure, mild Ivory Flakes. Then you know they'll come out fitting to perfection . . . sunny bright!

Keep your washables lovelier with this special care

GIVE your short suit a longer, brighter life—give it Ivory Flakes care! Ivory Flakes is one soap that fashion experts recommend for all fine washables.



WISPY nylon pantie girdles should have frequent sudsings in pure, mild Ivory Flakes. Then they'll keep their skin-smooth fit and wear much longer.

Play suit by Carolyn Schnurer

TOPS FOR SPORTS, cotton jersey shirts like the one above want Ivory Flakes care to help keep 'em fitting pretty. You can be sure that fast-sudsing Ivory Flakes clean safely.

CRISP and classic, a linen suit will take you places all summer long if you give it Ivory Flakes care to guard against shrinking and fading. No soap is kinder to nice things than Ivory Flakes.

If it's lovely to wear...It's worth

Ivory Flakes care

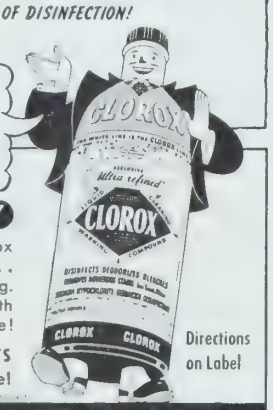
The fast flake form of baby's pure, mild Ivory . . . 99 44/100% Pure

There's more on your Drainboard than meets the eye!

1. DIRTY DISHES, FOOD PARTICLES, SOILED DISHCLOTHS CAN ALL DEPOSIT HARMFUL GERMS ON KITCHEN DRAINBOARDS.

2. ORDINARY WASHING MAKES DRAINBOARDS LOOK CLEAN...BUT MICROSCOPES REVEAL THAT GERMS OFTEN REMAIN.

3. PROTECT FAMILY HEALTH! MAKE DRAINBOARDS AND KITCHENS HYGIENICALLY-CLEAN WITH CLOROX...BATHROOMS, TOO! CLOROX HAS POSITIVE GERM-KILLING POWER. IT DISINFECTS, DEODORIZES; ALSO REMOVES STAINS. HUNDREDS OF PUBLIC HEALTH DEPARTMENTS ENDORSE THE CLOROX TYPE OF DISINFECTION!

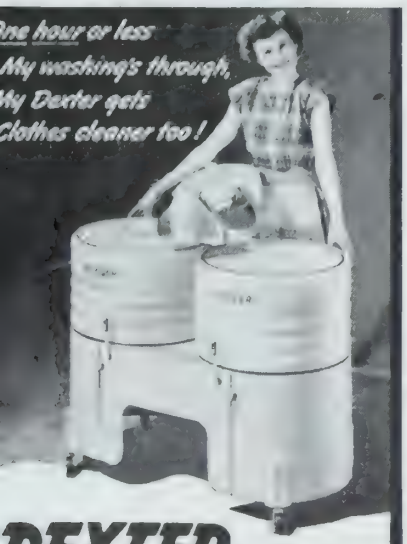


CLOROX...FIRST WITH AMERICA'S HOUSEWIVES BECAUSE IT OFFERS BOTH:

Gentler Bleaching Action!

There's no gentler bleach than Clorox in laundering. For Clorox is free from caustic and other harsh substances... made by an exclusive formula protected by U. S. patent!

Greater Disinfecting Efficiency!



Because it's caustic-free, Clorox works faster in killing germs... does a better job of disinfecting. Give your family the extra health protection of a Clorox-clean home!

Directions on Label

CLOROX BLEACHES • REMOVES STAINS • DEODORIZES • DISINFECTS
There's only one CLOROX... it's always uniform... always dependable!

Cleaning with Boon is simplicity itself! It's America's biggest value in a liquid cleaner... wipes away dirt and grease quickly, easily from washable surfaces. Made by the makers of Clorox.

DEXTER TWIN TUB

WASHES A TUBFUL OF CLOTHES SUPER-CLEAN EVERY 4 MINUTES!

No other washer compares with the Dexter Twin Tub because it's the only washer with two washing tubs. That's the reason why Dexter Twin does your complete weekly wash—sparkling bright and white—in only one hour or less! It saves soap—electricity—hot water. No soaking, hand-rubbing, or pre-treating. Dexter Twin is TODAY'S BIGGEST WASHER VALUE.

FREE Before you buy any washer send for this interesting booklet, "Two Instead of One." It tells why Double Sudsing washes best.

Write for your copy today to Dept. L78
THE DEXTER COMPANY, Fairfield, Iowa

Better washers since 1894.

big IRONING help

QUICK ELASTIC HOT STARCH IN 30 SECONDS
MAKES IRONING EASY

NO BOILING
NO STICKING

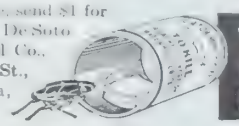
the Starch in the buttercup yellow box

PULVEX FLEA POWDER

TWO KINDS

WITH 5% DDT
... for dogs. Kills fleas and lice quick. Keep fleas off 5-7 days. Many home uses.

OR WITH ROTENONE
... for cats, dogs. Quickly kills fleas, lice. Kills fleas when put on a single spot. Pre war formula



EITHER KIND 25¢ & 50¢

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

KILL ROACHES

Keep your home free of roaches, waterbugs, silverfish and crickets—not just temporarily but all year 'round. Get Gator Roach Hives, follow directions and you'll be rid of roaches—for good. At most stores. If yours has none, send $1 for 9 hives. De Soto Chemical Co., 7 Lad St., Arcadia, Fla.

GATOR ROACH HIVES

"The fact is, Duncan," said Jeremy, "that there's been a mix-up. When Lucille came to London she was more or less engaged to—to Phil Bellamy, who's standing beside you. She came back engaged to you, fixed things up again with Phil and wrote to tell you it was off."

"What was off?" asked Duncan calmly.

"The engagement." said Jeremy. "The one between you and Lucille, I mean. She wrote to tell you, but I've been carrying the letter about in my pocket and so all this mess is really my fault."

It was said. Natalie looked at Jeremy with pride and thought that nobody could have done it more quickly and more kindly. It was over and poor Duncan ——

Duncan turned and faced Philip Bellamy. His look was neither contemptuous nor belligerent; he was up against something and he was merely measuring the odds. When the brief scrutiny was over, it was clear to everybody present—and especially clear to Mr. Bellamy—that Duncan had seen nothing to disturb him.

"If you're ready, Lucille," said Philip, rallying, "I think we ought to go."

"You're not going anywhere," Duncan informed him, "and neither is Lucille. As her fiancé, I ——"

"I'm extremely sorry for you," broke in Philip abruptly, "but the only decent thing you can do is to leave."

Duncan eyed him calmly. "Lucille, as I understand it," he said, "knew you for a good many years and couldn't make up her mind that she wanted to marry you. She made up her mind about me in three days. I was her first fiancé and I'm going to be her last."

Philip's mouth closed in an ugly line and he took a step forward. He came to an abrupt halt. The fellow had enfolded Lucille in his arms once more and was rubbing his cheek gently against hers.

"You see that?" said Philip furiously. "If you don't want to kick him back to wherever he came from, let me do it."

"Yes, let him," said Duncan, tucking one of Lucille's curls neatly into place.

THERE was an interruption. The dogs sprang up and dashed eagerly toward Lady Rome, who had come round the house and was approaching the little group.

"Hello, hello, how nice, how nice to see you all just back," came the familiar bellow. "Natalie, my dear, you oughtn't to be out on a chilly day like this without some kind of covering on your head—you ought to see to it, Jeremy. . . . And how do you do, Philip? . . . I don't seem to know you," went on Lady Rome, looking at Duncan, "but ——"

"This is Mr. Macdonald, granny," murmured Lucille.

"How nice, how nice, how very nice," said Lady Rome. "Macdonald. That's an odd thing, because whenever I see that particular shade of red hair I tell myself that it's either Scotland or bad temper."

"In my case," said Duncan, "it's both."

"You're fortunate, very fortunate," said Lady Rome. "Everybody should have a bad temper. My grandfather had a very bad temper, and he told me that it had got him everything he wanted in life. I see you've got luggage—how very nice. Have you been in Devonshire before? . . . Philip, my dear boy, you must take Mr. Macdonald to see the country. . . . Mr. Bellamy's mother is Scottish, Mr. Macdonald, so you and Philip ought to have a lot in common. . . . Jeremy, where are you going to put your friend?"

"As a matter of fact, granny," said Jeremy, "Duncan came to see Lucille."

"Of course, of course," shouted Lady Rome. "I should have known—I should have known at once. That's why poor Mr. Macdonald is standing in this chilly air with nobody to see to anything. Lucille has simply forgotten again. I'm extremely sorry, Mr. Macdonald; she forgets everything—time, messages, engagements. They go right out of her head."

"They do," agreed Duncan.

"Well, you must go inside at once, Lucille," ordered Lady Rome, "and make them

New Type Hearing Aid

SAVES YOU OVER $100

Coupon below brings it to you—no salesman, no visits to salesrooms. Hear better or pay nothing!

MONEY-BACK TRIAL!

Wear the Zenith "75" at home, at work, anywhere. If it isn't better than you ever dreamed ANY hearing aid could be, return it within 10 days of receipt and Zenith will refund your money in full.

Thousands who formerly hesitated to wear a hearing aid are ordering the new Zenith "75." Because it needs no "fitting," it comes to you by mail—no salesman to high pressure you, no embarrassing visits to salesrooms.

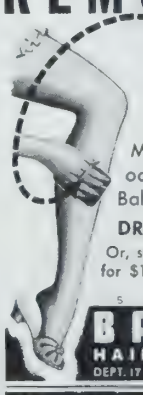
Saves you over $100, too. If its price had to include "fitting," middlemen's profits and high sales commissions, the Zenith "75" would have to sell for $195 instead of $75. So do as tens of thousands have already done. Order your Zenith "75" and find new friends, new success, save over $100, too! Mail the coupon today.

By the makers of the World-Famous Zenith Radios

Look only to your doctor for advice on your ears and hearing

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON PHYSICAL MEDICINES AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

MAIL THIS COUPON TODAY



Zenith Radio Corporation
Hearing Aid Division, Dept. J78
5801 Dickens Avenue, Chicago 39, Illinois

☐ I enclose check or money order for $75* for one Zenith "75" Hearing Aid. Unless I am completely satisfied and find the Zenith "75" superior to any other hearing aid, I may return it within ten days of receipt and get my money back in full.
*Plus tax of $1.50 in Illinois or New York City; $1.88 in California, except Los Angeles, $2.25.

☐ Please send me free descriptive literature.

Name .....
Address .....
City ..... State .....

REMOVE HAIR

No Razor
No Chemicals
25¢

Remove leg hair, arm hair, face hair. Stop stubby regrowth. Money-back guaranteed results. No odor. End unsightly hair now. Get Baby Touch Hair Remover today at

DRUG OR DEPARTMENT STORES

Or, send 25¢ for one Baby Touch Pad (Five for $1.00). Mittens with two sides only 35¢ or Three for $1.00.

BABY TOUCH HAIR REMOVER COMPANY
DEPT. 17 • 3750 LINDELL BLVD. • ST. LOUIS 8, MO.

Want Extra Money?

Quick CASH Earning are yours for showing fast-selling Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards, Box Assortments, Everyday Greetings, Gift Wraps. Amazing value—all for 60¢ and $1.00. Pay you up to 100% profit. Send now for FREE SAMPLES Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards and "Top-Top" 21-Christmas Card Box on approval. EXTRA CASH BONUS. Write today!
CARDINAL CRAFTSMEN, Dept. G-71, 117 W. Pearl St., Cincinnati 1, Ohio

SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS WITH NAME 50 for $1

FREE SAMPLES

NEW EXTRA MONEY PLAN

SHOW FRIENDS UNUSUAL CHRISTMAS CARD ASSORTMENTS

You can make up to 100% Profit without experience—showing new 1948 Christmas, Everyday Card assortments, Wrappings, Stationery, Coasters, unusual and attractive. Bonus, Special offers. Send today for FREE samples 30 different Name Imprinted Christmas Cards 50 for $1.25 for $1 and $2, Stationery, Coasters, Christmas and Everyday assortments on approval.

FREE SAMPLES PERSONAL CARDS AND STATIONERY

THOMAS TERRY STUDIOS, 51 Union Ave., Westfield, Mass.

... Mr. Macdonald into St. Francis of ...isi. . . . Philip, will you take the horses ...und, as you've finished your ride? . . . ...w come, Mr. Macdonald."

Duncan looked into Lady Rome's eyes ...th a steady and candid gaze. "There's ... one thing, Lady Rome," he said. "I'm ... fellow Lucille got engaged to in London, ...d when I came here I didn't know there'd ...n any—any misunderstanding. Lucille ...ote to me, but I didn't get the letter. So ...ou feel—if you'd like me to go away ——"

Lady Rome looked at him in surprise and ...cern. "My dear Mr. Macdonald," she ...d, "you can't possibly go away before ...'ve come, can you? This isn't the first ...e Lucille has forgotten to post her letters ...d I'm quite certain it won't be the last."

Duncan was immovable.

"Mr. Bellamy here"—he indicated Philip ... a nod of his head—"Mr. Bellamy thinks ...t he's still engaged to Lucille. He ——"

"Of course he does, ... course he does," ...eed Lady Rome. ...lasn't Lucille been ...ing him so? I al...ys find that if no...dy fusses, every...ng always gets ...raightened out ...ain. Don't you ...ee, Philip?"

"I'm afraid I ...n't," said Philip. ...'d like it to be ...arly understood ...at I—I am Lucille's ...ncé."

"Haven't I just ...d so, my dear ...y?" inquired Lady ...me. "Now run ...ng, and give my ...e to your moth... . . . Mr. Mac...nald. come inside. ...ve you been in ...gland very much?"

Mr. Macdonald ...d he had been ed...ated at an English ...ool.

"How nice, how ...y nice," said Lady ...me. "When I went ... to see Jeremy, I ...d to think that the ...ottish boys looked ...endid on Sundays ... their jolly kilts— ...y made the other ...ys look quite drab, ...n't you know." She ...nt toward the ...irs. "I shall see you at luncheon."

Natalie, left with the two young men, ...ked from one to the other a little help...sly. She found Duncan regarding her in...tly.

"Do you think I should stay here?" he ...ed.

Natalie scarcely hesitated. "Yes, I think ...lo," she said. "You couldn't go back to ...otland at ——"

"Nothing," Duncan told her gravely, ...ill take me back to Scotland or to any...ere else until Lucille comes with me. But ...you thought I ought to stay somewhere ...e—get rooms in the village ——"

"Oh, no," said Natalie. "I'm sure it's right ... you to be here, and"—she spoke more ...satingly—"I'm very glad to see you ...e."

JEREMY gave her an odd glance. "Taking ...es?" he asked.

"Yes. She's on mine," Duncan informed ...n. "What about you?"

Jeremy waited before replying. "I won't ...e sides, but I'd like to see you pull it ..."

"So—so would I," said Natalie.

Duncan Macdonald looked at his sup...rters. "I'll pull it off," he promised.

Natalie went down to breakfast the follow...g morning feeling uneasy. She had lain awake for some time during the night worrying over the uncomfortable position in which Duncan was placed and hoping that no violence would shatter the peaceful atmosphere of Romescourt.

THERE was no violence in the breakfast room. Lady Rome was alone at the table. Sir Jason had gone into Hunnytor on business; Jeremy had gone to his flying club, taking Duncan with him, and Lucille was riding with Philip. Sir Jason, it appeared, had wanted to know whether eleven o'clock would be too early for Mrs. Rome to accompany him.

"Will eleven be too early for you, my dear?" inquired Lady Rome. "I shouldn't think so, because the sun looks as though it might stay out and if you covered your head, don't you know, you wouldn't feel the wind."

Natalie indicated that she would be ready, trusting that before the hour she would have found out where her father-in-law was going. It was probable that he was taking her to see the cottages. She put a question to her mother-in-law.

"Are we going to see those two little cottages?" she asked.

"Three," said Lady Rome. "There's another one, but it's a dreadful-looking place."

Natalie was ready and waiting at eleven o'clock and Sir Jason, coming round for her in the little cart, looked pleased at her punctuality. There was unbroken silence for two miles and then Sir Jason told his daughter-in-law that they were approaching the village of Dummerton. Before the village was reached, however, he turned onto a narrower road and drove along a pretty little valley in which were a farmhouse or two and several little cottages. Toward one of these the trap was directed and soon Sir Jason pulled up at the gate of one of the larger dwellings. To Natalie's surprise, he sat still and seemed in no hurry to alight.

"This is one of 'em," he said. "The other's there"—he pointed to a cottage about a mile away. "You can choose whichever of 'em you like," he went on. "Told William I wouldn't influence you. But I shouldn't think"—he eyed the cottage sourly—"I shouldn't think you'd want to waste any time over this one."

Natalie looked at the pretty little place and saw nothing about it to account for the look of distaste on her father-in-law's face. "It looks charming," she said. "Could I—could we go inside?"

Sir Jason took out a key, and soon Natalie was standing in a little passage, from which rooms opened on both sides. At the end of the passage was a little stairway, and halfway up it a little window. Natalie gave a murmur of delight.

"It's pretty, isn't it?" she said.

"All these places are pretty," Sir Jason informed her. "If they weren't pretty, nobody'd ever live in 'em."

Natalie walked slowly from room to room. She thought that if she chose small furniture and had little of it ——

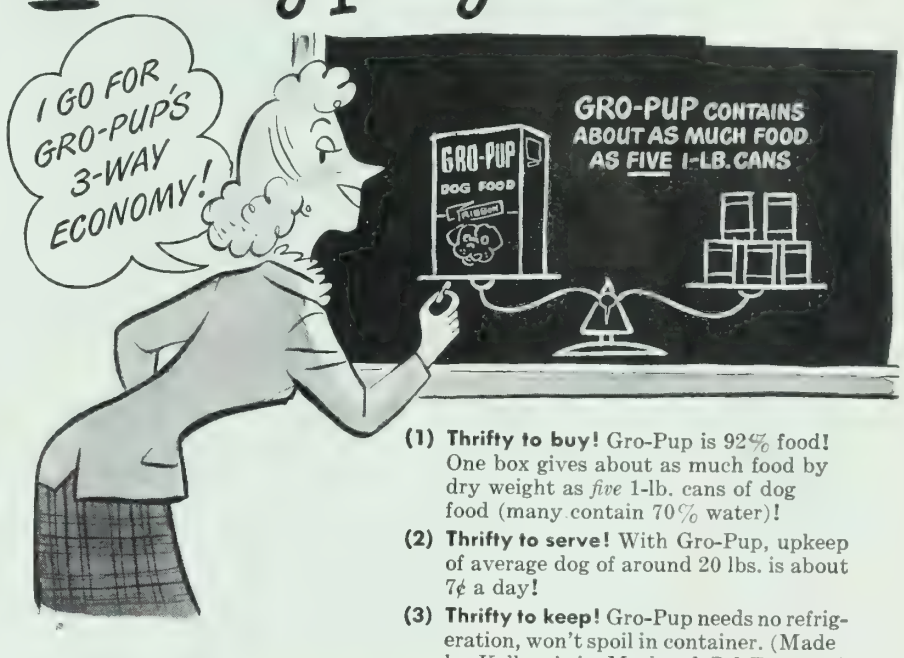
"Got to breathe," said Sir Jason. "William likes to breathe. Can't breathe in a box like this. And can't turn round. Try swinging a cat in here, and what?"

(Continued on Page 75)

Dry Season

BY KIT WRIGHT

Summer becomes too arid for the earth,
In thirst dissatisfied day after day;
All of the woodland buds were thin at birth,
The meadows dusty with unwatered hay.
Summer has let a cloudless sky betray
The marshy basins and the forest sods;
Dry, dry and blown; yes, almost blown away
Are cranberry leaves and little orchid pods.



Things that remain too sugared and too fair
Are not for men or flowers, who live and die;
And living, need both confidence and pain
As a comparison to profit by.
Gray and tumultuous come tears and rain;
Thunder and passion and a fresher air.

"I'm sitting on top of the World"

Give your dog Gro-Pup for flavorful nutrition. Gro-Pup comes in crisp, toasty Ribbon form. Twenty-three healthful ingredients—carbohydrates are cooked for easier digestion. Every vitamin and mineral dogs are known to need for liveliness and stamina.

"I'm sitting pretty!"

(1) Thrifty to buy! Gro-Pup is 92% food! One box gives about as much food by dry weight as five 1-lb. cans of dog food (many contain 70% water)!

(2) Thrifty to serve! With Gro-Pup, upkeep of average dog of around 20 lbs. is about 7¢ a day!

(3) Thrifty to keep! Gro-Pup needs no refrigeration, won't spoil in container. (Made by Kellogg's in Meal and Pel-Etts, too.)

The Biggest Box on the shelf

Dogs Go For GRO-PUP

Beautiful Hair

B R E C K

Summertime is wonderful for little children but the summer sun is sometimes hard o the hair. A Breck Special Shampoo, a Breck Special Hair Cream and a Brec Special Hair Lotion give you a formula for Beautiful Hair. John H. Breck, hair an scalp specialist for more than forty years, believes you will never again depend on shampoo alone after you have used the Breck Preparations for the care of your hai

Whenever you buy a shampoo or other preparations for the care of your hair, mention whether your hair is dry, oily, or normal and you will be given the correct Breck Preparations for your hair.

JOHN H BRECK INC MANUFACTURING CHEMISTS SPRINGFIELD 3 MASSACHUSETT
CANADIAN ADDRESS 310 SLATER STREET OTTAW

(Continued from Page 73)

Natalie looked at him doubtfully. Perhaps this was hardly the place to appeal to William. "I like it," she said, "but perhaps the other one would ——"

"Yes, yes, yes," said Sir Jason. "Come along."

He hurried her out of the house and drove off rapidly, and soon the second cottage was reached. They entered and Natalie looked around hopefully.

"Do you like this one?" she asked.

"Nothing to do with me," replied Sir Jason. "Entirely your affair."

Natalie went upstairs and discovered a neat little bathroom, two good bedrooms and two smaller ones. She told her father-in-law that, as far as she could see, the house would do very well. Sir Jason's expression became gloomy.

"Big man, William," he pointed out. "All these beams."

"They're very—they're rather picturesque," faltered Natalie.

"Dark kitchen," said Sir Jason. "Want light and air in your kitchen. Healthy."

"But ——"

"Badly situated, the house," said Sir Jason. "Too low. Catch all the damp in winter."

"Is it—is it really damp?" faltered Natalie. "I ——"

"Silly little bedrooms," said Sir Jason. "Fellow needs space—especially sailors. Get used to it."

"But their cabins ——"

"Must make a fellow comfortable in his own home. I'll show you another one," said Sir Jason. "You come with me and I'll show you one that William'd settle into as snug as you please. Come along."

Sir Jason hurried his daughter-in-law out of the house and in the direction of Dummerton. He drove through the village street and drew up at a building which Natalie had no difficulty in recognizing. Jeremy had described the place with a fair degree of accuracy.

The house stood on the road, its front door three steps above the pavement. Ugly and shapeless, it was painted a particularly unpleasing shade of yellow, with windows outlined in an even less pleasant shade of green. Natalie sat in the trap, scarcely seeing Sir Jason's hand outstretched to help her to alight. She had no words in which to tell him that she had seen enough, and more than enough, of this horror. Sir Jason waved his hand irritably.

"No use sitting outside," he said. "People have to live inside. I'll take you in."

"It's ugly," said Natalie, "and ——"

"Yes, yes, yes," said Sir Jason. "But you must look at it. Your decision entirely. You see it and say yes or no. Come along."

Natalie went up the three steps and immediately was absorbed in trying to understand the plan of this remarkable house. She was in a wide entrance hall. To left and right, with windows overlooking the street, were the rooms which in more orthodox houses were placed at the back. On the other side of the hall the house widened considerably, every room looking onto a large expanse of garden which had been enlarged by the addition of the site on which a burned house had stood. Natalie walked through rooms opening into one another and saw that they were spacious, well decorated and sunny. She went upstairs and this time Sir Jason followed her, his hands held behind his back and his expression unreadable.

"Bathrooms," he said. "Two. Big and small. Linen cupboard. Dressing room for William. Space, lovely view. Street at back of you—can't see it. Good drains—William likes good drains. Air. Air and light. Good kitchen, built-in cupboards. Cloakroom downstairs—must have. Roomy house, not rambling. All suit you very well."

It was all true. If only the outside ——

"Paint the outside white," came Sir Jason's voice. "Can't alter shape, but won't look bad when it's white."

Natalie walked downstairs slowly and, having been through every room a great many more times, stood in the middle of the hall and looked at her father-in-law.

"I didn't expect to like it," she said slowly, "but I think it's—I don't think I ever saw a house that ——"

"Yes, yes, yes," said Sir Jason. "You like it?"

"I think it's lovely," said Natalie.

Sir Jason took out his watch and glanced at it. "Better go now," he said. "See old Mrs. Batch some other time. Son's a lord, but she says she'll give you a hand once or twice a week and her granddaughter'll come in daily. Good girl, she says, and splendid cook. Come along now. Very sensible choice. Tell William I said so. Don't worry about the garden—I'll see to that."

They went homeward, and both were well content.

Natalie half expected reproaches from Lady Rome and Jeremy on her choice of a home, but she found that they congratulated her on having got something so much to her taste and thought no more of the matter. She was becoming used to the family habit of complete and unshakable serenity. Natalie was grateful for this state of calm acceptance, but admitted that in a case like Duncan Macdonald's it might have great drawbacks.

Duncan was accepted as one of the family. His aim, however, was to subtract from the family total and not to add to it, and it proved an almost impossible task. Lucille slipped away from him with gentle regret and went riding with Philip. Sir Jason, to whom he applied for permission to woo his granddaughter, said "Yes, yes, yes" and begged Duncan to take the matter to Lady Rome. Lady Rome waved a trowel, told him that Lucille was a silly little thing.

Beware of the woman who kisses you on both cheeks; it is too much for friendship, too little for love.
—MAY SINCLAIR.

One evening, however, two changes took place which, though making no noticeable impression on the placid surface of the Romes' existence, had a far deeper effect on their two visitors.

It was cold and coffee was served in the small, comfortable room in which Natalie had sat on her arrival. She was in the same chair, leaning back and studying the pretty picture made by Lucille, who sat on a fender stool and stroked the ears of her favorite dog. Sir Jason was on the point of leaving the room to listen to a wireless talk on Nepal. Lady Rome addressed him without looking up from her game of patience.

"I expect," she said, "that Margaret will be listening to the lecture, too, because you know how she likes anything to do with Tibet."

"Nepal," corrected Jeremy.

"Yes, all those places," said Lady Rome. "I had a letter today," she added. "She says they can't come."

"Who can't come?" asked Sir Jason.

"She didn't say," said Lady Rome. "She just said 'we.'"

"She must have told you in her first letter," said Jeremy.

"Well, if she did, my dear boy," said his grandmother, "it isn't of much importance, because only Alexander is coming."

"Alexander, eh?" said Sir Jason, with a slight brightening of his countenance. "Good."

"Who else?" asked Jeremy.

"Nobody else," said Lady Rome.

"Darling granny," said Jeremy, "Alexander is only three years old. He can't come by himself,"

"You must read the letter for yourself," said Lady Rome. "Of course, the baby is coming too."

"Well, that's all right," said Jeremy. "Alexander can keep an eye on the baby on the journey."

"How," demanded Lady Rome, "can poor little Alexander, at three years old, take

(Continued on Page 77)

Are you in the know?

When can a girl ask for a date?

- ☐ But never
- ☐ In Twirp Season
- ☐ How desperate can you get

A miss can stalk her man—in Twirp Season. Anytime you and your gal pals declare one. Call for your dates, give 'em zany corsages. Plans can include a dance or movies, plus refreshments—natch. The catch? Twirp means The Woman Is Requested to Pay.

And at certain times, choosing Kotex pays, in self-assurance. Why not, with those flat pressed ends preventing telltale outlines? Thanks to this secret mission, Kotex' flat pressed ends help so many girls to stay in the fun . . . serenely!

Do the Crew Cuts rate you—

- ☐ Affectionate
- ☐ Affected
- ☐ A femme to follow

A gal might improve her conversation. Don't make like a broken record with "See?". . ."I mean . . ." And only a dreep would dare the affected "Do you rah-lly?" approach. Shun mannerisms. Be yourself. And be rated a femme to follow. You can always be your own gay self when calendar qualms are off your mind. What with that exclusive safety center of Kotex for extra protection, there's no ceiling to your confidence! And because Kotex comes in 3 sizes, there's a Kotex napkin just perfect for you.

Can "toothpick" pegs gain beach allure, via—

- ☐ Gooey sundaes
- ☐ Bicycling
- ☐ Scanty swim suits

Try this for thighs—(and pegs, too) that aren't so fully packed: Mooch a bicycle. Pedal like mad, daily, to build up underdeveloped leg muscles. Meanwhile, a dressmaker bathing suit will help keep 'em beach-worthy. It's a good style for your particular problem. Here's a good thought for problem-day comfort: Kotex is made to stay soft while you wear it. Not 'til you've tried new Kotex can you appreciate this new, suave softness that holds its shape. And the new all-elastic Kotex Belt fits comfortably . . . doesn't bind.

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins*

KOTEX COMES IN 3 SIZES: REGULAR, JUNIOR, SUPER

Feel SWAN'S exclusive Super-Creamed Blend!

Feel it in the smoother cake!

Swan differs from other soaps. It has an extra smoothness and creaminess you can actually feel in the cake itself. This difference comes from the super-creamed blend which is Swan's alone!

Feel it in the creamier lather!

You can feel the difference Swan's super-creamed blend makes in the lather, too. It's richer, creamier, more abundant . . . which means extra mild, yet extra thorough cleansing for your skin. All over!

Let Swan keep your skin looking younger!

Your skin feels different when you emerge from your Swan bath. Because super-creamed Swan cleanses so gently, rinses away so completely, your skin glows with freshness and life. Your skin looks softer, smoother, younger!

Another fine product of Lever Brothers Company

the SWAN look is a young look!

(Continued from Page 75)

charge of an eight months old —— Dear me, little Margaret must be more than that—nearly ten months old."

"Perhaps," suggested Natalie, "they're coming with their nurse."

"Yes—such a wonderful woman," said Lady Rome. "She was with us for eighteen years—she had Lucille and Jeremy and then the poor thing was worn out ——"

"Thank you," said Jeremy.

"—— and she retired," went on Lady Rome, "and when Alexander and little Margaret were born and nobody could get anybody to come, dear old Nannie came out again and now she looks after them."

"When are they coming to Romescourt?" asked Jeremy.

"On Thursday," said Lady Rome, "and they're going to stay for a month. Alexander is a dear little fellow and so intelligent. Couldn't you find a little pony for him, Lucille? You must ask Philip."

Lucille turned from her contemplation of the fire and shook her head gently.

"I can't ask Philip," she said. "He's going away tomorrow."

Natalie and Duncan stared at her.

"You mean," said Duncan, when he could speak, "you mean he's going away? Where to—I mean, why—I mean ——"

Lucille looked faintly puzzled. "He had to arrange a lot of things," she said, "but he's coming back."

"When?" demanded Duncan.

"In a week, I think," said Lucille. "Or perhaps more than that."

Duncan sat still, his thoughts racing. He had fought with a feeling that he ought to leave Romescourt, and he had subdued it. There had been nothing to wait for, except brief and unsatisfactory talks with Lucille, but now Philip was going away. The business that was taking him must be urgent, thought Duncan. How he could leave Lucille—lovely Lucille, will-o'-the-wisp Lucille—and go ——

Three signs of an ill-bred person: staying too long on a visit, staring, asking too many questions.
—IRISH PROVERB.

"He wanted me to go, too," said Lucille to her grandmother, "but I didn't want to."

"Of course not, my dear," said Lady Rome. "You're a very silly little thing to forget that Mr. Macdonald is here; I don't see how Philip could have expected you to go away. Where did he want you to stay?"

"With his aunt in Sussex," said Lucille.

"That would be that dreadful Aunt Julia," said Lady Rome. "I remember her so well because she came once with red hair and the next time with a kind of pale-blue hair. She told me it was very expensive. If Philip doesn't want to ride any more, Lucille," she went on, "perhaps Mr. Macdonald would go out with you. Do you like riding, Mr. Macdonald?"

DUNCAN told her that, on the whole, he preferred to walk, and wished that he could have added a short account of his remarkable prowess in swimming, sailing, skating, climbing and even sword dancing. On a horse, however —— But he could walk with Lucille. He had a week. Seven days in which to search for the warmth and passion which had stirred so briefly at their meeting.

Natalie, watching the expression in the brown eyes, followed Duncan's thoughts and found herself sympathizing with him.

Her musing was interrupted by a call to the telephone, and she went out eagerly to Lady Rome's office, where the call awaited her. She lifted the receiver and in a few moments heard Helen's voice. With an expression of pleasure, Natalie drew forward a chair and prepared to enjoy a little chat with her daughter.

"How are you, darling?"

"I'm all right, mother," came Helen's voice. "I'm sorry I didn't write last week."

"It didn't matter at all—I mean, I realized you were busy," said Natalie. "Have you kept quite well?"

"Of course I have, mother," said Helen. "I've been—well, I've just been sort of going about, that's all."

A faint chill, without cause and without reason, crept slowly over Natalie. She strove to fix her mind on Helen's description of a successful display of export gowns at Maybelle et Cie, but found herself listening to something beyond Helen's words—an indefinable something that made her stiffen in her chair.

"Helen," she asked, "is there—is there anything wrong?"

THERE came a little laugh, and a moment later Helen's cool and amused voice. "No, mother, of course there isn't. But perhaps you've got a sixth sense. I've got some news for you." The voice was light and the tone almost one of banter. Yet Natalie knew that whatever news was coming was going to be bad news.

"Tell me, darling," she urged.

"Well, mummy"—she had not used the word since she was thirteen, and Natalie sat very still—"I've been going about with Maurice quite a lot lately and last night he—we—last night, mummy, we fixed it up. I mean, we got engaged."

Natalie stared at Lady Rome's silver-mounted calendar and, putting out a hand, screwed its little handle and sent the days flashing past in a dizzy procession.

"Did you hear, mummy?"

"Yes, Helen darling. Are you happy?"

"Yes, of course I'm happy," said Helen. "Maurice said I was to give you his love. Go on, mother—say you're glad."

"If you're happy, darling, then I'm very, very glad," said Natalie. "Can you—can't you get a few days off and come and stay? We could talk about it and ——"

"Yes, I'm coming," said Helen. "I spoke to Mrs. Creech about a holiday and she said yes, of course. Not this week, but early next week—would that be all right for William's mamma?"

"Yes, I'm sure it would," said Natalie.

"There're the pips, mother," broke in Helen. "Can't afford any more. Good-by."

"God bless you, darling," said Natalie. "Take care of yourself."

She replaced the receiver and sat quite still, feeling that she had never before experienced such desolation. She gave scarcely a thought to the loving plans she and William had made for the marriage of Helen and Jeremy. Helen had chosen for herself and she had chosen, Natalie admitted, very well. Maurice Hunter would make a very good husband. But Helen was not happy.

She felt something dropping onto her hands and looked down to find that her tears had been falling for some time and that a great deal of mopping up was required. She was in the process of drying her eyes when the door opened and Sir Jason stood before her.

"Something wrong," he said. "Bad news from your daughter, hey?"

"No—oh, no," said Natalie, drying the last tear hastily. "I'm so sorry to be so silly—you must think ——"

"What's wrong with her?" asked Sir Jason. "Sick?"

"Oh, no!" said Natalie. "She's very well—she's quite all right. She's"—she looked at him with her eyes filling—"she's engaged."

Sir Jason stood and thought the matter over. The coming of Natalie had brought him relief and reassurance and, later, a good deal of pleasure. He liked her, but he had never liked the sound of that daughter of hers. Dress shop and no outdoor exercise. And the moment her mother left her alone, she got herself entangled with the first bounder that made advances.

He walked over to Natalie and patted her awkwardly on the shoulder.

"Never mind," he consoled her. "All blow over. She'll get over the excitement and send the bounder off."

Natalie stared up at him in bewilderment. "Oh, but he isn't a—he's a very nice young man," she protested. "He's ——" The tears came to her eyes, and she stopped.

"I dress for starlight dining ...at 8 o'clock in the morning!"

1. "Here's how I manage desk-to-dining dates," says this smart career girl. "I wear a simple black linen dress to the office, with the smartest of tailored jackets. And, of course, rely on new Odorono cream to keep my clothes free from perspiration stains and odor." One dab of Odorono in the A.M. keeps you dainty a full 24 hours.

2. "When date time comes, I remove the jacket, add beads and crisp white petticoat, flowers and gloves—and I'm set for a romantic evening. I'm confident of my charm all evening too, thanks to new Odorono cream." Because the Halgene in Odorono gives more effective protection than any deodorant known.

And wait till you see how creamy-smooth Odorono stays in the jar. Never gritty (even if you leave the cap off for weeks).

Yet stainless Odorono is so safe and gentle—you can use it even after shaving. Try Odorono yourself—and see.

New Odorono Cream safely stops perspiration and odor a full 24 hours!

holds your hair in place
144% better

Here's the first real improvement in bobby pins! A radically new patented shape, scientifically designed to hold better. Stronger, yet flexible, easy to open. *Yes, certified, unbiased tests prove that Supergrip holds 144% better!

Gayla* SUPERGRIP

"GAYLA" MEANS THE BEST IN BOBBY PINS, HAIR PINS, CURLERS

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

"Yes, yes, yes," said Sir Jason. "Bed's best place. You run up, m'dear. Nice sleep and wake up feeling better."

He led her to the stairs and watched her as she climbed them and went in the direction of her room. Sir Jason turned and went back to the other members of the party.

"Sent Natalie up to bed," he told them without preamble. "Upset—daughter got engaged to one of those bounders and poor Natalie worried."

"One of what bounders?" inquired Jeremy.

"One of those London bounders," said his grandfather. "Don't know him. Lucille, take your mother a hot drink."

Lady Rome, who had been making little sounds of regret and distress, thought this a very good suggestion. "Yes, Lucille. It's too bad of that girl to go and worry her mother. Jeremy, I think you ought to go up and see if you can do anything to comfort poor little Natalie. Take her a nice hot drink and tell her it'll all come to nothing."

Jeremy went to the tray of hot drinks, poured out a cupful for his stepmother, and made his way upstairs. He knocked his own special knock on Natalie's door and heard her answer.

"Hot drink," he said, entering and closing the door behind him. "You're to go instantly to bed."

Natalie took the drink gratefully, looking at her stepson with a shamefaced expression.

"I'm so sorry," she said. "I do try so hard not to become tearful, but it's never any use. I hate to cry, but ——"

"—— but you have to cry," finished Jeremy gently. "Well, it's only a nice healthy way of letting off steam. I hope my wife cries—they tell me that if they don't cry, they throw china and get into shocking rages."

"I made your grandfather think that I was upset," said Natalie, "but it wasn't really that. I think it was a little sudden, though; she didn't tell me quite at once—only at the end."

"Well, don't think about it," said Jeremy. "Don't worry about it. We get Helen down here and she forgets all about the bounder in no time and ——"

"Oh no!" protested Natalie. "He isn't a—he's Maurice Hunter and I've met him and he's quite a nice man."

"Then why," inquired Jeremy, "were you crying? Was it with joy?"

"No—not exactly," said Natalie. "I ——"

"Nobody," stated Jeremy, "can be happy with a bounder. You give me that cup and pop off to bed and dream about father. If you like," he offered, "I'll go and get you that picture of him that's in my room. You know the one: in a sailor suit—not Roy Navy pattern—holding his nurse's hand

Natalie declined this favor and said go night without any further attempt at clea ing Maurice Hunter's reputation. She w tired and depressed and not feeling ve clear-headed. Helen was unhappy. It w all due to Maurice Hunter. Perhaps he w a bounder, after all.

Duncan Macdonald woke early the fo lowing morning and, with a realization th last night's news had changed his life, leape from his bed with a single bound, and bega to plan his day. He would take Lucille u that inviting-looking hill after breakfas Hand in hand, they would go to the top an look down—there was a thick mist now, bu that would clear—they would look dow upon the world far below. At this though Duncan beat a triumphant tattoo with ope hands upon his stomach and produced series of low nasal sounds reminiscent of th hum of bagpipes.

Lucille agreed to a walk, and soon aft breakfast Duncan buttoned her into he mackintosh and tied under her chin a blu scarf which matched her eyes and made he look almost Madonnalike. They went acros the park together and Natalie, watchin them go, turned to Jeremy with a puzzle expression.

"I can't understand," she said, "ho Philip could possibly—I mean, it seems t me that Duncan was just beginning to giv up the idea of ——"

"Whoa!" commanded Jeremy. "You' off the track. Canny's not giving anythin up. He's a bit slow in coming into actio but you've only got to look at his jaw to se that he doesn't know when he's licked."

"But," pointed out Natalie, "time's pass ing, and people are beginning to send wed ding presents and ——"

"Well, yes," conceded Jeremy. "But prob ably Duncan's working out one of thes snatching-from-the-altar acts that his fore bears were so famous for."

"I hope not," said Natalie, "but I d think that Philip is being very —— It's lik tempting Providence ——"

"He can't help himself," said Jeremy "This Julia is his great-aunt and godmothe and the idea is that when she dies he'll com in for a packet. Whenever she blows a sum mons on the golden horn, he has to obey i pronto."

"But his aunt's money—without Lu cille ——" began Natalie.

"That'd be tough. But auntie's money with Lucille would be nice to bring off. Lif is just a gamble—or do I mean love?"

(Continued on Page 80)

"What on earth are you doing, Milton?"

Once...her hair was her despair, now she's a "LUSTRE-CREME" Dream Girl

CINDERELLA had nothing on me in spending lonely man-less evenings. My hair was dull, rebellious. But my sister Mimi knew a special way to keep her locks gleaming, soft and glossy. So she won all the beaux, including my "one and only." Mr. Handsome.

DESPERATELY, I resolved to spy out her hair secret from her hairdresser. "It's the magic of Lustre-Creme Shampoo," he said. "Lustre-Creme is not a soap, not a liquid, but an amazing new, dainty cream shampoo created by Kay Daumit, cosmetic genius, to bring out hidden hair beauty." And golly, how lovely my hair looked after that Lustre-Creme shampoo!

"KEEP IT LOVELY" . . . urged the hairdresser, "by using Lustre-Creme Shampoo at home. Lustre-Creme gives this three-way loveliness: (1) Makes hair fragrantly clean . . . free of dust and loose dandruff; (2) highlights every hair strand with a lovely glistening sheen; (3) leaves your entire head of hair soft, pliable, easy to manage. Its instant billowy lather is a rare blend of secret ingredients . . . plus gentle lanolin, akin to the natural oils in a healthy scalp."

NEXT DAY . . . I ran into my long lost Mr. Handsome. "Say!" he exclaimed. "What's happened to your hair? It looks beautiful, and changes your entire appearance." That night we dined at a swank roof garden. On the moonlit terrace he again complimented my Lustre-Creme tresses . . . expressed his marvel at their new softness and sparkle. "I always thought of you as pretty," he said, "but that new hair look makes you a Dream Girl . . . the girl I've always dreamed of finding."

A FEW WEEKS LATER . . . He slipped a sparkler on my finger . . . while he tenderly touched my sparkling hair. I don't suppose it always works this way. But Lustre-Creme Shampoo, with its blend of secret ingredients plus lanolin, did bring out my hair's beauty, did attract my man. (Now he uses Lustre-Creme to keep his hair clean and glossy.)

Whether you prefer the TUBE or the JAR . . . you'll prefer LUSTRE-CREME SHAMPOO

YOU, TOO . . . can have soft, glamorous Dream Girl hair with Lustre-Creme Shampoo. Lathers lavishly in hard or soft water. (No special rinse needed.) A single Lustre-Creme shampoo will amaze you with its "three-way loveliness" results. Your hair is sweetly clean; gorgeous in its sheen; soft, easy to manage; lovely to caress. Try it! Now Lustre-Creme Shampoo comes in tubes as well as in jars . . . for home and travel use, convenient for all members of the family. 4-oz. jar, $1.00. Smaller sizes in jars or tubes . . . 49¢ and 25¢. At all cosmetic counters.

Kay Daumit, Inc. (Successor) 919 N. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Cool Device
Roses n Spice

A SPLASH of cool, refreshing Toilet Water to keep spirits from wilting under the summer sun 1.00

A DASH of cloud-soft Talcum in the same long-lasting fragrance .65

Summer Special The above items and a quality atomizer at no extra charge. For a limited time, at your favorite store 1.65

SHULTON
Rockefeller Center, New York

(Continued from Page 78)

The thought of love was in Duncan's mind as he walked happily by Lucille's side. They reached the foot of the hill and began the ascent and he was pleased to see that his companion walked steadily and well. At the top, they found a sheltered mound on which to rest. Duncan leaned against a damp slope and watched Lucille's face—fair, sweet and faintly flushed. There was silence for a time and then he spoke slowly.

"Lucille," he asked, "are you really going on with it?"

Lucille nodded her head slowly. "Well, yes, Duncan," she said. "I'm so sorry, but I—I don't know what happened to me in London. I ought to have told you at once about Philip, instead of not remembering until it was too late."

"It wouldn't have made any difference," said Duncan. "If you hadn't come back here you wouldn't ever have given him another thought."

"But I did come back," pointed out Lucille.

"And you let them talk you into an engagement."

"I've known Philip since I was four."

"Then you must be pretty sick of him."

"Hush," said Lucille.

"I won't hush," said Duncan. "I didn't worry you—much—when he was hanging about, but if he chooses to leave you and go off on some business which he obviously considers as important as looking after you, then ——"

"He had to go," said Lucille. "His aunt, Miss Campbell, sent for ——" She stopped. Duncan was staring at her openmouthed. In a few moments he found his voice.

"His aunt what?" he shouted.

"His aunt, Miss Campbell," Lucille repeated. "His Aunt Julia."

"Campbell! Campbell!" intoned Duncan hollowly. "Are you telling me that this Bellamy chap has a Campbell aunt?"

Lucille watched him with puzzled interest. "Do you know any Campbells?" she asked.

DUNCAN turned and stared at her. After attempting once or twice to frame a coherent sentence, he addressed her solemnly. "Do you not know," he inquired, "your Scottish history?"

"Well, yes," said Lucille. "You mean Dunbar and Flodden Field and ——"

"I do not," said Duncan. "Did you ever hear tell of Glencoe?"

"Oh," said Lucille. "Well, yes," she remembered, "there was the massacre. Oh!" She stopped and put a hand gently on Duncan's arm. "Oh—the Macdonalds were massacred, weren't they?"

"My ancestors," said Duncan. "The dirtiest deed in history. And the Campbells had a hand in it."

Lucille looked distressed. "But wasn't it the Macdonalds," she said, "who murdered ——"

"That," interrupted Duncan, "has nothing to do with what we're talking about. I knew, the moment I set eyes on that Bellamy, that there was fish about somewhere. I knew."

"But surely," protested Lucille gently, "all that's—well, it's over now."

"Over, is it?" inquired Duncan grimly. "Would you like to walk into Glencoe with a Campbell and see whether it's over?"

"But Philip," said Lucille, "is only half a Campbell."

"Well then," promised Duncan, "I'll spare the other half. I've got an idea."

Lucille waited. It was not, she hoped, a bloodthirsty idea.

"This Bellamy-Campbell," said Duncan. "He isn't going to marry you, but I don't think we'll have any trouble with him. We'll take his mind off you and get it fixed on something else. There's no reason why he shouldn't have a go at marrying that other girl."

"Other girl?" echoed Lucille.

"That one that's coming—your st mother's daughter."

"You mean Helen Forrester?"

"That's the one. He can have Hele

"But," protested Lucille, "Helen is gaged."

"That's all right," said Duncan. " were you."

Helen's rising on that morning was l joyous than Duncan's. She was, as mother had sensed, far from happy, but the sensation was new and strange, He failed to recognize it. She examined symptoms and came to the conclusion t she was, perhaps, suffering from a sense anticlimax after her engagement to Maur Hunter.

HELEN'S plan for accepting Maurice Hun had been made before her mother left L don. He was the kind of man she lik most—tall and well dressed, and a charmi escort. She decided that soon after mother's departure, she would tell Maur that she would marry him. She had told hi and Maurice had been very happy, but t odd feeling which had irritated Helen not go away.

She spent the first night of her enga ment tossing restlessly from one side of bed to the other, and rose the next morni with a severe headache. By eleven o'clo she had made up her mind that she need a brief change. She would ring her mother when she got home, tell her about her gagement and explain that she was comi down on a visit. It wo give her mother pleasure would be a change of and scene. More, and m important, it would get away from Maurice a she could examine at leisure the feeling of emp ness which came over when she thought of hi

The thing which in the subway is called congestion is highly esteemed in the night clubs as intimacy.

SIMEON STRUNSKY: No Mean City (E. P. DUTTON & Co.).

Her telephone call her mother over, s walked into her bedroom and looked i through her wardrobe. Helen held up or two suits critically and realized that th were more suited to a Hyde Park setti than to the open fields and country roa of Dummerton.

Well, she lived in town, and nobody co have two or three sets of clothes nowada If the Romes didn't like her Bond Str finish, that was too bad. Her mother h written that Lucille Rome wore very sim clothes. That meant nice sensible tweeds a beetle-crushers. Nobody was going to p suade Helen to clump about in half-in heels.

She put the things away and went early bed. She lay in the dark for some time, h mind on the Romescourt scene as she p tured it through her mother's letters. T Lucille seemed to lack organizing abili To have two fiancés on the scene at on showed a lack of direction. Her moth would, of course, side with the one who w getting the worse of it, but Helen inclined the tidiness of a boy-and-girl settlemen Duncan Macdonald, she thought sleepi was an interloper and he was obviously ma ing a great nuisance of himself. It would kind to detach him from the affair—and would be a great relief to Lucille. Anybo with a flair for organization could straight out the muddle in an instant.

Natalie's little house was to be ready f Helen's inspection on her arrival. It was st yellow outside, but it would be painted time for William's return.

Alexander was to arrive, with his sister a his nurse, on Thursday afternoon, and aft spending the early part of it sewing a planning, Natalie put her work aside to s if she could find the new little guests.

Baby Margaret was lying cooing softly a large perambulator outside the nurse which was on the ground floor because, La Rome explained, nobody could fall out. S gazed at Natalie with wide-eyed interest.

(Continued on Page 82)

Thought to give a hostess confidence...

"How right I was to choose 1847 Rogers Bros. silverware! It really 'makes' my table. I've never seen another silverplate so rich and beautiful —so much like solid silver in its truly exquisite workmanship."

1847 ROGERS BROS.

America's Finest Silverplate

ADORATION FIRST LOVE ETERNALLY YOURS REMEMBRANCE

A BEN REIG DESIGN BY OMAR KIAM

COPR. 1948, THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER COMPANY, MERIDEN, CONN.

A gracious tradition for over a hundred years

1847 Rogers Bros. silverplate has been the first choice of brides and hostesses for over a century now.

The four handsome modern patterns with the yearmark "1847" reflect 100 years of expert craftsmanship.

They have a high, deep ornament, a perfection of finish usually found only in solid silver. And what an unusual value today! The price has not gone up since 1942.

52-piece service for eight, $64.75. 76-piece service for twelve, $94.75. 100-piece service for eight, $117.50. (Prices include chests. No federal tax.)

TUNE IN: "The Silver Summer Review," Friday, 9:30 P.M., E.D.S.T., CBS.

em goes to a Porch Party

TEMPTING WAY TO MAKE LEFT-OVERS GO 'ROUND"

Martha Logan

t's say the day's warm . . . no time for hot okery . . . dabs of this and that in the re- gerator, too good to waste, but not enough everybody. Idea! Just open a can of Prem d prepare an abundance of cool, delectable odness like this. Prem, you know, adds more than one meat to the assortment. (Remember, Prem is different . . . it's the one with tender beef added.) It's both pork and beef happily blended Swift's special way, and ready-cooked for flavory eating, hot or cold. Try it and see how much better you like it.

Martha Logan's PREM PORCH-PARTY PLATE

—cool delights for every taste, made ample by Prem's delicious combination of pork and tender beef.

Arrange on chilled chop plate thinly sliced Prem with slices of leftover chicken or roast meat and macaroni or potato salad. Garnish with crisp greens, deviled eggs, olives. Serve with these Take-Your-Choice Snack Sauces.

Horseradish Sauce Whip ½ cup sweet or sour cream until stiff. Fold in ½ teaspoon salt, ree to four tablespoons grated horseradish, 1 teaspoon vinegar. Makes 1 cup.

Mustard Sauce Combine ½ cup mayonnaise and 1 tablespoon prepared mustard. Capers coarsely chopped cucumber pickles may be added. Makes ½ cup.

Ruby Sauce Using a fork, break 1 cup of currant or other tart red jelly into small pieces t do not beat. Add 1½ tablespoons coarsely grated orange rind. Chill at least an our. Makes 1 cup. All three add tempting relish to THAT DELICIOUS COMBINATION

F PORK AND TENDER BEEF . . .

Swift's Prem

(Continued from Page 80)

"How do you do, Margaret?" said Natalie softly. "One of these days you're going to look exactly like your second cousin Lucille—aren't you glad?"

Margaret appeared to be thinking this over, but her Nannie stepped outside and agreed wholeheartedly.

"The image," she said. "The living image." She looked at Natalie closely, her eyes expressing approval of the captain's new wife.

Natalie went to the walled garden. Lady Rome was working busily, but there was no sign of a small boy.

"I came to look for Alexander," she said.

"Alexander? Yes, he's here," shouted Lady Rome. "Don't you think he's a fine little —— Well, he seems to have gone away, but I thought he was looking remarkably well, and much taller too." Lady Rome added some daffodils to the large bunch in a basket on the ground beside her, and moved farther down the garden. "He always comes back if he wants to," she said. "He's a very sensible fellow."

"Doesn't he ever get lost?" inquired Natalie.

"Never," said Lady Rome. "He has a wonderful sense of direction. Children are always very sensible if one doesn't fuss. Alexander loves to be here with me and he's really very helpful, but if he gets bored and wants to go and see Jason, I really don't see why he shouldn't—after all, his great-grandfather is as much to him as I am. Oh, there he is! Alexander, come and meet Natalie."

Natalie turned. Alexander was advancing steadily and, reaching his great-grandmother, he opened his hands and disclosed four or five worms, all wriggling uneasily.

"Worms, eh?" said Lady Rome. "Interesting little creatures, aren't they? If I were you, I'd put them in that corner over there by the little heap of sticks, Alexander. . . . Do you see any likeness in him to anybody in particular, Natalie? We always think he has a look of William. . . . Alexander, your shoe's unlaced, you know—I'd do it up, if I were you, because it looks so untidy."

Alexander collapsed onto the ground, picked up one foot and examined the trailing lace with a speculative eye. Deciding that it was the kind of thing it didn't do to tamper with, he tucked the lace inside the shoe and got to his feet once more.

"I'll do it for you," offered Natalie.

"Oh, I shouldn't," advised Lady Rome. "If he really wanted one to do them up, he'd ask, I think. He'd probably be rather hurt if we appeared to think he'd scamped it, don't you feel?"

Unequal to expressing her feelings, Natalie suggested that it was time for tea and, Nannie appearing at the same time to claim Alexander, Lady Rome gathered up her flowers and accompanied Natalie to the house.

THE day of Helen's arrival came, and nothing remained to be done but the hanging of the green curtains in the hall. Sir Jason was insistent that he should superintend the work. It was arranged that he and Jeremy should go down after lunch and put up the curtains; Jeremy was then to go to Dummerton West to meet Helen. Lucille would drive Natalie to the house, leave her with Helen, and take Sir Jason home. It could be a quiet meeting between mother and daughter.

The afternoon was, unfortunately, cold and wet. Jeremy drove his grandfather a few yards with the hood of his car down, but Sir Jason was so incensed at this unnecessary exposure to the elements that Jeremy stopped and raised the little hood. The consequent cramping of the interior gave Sir Jason an uncomfortable feeling of claustrophobia, and the hanging of the curtains did not improve his temper.

The hanging process proved less simple than he had anticipated, and Jeremy watched with uneasiness his grandfather's increasing irritation. It was time for him to leave the house and meet Helen, but he waited almost until the bus was due in the hope that the task would be completed. At last, realizing that he was already late, he asked his grand father to rest for a while and await his r turn.

"Go on, go on, go on," urged Sir Jaso savagely. "Nobody wants to keep the gi waiting. Get off that stepladder and let m do the thing properly. And don't talk an twaddle to me about resting. Go on, go o go on and meet that bus."

Jeremy went out to his car, backed dow the narrow street, turned and headed in th direction of Dummerton West. He was lat he knew—but not very late. He hoped th girl wouldn't mind.

He saw, on bringing the car to an abru stop at the bus station and looking at th solitary occupant of the shelter, that the gi did mind. She minded very much.

"You're Helen, aren't you?" said Jeremy putting out a hand. "I'm frightfully sorr I'm late—you must have got cold sittin about."

Helen, who was very cold indeed, mad no answer and merely looked down at he suitcases. Jeremy took one in each hand an led the way toward the car, stopping moment later with an exclamation.

"What's the matter?" inquired Helen her voice a little cool.

"Car too small," said Jeremy. "I didn think about the suitcases."

"People do have luggage," said Hele calmly.

JEREMY glanced at her speculatively, sum ming up his impressions. There was one those dress magazines with thick, shin pages—this girl was straight out of it. He coat fitted like a skin—but it didn't loo warm enough. If the suitcases had to go i and the hood had to come down, she'd nee a mackintosh.

"I'm awfully sorry," he said. "The cases go in all right if I put the hood dow but ——"

"You can't do that," pointed out Helen "It's raining."

"Well—yes," Jeremy admitted uncom fortably. "I didn't bring a mac, but if yo could get yours out and put it on ——"

"I don't," Helen informed him, "posses a mackintosh."

"Gosh!" exclaimed Jeremy. "Doesn't rain in London?"

"If it does," said Helen, "I stay indoors— or I take a taxi."

Jeremy eyed her. No co-operation. Bu he had kept her waiting and she was entitle to a little comeback. "All right," he said "In they go and I'll put the hood down an I'll give you something—I think I've got sort of scarf shoved in that cubbyhole—yo can wrap that round your head and it' keep you dry."

Helen made no reply. Jeremy put th hood down and noticed that one small black shod foot was tapping an angry little tatto on the ground. He settled the suitcases a well as he could and put Helen into the ca

"Your mother's meeting you at th house," said Jeremy.

"I know—she wrote and said so," sai Helen.

"It looks rather nice," he went on. "' isn't quite finished, and the outside's got t be painted, but when that's done it'll be grand place."

He drove into Dummerton and drew u before the house, hoping that Natalie ha arrived.

"Here we are," he said.

Helen glanced round at the tiny cottage and the hideous yellow stretch of wal "We're where?" she asked.

"We've arrived," said Jeremy. "Don worry about the outside—it's ——"

Helen's brows came together in a frow and her eyes grew angry. "Do you mean t tell me," she asked, "that mother—that th is the —— It's the most hideous place I ev set eyes on."

"Well, I hope you won't tell your moth that," said Jeremy. "She's—she's sort keen on it, and if you say anything to spo her pleasure, you'll be a wet blanket."

It was an unfortunate simile. Helen, shal ing the drops from her hair, stepped out the car and, ignoring her companion, walke up the steps. Jeremy put out a hand and opped her.

"I'm sorry I said that," he said, "but Natalie's been to a lot of trouble to fix the lace up so's you'd like it."

"Really?" drawled Helen.

"Really," said Jeremy furiously. "And ou're damn well going to like it too."

"Do you mind," asked Helen, "if we continue this conversation out of the rain?"

Jeremy went up the steps, opened the door nd ushered her in. The hall was, at the first lance, empty. The stepladder was overurned and the green curtain was on the loor, enveloping a heaving, writhing form. ir Jason was invisible, but from below the oncealing folds of the green curtain rose a tream of language so vividly blue that eremy felt his ears scorching. He had only ne thought. His grandfather could not be ubjected to the humiliation of emerging rom his prison and facing, with curses on is lips, a young and beautiful stranger.

Without hesitation, Jeremy took Helen y the arm and, swinging her round, put her utside and shut the door. A moment later, he door opened once more and two suitcases were placed beside her. The door closed. On he doorstep, in the pouring rain, stood Helen and her luggage.

Helen's visit improved little as the first evening wore on. After a hot bath at Romescourt before dinner, she changed into her simplest dress, repaired the damage which the rain had done to her hair and, glancing at herself in her mirror, found that her habitual coolness and poise were returning.

But dinner was not a success. Jeremy's remarks were addressed chiefly to Natalie; Sir Jason and Lucille offered nothing to the conversation; and Lady Rome was therefore able to flow on without halt or check.

"Did you like the house, Helen, my dear?" she inquired kindly. "Your mother did it all very cleverly—I haven't been down to see it yet because Shearer hasn't been well enough to drive me, but Jeremy tells me it's beautiful. . . . Jason, did you hear that Lord Batch was at his mother's cottage? I wish I'd known he was coming down—I could have asked him about the fete."

"What fete?" demanded Sir Jason.

"There's only one fete, of course," said Lady Rome.

"You mean the Hunnytor Orphanage one?" asked Jeremy.

"Of course, my dear boy."

"But," said Jeremy, his brow knitted, "you can't be running that—I mean, the thing's practically now, isn't it?"

"It isn't now at all, Jeremy," said his grandmother. "It isn't until Saturday."

"Isn't it a little early in the year for a fete?" asked Natalie.

"Oh, dear me, it isn't an outdoor affair," said Lady Rome. "It's to get money for the orphanage. I must take you over it, Natalie, my dear. Helen will want to come, too—you'll be charmed, Helen, my dear, because the poor little things aren't at all like the orphans one used to read about, don't you know. They live in this charming old house and they wear delightful clothes. You'll be interested in their clothes—your mother tells me you love pretty things. You must try to make Lucille do a little better—sometimes she doesn't bother."

At this point, Duncan raised his head and directed at Helen a look of intense scorn which she interpreted—correctly—as an indication that she didn't look a patch on Lucille.

"What happens at the fete?" asked Natalie.

"We sell things, of course," said Lady Rome. "I'm in charge and I say to this and that person, 'Will you sell this or that?' and they fill their stalls and make a lot of money."

"Have you—are all the stalls ready?" inquired Natalie.

"Well, people know it's coming, don't you know," said Lady Rome, "and I give Shearer a list and he goes round and sees that everybody is getting ready. . . . Jason, you're doing the vegetables, aren't you?"

"No time," said Sir Jason. "Should've told me before."

"Nobody should need reminding," said Lady Rome, "about so important a thing. The only person who ever forgets about it is Mrs. Bellamy, because she's away so much, but you must drive down and call on her tomorrow, Natalie, my dear, and Helen would like to go with you, and you could ask her if she'll do the needlework stall. I always do books. And Helen and Jeremy can do the bric-a-brac."

"I beg your pardon?" said Helen.

"Bric-a-brac," explained Jeremy politely. "You remember, surely? It's the sort of thing they always used to put on the walnut whatnot. It's ——"

"As I'm only here for so short a time," said Helen firmly, addressing her hostess, "I do hope you'll forgive me."

"Of course I will, my dear," said Lady Rome. "You must get Jeremy to do most of it. There are some little shops in the village full of horrid little pieces of china—you must buy some of those and you charge more for them, don't you know, and that's how you make money."

"Certainly," said Jeremy. "I'm very good," he told Helen, "at arranging bric-a-brac to the best advantage."

"That's capital," said Lady Rome. "Helen, you must come and have your coffee and then we shall send you up to bed in case you caught a little chill this afternoon."

"I never," said Helen, following her hostess to the drawing room, "go to bed early, thank you."

"No, of course not," agreed Lady Rome. "You must have such long hours in that nice place your mother often tells me about. Would you like a nice hot drink brought up to you later?"

Helen made no reply. Jeremy brought her a cup of coffee and she took it and walked over to sit beside Lucille.

"When," she asked, "is your fiancé coming back? I do hope I can see him before I leave."

"My fiancé? Oh—next week," said Lucille gently. "I'd like you to meet him."

"When," pursued Helen, "are you going to be married?"

"Oh, quite soon, I think," said Lucille. "Philip's—my fiancé's mother is arranging everything."

"And when," Helen asked Duncan, "do you go back to Scotland?"

"He isn't sure," said Jeremy, from across the room. "He's a fellow who takes a long time to make up his mind about what he's going to do—aren't you, Canny?"

"I am," said Duncan, looking at Helen. "I hope," he added in his clearest tones, "that you didn't catch a chill this afternoon?"

Lady Rome regarded Helen anxiously. "You must go to bed now," she said, "and get nice and warm. Would you like a nice hot drink to ——"

"You know," broke in Natalie timidly, "Helen doesn't really ever go to bed early."

"Of course not," agreed Lady Rome. "Only tonight. Off you go, Helen, my dear—would you like Lucille to take you up, or can you find your way by yourself?"

"I," offered Jeremy, "would love to show you the way. Can I ——"

Helen, with a murmur to her host and hostess and a glance of cold dislike that embraced the remainder of the party, walked slowly to the door.

Natalie was too uncomfortable to sit long after Helen's departure. After fidgeting uneasily for some time, she rose and said good night. Jeremy accompanied his stepmother to the foot of the stairs.

"Your family," he observed, "doesn't seem to be very good at arriving. D'you remember your first night here?"

Those who are the happiest are those who do the most for others.

—BOOKER T. WASHINGTON: Up from Slavery (Doubleday & Company, Inc.).

to be as good as a Sauce

Best Foods or Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise as a base for sauce is "family style" for folks who know what it does for vegetables. This Real Mayonnaise contains no starchy filler. Even when thinned or heated, it's full-bodied and rich as only real mayonnaise can be.

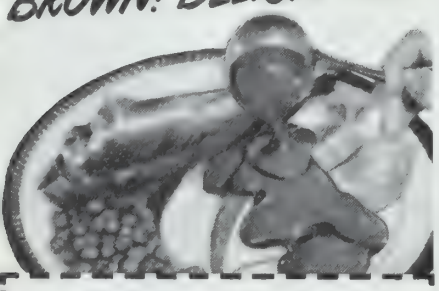
as it is in Salads



Men like the heartier-type salads, like meat, fish or vegetable. And do they appreciate the flavor of Best Foods or Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise! There's no sissy sweetness in this famous mayonnaise. It's all real mayonnaise, flavor-rich with only eggs, added egg yolks, "Fresh-Press" salad oil, mild vinegar, and spices.

make sure it's BEST FOODS OR HELLMANN'S Real Mayonnaise

AMERICA'S LARGEST-SELLING MAYONNAISE

There's ONLY ONE WAY to Make GRAVY This RICH! BROWN! DELICIOUS!

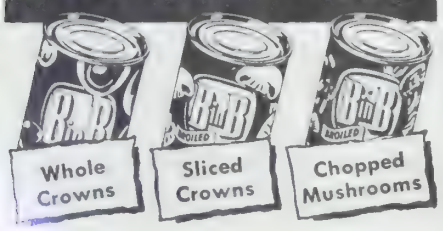
Good Cooks say USE
KITCHEN BOUQUET

Famous chefs know you can't get gravy so specially rich and delicious, such an appetizing deep brown color—without help. Nor can you depend on weak, watery, so-called "gravy helps." Kitchen Bouquet is what you need. It's full strength to give full flavor! Simply add Kitchen Bouquet to your gravy will be gloriously brown . . . rich . . . delicious!

ONLY BinB MUSHROOMS are Broiled in Butter to Give You that rich, new far-more-delicious BinB Flavor!



Economy Dish with the Party Touch
Give macaroni casserole special savor with delicious B in B Mushroom Crowns.

Delicious—Ready to Use!
No Waste—No Loss!

Choice hothouse mushrooms—tender, meaty—are picked when their flavor reaches perfection! Then they're rushed to our spotless plant, broiled in finest creamery butter and packed in their own luscious broth, to add appetite appeal to hundreds of dishes.

B in B MUSHROOMS
now packed in 3 different styles for every mushroom use!

Natalie smiled. "Yes, I do," she said. "But Helen isn't at all like—like this as a rule. I think she's tired and a little unsettled."

Jeremy, who thought that he could settle Miss Forrester very quickly, made no reply and patted Natalie's hand in a fatherly manner. "Pop along," he ordered. "Don't worry about—about anybody else. It does everybody good to have a nice long cry on the first night in any strange place. And this," he added, "is a very strange place."

Natalie went upstairs feeling grateful to him for his comfort. If only he and Helen had —— She put regrets aside, and knocking gently on her daughter's bedroom door, went inside. Helen was lying in bed reading and looking as Natalie loved her best—relaxed and childish and not at all cool or efficient.

"Hello, mother," she said. "Did the old girl send you up to bed too?"

"Well, no," said Natalie, sitting on the bed. "I—I just came." She waited a moment and then added, "They're all really very nice, Helen."

"I'm sure they are," said Helen coolly. "I'm glad—for your sake—that you can stand them. Personally, I think they're all more than slightly mad."

"Oh, no," protested Natalie. "At first——"

"Well, at first they appear so," said Helen. "I don't hold it against them—if I lived in this prehistoric atmosphere I'd go completely homicidal."

There was silence for a long time. If it had been possible to admit such a thing, Natalie would have said that she was feeling very angry with Helen.

"I think," she said slowly at last, "that perhaps living too long in London isn't a very good thing to do."

"It isn't," agreed Helen. "It makes you civilized, for one thing, and disinclined to go native. It gives you the ridiculous idea that a house should be compact and easy to run."

"I like Lady Rome," said Natalie, "very much indeed."

"I'm glad," said Helen.

"And Lucille too," proceeded Natalie.

"How long did it take you," asked Helen, "to discover that she was really alive? Personally, I think she's more than slightly Madame Tussaud's."

"And Jeremy ——"

"Yes, I know, mother—he looks after you. He's too, too sweet and you couldn't have found nicer in-laws, but you mustn't expect me to get as enthusiastic about them as you've done."

Natalie felt that this must do. If Helen went on talking in that way about Romescourt, she might begin to cry. "How is Maurice?" she asked after a time.

"He's all right—I gave you his love, didn't I?" said Helen.

"When you telephoned," went on Natalie slowly, "I didn't think you sounded very happy, somehow."

Helen laughed softly. "I know," she said. "I could hear you worrying—all about nothing, as usual. But you oughtn't to have worried—you know Maurice. He'll make a nice sensible husband and there's nothing in the world—nothing to worry about. What about this Duncan Macdonald?" she went on. "Why doesn't somebody throw him out?"

"He—I think he feels he has a sort of prior right," said Natalie. "Lucille wasn't definitely engaged to Philip before she met Duncan."

"How does Lucille introduce them?" asked Helen. "'This is my fiancé—and this is the first reserve?'"

"I like Duncan very much," said Natalie. "He's a nice boy."

"No, he isn't, mother," said Helen. "He must have a skin like a rhinoceros not to see how disgusting it is to stay on here in the middle of the actual wedding preparations. If he had any feelings, they'd get hurt, wouldn't they?"

"They are hurt," said Natalie, "but at times it doesn't matter what you're feeling if you're doing what you feel is right. If he feels that he's doing ——"

"My sweet," said Helen, "you're getting more than slightly mixed." She raised her voice to a roar. "Now off you go, my dear, and would you like a nice hot drink?"

"Hush—oh hush," implored Natalie. "If anybody passed ——"

"Let them pass," invited Helen, in her normal tones. "Good night, mother."

"God bless you, darling," said Natalie, stooping to kiss her. "If you want me in the night, just come and call me."

She went to her room and undressed slowly, feeling disappointed and ill-at-ease. Whatever the reason, Helen had not been at her best, and Natalie was surprised to find how much the thought hurt her. She realized how proudly she had looked forward to showing the Romes her lovely daughter. Only—there had been nothing to be proud of.

It was useless for Helen, who liked clear thinking, to hide from herself that her plans for organizing the household and getting its affairs on a more sound and businesslike basis, which had seemed feasible in London, now proved fantastic.

Having acknowledged this setback, she found more difficulty in swallowing the distasteful realization that she could disappear completely from Romescourt without her absence being noticed by anybody except her mother. Certainly Sir Jason would not know she was gone. Lady Rome recited a list of diversions to be had at Hunnytor and Dummerton, and turned her mind to other matters. Lucille, after a shy offer of a mount, which Helen refused, walked over the hills with Duncan. There was only Jeremy ——

Here Helen paused. He disliked her. And though she returned the dislike, she found it, nevertheless, a rude jolt after her smooth progress over young men's susceptibilities. He invited her to his flying club, to his farm and for drives round the countryside, and she gave polite refusals, conscious as she did so of his carefully concealed relief.

As far as the fete went, she had informed Jeremy that she had no intention of browsing in the china department of the Dummerton general stores searching for collectors' pieces, and he had begged her—a little too politely—to leave the matter entirely to him.

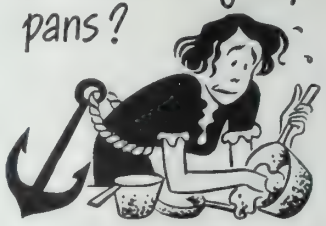
The day of the fete was the first hot day of the year. The weather, skipping an entire season, came out in summer panoply, and busy fete workers, hurrying in from the beautiful sunshine, found their spirits lowered by the chill and gloom of the castle hall's gloomy interior, which even the brightness of Lucille's masses of spring flowers could not dispel.

Helen was the last to leave Romescourt. She watched the large car, laden with passengers and parcels, leave for Hunnytor and turned to Jeremy, with whom she was to follow later.

"Why," she inquired, "don't they just take round those envelopes—heaps of charities do it—and then everybody can write down what he wants to give and save all this silly fuss?"

"I see your point," said Jeremy gravely. "But they've got awfully attached to their orphans round here and there's quite a personal touch about the whole thing. Perhaps all the stall holders feel that they've worked so hard beforehand that they've really earned all the money they drag out of people."

"I don't know," said Helen indifferently. "I haven't seen you doing much toward it, but I did tell you, didn't I, that I wasn't going to collect china for this whatever-it-is stall?"



"Oh yes, you told me," Jeremy assured her. "I don't know whether I got enough to make a good show, but I did my best. Just . . . bric-a-brac, as you might say. Ash trays and pincushions and penwipers and all that kind of thing."

"Where?" asked Helen.

"I put it all in a cupboard along here," said Jeremy. "We'll get it out and load it into the car."

Helen followed him to the cupboard and gazed at its contents with mixed feelings, in Anchored to grimy pans?

Don't slave over scorchy pans with a lazy, slipsy dishrag! Use a metal-fiber Brillo pad-with-soap!

Shine 'em easy with BRILLO

A Brillo pad-with-soap whisks off scorch! Shines crusty pots and pans in a jiffy! Use Brillo every day!
GREEN box—pads and cake soap
RED box—soap-filled pads

contains JEWELER'S POLISH

Shines aluminum fast!

KVP PIE TAPE

Sell CHILTON Christmas Cards
Make BIG MONEY
50 for $1 WITH NAME
SAMPLES FREE
21 Card PRIZE CHRISTMAS BOX
25 for $1 WITH NAME

Show friends . . . neighbors these sensational bargain Christmas Cards. Everyone wants . . . buys. Just show samples — take orders — no risk. Come in beautiful new designs—rich colors—fine papers

17 Smart Popular Assortments

Write for Samples

AMAZING LINE all fast sellers. 21-card "Prize" Christmas Cards, Religious, Fine Arts, Humorous, Everyday, Gift Wraps, retail $1.00. Get "Prize" Christmas assortment on approval. Write today!
CHILTON GREETINGS CO., Dept. K-6,
147 ESSEX STREET • BOSTON, MASS.

FOR EASIER, FASTER CANNING use a FOLEY FOOD MILL

TOMATOES—With its 5 [illegible] Master [illegible] Mill [illegible] 12 [illegible] skins seeds.
APPLES—[illegible] into [illegible] no coring, [illegible] greater yield—[illegible] sugar needed.
STRAINS OR MASHES in half time all fruits for jams, pumpkin, [illegible] Bakes potatoes, strains all fresh vegetables in quantities for family meals.
MASTER SIZE CAPACITY 5 QTS.
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
Sold on money-back guarantee at DEPT. HDWE. stores or send coupon.
$5.95
*Trade Mark Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

FOLEY MFG. CO. 3439 N. E. 5th St., Minneapolis 18, Minn.
Send [illegible] information Foley Food Mill.
[illegible] Master Size Foley Food Mill, postpaid.
NAME .....
[illegible] check or stamps) which anger was uppermost. Most of the things were almost obsolete and all were ugly, but it was astounding to see how much Jeremy had assembled.

"It's a wonderful collection," said Helen coolly. "Let's carry it out."

It made an imposing array, and Lady Rome paused before the stall and congratulated Helen warmly.

"How nice, how very nice," she said. "You must charge a good deal for them, my dear Helen—they're all quite dreadful, but nobody will mind about that. And this"—she handed across a large box in which lay a handsome Teddy bear—"is to be raffled; will you see to it all, Jeremy? Everybody must buy tickets. There's the label—Edward the Bear—isn't he charming? Now isn't that odd, Helen—you see that Cupid holding the little heart for all the postage stamps to fit inside? Your grandfather's sister, Jeremy, sent me one exactly like it once. I put it away in a cupboard."

"Quite right," said Jeremy. "Awful little thing. What d'you think we ought to charge for the pair of ash trays with the Crystal Palace on them?"

"How much would you say, Helen—about half a crown apiece?" asked Lady Rome. "You might get more. Old Mrs. Batch used to sell them—they didn't all have the Crystal Palace on them, of course; some of them had the Eiffel Tower and other places of that sort."

She moved away and Helen looked down at the ash trays, on one of which the Eiffel Tower was clearly depicted. A suspicion, dark and horrible, began to form in her mind. She turned to Jeremy, who was moving articles into more advantageous positions and stepping back to admire the effect from a distance.

"You—you didn't buy any of this," she said in a low, furious tone.

Jeremy glanced at her absently, picked up a china dog and moved it half an inch to the right. "H'm?" he asked.

"You're a liar," said Helen. "You didn't buy a thing. You—you merely ——"

"WHO," asked Jeremy in surprise, "said I bought them? I said I got them, that's all. Why on earth, my dear Helen, should I buy junk when people have been pressing it on us for years?"

"If somebody," choked Helen, "comes to buy something and finds it's something they—they gave ——"

"People forget, don't you find?" said Jeremy reassuringly.

"You—you ——" Helen tried to go on and choked.

Sales went well. Old Mrs. Codrington, pouncing with delight upon a hair tidy, said that she had not seen one like it since she had given one to Lady Rome many, many Christmases ago. Her daughter looked earnestly at two velvet apples stuffed with pins and Helen waited fearfully.

"Such pretty ones—I used to make them," said the prospective buyer. "I always used to embroider my initials on the bottom."

There was a dreadful little pause. Helen found herself unable to move, but Jeremy picked up an apple and held it out. Both stall holders saw the initials neatly worked upon the bottom. Helen put out a hand and snatched the exhibit.

"I'm—I'm so sorry," she said. "That's sold—both of them. I oughtn't to have left them out." She put them underneath the stall and looked at the two ladies. "These ash trays," she said, "are very nice."

OLD Mr. Ledgard, head of the orphanage's board of governors, gave a little more trouble. He liked the Burmese lacquer box—he'd brought several home with him twenty years ago from Burma, and given them all away. Useful things—more than one tray inside. Sometimes they had a name on them—his had been U Ba Pe. If he could have a look underneath this one, he could see.

"Too bad," said Jeremy, giving a swift look at the box. "It isn't a U What'sit one—this is a Maung Ba type—and it's sold. How long were you in the East?" he inquired without pause. "Long, sir?"

While Mr. Ledgard was telling him, Helen dealt with Mrs. Cram, who had seen the Toby jug before somewhere, and Miss Webb, who remembered working Lady Rome's initials into a tea cozy of exactly that pattern, many years ago. She sold Lord Batch a large black vase and was handing the money to Jeremy when she looked round and gave a cry of dismay.

"What's up?" asked Jeremy.

Helen pointed speechlessly. On a small stool behind the stall, Alexander was seated, and on his knee, face downward, lay a limp Edward the Bear. His stuffing lay in a heap at Alexander's feet.

Jeremy examined the damage calmly. "Total loss," he announced, adding in admiring tones: "Very thorough bit of work for a little chap that size. Wonder how he got the stitching undone?"

"What does that matter?" demanded Helen. "You'll have to give everybody their half crowns back again."

"Back again?" echoed Jeremy. "This is a charity—we're collecting half crowns, not giving them away."

"But they paid for a raffle," said Helen, "and there's nothing to raffle."

"The trouble with you," said Jeremy, "is that you fuss too much." He gave a short whistle and beckoned to Duncan. Duncan came across obediently and Jeremy addressed him in a low voice. "You've got the raffle numbers?"

Duncan nodded.

"What number did old Batch choose?" asked Jeremy. "Can you remember?"

"Yes, I can," said Duncan. "His mother's age—seventy-four—but I can check it; I've got the counterfoils."

"Well, check it," ordered Jeremy, "and then do me a favor, will you? Chuck all the numbers out of the hat and write a collection of seventy-fours. Got that?"

Duncan pondered for a few moments. "Sharp practice," he decided after a time.

The drawing of the raffle was a pretty affair and brought tears to the eyes of the more sentimental among the watchers. Old Mrs. Batch dipped into the deep vase in which the numbers had been placed. A dip into the vase, a piece of paper, and the

The Sky Walker

By Cosette Middleton

The wind sky-walked the elm tree over us,
And jeweled insects buzzed and ticked and whirred;
And chimney-low the moon grew nebulous,
Cocooned in morning mist, and gossamered.
A crow shook out his rumpled wings and spoke
Three somber notes; our sleepy moon had slid
Down from the chimney top, curled up in smoke,
And rolled along a roof's dark pyramid.
And where the wind leaf-shuffled we could see
A star wink out, but half the sky line glowed
With dawn, and half with moonset. Suddenly
A cricket soloed and a rooster crowed.
The arch of dark above our elm tree thinned
And we could see blue footprints of the wind.

Good Old Summertime NEWS!

Pink Lemonade* Fruited "Sippers" Ritz Crackers

* Give lemonade that "circus pink" with grenadine or maraschino cherry syrup. Skewer pineapple wedges and cherries with glass sippers — serve all-on-a-tray with Ritz Crackers. What a trailer . . . and new . . . too! But for real refreshment be sure the cracker is Ritz. For you can't know the full joy of an iced drink without Ritz — the one cracker that "doesn't wilt" in hot weather! A special baking process seals in its golden flavor—tempting crispness! Get Ritz. It makes any beverage . . . any food . . . in the good old summertime taste better!

NOTHING TASTES AS GOOD AS RITZ—BUT RITZ!

FOR THAT GLOW OF HEALTH

FLORIDA BRINGS YOU
THESE 3 GREAT FRUIT JUICES

JUST SEE HOW

these luscious Florida juices help keep you fit from head to foot — right through the year . . . every day!

1. Gold mines of VITAMIN C
2. Other VITAMINS and MINERALS
3. ENERGY from fruit sugars
4. Help fight COLDS and FATIGUE
5. Help maintain ALKALINE reserve
6. Arouse listless APPETITES
7. Stimulate DIGESTIVE juices
8. MILDLY LAXATIVE

and

SO ECONOMICAL

CONVENIENT

DELICIOUS!

FLORIDA

CANNED
CITRUS JUICES

winning number was read out. Number seventy-four—Lord Batch.

There were laughter and applause, together with good-natured shouts to the effect that mother and son were in league. Lord Batch, amid more laughter, received from Lady Rome's hands the large box in which lay Edward the Bear, face upward and looking remarkably stout. The winner regarded his prize with a whimsical expression, and at the same time Jeremy moved Alexander forward imperceptibly. Alexander, looking up at his property, held out arms to claim it. In a moment Lord Batch had stooped, amid great applause, and placed the box in the little boy's arms.

"Pretty, don't you think?" said Jeremy.

"It was dishonest and low-down," said Helen, "but I don't suppose that would worry you."

The drive home was pleasant. The fields and hedges looked fresh and green and the sun's rays shone on the house as they drew up before it. Jeremy opened the door for Helen and led her into the little sitting room.

"Sit down. You must be tired," he said in concern, "after standing all the afternoon in those shoes—they don't look very comfortable."

"All my shoes," said Helen, "are extremely comfortable."

"Well, they don't look it," said Jeremy. "I used to wonder how those girls used to hop on and off busses when I was in London."

"Where did you live, exactly?" asked Helen.

"I don't know—it all looked alike to me," said Jeremy. "Streets and shops and shops and streets. The whole place was pretty awful, I thought. It's a funny thing," he went on thoughtfully. "Looking at you, I'd have said you were an open-air type. My own impression is that you got on well in London—in your job, I mean—and got too absorbed to see how cramped you really were. I wouldn't be surprised if you were denying yourself your longing for country living and stifling your natural instinct for wide spaces and ——"

"Just because you can't live in London," said Helen, "is no reason ——"

"I know—live and let live," said Jeremy. "Well, I'll take you out to my farm tomorrow and you can apply your let-live theory there. But not in those shoes."

"I'll come in these shoes," stated Helen, "or not at all."

"Your show," said Jeremy indifferently. "You'll look silly picking your way through the cow muck, but I don't mind. I'd like to show you some real animals before you go back to town."

"The trouble with you," said Helen, losing her temper, "is that ——"

"The trouble with you," said Jeremy, "is that you're not in the least like your mother. Why you kept her cooped up in London all those years when she ought to have been breathing nice open air, I don't know."

HELEN'S face was white. "I didn't," she said slowly, "keep my mother anywhere. Any day, at any time, she could have gone wherever she pleased. You don't know the first thing about me or about my mother. If I hadn't worked like a horse to make her marry your father, she'd never have done it, and come down to this—this ——"

"Go on," invited Jeremy, his face now as white as hers.

Helen was already going on. "You don't like me," she said, "because nobody in this place likes anybody to run things in a sane, organized way."

"I don't like you," said Jeremy, "for the simple reason that you don't care a bit about your mother, and your mother's first-class. She'd just got nicely settled and happy here when you rang up to say you'd hitched yourself to some bounder or other and ——"

"I'm engaged," said Helen, her voice rising, "to a man my mother knows well and likes a lot. I'm ——"

"Then why," asked Jeremy, "did she cry?"

"I don't know," said Helen. "Because she cried when she married William and when she came down here and when—whenever anything happens. That's how she's made, that's all. She cries all the time."

"So would I, if I lived with you," said Jeremy. "You're a bossy little thing and I can't stand bossy women."

"I—am—not ——"

"You came down here," said Jeremy, "to pull us together. Well, we like ourselves the way we are. I'm tired of seeing you raise your eyebrows when my grandmother monopolizes the conversation. I'm tired of seeing you look down your nose at Lucille because she doesn't come down to dinner draped in an eighty-guinea gown. And I'm tired of ——"

"If you ——"

"I'm tired of you altogether," said Jeremy. "Your mother's ashamed of the bossy way you behave, and I don't blame her. When you go back to London you can boss that bounder of yours all you please, but we—here—don't like to be bossed. We only like ——"

He stopped. Helen had gone out of the room and banged the door behind her. She had gone. But it was a long way to the door and, before she reached it, she had heard a good deal. She had got, Jeremy considered, quite an earful.

THE weather on the following day settled into a perfect early-spring morning, and everyone showed a strong desire to be outside to enjoy it.

Lucille and Duncan were to go walking, and were on the point of starting off when Lady Rome passed them. By her side was Alexander.

"How nice, how nice," she exclaimed. "You're going off on this beautiful morning—that's quite right. You must take Alexander—he hasn't had a walk for some time."

Duncan appealed to Lucille. "Hasn't he got a nurse or something?" he asked. "We won't get more than a couple of hundred yards with him in tow."

"Alexander?" said Lucille, in surprise. "Oh no, he walks quite a long way sometimes—we can go up that nearest hill. We couldn't leave him behind."

"Spose not," agreed Duncan, in a resigned tone. "Well, come on, let's go."

The trio set off and soon afterward Jeremy brought his car round to the front of the house and went inside to fetch Helen. Earlier that morning, he had made what he considered generous apologies for his share of the last evening's argument, and the two had agreed, for Natalie's sake, to declare a truce till the visit's end. After a glance at the barometer, he decided to prolong his outing, and, telephoning to his housekeeper, asked her to prepare a light lunch.

Helen came out to the car in a warm dress and loose coat, hatless and wearing a brightly colored scarf at her throat. She was a sight to rival the freshness of the morning, but Jeremy's eyes went to her thin, unsuitable shoes.

"For heaven's sake," he entreated, "go and put something farmlike on your feet. Those shoes ——"

"I swear," said Helen seriously, "that they're the best I've got."

"Well, have it your own way," said Jeremy, "but by the end of the day you'll feel like the fellow who had to walk to wherever it was with peas in his boots."

"End of what day?" asked Helen. "We're coming home to lunch, aren't we?"

"No," said Jeremy. "I've rung up to say we'll have some food there. I've got a loaf and some butter in the car, and a couple of bottles of cider. Well, pop in and tie that scarf round your head. Then your hair won't blow all over my face. And don't kick the cider," he warned, "it's fragile. Now we're off."

They were soon rounding the first bend of the road. Coming toward the car they could see two figures which they recognized

(Continued on Page 88)

How few of his friends' houses would a man choose to be at, when he is sick!
SAMUEL JOHNSON.

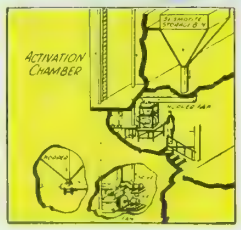
We've

ACTIVATED* Seismotite

to give you

FASTER-EASIER CLEANING

than any other cleanser you've ever used!



You'll Enjoy a New Quick Cleaning Action with NEW POSTWAR OLD DUTCH CLEANSER!

In repeated scientific tests, New Postwar Old Dutch Cleanser made with ACTIVATED Seismotite cleaned faster and easier than all other leading cleansers.

That's because ACTIVATED Seismotite . . . found only in Old Dutch . . . provides a new "Absorbing-Cleaning" action that does more work in less time. New Postwar Old Dutch Cleanser cuts grease on contact . . . thanks to a new super-efficient grease dissolver. And it produces a good rich active suds . . . sweeps away dirt, stains and impurities with a smooth GLIDING action that means less work, less rubbing for you.

Try snowy-white New Postwar Old Dutch Cleanser yourself in hard or soft water. See if it doesn't do all your household cleaning jobs faster and easier than any other cleanser you've ever used!

Kind to hands . . . economical, too, for just a touch of Old Dutch does so much.

*Here's the giant 2-story chamber Old Dutch constructed to ACTIVATE Seismotite. This exclusive manufacturing process (patent applied for) transforms Seismotite into a snow-white powder with a revolutionary cleaning action.

The First Major Cleanser Improvement Since the Introduction of Seismotite

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

CUDAHY Plus Product VALUE TESTED AND PROVED

© The Cudahy Packing Co., 1948

ENDS MIXING BOWL MESS!

DELRICH E-Z COLOR PAK MARGARINE

America's Finest

delicate country-sweet flavor and freshness SEALED IN!

Thousands Switching to Delrich E-Z Color Pak Margarine—It's EXCLUSIVE!

Let golden Delrich melt deliciously in your mouth! Taste its delicate, rich, country-sweet flavor—and sealed-in freshness insured by Delrich E-Z Color Pak Margarine. Yes, here's America's Finest Margarine for your table and cooking!

Ends Mixing Bowl Mess! Delrich quickly blends to a luscious golden yellow inside sealed bag. Every pound is enriched with 15,000 units of Vitamin A—packed with natural food energy. Try it today!

● Delrich and E-Z Color Pak are the trademarks of The Cudahy Packing Co. for its margarine. Whether you ask for "Delrich" or "E-Z Color Pak"—they both mean America's Finest Margarine!

• THE CUDAHY PACKING CO. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS •

(Continued from Page 86)

as Duncan and Lucille. Jeremy drew up as he reached them.

"Hello," he said. "Thought you were bound in the opposite direction."

"We're just strolling," said Duncan. "Here and there. Sort of round and round."

"It's lovely, isn't it?" said Lucille to Helen. "We climbed a little, but it's almost too warm to climb. We let Alexander throw some stones and now we're going toward the wood."

Jeremy drove on, and Helen leaned back comfortably once more. Presently, however, she sat up and gave a little exclamation.

"Shoe pinching already?" asked Jeremy.

"Wait," said Helen. "Stop a minute." Jeremy drew up once more and she looked at him with a frown. "Alexander," she said.

Jeremy waited. "Well?" he inquired after a time. "What about Alexander? I'm not going to take him with us, if that's what you want."

"No," said Helen. "But—where was he? They'd forgotten him—you could see they were going along in a dream. They've lost him!"

Jeremy put his elbows on the steering wheel, rested his chin on his hands, stared into space with an expression of despair and then addressed his companion.

"Nobody," he said slowly and emphatically, "can lose Alexander. He isn't a losable quantity."

"But you can't just go on and—and ——"

"If you think," said Jeremy, starting the car once more, "that I came out this morning to tour the countryside looking for Alexander, then you're ——"

"But you've got to see where he is!" cried Helen.

"Why?" asked Jeremy reasonably. "Those two will get home eventually and they'll have to go back for him—that's all. You're not in London now, and nobody here picks up little boys that don't belong to them."

Helen, dissatisfied, but feeling strangely helpless against a hard undertone in Jeremy's voice, sat back and tried to forget her anxiety. In a moment, however, she sat bolt upright and pointed with a cry.

"Look!" she said.

Jeremy brought the car to so abrupt a halt that Helen bounced in her seat. "What now?"

"Alexander—up there—sitting on that hill," said Helen. "On the wet grass. Now," she said, "you'll have to go and get him."

"Are you sure you're entirely sane?" asked the exasperated Jeremy. "First you yell because you've lost Alexander. Then you yell because you've found Alexander. Why don't you mind your own business and let Alexander mind his?"

"You've got to drive him back."

Jeremy turned in his seat and looked at her. "I've what?" he asked.

"You've got to drive him back," said Helen, in her most decided tones. "I don't know what your family does, but I don't leave three-year-olds stuck up on lonely hillsides with nobody to look after them. If you won't take him back, then I will."

"Well, I," said Jeremy, "certainly won't." He leaned across and opened Helen's door. "Exit on your left."

Helen stared at him. "You mean—you—you'd let me ——" she stammered.

Jeremy leaned back in his seat. "Nothing," he said smoothly, "can happen to Alexander. We've all wandered at will ever since we could walk alone. If you want to take Alexander back, there's nothing to stop you—the door's wide open. But I, personally, am going on to my farm."

There was a pause, and Jeremy, looking at her face, saw that Helen's eyes, which had blazed a moment earlier, were soft and troubled and her lips looked tremulous.

"Look, Jeremy," she said, "you win. I mean, I know he's all right and it isn't necessary, and I'd go on and leave him, but—but if I do, it's no use; I simply won't enjoy the day. I'll keep thinking about him and ——"

"I tell you," said Jeremy, "that ——"

"I know—I promise I know," said Helen. "But don't you see, I'm used to seeing babies in perambulators and always in charge of somebody and —— Please," she pleaded, "let's take him back; it won't take a minute and then it'll be over and we can have a—a wonderful day."

(Continued on Page 90)

★ ★

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

SURPRISING bit of information from a student's autobiography: "If you are a girl it will show up in some way."

Most mothers are created equal to . . . most anything.

A. E. Housman wrote a beautiful poem about the routine of day-to-day existence, while an old colored man said it in four words: "Life is so daily."

Some women do not consider a husband civilized until he will eat out of a wife's hand.

The perfect guest is one who tells her hostess, "If I've left anything, burn it."

"Getting a man" when he is in his twenties is as easy as lassoing a giraffe—but in his thirties it's like ringing a duck on the wing.

Daughter, home from boarding school: "Why, mother, it really doesn't matter if we borrow and lend clothes; they all get worn just the same amount."

Marriage: An institution which makes it possible for a woman to accept the last piece of cake on the plate.

When she knew a secret it no longer was.

Given her first corporal punishment, a little girl looked at her mother and said, "I hope I never see you act that way again."

The lines "The long, long road with sunshine spread, Thick as country butter on country bread" would perhaps never have been written if James Whitcomb Riley had lived in times like these.

His father and I were somewhat perturbed over a book our son brought home from the library. The title was Convicting the Innocent.

Always assume to your child that he is going to like two things: his playmates and his food.

One wife will turn all ironing, even her own silk underthings, over to a laundress, but not her husband's handkerchiefs. She says an exquisitely ironed handkerchief in a man's pocket is a greater token of love than a flower in his lapel.

Each mother should deal with her young according to her nature; to expect otherwise is like asking a cow to scratch up food for her calf.

Sometimes parents are through disciplining without realizing it. It's like walking up a stairs in the dark and expecting a step that isn't there.

No man need worry too much about what's ahead of him if he has a good woman behind him.

Our children have always had strong opinions: they've always known their necks were clean when they weren't.

One young girl stopped going with a certain man when he broke a stick of gum in two, gave half to a child and kept the other half.

It seems that life without children would be a lot like eating food you didn't particularly enjoy: you might get filled up, but you wouldn't feel satisfied.

New!

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER Refrigerators

SEE THEM AND YOU'LL SAY room to spare
WITH SPARE ROOM
IN YOUR KITCHEN

REFRIGERATOR RECIPE

Fruit Parfait

¾ cup sugar
½ cup water
2 eggs, separated
⅓ cup maraschino cherries, chopped
¼ cup maraschino cherry juice
2 cups cream, whipped il sugar and water until it spins a thread 30° F.). Add slowly to beaten egg yolks. at until cooled. Stir in fruit and juice. Fold beaten egg whites and cream. Turn into re- gerator tray. When frozen, reset cold con- l; allow to mellow several hours. Yield: ervings. NOTE: Other fruits and juices y be substituted for the cherries.

or Refrigerator Recipe Book, write nternational Harvester Company
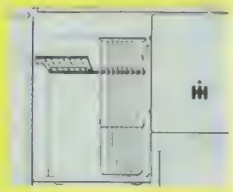
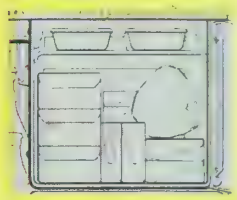
30 N. Michigan Avenue, Chicago 1



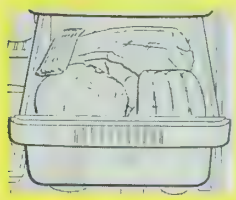
Stop sighing! Start smiling! Here's wonderful news for you! A great, new refrigerator by International Harvester now brings you the important extra storage space you need! This Super De Luxe actually has 16.3 square feet of shelf area that you can load with food. Yet it's so streamlined, it takes up no extra room. It's big . . . roomy . . . Super De Luxe in every way!

With all the special features shown at right, plus these: 2 Crispers store 3 pecks of food; 4 ice trays make 7.1 pounds of ice; "Tight-Wad" sealed unit for silent, low-cost operation—with 5-year warranty.



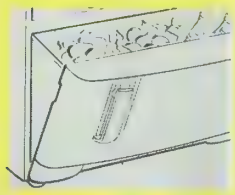
Imagine the convenience of storing up to 35 pounds of frozen food, in the freezer locker—the roomy IH "Stow-away"—right in your refrigerator!

See these International Harvester Refrigerators at your dealer's today!
If you don't know who your dealer is, write us for information.

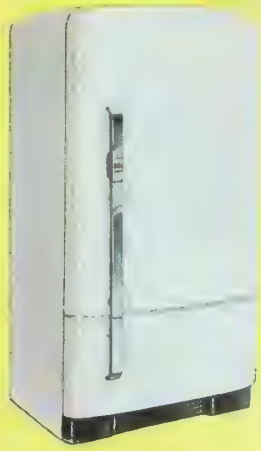


You'll Marvel At These Roomy IH Features

Two "Foldaway" Shelves for butter, cheese, leftovers



Frozen Food "Stowaway" holds 35 pounds



"Frigidrawer" stores 13½ lbs. of meat, poultry, fish

Even 12 quarts of milk won't crowd spacious bottle shelf

Super-Storage "Pantry-Bin" holds more than 1½ bushels

Snowy-White, Streamlined Beauty

Distinctive exterior design makes the IH Super De Luxe a proud possession in any home.

INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER Refrigeration

THE INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER SYSTEM OF FOOD PRESERVATION

LOOK FOR THE HALLMARK OF HARVESTER QUALITY

"Satina in my starch makes ironing 3 times easier!"

WRITES MRS. JAMES PIEKUNKA, SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA

MRS. PIEKUNKA, pictured above with her two little girls, Josephine and Charlotte writes:

"Satina is for me! With two girls I have a lot of ironing, and Satina in my starch makes it more than 3 times as easy to do!"

Satina is a wonderful ironing aid you add to boiled or unboiled starch. It dissolves easily in boiling water or the boiling starch solution.

Satina not only makes ironing loads easier, it makes clothes smell fresher, look newer, stay clean longer, too!

FREE FULL-SIZE PACKAGE

WE'RE SO SURE you'll love Satina, if we can just get you to try it once, that we're offering you a free full-size package. Enough for 4 big starchings. Just you try it and judge Satina for yourself.

SATINA, Dept. 46, Battle Creek, Michigan

Dear Sirs: Satina sounds good to me. Now I'd like a free full-size package to see how much easier it makes my starched ironing.

NAME _____

STREET _____

CITY _____ STATE _____

A PRODUCT OF GENERAL FOODS

Women say: "Put SATINA in your starch! It makes starched ironing 3 times easier."

(Continued from Page 88)

Jeremy studied her face wonderingly. "You know what?" he said at last. "I never noticed before—you're quite a pretty girl. When you stop snarling and get unwound."

"Please, Jeremy," said Helen, "will you take Alexander back?"

"I don't know," said Jeremy. "I don't think so—once I've done it, you'll get back that now-now-girls-no-talking look and I'll never see you looking like this again."

"I promise," said Helen, "to look like this all day."

"Not enough," said Jeremy. "Promise until you go back to London."

"All right—I promise," said Helen, and felt her face being drawn slowly but steadily forward.

"No!" she exclaimed.

"No what?" asked Jeremy. "I was only going to kiss you."

"I know," said Helen. "But my fiancé wouldn't like it."

"Bosh!" said Jeremy. "He won't know. Besides, you're my sister." He leaned forward and laid his lips lightly against hers.

"Alexander," said Helen.

"Well, yes," said Jeremy, releasing her and leaning back. "There's still Alexander. I'll sit here," he offered, "while you pop over and get him."

"You can honk on the horn," said Helen.

"So I can," said Jeremy, putting his finger on the button.

There was an instant response. Alexander looked about him at the sound of the horn and, espying Jeremy's car below, began a leisurely descent.

"Come on," called Jeremy, as he came into earshot. "I'm giving you a lift back. Round the other side . . . that's it, no, not on Helen's knee—your pants are damp. Now we're off."

THEY had not driven far when the figures of Lucille and Duncan were seen once more. Jeremy drove up beside them and halted.

"Hello," said Lucille gently.

"You left something," said Jeremy.

"Hello, Alexander," said Lucille.

Duncan, with no sign of welcome, watched Jeremy lift Alexander out and deposit him on the roadway. This done, Jeremy turned the car once more and drove swiftly away.

"Now," he said, "we're off at last." He increased speed and broke into a loud, melodious whistling. "Spring fever I've got—or something," he said. "Lovely day. Tell me about your fiancé."

"No," said Helen. "Let's talk about your farm."

"Well, that would be more interesting, certainly," said Jeremy. "Let me see. It's eleven miles away; it's called Ragged Edge because its land goes practically into the sea at one point and ends in a very ragged edge indeed. It has ten cows, four calves, two pigs, eighty acres and my furniture and effects."

"Why did you buy it?" asked Helen.

"Why? Oh, because I had to live somewhere," said Jeremy.

"Couldn't you have lived at Romescourt?" said Helen.

"I'll be there one day," pointed out Jeremy. "At the moment I'd rather be on my own—like my father and Natalie. . . . Now tell me about you. Don't you ever get tired of looking at those pasty city faces?"

"No," said Helen. "I like faces—I've got used to them. And I like noise and wireless and music with—with punch in it. I like things to go—I thought you put it a bit brutally yesterday, but then, look what happens when nobody does make things go the proper way."

"Well, what happens?" asked Jeremy.

"That's it—nothing does," said Helen. "Take Lucille. She's going to be married soon and her fiancé's miles away, and she's walking in the woods with a man she's obviously in love with and who's obviously in love with her—and nobody does anything."

"Well, what do you suggest?" asked Jeremy.

"Nothing," said Helen. "When I go back to London I'll think of heaps of good plans,

Old advice to the newly wed

Be smart—use Sani-Flush. Housekeeping friends and relatives judge a new bride's cleverness by the speed with which she gets around to using Sani-Flush. There's no scrubbing. Sani-Flush cleans toilet bowls the quick, easy, sanitary way. Disinfects. Stains and film go. Odorless freshness remains.

Safe in all toilet systems. Good in hard or soft water. At all grocers'. Two handy sizes.

The Hygienic Products Co., Canton 2, Ohio.

Sani-Flush

GET TWO CANS TODAY

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

LINED ENVELOPES SELL FAMOUS SUNSHINE CHRISTMAS CARDS NEW COLOR

Take orders easily. Exclusive Creations! Smart! Distinctive! 21 cards 50c. Sell $1. "CHRISTMAS SPRUCES" —16 LINED ENVELOPES, Glitter, Deluxe Suede, Carolers, Religious Wrap, Informals. 4 Imprint Deals, $1.25 to $2.50. KromeKote sound line 21 As't on approval. FREE SAMPLES imprint. No investment. Start today.

SUNSHINE ART STUDIOS, 115 Fulton, Dept. LE-7, New York 8,

WHY YOU NEED A 5% DDT Spray

Think of it—one spraying lasts for weeks. No bomb-type spray or other sprays contain ing less than 5% DDT can equal this for lasting effect. Flit Surface Spray with 5% DDT is so powerful a single application kills insects today — tomorrow — even next month.

FLIT

Surface Spray Kills

FLIES, MOSQUITOES, ANTS, BEDBUGS, MOTHS, ROACHES.

BUY LOW COST FLIT TODAY

...f down here—well, it doesn't seem to lend ...elf to planning of any kind."

"We haven't got your drive and decisive-...ss."

"When you throw things in people's ...h," said Helen, "you ought to be pre-...ed to justify your accusations. You said I ...sed everybody. Well, I say that you sit ... do nothing while your own sister wrecks ... life. I think that's worse than bossing."

"Nothing," stated Jeremy, "is worse than ...sing. And you've shifted your ground. ...en you came here you tried to shove ...ncan around. Now you're on his side."

"I didn't know that Lucille was in love ...h him," said Helen.

"Well, all you've got to do now is go to ...k shoving Philip."

"Why," inquired Helen, "don't you do ... shoving?"

"Because," said Jeremy, "I believe that ...ple manage their own affairs best by ...mselves. Lucille's grown up and she can't ...e me running round after her, straighten-... out all the tangles she gets into in life."

"So you won't do anything?" asked ...en.

"How quickly you grasp things."

"And your grandmother won't and your ...ndfather won't and of course mother ...n't and so nobody will," said Helen. "...ell, I don't understand it. How do peo-... get like that?"

"Something in the air, I suppose," said ...emy. "In London you breathe an air that ...kes you chase your own tail and tread on ...er people's. I began to choke after a ...e. I can breathe this air all my life. . . . ...ok," he went on, pointing. "You can see ...gged Edge. You see how ...e and sheltered it is on ... right side of the hill."

Helen saw green fields ...d red Devon soil stretch-... far away and, beyond, ... blue of the sea. A few ...tages nestled in a hol-...; the road they had just ... wound on and pointed to the roofs and ...vers of a little town a few miles away.

"Like it?" asked Jeremy.

Helen nodded, her eyes taking in the de-...s of the lovely scene.

"If you were staying longer," observed ...emy, "it would be interesting to scratch ...vn and see how far your City layer went. ...et if one got far enough, they'd find some ...d, honest mud."

"In a few hours," said Helen, "I've no ...ubt I shall be good honest mud all over."

Jeremy laughed and, after a moment, ...len joined in. Jeremy glanced at her with ... odd expression.

"That's a pleasant sound," he said. "You ...n't make it often enough. . . . Here we ...," he said, driving into the yard and ...nging the car to a stop.

HELEN looked round and saw some pleas-... sights. A friendly gray had his head out ...a stall and was regarding the newcomers ...h interest. Three dogs leaped round Jer-...y and small fat puppies hurried along to ...n in the welcome.

"Out you get," ordered Jeremy. "Early ...ch, I think, and miles and miles of in-...ction afterward. Come and meet the ... caretaker first."

Helen met the old man, two younger men, ... pleasant woman who acted as Jeremy's ...sekeeper and a bewildering number of ...mals. She sat down to a lunch of fried ...s and potatoes which were followed by ...h scones and Jeremy's proudly presented ...vonshire butter and cider. She climbed ...r stiles, was lifted over ditches and stood ...h her hair blowing wildly in a breeze ...ight from the sea. Her cheeks became ..., her eyes sparkled and her laughter ...ngled with Jeremy's throughout the ...iftly passing hours.

"If only," Jeremy grumbled, "you didn't ...k so wrong. Look"—he lifted a foot and ...icated his stout, workmanlike shoe—...at's the sort of thing my wife's going to ...ar. They're called Stormers, and they ...p everything out, and they make 'em for ...s, too—Lucille's got some. That's what you want, and a nice sensible country coat and a mackintosh—a real one that keeps out real rain. I'd like to see you," he ended, "in an outfit like that—you'd look pretty good."

"It would look wonderful in Bond Street," commented Helen.

He led her on a last tour of the farmyard and through a lane which led to the house. On a grassy bank, high on one side, Helen saw a tiny tortoise-shell kitten and gave an exclamation of delight.

"Oh, it's sweet," she cried. "I must pick him up."

"No—I will," said Jeremy. "You keep down here—it's slippery and those shoes'll turn you over. I'll ——"

Helen, however, was already up and reaching eagerly for the little animal. The kitten jumped aside and Helen, stepping forward too hastily, put her foot into a grass-covered opening and fell. She was up again in an instant but, feeling a sharp stab of pain in her ankle, sank back onto the grass with a little gasp. Jeremy, in two bounds, was beside her and stooping to investigate the damage. Helen, her face white and her lips twisted with pain, looked at him.

"It's my—it's my ankle," she said.

JEREMY stared at her for a moment, his brows together in a fierce frown. Then he put his arms under her and lifted her, carrying her to the car without a word and putting her into it gently.

"Can you stick it," he asked, "until I get you back to Romescourt?"

Helen nodded and Jeremy, running swiftly to the house, came back with her coat and scarf. He got in beside her and settled her into a position that would afford the greatest comfort to her swelling ankle.

"All right?" he asked.

Helen nodded, adding a moment later, "I'm sorry, Jeremy."

Jeremy's expression, half anger, half worry, did not change. "That's all right," he said. "I told you so."

Helen was installed in a pretty sitting room overlooking the gardens. She lay on a sofa, her foot comfortably bandaged, and the doctor pronounced that she must keep it up for two weeks, walk on it during the third week and go back to her normal occupations at the end of the fourth.

This being settled, the matter of a visit from her fiancé came up for discussion.

"If he isn't coming," said Jeremy, "you and I can become such friends. We were getting on so nicely before you fell into that hole. It's going to be wonderful now—we can grow closer and closer together and ——"

The door opened and a moment later Lady Rome's voice was booming through the room. Jeremy rose to his feet and made his grandmother comfortable in the chair he had vacated, seating himself in a cross-legged position at her feet.

"I think you're looking better, Helen, my dear," said Lady Rome. "You were very pale yesterday. How is the ankle?"

"It's feeling very nice, thank you," said Helen. "I'm sorry I'm being such a nuisance."

"You know very well," said Lady Rome, "that you're not being anything of the sort. When your young man comes along ——"

"No—please," broke in Helen. "My fiancé isn't coming. I told him that it wasn't worth coming for so—I mean, I shall be back in London quite soon."

"Yes, I see," said Lady Rome, "but young men don't always do what one tells them to."

"I'm sure," said Helen, "that he won't come."

"Well, that's a ——" began Lady Rome, and paused on the brink of saying that it was a great relief. "I wish," she went on, "that you could talk to Lucille and make her manage her young men better. Don't you see, Jeremy, how much better Helen is at it?"

"Indeed I do," said Jeremy earnestly. "I've been admiring her strength of mind—her capacity for organizing—her ——"

He who lives without committing any folly is not so wise as he thinks.

—LA ROCHEFOUCAULD.

Do you want a pleasant surprise? Then go to your nearest Speed Queen dealer and check Speed Queen prices. Have him show you (1) how a Speed Queen saves you money; (2) how it washes faster and cleaner; (3) why it lasts years longer; (4) why upkeep cost is virtually nothing; and (5) why over 1½ million Speed Queen users are so thoroughly satisfied. See your dealer this week, or write the factory for Folder "D".

BARLOW & SEELIG MFG. CO. • RIPON, WISCONSIN

Speed Queen

Specialists in Home Laundry Equipment Since 1908

W

VILSON NOW OFFERS

4 meats

in this convenient form

The Wilson label protects your table

R DELICIOUS MEATS in the popular MOR —first to supply the variety, meal-time con-ence and economy that homemakers have wished for.

R Beef, MOR Lamb, MOR Veal and MOR
(the original MOR) are dedicated to most skillful and resourceful meal-planners e world—the wives and mothers in our rican homes.

ETHING NEW FOR A CHANGE

BEEF
-beef product.

MOR VEAL
Wilson's tender, tender veal.

AMB quality

MOR PORK
The famous original Wilson's MOR.

D BY THE RECTOR KITCHENS

Keep these popular Wilson's meat products on your "QUICKIE SHELF"

"But you must talk to poor little Lucille," went on Lady Rome, "because now that Philip is coming back, she must ——"

"Who said —— I mean, when's he coming?" asked Jeremy.

"At the end of this week," said Lady Rome. "His mother has just been talking to me on the telephone. She actually went into details about the allowance which his aunt is going to make Philip."

"He's got the money, has he?" said Jeremy.

"I suppose so," said his grandmother. "That's what he went for, of course, but I think it was a very awkward time to choose, with Mr. Macdonald on our hands like this."

"Helen thinks," said Jeremy, "that I ought to throw Canny out."

"Mr. Macdonald? Oh, my dear Helen, why?" asked Lady Rome in distress. "The poor fellow couldn't be blamed for coming down here—if Jeremy won't post letters, then nobody can get them, can they? And it must have been quite a shock to the poor man to find somebody else down here pretending to be Lucille's fiancé too. The whole thing could have been quite a fuss, don't you know—only one can't allow that sort of thing. And we needn't fuss about Lucille. The sensible thing is to let her make up her mind once and for all."

"But she won't," said Helen, "make it up."

"No. It's odd, isn't it," said Lady Rome, "how some people can and some people can't? However, she must do one thing or the other now, because Mrs. Bellamy's giving a party for Lucille and Philip on the day he comes back and we're all to go—except Mr. Macdonald, of course—and the thing will be quite an engagement party, so Lucille must make up her mind which engagement is which. Don't you agree, Helen, my dear?"

Helen could only nod her head. Jeremy watched her with a bland expression and Helen wished it were possible to do something violent to wipe it off.

"Well," said Lady Rome, rising, "we shall all have to go to this party, I suppose. I told Lucille and Mr. Macdonald about it on my way to see you, and they both looked quite glum. I suppose Mr. Macdonald really feels quite worried about it."

THIS was something of an understatement. Duncan was at that moment seated in the sewing room, looking at Natalie with a desperate appeal in his eyes.

"She won't," he said. "It's no use, Mrs. Rome. I've done all I can, and she won't—she won't say anything, she won't do anything, she won't ——" He stopped, and Natalie stared at him in misery equal to his own.

"I know, Duncan," she said. "I feel so very sorry for you, but you mustn't blame her ——"

"Blame her?" Astonishment lifted Duncan out of his despondency. "Blame her! I don't blame her! I love her for being what she is. I love her because she's sweet and soft and—sort of tender. If she could get up and tell that Bellamy to go to hell, she'd be some other kind of girl, bossing people and pushing them round like—like ——"

He pulled himself up with a jerk, but it was impossible for Natalie to look at his crimson countenance without knowing that he had been about to say "like Helen."

"I'm afraid," said Natalie, "that Lucille won't do anything, and Jeremy doesn't feel ——"

"That it's his show. Well," agreed Duncan, "it isn't. It's Lucille's and mine."

"The only thing I can tell you—that will help you, I mean," said Natalie, "is this: Lucille's wedding isn't to take place until her father comes home, and I promise you that he won't let her marry Philip if she—if she doesn't love him."

"She doesn't," Duncan assured her. "She loves me. And that Bellamy can stage as many parties as he likes—he won't get rid of me. I'll do something."

"It'll be rather difficult," said Natalie.

"It'll be impossible," said Duncan. "But I'll do it."

On the day before Philip Bellamy's return Jeremy, looking from the fitful brightness o the day to the settled gloom on Duncan' countenance, suggested a day in the open They were to go in the big car, which was s roomy that, even if the weather forced th party to seek shelter, nobody could fee cooped up. Helen's ankle could be supporte with maximum comfort; and the run woul be beneficial, moreover, to the car's battery which needed charging. Finally, Lady Rom remembered that five people fewer to lunc would be a nice rest for cook.

"Four," said Jeremy.

"My dear Jeremy," said his grandmother "you've left out poor little Alexander."

"Darling granny," said Jeremy, "this i strictly à quatre and Alexander would b frightfully de trop."

Lady Rome, finding it impossible to be lieve that Alexander would not be welcom in any language, smiled kindly at what sh termed Jeremy's little jokes and went t order five packed lunches.

HELEN was glad to be going out. She wa tired of her sofa, and—most of all—tired o thinking. She had never thought very deeply. There had never been a time in he life when deep thought seemed called for Problems arose, were sifted, decisions were arrived at and the problems then vanished. I Helen had ever carried a banner, she felt sur that "Cool Efficiency" would have bee embroidered upon it. It was a proud stand ard, and she had endeavored to unfurl it a Romescourt—and she realized that it ha fluttered very briefly and now looked very limp and neglected.

It had been humiliating, but she had bee upheld by the thought of returning, soon to the places where efficiency still meant s much. But she could not disguise from her self the fact that the curious feeling—hal discomfort, half fear—still gripped her when ever she thought of returning to London. I came upon her unexpectedly. She would fee it in the middle of a conversation with he mother about the little house, or when Lad Rome was discussing the lateness of th spring blossom. Without warning it woul creep over her slowly and pass, leaving he palms damp and her knees curiously weak

Not until the first severe pain in her ankl left her and she found herself installed on th sofa was Helen able to examine her feelings She found that she was deeply relieved at th prospect of staying at Romescourt, and hap pier than she had been for many weeks.

"—— so you must take some warm wraps," Lady Rome was saying, "and I'v told Jeremy he must take plenty of cush ions."

It was a comfortable journey. Helen leaned back comfortably, feeling restful an secure. She was beginning to sense some thing about the companionship of Lucill and Jeremy that had a pleasant and unaccus tomed family flavor. She had not expecte to feel any kinship toward her mother's ne relations, but this morning she felt ver much one of them. Lucille was a sister, quie and charming, and Jeremy—Jeremy was peculiarly maddening brother.

They found a clearing and parked the car o a sunny patch near the stream. After lunch Duncan took Lucille for a walk and Alex ander followed slowly along the bank of th stream pulling a toy boat behind him.

Jeremy gave a sigh of contentment. "Nice isn't it?" he observed. "I mean, just yo and me. Ours," he pointed out, "is a nic sort of relationship—especially for me."

"I don't see how," said Helen.

"Well, I like being your brother, for on thing," said Jeremy. "And I like the feelin of having you all to myself. We can get muc more friendly than we could if your fianc were here—don't you agree?"

"No, I don't," said Helen. "I don't thin his not being here makes the slightest differ ence."

"That's an unloverlike statement," sai Jeremy, "but I suppose you mean that oughtn't to make any difference to my b havior. Well, it's extraordinary how differe one feels if a girl's fiancé isn't by. I can sa things to you—pleasant, harmless thing which I couldn't say if some fellow were looking on. I couldn't tell you how lovely you look now, for example; and what would whatever-his-name-is say, f'rinstance, if I took your hand—like this—and said that I thought that engagement ring looked awfully out of place? He'd think I was making love to you—and of course I am—but he wouldn't know how safe it was."

"What's safe about it?" inquired Helen.

"You," said Jeremy. "That's what I like about you. There are some girls I wouldn't like to—shall we say practice on. Girls like Lucille, for example—look at what happened when Duncan came along and refused to count poor old Philip in. She simply fell in love and landed herself in a hole. But you——" He paused.

"I?"

"You," said Jeremy. "Nothing like that could ever happen to you. You're so—so strong and so sure. You wouldn't get yourself into any holes, and if you did ——"

"Well?" said Helen.

"If you did," said Jeremy, "you'd talk the thing over to yourself quietly and—click!"—Jeremy snapped his fingers—"a decision, just like that. It's wonderful. That's the sort of girl to make love to. A girl with a strong head."

"Do you usually," asked Helen, "make love to girls when they're engaged?"

"Never," said Jeremy. "I'm just telling you how risky it is, in the ordinary way. Tell me," he invited, "about this fiancé of yours."

"I won't," said Helen.

"There isn't much to tell," said Jeremy. "I mean, I know most of it already. He's content with very little. He stays where you tell him to and he writes to you every day and you hardly write to him at all. He ——"

"How ——" began Helen.

"You forget—I clear the post box in the hall every night," said Jeremy.

"I'd like," said Helen, "to talk about something else."

"I can't help seeing things that are under my nose," said Jeremy. "I wish Lucille had a tenth of your poise."

"Mother says," said Helen, "that Duncan's going to do something."

"He's a nice chap, and I wish him luck," said Jeremy, "but I can't quite see what he can do."

"Wouldn't you try to do something," asked Helen, "if your—if the girl you loved got into a—a jam?"

"Me?" said Jeremy in surprise. "My gosh, no. In the first place, my girl wouldn't get herself into a jam, and if she did ——"

"If she did?" Helen asked. "What would you do?"

"Do? Nothing," said Jeremy. "Nothing at all."

There was a long silence. Helen played with her handkerchief and Jeremy watched her. After a while, she raised her head and met the familiar cool, baffling look in his eyes.

"Do you really mean," she said slowly, "that if ever I—if ever I got into a—a—a jam ——"

Jeremy's laugh—low, attractive, amused and mocking—reached her ears. "Darling Helen," he said, "the idea's absurd. We weren't talking about anybody who organized everything as wonderfully as you do. How could you ever get into a jam?"

There was no further conversation. Jeremy shut his eyes and appeared to be asleep and Helen, from her nest of cushions, watched him and wished that she could get behind his calm, almost bland front.

They had brought no tea with them. The time passed and soon Lucille and Duncan returned, their manner quiet and absent. All four, indeed, seemed to be deep in thought—even Jeremy appeared to be pondering some problem of his own. He tucked Helen into her place silently and started the engine.

"We'll go back the sea way," he said. "It's longer, but you'll get some new views."

He turned the car and drove slowly through the woodland track. As he approached the main road, there was a little cry of distress from Lucille and a yelp from Duncan.

Alexander was not in the car. After a moment's consideration, it was decided that he must still be in the wood.

"Well, it's your turn to go back," said Jeremy to Duncan. "I fetched him for you the other day—now it's your go."

"We don't have to go back," pointed out Duncan. "This is the same stream, isn't it?"

"What stream? Oh you mean the one he was following?" said Jeremy. "Well, yes, that's quite sound—if he keeps on he'll be bound to hit this spot."

He switched off the engine and the party settled down to await Alexander's coming. After some time Jeremy turned and looked at Helen.

"I can't make out," he said, "why you weren't yelping about Alexander today. You just sit there. It's interesting. Either you agree with what I said about letting him roam—which I'm sure you don't—or you've come to the conclusion that it isn't your business. And that doesn't sound like you, somehow. The conclusion I'm led to is that you just plumb forgot the poor little fellow. Did you?"

"Does it matter?" asked Helen.

"Yes, it matters," said Jeremy. "It matters a whole lot. Aren't you going to organize a search or something?"

"He's teasing you, Helen," said Lucille gently. "He's always teasing people."

"I was just wondering," said Duncan, "which way Alexander was heading when he went off with his boat. We might be sitting waiting at the wrong end of the wood."

"He came this way," said Lucille. "Don't you remember passing him near that fallen tree?"

"No," said Duncan, "I don't." He was not, indeed, in a mood to notice very much. His thoughts were gloomy and despairing, and it was with relief that he heard Jeremy's call to the approaching Alexander.

"Hey there! Here we are, Alexander. You're late, you know—scramble in and we'll all go home to tea."

Alexander scrambled in.

Lucille sat back in her corner and stared out the window, her cheeks pale. Duncan, after a glance at her, took one of her hands in his. It was clear that neither of them had any desire whatsoever to go home.

The day of the party dawned and Duncan had done nothing. After a night spent, for the

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

For Robert, Going Places

By Marjorie Lederer Lee

Where is Robert going
With his steady crawl,
Clear across the nursery,
Out into the hall?
It would take a year to Rio
If you went by knee and hand,
And there's no way to Trinidad
That's all by land. . . .
Oh, it couldn't be Caracas,
And it couldn't be Kildare,
And it wouldn't be to Mexico.
(Too many tourists there!)
But whatever destination,
And wherever Robert goes,
From his look of plan and purpose
It's a cinch he knows;
And who am I to question
In such an uppish way,
When after all it's doubtful
If anyone can say
Just where she's going,
Or where he's going,
Or where anybody's going
On this bright spring day!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Welch's Punch: Welch's Grape Juice half and half with ginger ale.

for PURE enjoyment

There's only one Welch's . . . for better fruit juices, jams, jellies and preserves . . . famous since 1869

COPYRIGHT 1948, THE WELCH GRAPE JUICE COMPANY, WESTFIELD, N. Y.

For that zippy flavor husbands love!

Add Colman's Mustard to your favorite salad dressing

Easy, quick way to add wonderful new flavor to prepared salad dressing

Blend 2 teaspoonfuls of Colman's (dry) Mustard with a little water. Let stand for 10 or 15 minutes to bring out full flavor. Then add it to an 8-oz. jar of your favorite prepared mayonnaise or French dressing. Try it tonight on a crisp green salad. Your husband will love it!

THE FAMOUS DRY MUSTARD USED BY FINE COOKS EVERYWHERE

most part, in pacing about his room, he faced the morning bleakly. Philip Bellamy was back; he would arrive this morning and claim Lucille, and Duncan could see no way whatsoever of preventing him.

He dressed quickly and left the house before any of the others were down. He walked fast and aimlessly, oblivious alike to the beauty of the scene and the light rain falling steadily on his face. He was trying to bring himself to admit that he might lose Lucille.

It was fantastic, but it was true. All that held them apart was the mere thread of Lucille's engagement to another man. Threads like that, thought Duncan miserably, were snapped every day. Girls got engaged to one fellow after another and found the thread breaking at a touch whenever they wanted it to.

Well, that was all right for other girls. Lucille was different—and he was glad that she was. But where did that bring him? Nowhere. He could go away and write letters to Lucille's father, telling him the truth and asking him to forbid Lucille's marriage. But it was a poor way for a man to win his bride.

The other way was to eliminate Philip Bellamy. And a century ago, thought Duncan bitterly, the thing would have been easy. He would have met him in a wood at dawn and shot daylight through him—or pushed a sword into him and out the other side. How magnificently, remembered Duncan, his ancestors would have managed this thing! Where, oh where, were the glories of the Macdonalds? Who could hear the cries of the kilted hordes as they swung into battle, the shouts of the victorious clan? The sound of the war pipes was stilled; the clan was scattered and the proud standards lowered.

But—but ——

"But, all the same," said Duncan Macdonald aloud, "it's funny—I could have sworn ——"

It was absurd, and he must pull himself together. But, dreams or no dreams, there it was again. He could hear the sound clearly. It was eerie—so eerie that Duncan felt his scalp pricking. He could hear the sound of bagpipes.

> To those who would give advice, the best advice that I know is: If you can't be kind, be quiet.
>
> —M. D'ALROY: More D'Alroy Diary (Hutchinson & Co., Ltd.).

WITHOUT further delay, Duncan set off down the hill. As he drew nearer to Hunnytor the sound of bagpipes became ever more distinct, and soon he saw that he was not suffering from hallucinations. Others besides himself were hurrying to get a sight of those who were shattering the peace of the countryside. Duncan went up a little street, came out into the central square of the town and stopped in amazement.

There were four pipers—gallant figures in full dress, kilts swinging and ribbons blowing gaily in the breeze. They stood at the four corners of the square and between them were a dozen or more kilted figures standing round a young man who wore a sports jacket and flannel trousers.

Duncan frowned in bewilderment. That face—he knew that fellow. By Jehoshaphat! He knew him, all right. He ——

His face clearing, he gave a yell that almost drowned the sound of the bagpipes, and advanced toward the group. The young man in the center, with a shout almost as loud as Duncan's, moved to meet him.

"In the name of all that's holy," said Duncan, wringing his hand, "what brought you here?"

The newcomer grinned. "I'm no stranger here," he said. "But what are you —— Oh! I remember," he went on, slapping Duncan resoundingly on the shoulder. "You've got a beautiful fiancée in these parts, haven't you?"

"I don't know," said Duncan. "I was standing on a hill and wishing the Macdonalds of old could show up and then—out of the blue—the pipes tuned up and I came down here to run into a Macdonald. Strange, isn't it? And a cousin, at that. What're you doing here, Alastair? Highland games or something?"

"Rugger," said his cousin. "We're playing a local team tomorrow."

"But why here, of all places?" asked Duncan in bewilderment.

"Because I used to be the games master of that prep school a mile out of here," said Alastair. "When I went away I promised I'd bring a team down and show 'em how rugger ought to be played. Come and meet 'em," he invited. "They're a good lot."

For answer, Duncan reached out and took his cousin's arm in a fierce and painful grip. "Look," he said, his gaze deep and intent. "I've got an idea."

"ALL right, all right," said Alastair, trying to wriggle free of the clamping fingers. "Let me go, will you, and then have as many ideas as you like."

"I've got an idea," repeated Duncan. "And you've got to help me."

"Help you? How?" inquired Alastair.

In a torrent of words, Duncan told him, and his cousin stared at him blankly.

"You're mad," he said briefly, as Duncan came to an end. "You're stark, staring mad."

"I'm not mad, and you've got to do it," said Duncan. "All I want is the—the team."

"Well, you can't have it," said Alastair. "Maybe the idea was good in fourteen sixty-six or thereabouts, but it's out of date. You can't ——"

Duncan looked at him with contempt. "You—you call yourself a Macdonald," he said bitterly.

"I do. But that doesn't mean," pointed out Alastair, "that I have to take a girl off some fellow I've never heard of and — — "

"But the fellow, you fool," cried Duncan desperately, "is a Campbell!"

"Is a what?"

"A Campbell! A Campbell!"

"That isn't what you called him before," said Alastair. "You said his name was — — "

"Bellamy," said Duncan. "But his mother was a Campbell, and his aunt is a Campbell. He's crawling with Campbells. Alastair, you've got to—you've just got to help me!"

Alastair eyed him. "You swear," he said, "that there'll be no police in it?"

"I swear," said Duncan. "Will you do it?"

"One thing more," said Alastair, backing away as Duncan attempted to grip his arm again. "You've got to get rid of that Campbell beforehand. He mustn't be there."

"Not be there!" echoed Duncan. "But I'm going to ——"

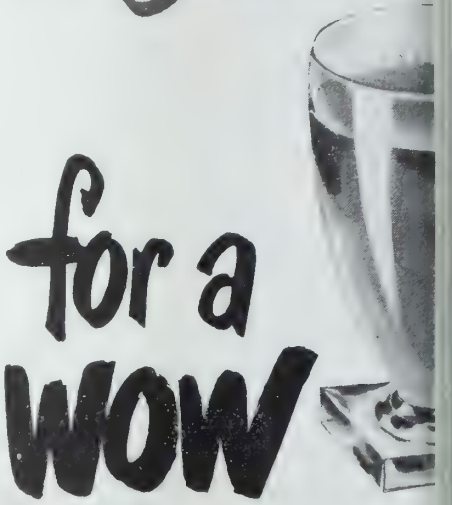
"That's what I mean," said his cousin. "You get him away."

"But he's half a Campbell," pleaded Duncan, "and ——"

"That's just it," said Alastair. "We'll all get excited and forget which half it is and then there'll be blood spilled."

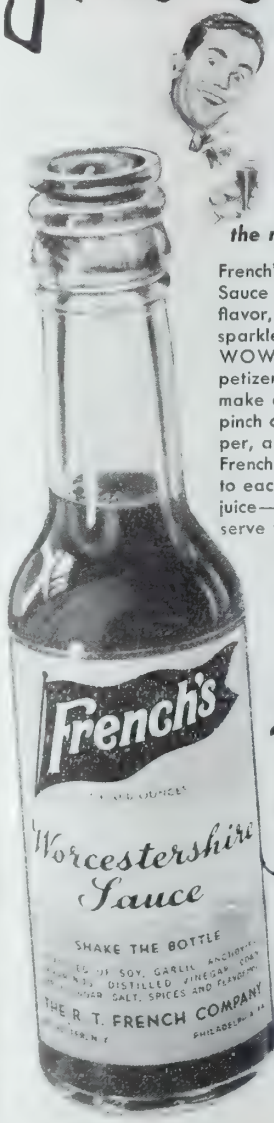
"All right," said Duncan, after a while. "I'll draw him off. Then—will you do it?"

Alastair's eye lit with the light of battle. "Do it?" he said. "You bet I'll do it."



Helen was unable to attend Mrs. Bellamy's little party, and she so disliked the little she had seen of Philip's mother that she was grateful to her sprained ankle for affording her an excuse to avoid further meetings. She felt drowsy and happy, and had a curious sensation of being not in a room in a large house but on a ship far away in mid-ocean. She had boarded Romescourt and had been carried almost imperceptibly out on calm, peaceful waters.

Her eyes closed. There was scarcely a sound to be heard—there were no rush and scurry of footsteps, no throb of busses, no roar and tremor of trains rumbling deep underground. There were no plans and there was no hurry.



Helen's thoughts came to Jeremy and paused. She was unable to think clearly about Jeremy. He could talk gently or brutally—he could be frank or teasing—but

(Continued on Page 96)

French's Worcestershire Sauce

for a WOW of a tomato juice cocktail

It's a WOW—this tomato juice cocktail the menfolks go for!

French's Worcestershire Sauce gives it rich new flavor, adds the zip and sparkle that make the WOW the perfect appetizer. Here's how to make a WOW: Add a pinch of salt and pepper, a teaspoonful of French's Worcestershire to each glass of tomato juice—mix well, and serve very cold.

No better Worcestershire at any price

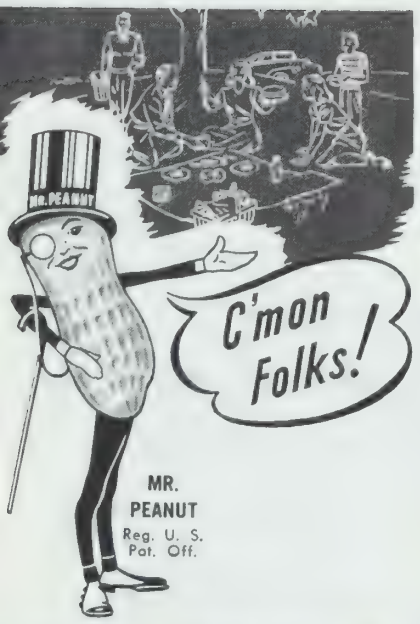
They'll all want "seconds"—

COLD CUTS AND POTATO SALAD WITH THAT FRENCH'S FLAVOR!

Millions prefer this smoother, creamier mustard

Liverwurst, boiled ham, cold sliced meat loaf, little pickled onions, radishes, potato salad made with French's—here's a meal that's easy, satisfying and delicious! Serve plenty of French's with the meat—it adds special zesty flavor!

French's Potato Salad: Combine 4 cups cold boiled potatoes, cubed; 1 small onion, chopped; 2 tablesp. chopped parsley, 1 cup chopped celery, 1 teasp. salt. Mix with dressing made by beating until light and fluffy; 4 tablesp. French's Mustard, 2 tablesp. evaporated milk or light cream, 2 tablesp. sugar, 2 tablesp. vinegar, ¼ teasp. salt. Garnish salad with thinly sliced radishes.



FREE! New Recipe Book "Mealtime Magic"

For handsome recipe booklet illustrated in full color, send coupon to The R. T. French Company, 1468 Mustard Street, Rochester 9, N. Y.

Name_____
(Please Print)

Address_____
(Please Print)

LARGEST SELLING PREPARED MUSTARD IN U. S. A. TODAY . . . Also made in Canada

Let's have a picnic!

In Half-Pound Cans

Sure! A Picnic! They're fun! Blue skies and green fields—a running stream, and, of course, lots of good things to eat.

For instance, you'll love crisp, delicious, flavor-fresh PLANTERS SALTED PEANUTS to nibble on while you're going—while you're there—and on your way home.

Many other delicious things can be made with PLANTERS PEANUTS—salads — cookies — candies. They're so good. Just the finest, big Virginia peanuts, salted and roasted as only PLANTERS know how.

PLANTERS are always oven-fresh, because they're vacuum-packed. You can get them everywhere. Just say "PLANTERS". They're Planterrific!

These PLANTERS products are also made in Toronto, and sold everywhere in Canada.

PLANTERS is the word for PEANUTS

(Continued from Page 94)

it was impossible to get behind his guard. He was a brother, a lover . . . an enemy. He kissed her and called her bossy. He took her face gently in his hands, looked at it tenderly and told her she had an expression like granite. He called her beautiful and jeered at her clothes. Helen was convinced, alternately, that he loved her—and detested her.

That was Jeremy, and it was difficult to think about him. It was better to stop thinking and to rest peacefully, to enjoy this feeling of calm relaxation. . . .

When she opened her eyes, Jeremy was sitting in a chair near by, his arms dangling over the sides and his eyes on her. Helen blinked, shook away sleep and looked at him in surprise.

"Is it over?" she asked.

"All over—while you slept," said Jeremy. "You looked sweet. I kissed you just once and you didn't stir. I wasn't sure whether that was because you hadn't been asleep the full hundred years or whether I was the wrong prince."

"What," asked Helen, "happened at the party?"

"Everything," said Jeremy. "Natalie'll be in to tell you about it, but she's busy downstairs at the moment, trying to explain to granny exactly what happened."

"Something happened?"

"I told you—everything," said Jeremy. "All in the space of twenty minutes. Then I drove the family home and ——"

"But Lucille was driving them," said Helen. "You went in your own car, didn't you?"

"I did, but it wasn't there to come back in," said Jeremy, "and Lucille wasn't there to drive them back."

"But—but where's Lucille?" asked Helen.

"Gone," said Jeremy.

There was silence. Helen stared at him with her mouth open, and Jeremy studied her admiringly.

"Most people," he said, "look a bit on the goopy side when they've got their mouths open like that, but you ——"

"Where," said Helen, "is Lucille?"

"How on earth do I know?" asked Jeremy in surprise. "She just went. I suppose I could have asked where, but I said to myself 'Now, if I know, I shall have to tell Philip, so it's far better for me not to know.'"

"Will you please," asked Helen, "go and call my mother?"

"What for?" inquired Jeremy.

"Because," said Helen, "if you sit there much longer throwing silly little bits of information at me, I shall go mad."

"Is that an order?" asked Jeremy.

"Yes."

"I thought so," said Jeremy. "It sounded just like one—sort of peremptory."

"Are you going?"

"No," said Jeremy.

HELEN opened her mouth to speak and closed it again. Fighting for self-control, she waited for a few minutes and then addressed him.

"Jeremy!"

"You sound," said Jeremy, "like doves cooing. Do that again."

"Jeremy—please."

"You mustn't ever," he said in warning tones, "speak to a man in that sort of voice. It's—it's very upsetting."

"Please—please, Jeremy," said Helen, "will you tell me what happened to Lucille?"

"I might," said Jeremy, "but ——"

"I'm sorry," said Helen, "that I spoke to you peremptorily just now."

"And you won't do it again?"

Helen's hands closed into two hard, tight fists, but her voice was gentle. "I'll try," she said.

"I love you," said Jeremy, "so of course I'll tell you anything you want to know. You see," he began, "the party was awfully dreary. I don't know whether you ever had any of Mrs. Bellamy's sherry, but grandfather took one sip and then looked round for a palm pot, but there wasn't one—so I took his glass and swapped it for my empty one. What with the party already being a frost, and people having to drink that stuff, things broke up pretty early. Then Philip got a telephone message telling him to go and collect a parcel from Hunnytor station—I think he thought it was a specially valuable kind of wedding present—so he pushed off, the poor fool."

"You mean . . . it wasn't a proper message?" Helen asked.

"It was what the melodramas term a decoy," said Jeremy. "And he seized the bait and then Mrs. Bellamy said wouldn't we look at the garden before we left. We'd hardly got there when we heard the most weird kind of yowling noises—like ten thousand cats all being tortured, and all mewing to the tune of The Road to the Isles."

"Bagpipes!" said Helen.

"Don't interrupt. Four of 'em, at the top of the slope," said Jeremy. "And a fine lot they looked too. The swing of kilts and the swirl of pipes or vice versa, coming through the trees at the top there, and behind, a horde of kilted savages, coming—I mean surging forward and yelling at the ——"

"But who," asked Helen, "were they?"

"The clan," said Jeremy. "I never met a girl with so little imagination. The Clan Macdonald; all clad in nothing but vests and kilts—and rugger boots. Down they came and in the middle of them their young chieftain."

"Duncan?"

"I don't suppose he's the—the The Macdonald, as you might say," said Jeremy, "but he was at the head of them today. It was an inspiring moment. Mrs. Bellamy gave a sort of leap into the air and then turned round and went streaking off to find grandfather. Out he came, obviously on the point of shouting 'What, sirs, is the meaning of this?' when he saw no less than four pairs of stout rugger boots backing into the wallflower bed. That was an inspiring sight, too, and when he recovered, he took Mrs. Bellamy indoors to steady her down."

"Where was mother?"

"Natalie? In the middle of the lawn—quite still, and just sort of gazing."

"Was she frightened?"

"Nobody," said Jeremy, "was at all frightened—except me. Lucille was near Natalie, and presently the clan made a move toward her."

"You mean that Lucille was ——"

"—— the aim, the object, the target, the sole purpose of the foray or raid," said Jeremy. "The Macdonalds had come for their bride."

"But where—where did Lucille go?"

"I don't know where," said Jeremy. "I only know how—in fine style. Duncan lifted Lucille into his arms and they started up the slope, all falling in behind Duncan, bagpipes and all."

"And he really carried Lucille off?" said Helen.

"Yes, he did. Natalie's trying to explain a little to granny—granny's rather puzzled about it all, because she thinks that the whole thing was a mistake and that they were really looking for some people called Campbell. It's rather muddling for her."

"Where will Lucille go?" asked Helen.

"SCOTLAND," said Jeremy. "They'll pick up a train sometime tonight for the north. She'll be all right."

"And will Philip," asked Helen, "will he ——"

"Howl? I suppose so," said Jeremy. "But we can say with truth that we didn't know the first thing about it. And there you've got," he summed up, "an example of love—the hard way."

"I don't see what was hard about it for Lucille," said Helen. "All she did was agree with everybody and wait for Duncan to straighten everything out. I'd call that the easy way."

"Perhaps you're right," agreed Jeremy. "But it would have been awkward, wouldn't it, if Lucille had picked anybody but Canny?"

"You mean that nobody else would have gone to . . . those lengths?" said Helen.

"I can't imagine it," said Jeremy. "Can you see me, for example, sallying forth with bagpipes and so on?"

"You mean you wouldn't do anything?" asked Helen.

"I wouldn't have to," said Jeremy. "I told you that I'm going to pick a girl who—having fallen hopelessly in love with me—will shake off all her previous fiancés without any help from me whatsoever."

Helen looked at him for a long time. "I believe," she said slowly at last, "I really believe you mean that."

(Continued on Page 98)

JENNIFER

"Gosh, mommy—I wouldn't be a girl if I was practical all the time!"

"Super-duper" for dinner or supper! This jelly omelet with VELVEETA goodness all through it

SAVE MONEY—Remember that ounce for ounce there is no other basic food that matches cheese for high quality, complete protein... for calcium, phosphorus, other nutrients from milk.

Try this easy KRAFT CLASSIC RECIPE

First of all get genuine Velveeta—Kraft's delicious, smooth-melting cheese food that's so rich in fine nutrients from milk. In the top of the double boiler melt ½ pound of Velveeta. Gradually add ¼ cup of milk, stirring until the mixture is smooth. In a bowl beat 4 egg yolks; add salt and pepper to taste, and slowly blend in the Velveeta mixture. Fold in 4 stiffly beaten egg whites. Pour into a 10" skillet in which you have melted 3 tablespoons butter or Parkay Margarine. Cook slowly until done. Place in slow (300°) oven a few moments to dry the top. Lightly spread half of omelet with tart jelly, fold, garnish with parsley. Serve at once.

• • •

Remember Velveeta adds to your omelet rich, mild cheddar cheese flavor and high quality, complete protein, plus other important milk nutrients. That's why Velveeta is such a smart idea for thrifty main dishes as well as snacks and sandwiches.

You can also use medium-mellow Kraft American or sharp "Old English" brand in this Kraft Classic recipe. Kraft pasteurized process cheeses, they melt as beautifully as Velveeta does!

The world's favorite cheeses are made or imported by

KRAFT

It's tantalizingly sharp! And "Old English" is a Kraft pasteurized process cheese—always cooks perfectly.

Main dishes! Snacks! Sandwiches! Party fare! You're ready for them if you have an assortment of cheese varieties on your "KRAFT SHELF."

It's mellow as old wine—this golden Chantelle with scarlet coat. Gay and delicious on your cheese tray.

Get the cream cheese that's guaranteed fresh! See the words "Philadelphia Brand" on every package you buy.

MacLaren's Imperial is the aristocrat of aged cheddars, famous for over 50 years in this country and Canada.

Copr. 1948 by Kraft Foods Company

for Finer Flavor...
HOW TASTE Hi Ho!

COMPARE!
FOR APPETIZING APPEAL

In appearance, Hi Ho Crackers invite comparison with any other cracker. Note the golden-brown color. . . the uniformity of each and every Hi Ho.

COMPARE!
FOR FINER FLAVOR

Taste Hi Ho . . . try them on your family and guests. No other cracker has the distinctive flavor that belongs only to Hi Ho!

COMPARE!
FOR FLAKINESS

Turn a Hi Ho cracker edgewise. Note the crisp flakiness, the delicate texture . . . sure sign of expert baking.

..it's Hi Ho for Finer Flavor!

FROM THE THOUSAND WINDOW BAKERIES OF Sunshine Biscuits, INC. © 1948

(Continued from Page 96)

Jeremy's gaze was expressionless. "You bet I do," he said.

Shortly after Lucille's spectacular departure, Helen faced the fact that she must return to London. Jeremy described himself as desolated, and helped her to pack. He told her that his life would henceforward be empty, and looked up her train times. Finally, he begged her to keep a place for him in her heart, and carried her suitcases down to his car.

Natalie's farewell was gentle and affectionate, Lady Rome's booming but equally sincere. Sir Jason shook her hand and muttered a cryptic sentence.

"Shouldn't be surprised," he said, "if we saw you again."

They were gone. The house, the gardens, the drive, the last gate were behind them. Jeremy turned into the road leading to Hunnytor station.

"When," he asked, "are you going to be married?"

"I'll write," said Helen, "and let you know."

"Do," said Jeremy. "It's a shame you can't stay here. Remember when you arrived, all in the wet, and we had to put this hood down and you drummed impatiently on the floor with your silly little shoes—remember?"

"Yes," said Helen, "I remember."

Jeremy drew the car to the side of the wooded road. He switched off the engine and turned to face her. "Keep on remembering," he said. "I'll remember too. We've had such a lot of fun—and we could have had a lot more, too, only you will insist on rushing back to this bounder of yours. I wonder," he went on reflectively, "how bounders make love? They've had a lot of practice, presumably, but there are fellows who can do quite as well with no practice whatsoever—or at any rate, very little. Take me, for example. If you'd been in love with me—as I am with you—I could have put in some really serious wooing and swept you off your feet. And saying good-by would have been—well, there would have been more scope. If you'd belonged to me, saying good-by—just for a short time—would have been a different business altogether. I'd have put one arm round you—like that—and put your hair carefully away because I don't like eating hair . . . and then I would have been able to put your head into the best possible position and kiss you . . . just as much . . . as I . . . wanted . . . to."

THERE was silence. Jeremy's lips were firmly on Helen's, and his arms were round her. Soon her hands crept onto his shoulders, and from there stole round his neck. He released her and looked for a moment deep into her eyes. Helen, dizzy, helpless, felt herself pressed gently back into her seat. Jeremy put out his hand and switched on the engine.

"Jeremy ——" she said.

"You see," said Jeremy, "how wonderful it would have been. If only you hadn't been a girl who knew her own mind."

"But, Jeremy," began Helen.

"Well, what?" said Jeremy gently.

Helen stared at him. The car moved forward slowly and gathered speed. Hunnytor station was not so far away.

"Look, Jeremy ——" said Helen again. "I ——" She stopped. There was nothing to say. Her throat felt tight and painful and her mouth dry.

"You were going to say?" prompted Jeremy, guiding the car through the outskirts of Hunnytor.

"I—no, nothing," said Helen.

The car stopped at the station and Jeremy lifted out the cases. The train was coming in; she was on the platform and Jeremy was opening a carriage door.

"In here," he said, and put her cases on the rack. He stepped down onto the platform and took her arm as she was getting into the carriage, holding her for a moment. "Take care of yourself," he said, "and don't forget."

"Forget what?" said Helen.

Jeremy bent and put his lips on hers. "Don't forget I love you," he said. "Good-by."

Natalie's home was ready. Every cup, every plate, every chair, table and rug was in place, ready for William. He was to come on the following day, and the news of his coming had spread through the village. Everybody was in the highest spirits.

But Jeremy, walking into the little house, found Natalie seated by the window in the beautiful drawing room, staring out at the garden and weeping bitterly. For a few moments Jeremy stared at her incredulously and then went over and stood beside her.

"My, my, my, my, my," he intoned. "This is what excitement does to some women. Tell me, Natalie," he went on. "Is this how William's going to find you?"

Natalie, unable to speak, shook her head. In a little while Jeremy understood that it was not William for whom she wept.

"If it isn't father," said Jeremy, "then it's Helen." He took out a clean handkerchief and wiped Natalie's tears. "Now tell me."

"There's—there's nothing to tell," said Natalie shakily. "It's just her—her letter."

Jeremy took the letter from his stepmother's hand and read quickly through it. "I don't see anything in it to worry about," he said. "It's just a—well, it's just an ordinary letter, isn't it?"

NATALIE shook her head. "No, it isn't," she said. "You ought to know that it isn't. Is that the letter a girl would write when she's—when she's happy and engaged to a man she l-loves and is going to m-marry?"

"It's not a bad letter," he said. "I mean, Helen wouldn't write a lyrical sort of letter telling you what she was thinking."

"Yes, she would," said Natalie. "That's just where everybody is wrong about Helen. They all think she's cold and domineering and—even you think she's domineering, don't you?"

"Yes, I do," said Jeremy.

"Well, she isn't," cried Natalie, in the fiercest tones Jeremy had ever heard her use. "She isn't—she isn't! I know Helen and I know she's—she's good and only a little domineering and ——"

"Look, darling," said Jeremy, taking her hands. "If you think she's not in love with that fellow, you needn't worry, because if Helen wants to chuck him, she'll chuck him with the greatest ease in the world."

"How do you know?" asked Natalie. "She's all alone, and men aren't so easy to shake off."

"There's only one thing," said Jeremy, "that'll stop Helen from shaking him off, and that's her pride. She planned every detail of her engagement—you told me she did. She worked out when she'd fall in love, how much she'd fall in love and when she'd tell him. She fixed it all, and she could unfix it with the same ease."

"But—but we've got to do something," protested Natalie.

"Nothing but wait," said Jeremy. "We've got to wait and see how she works it out. If she can bring herself to admit that she can be just as big a fool as everybody else, she'll call it off and—well, then she'll be happy."

"How do you know?" asked Natalie.

"I know," said Jeremy, "because I love her."

Natalie stared at him for a long time, quite unable to speak. At last she managed a few words. "You—you said you love her?"

"Yes," said Jeremy.

"But—but," faltered Natalie, "did you—did you tell her?"

"Yes," said Jeremy.

"But," said the bewildered Natalie, "if you love her, and if you'd told her to—to break off her engagement ——"

"She knows that I love her. If she wants to marry me, she knows what to do."

"But—but girls can't marry people unless people ask them to."

"That's true," said Jeremy. "But men can't ask girls to marry them when the girls are engaged to somebody else."

"Then you mean," said Natalie slowly, "that you're not going to do anything?"

"Nothing at all," said Jeremy.

"Oh, but Jeremy ——" Natalie put out a hand and Jeremy, taking it in his, spoke gently but firmly.

"Look, Natalie," he said, "you must leave this to me. I know you'd like me to go up there and bring Helen home here to marry me. But if I do that, then as long as I live I shall be a bossed man. And I can't live with a wife who wants to boss me. Helen," he ended, "has got to do her own climbing down."

There was nothing more to say. Jeremy's tone was so final that Natalie knew he had spoken after long and bitter thinking.

When he rose to go, she stopped him for a moment. "Jeremy," she said, "I don't know why I do, but I do think you're right. But please—will you do something?"

"Let's hear it," said Jeremy

"Your father," said Natalie, "will be here tomorrow. Couldn't you—please—go up to London; go up to meet your father—it wouldn't really be that, but Helen would think it was—and just call on her for—for just a short while? All I'm asking you to do is see her and tell me that she's all right."

Jeremy looked at her. To go to London to give his father a preliminary greeting was a natural and sensible object.

"Even if you don't want to," urged Natalie, "will you please do it, Jeremy, for me?"

Jeremy spoke slowly. "I'll look in for ten minutes," he said, "and I'll telephone you and tell you how she's looking. Will that be all right?"

"Thank you," said Natalie. "I'm—I'm very grateful."

To say "Everyone is talking about him" is a eulogy; but to say "Everyone is talking about her" is an elegy.

—ANON.

Jeremy made his way into the entrance hall of the block of flats and ran his eyes down the list of residents, stopping at Miss Forrester, No. 18. He stepped into the lift and the small, thin attendant looked at him inquiringly.

"Number eighteen," said Jeremy.

"Number eighteen's out," the boy said. "You'll 'ave to wait in the 'all. Just after five it is, she comes in, 'srule," Jeremy hesitated. He did not intend to sit on the uncomfortable-looking hall chair for half an hour. "Is your name Slippy?"

"That's what they all call me."

"Well, I was asked to give you a message," said Jeremy. "From Mrs. Rome—Miss Forrester's mother. She said she hoped you were getting on all right."

SLIPPY'S face was irradiated by a glow of gratitude. "She sent me a message—Mrs. Rome did?" he asked in delight. He looked at Jeremy keenly. "Then you—you must be a sort o' relation," he said.

"Well, my name's Rome, too," said Jeremy. "I'll be back in half an hour."

"'Ey—wait a minute, wait a minute," called Slippy. "Look—you should 'a' said you was a relation; I thought you was just one o' them fellows after Miss Forrester. Come and I'll take you up and you can wait in the flat."

"Well—thanks," said Jeremy, stepping into the lift once more.

"They don't come round now, most of them," went on Slippy confidentially. "Not since Miss Forrester got engaged to Mr. 'Unter. Did you ever know 'im?"

"No, I didn't," said Jeremy.

"Well, no, you wouldn't," said Slippy. "You live down there in the country, don't you? This way," he said, going to No. 18 and inserting a key in the door.

"Thanks," said Jeremy.

"I could 'a' told you all," said Slippy. "I saw it coming. When I brought 'em up in the lift the first night after she come back, I took a look at 'er and I says to myself, 'That girl's going to give that poor fellow 'is ——' "

"I think it's awfully dangerous," said Jeremy, "to leave the lift open like that. It ——"

"'—— his conjee,'" went on Slippy. "And I was right, but she 'ad more trouble than she looked for—'e used to stand out 'ere and argue, poor chap."

He stopped. Jeremy was staring at him with an expression on his face which Slippy interpreted as reproach.

"A guy can't 'elp it," he said, half apologetically. "I knew the other night that the 'ole thing 'ad done a bust. And the next day, she wasn't wearing her ring."

Jeremy was still staring, and Slippy began to feel that his attention was elsewhere.

"She won't be long," he said. "She ——"

"Look, Slippy," said Jeremy. "I know that two quid doesn't buy more than half a dozen cigarettes these days, but ——"

"That's all right," said Slippy, pocketing the notes. "I don't smoke. Thanks very much, chum."

"Don't," said Jeremy, "let her know I'm here, will you?"

IT was Slippy's turn to stare. "Coo!" he ejaculated. "You too?"

Jeremy walked into the flat and closed the door behind him. He stood in the middle of the small drawing room and looked about him. She wore no ring. There had been arguments, it had been difficult, and now —— The other night . . . and the next day, she wore no ring.

A disturbance behind him made him turn. The draft from the window had blown open the bedroom door and knocked over a small bedroom chair. After a moment's hesitation, Jeremy walked into the room and, stooping, picked up the chair and placed it in its proper position.

He moved into the drawing room once more, but, on the threshold, came to a dead stop as the realization of what he had just seen reached him. It was probably, he told himself, something that he had dreamed—something ——

He turned swiftly and re-entered the bedroom. One hand gripping the wooden rail of the bed, he stared about him at the articles lying neatly placed about the room. On the floor was a suitcase, open and half packed. Beside it lay a pair of shoes—Jeremy walked over and picked them up. Leather. Small, brown, neat. . . . Stormers. Laid on the bed was a coat—impossible to describe as anything but a sensible country coat. Beside the suitcase was a mackintosh of the type that would, without doubt, keep out real rain.

Jeremy went out quietly and closed the door. He walked across to the telephone and, picking up the receiver, put a call through to his stepmother. Soon there came the regular double buzz of Natalie's telephone, and at the same moment Jeremy heard the sound of a key being inserted in the door of the flat. His back was to the door and he stood without moving. He heard his stepmother's voice and spoke into the receiver.

"Is that you, Natalie? . . . This is Jeremy."

"Where are you?" asked Natalie.

"I'm in the flat," said Jeremy. "Yes, Helen's here. She's just come in."

"How does she look?"

"She looks," said Jeremy, without turning, "wonderful. She looks very happy—and beautiful—and she says she loves me."

"Oh, Jeremy ——" said Natalie.

"I'm bringing her home," said Jeremy. "We'll get married and come down to the farm and it'll quite eclipse William's homecoming."

"Oh, Jeremy ——" began Natalie once more.

Jeremy put his free hand behind him and, groping, found a coat sleeve. From this he got a grip on a slender arm and pulled Helen round gently to his side. He looked at her for a few moments and then addressed her mother once more.

"You sound awfully far away," he said. "And sort of shaky. Mrs. Rome, are you crying again?"

"O-only a little," said Natalie.

"I see. Well, d'you know what?"

"No. W-what?" asked his stepmother.

"Helen's crying, too," said Jeremy, and put down the receiver.

THE END

QUICK to fix - and HEARTY too!

KINGAN'S LUNCHEON MEAT K-P!

KINGAN'S K-P is all meat—a tasty blend of Kingan's Reliable pork and beef—deliciously seasoned, delicately spiced. No waste . . . and an extra bonus in flavor that adds pleasure to every meal.

Ready to serve, hot or cold, in dozens of ways. With a few cans of this fine meat on your pantry shelf, you are always ready for good eating at a moment's notice.

Backed by over 100 years of Reliable Meat Processing

KINGAN & CO., Indianapolis, Indiana

Higher C on the High Seas

There's nothing like a "prize" of French's aboard to prime a canary pirate with song! And you'll find that true of the little buccaneer in your own home. When you feed him a diet that keeps him healthy and happy, he'll thrill you with song. French's Bird Seed and Biscuit—favored for generations—is that kind of diet, a complete diet of twelve tested ingredients.

Don't depend on a few common seeds, and expect your pet to respond with his sweetest notes. Canary lovers everywhere have discovered that such a diet is inadequate; that's why 7 out of 10 feed French's Bird Seed and Biscuit. Make a ten-day test with French's—and listen!

His brightest notes are in the biscuit!

This plus—French's Bird Biscuit—that comes in every package of French's Bird Seed is the secret of many a canary's high trills. Fed with the Seed it makes a diet that's complete.

French's

BIRD SEED and BISCUIT

THE LARGEST-SELLING BIRD SEED IN AMERICA

HOMEMAKER SERVICE

(Continued from Page 23)

Homemakers are accustomed to grateful families. Each of the nine homemakers on the staff services an average of fifteen families a year. These are for the most part those in which the mother's illness or absence would make it necessary to place the children outside their own homes. Many families are saved from temporary or permanent disintegration through this simple, practical plan.

The Homemaker Service in Hartford traces its official beginnings to the Community Chest's Advisory Committee. From the Hartford Foundation for Public Giving, the committee received $1800, just enough to make plans. When the grant ran out, the Community Chest stepped in with financial aid. The effect of the war upon the labor market made early days difficult, but by January, 1946, the Family Service Society was able to put the service on a permanent basis. As supervisor for the new department it engaged Miss Bertha Vandries, who had a background of twelve years in child placing and a master's degree in social work from Columbia University. She had learned from her day-to-day experience that the placing of children outside their own homes sometimes is seriously damaging to a child's personality. She was anxious to work out the new system of keeping the child at home, with "mother substitutes."

"The most difficult part of our service is securing the right sort of women to be homemakers," Miss Vandries points out. Working with an advisory committee of five women from the agency's board, she has developed very definite standards for the candidates for training. "I interview many women who are expert cooks and scrupulously clean housekeepers. But if a woman doesn't understand the empty feeling a child has when his mother is away, or how to settle the inevitable childish squabbles, she won't make good. You must have a sincere and abiding interest in children to succeed in this work."

Homemakers generally start out with the practical knowledge acquired from rearing their own families. This is supplemented by monthly training meetings. These women, often widows freed of the responsibility of their grown-up families, are by no means "textbook" mothers. Still, the agency goes on the theory that there is always room to learn something else. From time to time it gives practical lessons in the planning of nourishing but low-cost meals for children, how best to mend a small boy's pants, or select the most effective cleaning fluids and disinfectants. It also holds discussions on bed wetting, temper tantrums and similar manifestations, and gives suggestions for dealing with these problems.

In one Hartford home, a homemaker was called in to relieve a mother suffering from a nervous breakdown. Doctors believed she would improve if she had a good rest away from her family. The homemaker walked into a household very much down at the heel. It had been neglected for a long time because of the mother's illness. There were four children, the oldest of whom was twelve. They were undisciplined and untidy. The father, greatly discouraged over his wife's illness, was drinking heavily. Nobody had any interest in the appearance of the house.

The homemaker began by helping the children care for their own clothes. "I'll be glad to do your laundry for a short time," she told them. "But you mustn't throw your clothes on the floor. Pick them up and put them in the laundry basket." To the oldest boy, she explained, "There's no reason why you must wear the same shirt for a week, if you'll cooperate." She taught the ten-year-old girl to do simple mending. She assigned each child certain chores to be done before and after school. After she had been in the home a few days, she dropped the hint, "If the woodwork in the kitchen were painted, I'd be glad to wash and iron the curtains."

The suggestions caught on. The father painted the woodwork. New shades were purchased. Things started to improve. The children began doing better in school and took pride in their clean clothes. The father even visited the corner tavern less frequently and showed that he was sincerely anxious to keep his family together.

When the mother returned from the hospital, she found a spotless house. The children were beginning to respect order and discipline. Her husband was less anxious about his family's future. The homemaker had pointed the way to real family co-operation where each member bore a part of the load.

"Homemakers are not servants," Miss Vandries is quick to tell you. "Their service is far more comprehensive. When a mother is ill and the children are frightened and bewildered, both need something more personal than ministrations only to their physical needs. The homemaker must sense their feeling and respond to it. The agency prepares the way for her to enter a new home, and directs her throughout her stay there."

Beginners in Hartford receive a salary of $30 per week plus carfare, and are employed on a year-round basis. Subject to constant call, they are allowed $1 each week for telephones. They work a five-day, forty-hour week, with sick benefits, vacation and overtime pay. Yet they are not clock watchers and their common motivation is the love of children.

"Not all families can secure homemakers, of course. The selection is based primarily upon the necessities of the family situation and the unavailability of other arrangements," Miss Vandries explains. "The father's responsibility under the plan is heavy, for he must take over when the homemaker leaves—generally around five or six o'clock. So you can see a father must be sincerely anxious to keep his children at home for the homemaker plan to be successful."

On the arrival of the prince consort in England, Queen Victoria gave him a bouquet of flowers. The prince, noted for his charming little courtesies, took a penknife from his pocket, cut a hole in the lapel of his coat and inserted a flower in it. This was the first lapel buttonhole, and tailors were quick to adopt the idea for all suits. —BRUXER.

Families who can pay partial or full cost of the homemaker's wages do so. In 1947, $5235.89 was received from such payments and reimbursements from social agencies. The balance of the cost of the program, $10,446.81, was met by the Community Chest.

During 1947 in Hartford the service was used in 64 confinement cases, 53 illnesses or operations (of the mother), one accident, two mental cases, one during shock-therapy treatment, one death, where the homemaker stayed until permanent plans could be made.

Homemakers must pass physical examinations; X rays, blood and other tests are taken. Then each woman is accepted on trial to see whether or not she is temperamentally suited for the work.

A veteran homemaker can move into a strange kitchen and find her way about easily. Long experience has taught her that individual housewives have their idiosyncrasies in the matter of storing pots, pans and other utensils. But a homemaker somehow knows how to find the elusive paring knife or the indispensable Dutch oven. Yet they do not "overhaul" the household. Their job is to carry on without upsetting the routine of the family life more than absolutely necessary. They don't pamper the children to win their affection, nor do they introduce stern, new discipline. Their job is primarily to carry on "status quo."

Kindliness and ingenuity the homemaker must have. Maude Reeves, one of the Hartford staff, laughs when she recalls how she finally persuaded a stubborn two-year-old to eat the nourishing food she prepared for him. "Do you like the song, Open the Door, Richard?" she asked. The youngster nodded his head. So Mrs. Reeves sang, in her rich, contralto voice. Each time she sang, "Open the door," the rule was that the boy opened his mouth for food. It wasn't long before Mrs. Reeves had him eating three hearty meals a day and without benefit of music.

Homemakers share common interests and common experiences, but they are individualists. Dora von Essen, for example, is a sixty-seven-year-old grandmother, with four grown children, seven grandchildren. When her husband died she taught embroidery for a time, but found that her life lacked familiar activity. She applied for homemaker service and was accepted.

The first morning, it was snowing hard. "I had to shovel my way out of my house to report for work," she recalls. She found a distraught father with two small children. His wife had been rushed to the hospital several weeks before her confinement was expected. "Boy, am I glad to see you," the father said heartily. The work was hard, but Mrs. von Essen says, "It was worth it to see how happy that family was when the mother came home, strong again, with a pretty new baby."

Alice Weghorst, in her early forties, was formerly a dental nurse. For a time she sold dresses in a women's clothing store. "I didn't like it. I have always loved children and I felt lost when my own daughter grew up." The agency was reluctant to employ Mrs. Weghorst because of her youthful appearance. But today she is among the most effective of homemakers and enjoys her work. "I feel sorry for the women who have to go into shops and factories to earn a living," she says.

Hearty Camille Williams, who looks as if she had never known a sick day, tells you frankly, "I used to think I was in poor health. All my children were grown up and I didn't know it was just because I didn't have enough to do." She specializes in peach pie. "It's fun to see the faces of the children when I say, 'Guess I'll make a peach pie today.'"

"It's nice work," Mary Murphy points out, "because you are paid regularly and you don't have to find your own job. Even better is the fact that you work with the backing of a social agency." She adds, "I only wish that I were twenty years younger. But I hope I shall never be too old to help people who need it."

Homemaker Service is limited not only by funds available, but by two other factors: the supply of potential homemakers with the requisite character and personality, and limitations within the home itself. It can be successful only when there is a will to keep the family together.

Although the homemaker service is set up chiefly for "interim" care, it is occasionally used as a stopgap until a permanent plan can be made. For example, when Mrs. Y. was killed suddenly in an automobile accident, leaving four small children, the father went to pieces. He asked that his children be placed in an orphanage. Hoping to get him to see differently, the Family Service Agency sent a homemaker to the home. After a few weeks, the father was calm enough to discuss the problem reasonably.

One homemaker was recently asked by an interviewer, "Do you really like your work?" She held out a painfully written letter, on cheap paper, in pencil. "Please read this if you'd like to know," she told the reporter. The letter said, in part, "I thought the world was coming to an end for me and my family. Then you walked in and asked what the children liked to eat; what time the baby had his nap. The last thing I saw as they carried me out on the stretcher to go to the hospital was you, standing there in the kitchen, hanging up my daughter's clean dresses. I want you to know that anything we have is yours, any time you want it. We can never repay you."

There are many other examples like this one. It probably explains why homemakers are one of the most satisfied groups of workers you could find. They like their work because, fundamentally, they are just being good neighbors. THE END

HOTPOINT LEADS

More women cook with Hotpoint… Hotpoint brings you more improvements } Than Any Other Electric Range

COMPARE THE RECORD OF ALMOST 2,000,000 HOTPOINT-BUILT RANGES

● ● Yes, Hotpoint is way ahead in electric cooking—and has been for years!

● ● Hotpoint built its first electric range back in 1910. Since then, Hotpoint has built more electric ranges than any other manufacturer. And next month the 2,000,000th Hotpoint-built range will be produced in Hotpoint's Chicago factory!

● ● With this great record it's no wonder that Hotpoint brings you more advancements than any other make. It's what you'd expect from America's leader!

COMPARE HOTPOINT'S 11 GREAT IMPROVEMENTS!

● ● Look over the beautiful new Hotpoint ranges and compare them with any other make. Notice Hotpoint's marvelous new high-speed broiler—so fast it broils steaks for 12 in 10 minutes; Hotpoint's Sealed-Heat Oven; its fast starting Calrod units;* its raisable 4th surface unit; its new simplified Timer Clock and 6 other outstanding new features.

● ● You'll understand why Everybody's Pointing To Hotpoint. See your Hotpoint dealer today. His name is in the phone book.

Hotpoint Inc. (A General Electric Affiliate), Chicago

*Reg U S Pat Off

Copr 1948, Hotpoint Inc , Chicago, Ill

Everybody's Pointing To

Hotpoint Automatic Electric Ranges

Hotpoint's Famous Calrod* Units are so speedy and responsive they give you instant heat for cooking.

Hotpoint's Sealed-Heat Oven has unit sealed under oven floor. Oven bakes more evenly, cleans more easily, holds more food.

Hotpoint's Raisable 4th Surface Unit lifts up when needed. Gives ⅓ more top-of-range cooking area.

FRESH
CREAM DEODORANT
STOPS PERSPIRATION

P.S. Test FRESH yourself at our expense. See if FRESH isn't more effective, creamier, smoother than any deodorant you've ever tried. Only FRESH can use the patented combination of amazing ingredients which gives you this safe, smooth cream that doesn't dry out . . . that really stops perspiration better. Write to FRESH, Chrysler Building, New York, for a free jar.

POSIES FOR PAMELA

(Continued from Page 42)

ity and sweep of it smothered me. So ll I could do was try to breathe. And at her.

was something to stare at. She wore ht red fuzzy coat. Her head was bare. nd slowly melting flakes of snow starred ondness. In an age when girls swung hair about their shoulders, Pamela ed hers to a golden shine and knotted kly and neatly in the back.

as waiting for her voice to knock me When it came, it very nearly did. Soft, womanly, almost shy. Ah!

d like to order some funeral flowers," aid.

e words wafted around my head. neral flowers," I beamed. Then I drew outh serious and let the horror get into yes. "No one close to you, I hope," I ed.

uite close," she answered calmly.

'm so sorry," I murmured. An under- couldn't have said it with more unc- Only he wouldn't have been as sincere was.

e really looked at me. "You don't have to pieces," she remarked. "It's my e Horace. He turned eighty-six last ember seventeenth. He had a right to little puzzle carved itself between her dark brows.

Of course he did. Of course," I hurried. all have a right to die sometime."

decided to change the subject. "Lilies the usual thing," I said. "Or perhaps 'd like a floral . Carnations are lar. But for an e of yours ——" I sed. I was once e lost and smoth-

For an uncle of e," she prompted.

gasped and went nspired. "It must omething different, , expressive. It t be brilliant pur- and a touch of white—with gray and n interwoven——" I could see it. Small ers, old-fashioned, suitable for eighty-six -lived years.

amela frowned again. "I don't know," said. "I never did this sort of thing be- But mother has the flu. It can't cost e than six dollars. Can we get anything nt for six dollars?"

ou can get my shop, my heart screamed. can have every blasted orchid in it, yes, the gardenias, too, and that precious little t that Maxie and I have been nursing g for the past eighteen months. You can me and my two-year-old car, and my three suits, and the recording of the Messiah Fats Waller. And you can keep the six es, beautiful.

lips had more sense. "Oh, yes," I as- d her. I sounded quiet and unlike a ho for the first time since I'd seen her. see that you get something very nice."

watched her hands count out the six one- ar bills, glad that they were singles so I could watch longer. It would have nice if those red-tipped fingers counted the dimes of a piggy bank. That would e taken quite a time. Quite a time.

watched her pivot and move toward the r. I saw the white snow waiting to make background for her. I noticed, not very ually, that her legs tapered from a slim ndness down to a slimmer neatness. h her hand on the knob she swung tuptly to face me. I pulled my eyes kly upward. The prairie fire engulfed my eks.

You'll want to know where to send it," remarked.

Where to send it," I repeated dully. "Oh, . Yes, of course. Your Uncle Horace."

Her lips twitched. "Well, not my Uncle race, exactly," she said. "But just see they get to Henders' Funeral Home by tomorrow afternoon."

I pulled a pad toward me. I wrote the words down, the day. Then another thought hit me. "Your name?" I asked importunately. "What is your name?"

She looked surprised. "If it's not a charge ——" she began. Then she shrugged, apparently outwitted with the futility of me. "Pamela Crane," she revealed. "One-nineteen Lantern Street."

I didn't need to write that down. It pushed, like a sharp pencil with soft lead, firmly into my mind. I was so relieved I almost missed the way she pulled the door gracefully open, shut it quietly, stood for an instant in the doorway, then stepped briskly out as only long-legged girls can, into the storm.

I STOOD very still, the worn bills in my hand. After a while Maxie popped into the room.

"What's the matter with you, Squirt?" she asked. "You look all goose flesh. Been in a draft?"

Considering that Maxie is one of the few girls who underinch me to the measurement of three, that "Squirt" has never irritated me. Until that moment, I mean.

"There is nothing the matter with me," I replied with dignity. "And please don't call me Squirt."

Maxie smiled, that lopsided business that always seems to take the world in with her on a good joke. "Okay, Squirt," she agreed.

"Your hair's a mess," I said. "And why have I never seen Pamela Crane before?"

Maybe it was her instinctive gesture to her rumpled black hair that emptied her face of its grin. Because it was back again in a moment, as pert as her words.

"Aha, so that's it." She ticked off on her fingers. "One, Pam came to Anchor City when you were in the Battle of the Bulge. Two, you haven't seen her around because you've buried yourself under floral constructions ever since you got back. Three, she lives alone with her mother and her just-deceased Uncle Horace. Four, she's a tearing beauty who has all the boys on edge. And five, she's too tall for you."

I digested four and ignored five. I wondered. "How do you happen to know so much about her?"

Maxie smiled. This time I didn't like it. "Because for almost a year now Joe has done nothing but sigh and pant for her. It's like living with an asthmatic bear."

My heart took an elevator plunge. Joe was Maxie's brother. Joe was two years younger than I and a good eight inches taller. Joe was as dark and curlyheaded as Maxie, and much more serious about the eyes. Joe was the heart's delight of half the feminine population of Anchor City. And had been from the day before he put on long pants.

I went into the back room and robbed the till for little purple flowers and fine green ferns and soft white rosebuds. My fingers worked the way I like them to. But my mind was busy with a campaign.

I'd done it before. I could do it again, now, this time, when it really counted. I pulled out every word of wisdom my mother had given me, and stacked it against Joe's magnificent physique, his slow happy smile, the way he bent his head, down, down toward the ladies.

Maxie came out. "Migosh," she yelped. "There's twenty-two dollars and ninety-eight cents' worth of tribute in that masterpiece if there's one thin dime."

"So what?" I countered, looping and doubling intensely.

"So I put the six dollars in the cash register," she said quietly. And walked out.

After Maxie left that night I stayed behind. I didn't want her around for what I was Any power must be the enemy of mankind which enslaves the individual by terror and force, whether it arises under a Fascist or Communist flag. All that is valuable in human society depends upon the opportunity for development accorded to the individual.

—ANON.

If your hair looks like THIS

. . . when it should look like THIS

use HELENE CURTIS

Suave*

the Cosmetic for hair . . .

greaseless . . . not a hair oil

WHAT SUAVE IS . . .

The amazing discovery beauticians recommend to make hair wonderfully easy to arrange and keep in place . . . cloud-soft . . . romantically lustrous . . . alive with dancing highlights . . . control-able even after shampoo . . . safe from sun's drying action! For the whole family, men-folks, too. Rinses out in a twinkling.

WHAT SUAVE IS NOT . . .

NOT a greasy "slicker downer" . . . NOT a hair oil, lacquer or pomade . . . NOT an upholstery "smearer" . . . NOT a dirt collector . . . NOT smelly . . . NOT drying; no alcohol . . . NOT sticky . . .

*some pronounce it "swahv" . . . others say "swayv" . . . either way it means beautiful hair.

AT YOUR BEAUTY SHOP, DRUG STORE, DEPARTMENT STORE

Quick, easy glamour!

Top a luscious coconut cream pie with a fluff of meringue. Sprinkle with more Baker's Coconut, and toast to a golden crispness.

Everybody's happy— Baker's Coconut is back!

ATTENTION, coconut-lovers! (And aren't we all?) Sweet 'n luscious Baker's Coconut is here again!

Coconut delights are making the comeback of the year . . . in bakeries, in fine food shops, in home kitchens everywhere.

Oh, what you can make with wonderful Baker's Coconut! Meltingly delicious coconut cream pies. Velvet-soft, snow-capped cakes.

Crunchy-sweet cookies and macaroons. Simple puddings and fruit cups —almost any dessert—glamoured up so quickly and easily with a feathery drift of fresh, white Baker's Coconut.

Ask your grocer for a package or can of Baker's Coconut today!

Look! New recipe book full of grand new ways to use Baker's Coconut—only 10¢. Address Baker's Coconut, Dept. LHJ-1, Battle Creek, Mich.

Coconut Birthday Cake Frosting

2 egg whites, unbeaten
1½ cups sugar
⅓ cup water
2 teaspoons light corn syrup
1 teaspoon vanilla
1½ cups Baker's Coconut

Prepare according to frosting directions on your Baker's Coconut package (either style). Flavor or tint as desired. Spread between layers, on top and sides. Sprinkle with delicious, munchy-fresh Baker's Coconut.

BAKER'S COCONUT

Grocers have two kinds of Baker's Coconut—Baker's Southern Style (so good it seems like fresh-shredded, sweetened coconut) and Baker's Premium Shred (more moist and tender than ever before). Both delicious!

Products of General Foods going to do. It took me till midnight. But it was worth it.

The snow had stopped and a white hush was over the world. I drove slowly, down Main, over Atherton, and turned right into Lantern. One-nineteen was an old brown house, looking for all the world like a fat rusty hen squatting in a nest of cotton. The windows were all dark.

I passed the house, pulled up to the curb and turned the engine off. I got out like a thief in the night. The snow helped to muffle my tiptoed steps. The porch was a mile wide. I opened the storm door, holding my breath, and put the little package, newspaper wrapped against its cellophane, in what looked like the warmest corner. Then I went home and slept as if I'd been thirty-six hours in combat. I didn't even dream. The campaign had begun.

The package? A tiny nosegay, no bigger than a bracelet, of the smallest, most exquisite flowers I could manage. The card said, "If you lived in the age of your beauty, this nosegay would declare itself yours." I didn't sign it.

The first thing I thought of in the morning was Uncle Horace gets himself buried today. I looked anxiously out the window. It was a good day for it. Suddenly mild and very clear. His soul would have a straight open space with no heavy clouds, from here to heaven.

I put on my most somber suit, a dark tie and a solemn expression. I was very fond of Uncle Horace. He was close to Pamela. Maybe he'd even helped to bring her up. I was grateful to him for the job he'd done.

Maxie looked me over sharply. It's a way she has. I noticed it particularly.

"You look better today," she said at last. "More like you were pulling yourself to yourself, if you know what I mean. Yesterday everything about you was flying like parts of an explosion."

That's Maxie. Crazy. But you get what she means. I pretended not to.

"A man who has been forty-two months in service deserves some moments when he is not entirely integrated," I replied with great dignity.

"Holy potatoes," Maxie answered inelegantly. "You've been out of service since two weeks after V-J Day—which wasn't yesterday, brother."

"No. Not yesterday," I murmured. I slid off into yesterday, seeing the door open again, the sleekness of her hair ——

"Joe and I are going to pop corn tonight," Maxie interrupted my thoughts. "How's about bringing your records? Cozy evening. Open fire. No talk. Maybe doughnuts?"

I guess the silence must have run pretty thin, because she pinched my ear suddenly. It hurt. I did a double take on her words. "No, thank you," I said at last.

Maxie's red mouth slipped a notch. It was exactly the sort of evening she knew I liked best. But my mind was busy with a camellia, a blush-pink one, set in a ruching of stiff lace. I was already figuring the words to go with it. I managed to see Maxie's eyes pretty clearly though.

"I—I have made other plans for the evening, Maxie," I said. "Some other time, huh?"

"Some other time," she agreed. Then added, surprisingly, "And I hope you won't regret it."

THE camellia came out very well. Even my mother would have admitted that the card was courtly: "The glorious flush of your cheeks, cooled by the snow, warmed by your loveliness—that is this flower."

I locked up the store shortly after ten. There were lights downstairs in Pam's house. I drove on by.

Presently I found myself in front of Maxie's house. There was only one dim lamp, and the uneven warmth of firelight touched against the windows. Impulsively I stopped. I was always welcome at Maxie's and I had a couple of hours to kill.

Before I put my finger on the buzzer I could hear the closing foolishness of a Hoosier Hot Shot number. Maxie came to the door just as the record hooted to a stop.

"Well now, well now," she cried. "Minds changed every hour on the hour greased, lubricated, good as new."

She looked very well for a brunette F a little girl. She'd brushed her hair fooonc and her dress was sort of like the firelight. Subdued heat in a quietly crimson wa

I told her so. Habit of years.

Her cheeks seemed rosier with the compliment. Or maybe it was that she was leading me into the lamplight and it lit her up

I blinked a little in the dimness. Then I made out two pairs of shoulders bending over the records. One was tall and ver broad and masculine. Joe, of course. The other—oh, my beating heart—the othe was Pamela. Even before they swung around even before I saw anything but their backs I thought what a swell-looking pair they were. A fatal thought for a hopeful sh or.

"YOU know Pamela," Maxie introduced. "At least in a business way. She always gives you her funerals."

Pamela looked a little hurt.

Joe frowned. "That's no way to talk, Maxie," he reproved. "After Pamela just buried her Uncle Horace this very afternoon." Joe, I might say, is a gentle soul. Very different from his sister.

"Quite a job," Maxie said. Then she looked abashed. For her. "I'm sorry, I'm. My rivulet tongue, you know."

Pamela nodded gravely. She took two steps forward and stood looking at me. "The flowers were very beautiful," she said.

For one wild moment I thought she was on to me already, remembering my guilty nosegay. That would have spoiled everything.

"The loveliest ones of all," she went on in that way of hers. "Mother was terribly pleased."

"I'm glad you liked them," I said. "You made me see Uncle Horace so clearly. It was almost as if I'd known him. A shrunken little man, with snow-white hair and a word for every occasion."

Maxie and Joe hooted in unison. I only smiled. I swallowed.

"Round as a barrel," Joe explained. "Red as a coot. Voice like a foghorn."

I grinned with them. Then I went over to the records and looked for Maxie's Harold Bauer numbers. I was so conscious of Pamela standing by the fire that prickles ran up the back of my fresh haircut.

Before I could spike the records Joe came over and slapped on Night and Day. He turned around. I had to watch it. I had to see the way he walked slowly toward Pamela, his great long arms reaching out, and how she slid into them. They were something blown by the wind or the music. I did not like the way it made me feel. Joe did not have football player's feet. He could dance and so could she.

Maxie went out into the kitchen. I decided it was better not to torture myself. I went along too.

I leaned against the sink, watching her make coffee as I had half a hundred times before. "So that's what you meant by hoping I wouldn't regret not coming," I said at last.

Her head was bent over the plastic tablespoon. Her mouth moved as she counted. Her hair swooped down against her cheek and hid her expression. "More or less," she said. "More or less."

But I couldn't stay put. In a minute I wandered back into the living room. The record stopped. I put on the Harold Bauer. I sat down on the floor with my back propped against a chair. I watched the firelight reach out to glow Pamela, also on the floor, her long legs tucked neatly, her eyes dark and mysterious.

Maxie called, "Come get this tray, will you, Joe?"

It should have been me. I always helped Maxie at shindigs. But I was glad it wasn't.

When we were alone I said, "Pamela, tell me about yourself. All the things I ought to know."

She turned, a little surprised. "You ought to know? What do you mean?"

I laughed; I heard it, so I guess it sounded easy. I kept my voice low and persona

"Were you a shy sweet child? Do you like to walk in the rain? What do you think of Charles Boyer? And why haven't I seen you before?"

She smiled. "You're a very unusual person, Larry. Joe said you were. Maxie said you were. They've done a great deal of talking about you. Now I know they were right."

I didn't want to talk about myself. "Everybody's unusual, one way or another," I said. "Take Joe now ——"

Maybe it was my imagination, but I thought her face softened. "Joe," she echoed. I shivered.

Then they were back. The coffee was hot and fragrant, as Maxie's coffee always was. Pretty soon it was after midnight and Pamela was being tucked into the red fuzzy coat by Joe and the door was opening and Maxie was talking a mile a minute.

"Ah," she sighed deeply. "Blondes. Acquired by two men, while the dark woman left to watch the dying embers. Larry, you'd better stay and have a last cup of coffee. Joe will see Pam home."

"Thanks, no, Maxie," I said, as lightly as I could. Maxie and I had finished off so much coffee and so many fires. "But I have the car. I'll run Pamela over." I looked up at Joe. "Save your strength, fellow," I insisted. "No use your going out in this cold too."

Joe looked at Pam. She looked back. For a minute I felt like the ham between two slices of bread, or a splinter in a finger. She nodded.

"Don't bother, Joe," she said. "Larry will be going right past my house."

Joe closed the closet door. He looked grumpy. Like a bear, as Maxie had suggested. "Okay, okay," he mumbled.

Pamela put her hand on his sleeve. "And thank you, Joe," she said softly. "Thank you very much."

"For what?" Joe asked. But you could see him thaw.

I drove slowly, but you can make three blocks last just so long. Pamela didn't say much. She seemed dreamy. So I let the understanding silence pile up until we were before her door.

"I'll see you again, Pamela?" I asked. "Soon? Tomorrow? Saturday? Maybe Sunday too?"

I'd surprised her again. I loved the way the dreamy look snapped away and she became clearly conscious of me. "All or one?" she asked, laughing a little.

"All if possible. One at least."

She pushed a mittened hand against her hair. "But more than one, of course," she said quietly.

The snow melted for me, right that moment, as she slipped through the door and left her promise behind. I rode around in the light grown suddenly spring, until the fourth time around the block I saw her light go out.

Then I picked up the camellia tenderly, as if it were her hand, and put it in the same corner of the storm door.

I lay awake a long time. I wished with an old and quiet desperation that she hadn't had to look down to me when she said good night.

The rest of the winter went by like snow against the windows. We had a lot of fun. Dancing at different places around town. Evenings at Maxie's. Movies and even one concert. Despite my best efforts, it was always the four of us. Also, somehow Joe and Pamela seemed to stride ahead of Maxie and me. But I bided my time.

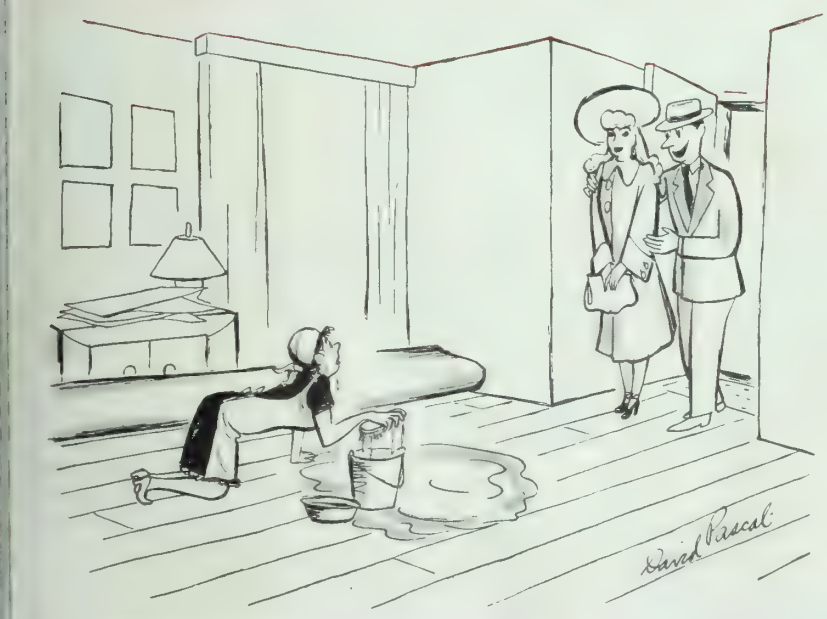
I knew a thing or two. I knew that those hours spent in the back room making Pamela's bouquets as varied, as amusing, as romantic as I could, would pay dividends. I knew that the words written on those small secret cards would speak well for me, when I revealed myself.

In the meantime, I waited and watched her with my posies on her shoulder, in her hair, at her wrist. It was as if I'd set a seal on her, a fragrant stamp, that proclaimed her mine.

She was very curious about the flowers, and delighted. I learned that in practically no time at all.

"It makes me feel so—so like somebody in a book," she said, the night Maxie asked her, with a touch of malice in her voice and a leer at me, where they came from. "Every morning when I wake up," Pamela explained in her soft voice, "I rush downstairs to see if there's another one. Mother brings them in and puts them beside my plate."

I could see her, golden hair loosened and flying, something rosy and satin trilling behind her, her slim feet in feathered slippers, the kind where the heels don't hitch. I avoided seeing her at the table, reading my careful notes to her mother. I'd met her mother. Fat and white like mashed potatoes, somehow. But maybe Pamela hid the notes.



Maxie's voice was creamy. "It's like something from another age. You know, Knighthood in Flower—and lace on the cuffs." She murmured reflectively, "Nobody ever sends me flowers. Whoever is he, do you suppose?"

I knew the needles were for me. I never felt their nicking. Because Pamela was looking up, the lovely lines of her face drawn taut, her eyes wise and sweet.

"I think I know," she murmured softly. "I think I know."

She was looking up, I said. Which meant she was focusing all that tenderness on friend Joe. Well, he had the grace to look red and foolish, although he didn't deny it. Maxie's eyes, when she looked at me, had the grace to go a little ashamed.

So I knew I had to get hot. No use letting all that gratitude take root in the wrong place. I set a time in my mind.

"Darling, remember I told you that Helen Simpson—the girl I was going to marry before I met you—was in town. . . ."

A refreshing newcomer...that shows again why more women use Swans Down than any other packaged cake flour in America!

Lemon Blossom Cake

to make a summer romance last

Delight him with its keen and sassy flavor — win him with its sweet and tender goodness!

It's a Swans Down Mix-Easy cake! No creaming, beating cut in half . . . longer-keeping, richer-tasting.

Guaranteed success—but don't expect that Swans Down richness with any other flour!

SWANS DOWN LEMON BLOSSOM CAKE

Mix Happy Day Cake as directed on the Swans Down package, adding ¾ cup chopped Baker's Shredded Coconut to the batter. Bake cake in two 9-inch layer pans as directed. Spread Pale Lemon Frosting (recipe below) between layers and on top and sides of cake. Sprinkle with 2 teaspoons grated lemon rind.

PALE LEMON FROSTING

2 egg whites, unbeaten
1½ cups sugar
3 tablespoons water
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
Yellow coloring

Combine egg whites, sugar, water, and lemon juice in top of double boiler. Beat with rotary egg beater or electric beater about 1 minute, or until thoroughly mixed. Cook over rapidly boiling water, beating constantly with rotary egg beater (or at high speed of electric mixer) 7 minutes, or until frosting will stand up in stiff peaks. (Stir frosting up from bottom and sides of pan occasionally with rubber scraper, spatula, or spoon.) Remove from boiling water. Add lemon rind and yellow coloring to give desired shade. Beat 1 minute, or until thick enough to spread.

Note: For a smoother frosting, wash down sides of pan with a fork wrapped in a damp cloth before and during cooking and beating, to prevent crystallization.

(All measurements are level)

Bake a better cake with Swans Down

A product of General Foods

To Ladies' Home Journal Readers Only:

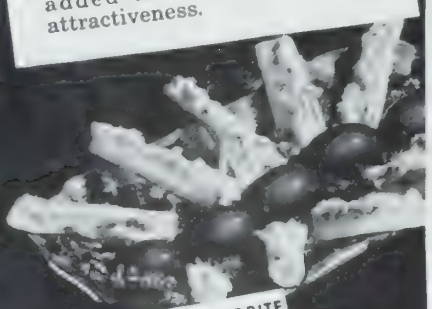
GIVEN AWAY

AN EXTRA PACKAGE OF SKINNER'S RAISIN-BRAN
WITH PURCHASE OF PACKAGE AT REGULAR PRICE

Simply tear out sticker below, present to Grocer; pay for one package of Skinner's Raisin-Bran; use sticker to pay for a second one

To Grocer: This coupon will be redeemed by Skinner salesman, or send to Skinner Mfg. Co., Omaha 8, Nebr., with name of jobber, for 17¢ redemption

No Other Raisin Bran Is Like Skinner's Raisin-Bran



The ORIGINAL

What flavor!

RECIPE FOR

UNDERWOOD DEVILED HAM STUFFED CELERY CANAPÉ

Clean and cut celery stalks into two-inch lengths and stuff with UNDERWOOD DEVILED HAM moistened with Roquefort or cream cheese. A little finely chopped green pepper gives an added touch of flavor and attractiveness.

AMERICA'S FAVORITE SANDWICH SPREAD

UNDERWOOD DEVILED HAM

Here's the finest flavor ever packed in a can ... UNDERWOOD'S ... made from selected whole hams, minced and seasoned to perfection with Underwood's own spicing formula. A delicious food, truly without equal!

MAKE MONEY EASILY

Sell Name-Imprinted CHRISTMAS CARDS 50 for $1 Also Assortments

Take easy, big profit orders from friends, others. Show Christmas Cards with name—5 big lines selling at 50 for $1.00 up. Amazing designs, gorgeous paper. FREE SAMPLES. Also sell $1.00 assortment of Christmas Cards, Gift Wrapping, Everyday Cards, Stationery. Christmas assortment sent on approval. Write

Southern Greeting Card Co., Dept. A-21, 216 S. Pauline Street, Memphis, Tenn.

THE BEST BUTTER comes in Paraffined Cartons

Most manufacturers package their highest quality butter in paraffined cartons. They rely on these sturdy, waxed packages to preserve fine flavor.

Also used to protect the quality and flavor of ice cream, margarine, lard, shortening and frozen foods

For Finest Quality Look For The PARAFFINED CARTON

Earn More with Leading Line CHRISTMAS CARDS

Beautiful New BOX Assortments

Big line! 21-card "Feature" Asst'ts. Etchings. Cute'n Comic. 16 Card All Occasion. Gift Wrappings. Stationery, others also NEW Gorgeous Imported English Floral Napkins.

Easy cash for spare time! Show friends, other folks exciting LOW-PRICED Personal Christmas Cards—with name imprinted! Featuring 25 for $1.50 and 25 for $1.95—shipped direct to customers. Glorious new album higher-priced De-Luxe Personals. Extra profits with 18 new Christmas and Everyday Box Asst'ts, including sensational 21 Card "Feature" Asst't. Sells $1. You make up to 50¢ profit! Other money makers. No experience needed. Rush coupon for FREE SAMPLES Personal Cards and "Feature" assortment on approval. ORGANIZATIONS: Ask for Special Fund Raising Plan WALLACE BROWN, INC., Dept. G-9, 225 Fifth Ave., New York 10, N. Y.

G-9

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

That plant now, the one Maxie and I had nourished and yearned over for eighteen months. We called it Oscar, because its real name was as long as antidisestablishmentarianism. Anyhow, it was in bud, one perfect deep-red aromatic bud, that promised to open within a week.

Friday, I figured it. Friday, February fourteenth, which was also Valentine's Day. Which was also the Valentine Dance at the club. A perfect setup.

I started building up to it. Tuesday's gardenias said, "The time grows shorter, Loveliness. On the day of Saint Valentine I shall reveal myself to you."

Wednesday I wrote merely, "To worship at a distance is not enough."

Thursday night I dropped off a dash of mignonette and white violets. "Tomorrow" was all the card said.

I went home and counted all the things I knew about Pamela. It took quite a while. She was beautiful. She liked me. I puzzled her. She was beautiful. We danced very well indeed together. She was beautiful. She liked to talk to me. Occasionally she even made an opportunity, a quiet little island for two, which shut out Maxie and Joe, when she listened quietly, her perfect chin in her lovely hand. She was beautiful. And she was romantic. She was waiting impatiently for the flowers, the messages, the lover.

I smiled, thinking of Joe. He'd stopped even the little talking he used to do. For the past month Joe had sat, glumness a mask on his face, wherever we were. Those flowers had him plenty worried. They made him clumsy, and guilty, and unsure of himself.

Friday morning I rushed to the shop. I took Oscar carefully from the hand-built corner where we kept him. Sure enough, there he was. More perfect than even Maxie and I had dreamed.

I got out the silver-satin ribbon, the heavy tin foil, the corsage pins, the silver-fluted paper. I sorted the greens and picked out the laciest ones. When everything was neatly around me, I picked up the small shears and poised them for a breathless moment over the newly opened bud.

I began to dive down carefully, just the right length, just the right slant, when, like a breath on my neck, I became conscious of someone behind me. I whirled, as guilty as a boy caught with a hand in the cooky jar. Maxie stood in the doorway, her hands on her small hips. Her eyes blazed fire. Her nostrils fluttered.

"What," she said, quietly for her, "in the name of places good and bad, do you think you're doing?"

My grin didn't fit my face. Too big and too loose. "I'm cutting Oscar."

She was beside me in a flash. Her hand whipped the shears from mine. "Oh no, you're not," she said. This time she wasn't quiet. "Oh no, you're not." She threw the shears with all her strength clear across the room. I knew a moment's amazement when they landed, as in mumblety-peg, by their points, and shivered back and forth in the dim light.

"Now listen," I began.

"You listen," she cried. "I've watched you rob yourself—rob us—of every decent flower in the place for weeks. I've sat evening after evening while you drooled like a teething baby, or gaped like a hooked fish, at that blond string of macaroni. I've watched your sense of humor deflate into bubble gum. I've even seen some of the mush you've put on those despicable cards." She paused for breath, then went on. "Do you know what she does with those cards? She puts them around her bedroom mirror. Like—like snapshots or dance programs."

THAT rocked me. I could see Pamela's friends, going up to powder their little noses or comb their little heads, bending to read my carefully printed words.

"What of it?" I managed to ask.

"What of it?" Maxie was really rolling now. "What of it? If that doesn't show you, what will? If that doesn't prove ——" Suddenly everything broke. Her eyes. Her tense mouth. Her little tight fists. The tears started to pour down, pushing on one another till they had no separateness. "Go ahead," she said at last, very softly. "Go ahead. Cut Oscar. He's yours, of course. I'm sorry. And I'm quitting."

Before I could move, she was out of the back room. Her heels made a machine-gun sound across the shop. Then the front door opened and closed. I raced after her when I got my bearings. But I couldn't see her anywhere. I went slowly back into the store.

I stood for a long time looking at Oscar. Then I put him back in his warm corner. After all, Maxie had taken the bulb I brought back from the florists' convention, the bulb which had very few mates in the country, the bulb they said would never grow in our climate. She'd planted it and talked to it and put a lot more than fertilizer into it. In a way it was Maxie's flower too. I really didn't have any right.

I STARTED to assemble what I could find. My stomach felt the way it does when I eat too much hot apple pie. I told myself that I was disappointed, that's all. Oscar was my climax. It depressed me to give him up.

I also remembered that mirror with my cards around it. And I had never seen Maxie cry before. Not when I went away. Not even when I came back. She must be very fond of Oscar.

When I finished the corsage it was all right. It was very good, really. Tiny sweetheart roses, shading from white to pale pink to bright crimson, shaped like a heart, ruffled like a valentine and backed with a gay red-satin bow.

Just before noon Joe called. His voice was gruff and embarrassed. "I want to send Pam some flowers," he said.

"Any special kind?" I kept my tone very businesslike.

"Yeah." The pause was so long I knew he was thinking of the flowers Pam had been getting. "Something that suits her."

I tried not to laugh. Joe, getting ideas.

"Sweet peas," he said suddenly. "That's it. A nice big corsage of sweet peas. The pink ones."

"Sweet peas," I said solemnly. You goon, I thought. Insipid flower if ever there was one. Even smelled insipid. So that's what you think suits Pam. "What do you want on the card?"

He hesitated again. "No card," he said at last.

"No card," I echoed.

"You fix them up, eh?" he asked.

"Sure," I said. "Sure. Say, Joe, you seen Maxie today?"

He sounded puzzled. "Maxie? No. I'm at work. Why? Is she sick?"

"No," I said hurriedly. "She—she just left early. Shopping or something. I just wondered. I'll pick you up about nine." I put the receiver back before he could object.

I fixed the sweet peas up nice and pretty. Joe's box and mine both went out on the afternoon delivery.

I was at Pam's house at eight-thirty. Her mother opened the door and gave me the slab of her hand to touch for a moment. I'd have to learn to like Pam's mother.

In a little while Pamela came down the stairs. The white jersey rippled around her gold slippers. She wore a hooded cape so I didn't get to see my flowers. She was beautiful.

I said, on impulse, "Something in my eye. Mind if I go upstairs and wash it out?" I raced upward before they could speak.

I set the water running in the washbowl. Then I peeked in the three bedrooms until I located Pam's—pale blue and white and very virginal. I switched on the light hurriedly. Sure enough, my cards were all around the mirror. They looked like a lot, on display that way.

But when Pam's arm was in mine, when she was beside me in the little world of the car, I forgot them. I said, fast and low, "You are beautiful. You're one of a kind. You're the dream valentine come to life."

She looked at me, pleased. "Larry," she d, "you certainly have a way with you.
ou say the nicest things. Different ngs ——"

When I had to stop the car in the middle f her sentence, I silently reviewed some of / Army vocabulary. I didn't even get out.
ushed the horn. Let Joe come out himself.
for Maxie, I couldn't believe she would e with us, furious as she was. But out e came. In black, too, and looking a little ler than usual. Which might have been e way she held her chin.

At the club the music was reaching sweet d hot. Joe and I parked our coats and ited for the girls. In a little while Maxie lked toward us alone. Her cheeks were ry red, her eyes looked layer-on-layer with tle lights. She was still mad at me.

I went up to her, leaving Joe behind.
Come on, kid," I pleaded gently. "Let's k arms and let go and forget we're Oscar's rents. This is the feast of St. Valentine."

She didn't say anything. But she let me t my arms around her and we were off, ooth as silk and intricate as a maze, the y we'd always danced.

It was good, if silent, fun. We stayed gether for two dances and an encore, then et a stag cut in and went to find Pamela.

It was some time before I discovered her.
e was coming in the door from the porch
th Joe. The first thing I thought, numbly, s that she had the look of a girl who has st been thoroughly and satisfactorily ssed.

The second thing stopped me dead in my acks. As in a nightmare I watched the autiful tall figure waft acefully toward me.
y horrified eyes held her shoulder. It got ger and more lifelike it drew closer. When ey stood before me I lt as if my eyes were ucers and my mouth
soup plate.

Fastened to the slim
rap of Pamela's white ess was my heartaped corsage, bow
d all. But it had been nned, none too precisely, smack dab in the iddle of a bouncing corsage of pink sweet as.

Some things make you ill. Each person ts ill from a different cause. I thought for moment I was going to disgrace myself in ont of everybody. But I guess I didn't ow it.

Because Pamela said, "I didn't know hich to wear, Larry." She looked proud. ctually proud. "I really couldn't decide d I didn't want to hurt your feelings. So—just put them together." She lifted her ce to Joe's. The just-kissed look came ck. She touched the sweetheart roses nderly.

I opened my mouth. Then I was aware of axie's hand, pinching my ear, playfully
t intensely, as it had so many times before.

Let's dance, Squirt," she said lightly.

"I—I ——"

"Right now," she commanded in a terse hisper. "This very minute, before you start lling, or get any greener."

I let her push me away a foot or so. Pam-a's voice stopped me again.

"I do want to thank you, Larry," she said.
Your sweet peas are just too pretty for ords."

LOOKED at Pamela, tall and cool and vely. I looked up at Joe, red-faced and most pleading. I didn't look at Maxie.
t a little pulsating something went out m me to her. I took a deep breath and allowed.

"I'm glad you like them, Pam," I managed say casually. "They—they sort of reinded me of you."

Joe's eyes loosened with relief. Pal, they anked.

You can do a lot of thinking while your et move skillfully and automatically in me to music. I thought. "They sort of minded me of you," I'd said. Insipid.
Sweet peas. Mashed potatoes. Macaroni.
No sense of humor. Cards on a mirror.

I looked at Maxie's head which reached so blessedly just to my mouth. I felt how comfortable my arm was around her waist. I saw her hand on my shoulder, with little red spots where it had caught on thorns. I thought of the months I was away, and business kept up fine, and Maxie laughing at me, and taking care of Oscar.

I pulled her closer. She lifted her head. There was a sort of sleepy look in her eyes. There was a very slight, carefully covered redness around them. As if her crying of the morning had gone on for a long time.

"It's just that . . . she isn't a florist, Larry. She didn't know how it would look to you. She thinks Joe ——"

"Hush," I said. "Put your head back. Finish this dance without a word." I put my cheek against her hair. Maybe it looked wild sometimes. But it felt very soft. A dark sweet soft.

WHEN three uplifted notes signaled intermission, I took Maxie to a chair. I sat her there.

"Stay right here," I ordered. "Don't move. Don't dance with anybody else. Stay right in this spot until I get back. I'll be back in exactly one half hour."

She nodded. It wasn't until I was racing the car down Main Street that I realized how meek and feminine and inefficient her nod had been. It made me feel swell.

At first my fingers were all thumbs, working against time that way. But in a few minutes they snapped out of it and sort of turned inspired. I was through with eight minutes left to get back to the club.

Maxie sat there, her hands folded in her lap like a good little girl. The sophisticated black dress didn't make any difference. She was a good little girl.

I stood in front of her. I took her hand with my free one. I led her to the glassed-in porch. It was sprayed with bands of light and dark from the windows of the dance room. I pushed her to a dark band.

"You said," I said, and my throat was raw as with tonsillitis, and Pam had never set my heart to pumping as it was, "you said nobody ever sends you flowers."

I could feel her, so still. For Maxie, so very still and waiting. I pulled her over into a band of light. I took my hand from behind me. I held it out, like a stick of candy.

Her breath sucked in harshly. Tears sprang into her eyes and sparkled there.

"Oh, Squirt," she whispered. "Oh, Squirt. It's Oscar."

"He's for you," I said softly. "He's always been for you. You made him grow. He was sort of stubborn about it, but he had sense enough at last ——" I stopped, praying she would understand.

"Oh, Squirt," she said again. She understood, all right.

"And don't call me Squirt," I commanded absent-mindedly. I bent to kiss her. I leaned down to kiss Maxie.

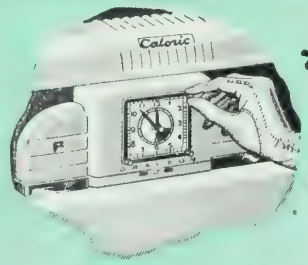
After a long time she pulled me into the dark band of the porch again. "Oh, Squirt," she insisted.

I could barely hear her. But then, she didn't have a chance to repeat it anyhow.

Maxie and I have been a pair of beavers these past three days. Pam and Joe are getting married and it's a big showy all-out affair. Pam asked me to do the flowers.

I sputtered about it. "A lot of wasted effort," I complained. "No matter how I knock myself out, the dame won't appreciate it. She has no taste."

Maxie came over and kissed me, a habit of newlyweds even during business hours. "She has no taste," she agreed. And she looked right at me when she said it.

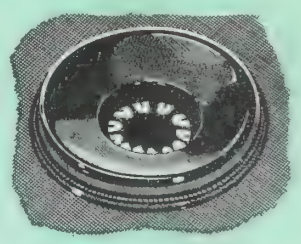


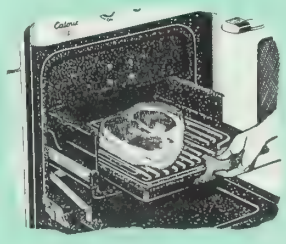
THE END

There's always a risk in loving. One may give love freely, with abandon, to a person who will value it lightly. A loved one may betray. A lover may experience heartbreak, sleepless nights, a hunger that for a time knows no satisfaction. But no matter what happens, the lover wins. It is the giving that counts.

—THOMAS DREIER.

Plan your meals for Automatic Success





Automatic OVEN

Time and heat controls cook whole meals better, surer, without attention. Caloric Hold-Heat Seal keeps your kitchen cooler. Two ovens available for roasting and baking simultaneously.

Automatic BURNERS

Designed for automatic, measured heat. Protect food values, save up to 39% on gas. Caloric Flavor-Saver Dual Burners are guaranteed for life.

Automatic BROILER

Lights without matches. Hi-Lo extra-deep pan and smokeless rack. Entire Caloric Veri-Clean Broiler is seamless porcelain enamel, completely removable for cleaning. Double oven range also has two broilers.

Caloric has more exclusive features you want for a lifetime of cooler, cleaner, faster, automatic cooking. And it's America's easiest range to keep clean. Dealers listed under CALORIC in your Classified Telephone Directory.
Caloric Stove Corporation, Widener Building, Philadelphia 7, Pa.

All Caloric LP-Gas models have specially engineered burners and valves.

Ultramatic

Caloric

REG U S PAT OFF

THE Automatic GAS RANGE

JULY's unpredictable weather may call for a little menu sleight of hand. The weather report may mislead you into planning a warm meal for a day when the thermometer hits 100°. Of course you can't pull a full-fledged meal out of a hat, but with parallel menus (particularly an entree that is equally desirable hot or cold) you'll have a trick to match the whimsical midsummer weather.

Some Like it Hot	Some Like it Cold
HOT-CHICKEN-MOUSSE MENU	COLD-CHICKEN-MOUSSE MENU
Assorted Cold Hors d'Oeuvres	Mushroom-Tomato Bisque
Hot Chicken Mousse	Cold Chicken Mousse
Peas	Vegetable-Salad Cups
With Water Chestnuts	Corn Sticks
Corn Sticks	Peach-and-Nut Conserve
Peach-and-Nut Conserve	Poires aux Fraises
Poires aux Fraises

Conversation Piece

BY RUTH MILLS TEAGUE

THE dinner this month will be a double-header, because the entree, chicken mousse, can be served hot or cold, depending on your mood, the weather, expediency or what-have-you. Obviously the temperature of the mousse will influence what goes before and with it, so—except for the dessert, which will be the same for both—we'll work out two menus. And so far as my taste is concerned, it's a toss-up between them.

HOT-CHICKEN-MOUSSE MENU Assorted cold hors d'oeuvres will be the dramatic prelude to the hot chicken mousse—not just a tray of delicious little titbits to be eaten with the fingers. (Continued on Page 110)

PHOTOS BY STUART

Prelude to a hot summer meal: hors d'oeuvres in delicate counterpoi

Chicken mousse—crisply chilled pièce de résistance.

Fresh strawberries and pears served with a light rich sauce of strawberry foam.

Chicken mousse blanketed in a sauce of peas and water chestnut

For tender light-as-air pie crust every time

Perfect pie crust in just 5 minutes—you can't fail with Good Luck Pie Crust Mix!

So quick, so easy! Follow the simple directions on the package and get flaky, delicate crust for a dream of a lemon pie. Good Luck is easy to handle because shortening has been "cut into" flour in exact proportions, skillfully blended by our exclusive process.

Made of finest shortening and pastry flour

Fine pie crust can be made only from top-notch ingredients. Special pastry flour made from finest soft white winter wheat and highest grade hydrogenated vegetable shortening are used exclusively in Good Luck.

Make the "Sniff" Test!

Open the package and sniff! What a fresh, clean odor! That's because only the finest hydrogenated vegetable shortening is used in Good Luck. Keeps fresh and sweet on your pantry shelf!

Lemon pie filling with natural flavor and tartness—real "fresh-lemon" taste. Consistency is always creamy and smooth. You're sure of the perfect lemon pie with Good Luck!

Good Luck with GOOD LUCK*—another fine French's product!

*Good Luck Food Co., Inc., Rochester, N. Y. Subsidiary of The R. T. French Co.

RICH PEACH ICE CREAM easy as magic to make!

FRESH PEACH ICE CREAM

(Automatic Refrigerator Method)

2⅔ cup Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk
⅓ cup water
1 cup crushed fresh peaches*
¼ cup powdered sugar
1 cup heavy cream

Set refrigerator control at coldest point. Mix Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk and water. Sweeten peaches with sugar. Add to milk mixture. Chill. Whip cream to custard-like consistency. Pour into chilled mixture. Pour into freezing tray. Cover with waxed paper. Freeze to a firm mush (about 1 hour). Turn into chilled bowl. Break up with fork, then beat with egg beater until fluffy but not melted. Quickly return to tray, cover with waxed paper. Return to freezing unit. Freeze until firm. Result: Extra-rich, extra-smooth, extra-wonderful peach ice cream! 5 servings.

*If frozen peaches are used, omit sugar.

FREE COOK BOOK! Send your name and address on a penny post card to The Borden Company, Dept. LH-78, P.O. Box 175, New York 8, N.Y., for your "Book of Magic Recipes"!

74 sure-fire, timesaving recipes for ice creams, cookies, puddings, pies, frostings, candies made with Eagle Brand—the original Sweetened Condensed Milk!

Made to meet Borden's high standards of quality, Eagle Brand is a creamy-smooth blend of purest whole milk and sugar—nothing else! Ask for it today!

© The Borden Co.

(Continued from Page 108)

but a real first course. There is no end of variety to choose from—sea-food salads, cooked and raw vegetables, eggs, smoked fish, and so on—but I've limited us to eight this time. I'm always flabbergasted at the hors d'oeuvres carts that are wheeled up to one's place in a restaurant. The choice is too difficult. I want a little of everything, which is beyond even my quite healthy appetite; and besides, one plate wouldn't hold it. The eight I've chosen will provide a nice contrast of taste and texture, and our guests will be able to sample each one. With the hors d'oeuvres there should be very thin sandwiches of dark bread and butter.

After this highly seasoned first course the main dishes should be hot, bland and not too hearty, so I've chosen peas and water chestnuts, cooked Chinese style in chicken broth thickened with cornstarch, to provide both vegetables and sauce for the hot mousse. The mousse can be poached in individual molds or in a large ring mold, and the peas and water chestnuts served on the same platter. To complete the main course there will be corn sticks and peach-and-nut conserve.

For dessert we'll have poires aux fraises, a beautiful platter of stewed pears, fresh strawberries and strawberry foam. The pears are bland and delicately flavored, the strawberries tart and highly flavored, and the sauce is both sweet and rich enough to bridge the gap between them.

COLD-MOUSSE MENU

Now we'll start at the beginning again and plan our menu around cold chicken mousse. First there should be a hearty hot soup, and for this menu mushroom-tomato bisque will be perfect. There's a soup with real body, and the taste is terrific—especially when it's made with a strong homemade chicken-stock base, as ours will be. Crisp buttered Melba toast or wafers should be served with the soup.

The chicken mousse can be cooked in any shape mold you like, but I think that for the cold mousse it should be a large one, not individual molds. It will occupy the center of a big platter, and around it there will be mounds of golden chicken aspic, a variety of salad vegetables and small lettuce cups filled with hollandaise. Everything will be ice-cold except the hollandaise, which should be about room temperature. The vegetables are so colorful that they can't help but look pretty, and the mousse will need some decoration to live up to its position as center of attraction. A thin layer of aspic spotted with rounds of truffles, stuffed green olives or ripe olives will make an attractive top—I'll tell you how to do that later, it's quite easy—and slivers of pistachio nuts can be stuck in the sides in a porcupine effect.

The corn sticks, conserve and poires aux fraises will complete the menu; and now I'd better get on with the recipes if I'm ever to finish. We'll plan for six or eight, and we'll do the mousse first and fuss with the rest later.

CHICKEN MOUSSE

The recipe is the same whether the mousse is to be served hot or cold, and will fill a 2-quart mold or 10 average-size custard cups. Cut a 4½-to-5-pound stewing chicken into pieces; put them in a pot with a veal bone that has about a pound of meat on it and add 2 celery sticks and 2 carrots. Pour in 7 cups boiling water, cover and cook over high heat until boiling point is reached, then lower heat to simmer. When chicken has cooked an hour add 2 good teaspoons salt and ½ teaspoon whole pepper and continue cooking until meat is very tender. Remove chicken and veal from bones. Return bones and all fat and gristle to pot, add 1 cup water, cover and cook over high heat for ½ hour. Strain broth and cool as quickly as possible so that grease can be skimmed off.

Grind meat through finest blade of meat chopper 3 times. There should be 5½ to 6 cups of ground meat.

Make a cream sauce with 4 tablespoons butter or margarine, 7 tablespoons flour, 1½ cups chicken broth and 1½ cups milk. Add hot cream sauce to chicken, stand bowl in cold water and beat with a wooden spoon until mixture blends into a smooth paste. Remove crusts from 5 slices white

Solve Your Housing Problem - BUY GLIDER

Glider trailer coaches offer you everything you would want in a home of your own—plus mobility. Every room is equipped with the finest in living comfort. Your Glider dealer has a very liberal time payment plan for your convenience. Write today for the address of your nearest Glider dealer and free literature.

Member TCMA

GRACEFUL AS A BIRD IN FLIGHT

Glider Trailers

GLIDER TRAILER CO

1826 W. KINZIE • CHICAGO 22, IL

Get Into The

BIG MONEY

NOW'S the time to get your share of big subscription commissions! You'll be amazed how easily you'll make money. You'll sell because people want to buy! Whether you can spare only a few hours each day or give your full time, you can earn.

Join our Selling Staff and do it now! We'll furnish all the supplies you need without cost. Just send your name and address on a penny postal and let us do the rest!

M. E. Nichols

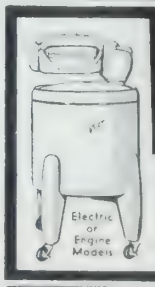
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPAN

755 Independence Square, Phila. 5, P

EXTRA MONEY EASY

Sell Personal Christmas Cards

50 FOR $1 WITH NAME



Delight your friends with beautiful, new selections of Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards at 5 for $1 and 15 for $1 retail. You make big profit taking orders in spare time.

19 BIG VALUE ASSORTMENTS

Up to $4 each profit on fast-selling $1 Box Assortments. Complete line for Christmas, Everyoccasion Birthdays, Gift Wraps, Notes as low as 6¢ retail. Stunning Fine Arts box, Religious, Humorous ... other top-notch money makers. START EARNING NOW! Send today for samples on approval.

HERTELART CO., 305 W. Adams St. Dept. 2311, CHICAGO 6, ILLINOIS

21-CARD "PRIZE" CHRISTMA ASSORTME Only $1 on APPROV

VOSS WASHERS

Time Tested Since 1876

VOSS BROS. MFG. CO.

DAVENPORT, IOWA, U. S. A.

Hamersley WAXED PAPER

THE GREASEPROOF GLASSINE

PROTECTS FOOD!

for Lockers, Freezers, Refrigerators

12 and 20 IN. HOUSEHOLD ROLLS

HAMERSLEY MFG. CO., GARFIELD, N. J

SHOW FRIENDS SMART NEW— CHRISTMAS CARDS $25 IN CA

For Selling Only 50 Boxes of 21 Cards For

SEND FOR SAMPLES NO

PHILLIPS CARD CO., 975 Hunt St., Newton, Mass.

MONEY FOR YOU $25 PROFIT-SELLING FIFTY $1 BOXES FEATURE

FREE SAMPL 50 FOR $1 personal CHRISTMAS CA AND STATIONE

EMPIRE CARD, 215 Fox St., Elmira, N. Y.

cover bread with cold milk, and when ghly saturated squeeze out most of add bread to chicken and beat again. 's a lot of talk about beating here— —and I'm not through yet, but you have to knock yourself out and the the job is easy.

n mixture is really cold, put bowl in of ice water, add 4 egg yolks and beat, add 1 cup slightly whipped heavy , a little at a time, beating con- y. Beat 4 egg whites until stiff, fold in until thoroughly blended, and not suggesting any other season- an salt and white pepper because t this to taste like real chicken, and a delicate flavor. However, a tea- or two of any good Chinese season- owder, gourmet or chicken bouillon er may be added because they will make the chicken taste more eny.

ase large or individual molds well butter or margarine and spoon in the se. As you proceed with this job tap olds occasionally on the table to re- the air bubbles, and when you are ed insert a silver knife over and over to get out more bubbles. This is very rtant, so give it the works, because ubbles are there whether or not you ee them. Fill molds almost to the top. nousse will expand during poaching, ettles down as it cools. Cover molds greased paper—I use typewriter paper ed with salad oil—put them in a pan rm water and set 300° F. oven to h.

Cooking time will nd on size and e of molds. In- ual custard-cup s will need about inutes; a ring , 35 to 40 min- but a deep mold, as the one I used he cold mousse, 55 minutes to an . Anyhow, when nousse is done it be puffed up and to the touch. w to the unmold- and I'll assume the mousse has been ed the day before or the morning of the y.

the mousse is to be served hot it ld be left in the mold in the refrigera- hen reheated in a water bath and un- ded shortly before serving. Run a la around the edge, turn upside down platter, then tip mold slightly to let n.

the mousse is to be served cold, remove m oven and let it stand 10 minutes re you invert it. It needn't be un- ded onto the platter on which it is to rved because, once cold, it is easy to le; but if it is to be moved, the sur- on which it is turned out should be ed with salad oil to prevent sticking. t stand, inverted, for 5 minutes before remove mold; cover at once with wax r to prevent drying and as soon as it is , store in refrigerator.

SSORTED HORS D'OEUVRES

s Avocados. With a spoon remove the of 1 small, ripe avocado and sprinkle 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Add a few s garlic juice, 1 scant teaspoon salt, aspoon white pepper, 1 teaspoon pre- d mustard and 1 tablespoon melted er or margarine. Press yolks of 5 or 6 d-cooked eggs through a sieve and add t half of this to the mixture. Mash wire potato masher, and when thor- ly blended press through a sieve. e for seasoning and add more if led. If the color is not a good green, a drop or two of blue vegetable coloring ompensate for the yellow of the egg . Mix rest of egg yolk with 1 table- n melted butter or margarine, 1 table- n vinegar, and sugar, salt and pepper aste. Fill the egg whites with avocado ture and decorate with a little of the yolk purée, using a pastry tube or a e. s-and-Shrimp Vinaigrettes. Mix ½ nd cooked fresh or frozen shrimp with p cooked peas, and combine with sauce le of 5 tablespoons salad oil, 2 table- ns vinegar, ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ tea- n sugar, ⅛ teaspoon paprika and 1 poon each of chopped parsley, green per, onion and chives.

Limed Fish. Fresh or frozen fillets of haddock, tuna, flounder or sole are good for this dish, and 1 large or 2 small fillets will be plenty. Cut the fish into bite-size pieces, sprinkle with salt and cover with ice cubes and a little water. Let stand 1 hour, wash in cold water and cover with lime juice. Lemon juice will do if you can't get limes. The fish will become firm and white under this cold cooking, or pickling, process. Let stand ½ hour and again wash with cold water. Peel a firm, ripe tomato, remove watery pulp and seeds, cut into cubes and add to fish. I'm torn between two sauces for limed fish, coconut cream and soya sauce with horse-radish. I gave you the recipe for coconut cream last November, but I'll skip lightly over it again. Grind the peeled meat of a coconut several times. Measure coconut and pour over it from ½ to ¾ its quantity of hot milk. Let stand 20 minutes and squeeze through a firm cloth to extract every bit of flavor from the coconut. Don't expect the cream to be thick—it will be about the consistency of milk. Store in refrigerator, and before serving beat a little and strain through a sieve to eliminate a creamy scum that forms on the top. If we could get fresh ripe coconuts here we wouldn't need to add milk, but the ones we get are apt to be dry. Pour the cream over the fish and add some freshly ground black pepper. If you want a more tangy sauce, mix horse-radish with Chinese soya sauce (soy sauce) until it's as hot as you can take it and pour this over the fish. Honestly, I can't say which sauce I like better, but you can't go wrong whichever you choose.

> If we were all given by magic the power to read each other's thoughts, I suppose the first effect would be to dissolve all friendships. The second effect, however, might be excellent, for the world without friends would be intolerable, and we should learn to like each other without needing a veil of illusion to conceal from ourselves that we did not think our friends absolutely perfect.
>
> —BERTRAND RUSSELL.

Okra with Sauce Piquant. Select evenly sized spears of young okra, boil in salted water until tender, drain and put in refrigerator. Make a sauce of ½ cup mayonnaise, 2 tablespoons chili sauce, 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce and a dash or two of Tabasco. To serve, put the sauce in one side of the dish and the okra in the other. I love to pick up the okra with my fingers, dip it into the sauce and bite it off, but that's a little messy for this occasion and it can be eaten with a fork.

Beets and Onion Rings. Slice small cooked beets and let them stand in their juice to which salt, sugar, pepper and vinegar have been added to taste. To serve, drain, sprinkle with salad oil and cover with rings of fairly small sliced onions.

Julienne of Veal or Pork Salad. If you have a little leftover veal or pork on hand, that's fine. If not, buy 1 good-sized chop of pork or veal and sauté until tender. The meat should be cut into thin, slender strips. To 1 cup julienne of meat add 1¾ cups finely shredded lettuce and ¼ cup minced celery and toss with mayonnaise.

Raw Vegetables. Arrange an attractive dish of radish roses, carrot strips, small flowerets of cauliflower and green-pepper strips. All or two of these would be fine, but there should be some raw vegetables to dunk in the mayonnaise or sauces.

Veal en Gelée. This recipe will make more than enough for one party, but don't worry. Veal en gelée is a delicious hors d'oeuvre and it will keep quite a long time under refrigeration. Get a calf's foot and tongue, wash thoroughly and barely cover with cold water and ½ cup vinegar. Add ½ teaspoon whole pepper, 2 cloves, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon sugar, 1 bay leaf, 1 clove garlic, 1 medium onion and 1 stick celery. Bring to a rolling boil, lower heat and skim carefully. Cover and simmer gently. When tongue is tender, remove it and let the calf's foot continue to cook, uncovered, until it is tender. Plunge tongue into cold water, peel off skin and allow to cool. Cut tongue into neat little squares about ¼ inch in size and chop 3 canned pimientos into small pieces. When calf's foot is tender, take it out of pot and strain broth, which will be considerably reduced in bulk. We'll want approximately ¼ broth to ¾ meat by cup measurement. Cut meat from calf's foot into cubes and put this, with the tongue and pimiento, into square refrigerator dishes. Taste broth, add seasoning if needed and pour it, hot, over the meat in the proportions indicated. Store

(Continued on Page 113)

Here's How

Clever Mrs. Frank D. Holmes makes delicious

Cherry-Peach Jam

in fifteen minutes after fruit is prepared

"I'm a busy mother and housewife. I dressmake for my two daughters and myself and take an active interest in school and civic affairs. Nevertheless, I find time to make my family treats like Cherry-Peach Jam. I make it with CERTO—as anybody can who wants to avoid the hard work and uncertainty of old-fashioned methods.

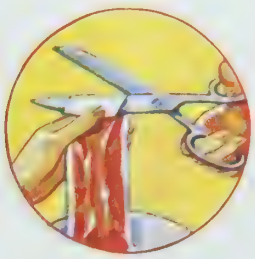
Mrs Frank D. Holmes

MOUNT VERNON
N. Y.

"Easy trick—adding Certo—but it cuts boiling time to only one minute! For Cherry-Peach Jam, I use the Peach Jam recipe in the booklet of 90 recipes that comes under the label of each Certo bottle. But instead of 3 pounds of peaches, I use 1½ pounds ripe peaches and 1¼ pounds ripe red sour cherries.

"In fifteen minutes after the fruit is prepared, I'm putting away finished, paraffined glasses! That's how simple the Certo method is. And not a worry in the world that my jam will be runny, when I follow the Certo method exactly! Certo is the original liquid pectin that helps all fruits jell just right.

Look—Eleven Glasses!



"The short boil, with Certo, prevents loss of fruit juice. So I get four more finished glasses than the same amount of fruit would yield by old-fashioned long-boil methods. It's fresh-flavored, too—like the ripe fresh fruit—wonderful. Do fill up your cupboard shelves this month. Try making jams and jellies this quick successful way—with CERTO."

A Product of General Foods

"THE WIENER THE WORLD AWAITED!"

"Quickie" meals revolutionized by Wieners and Barbecue Sauce.. flavor kept separate in can by "Sack O'Sauce"

"Sack o' sauce" is easy to open.

So different it's patented

U. S. GOVERNMENT INSPECTED

See how tempting — and easy to serve! A meal for the family in one can.

WIENERS that get their FLAVOR from the meat itself

Made solely of SELECTED Beef and Pork . . . absolutely no cereal filler added . . . only mild seasoning to bring out the goodness of the meats.

Now comes a new way of packing foods—an invention which makes it possible to can two delightful food flavors together and yet keep them unmixed—a wonderful new product for dinners, hurry-up meals, or snacks that satisfy robust appetites.

Note the picture of a can of Oscar Mayer all-meat Wieners, with Barbecue Sauce in a flavor-tight sack that keeps flavors separate and fresh—a meat dish with "trimmings" that you can always have on hand ready to heat and serve in a few minutes.

The wieners are all meat—absolutely no cereal filler added. You notice the all-meat firmness and goodness with the first bite because they are made solely of selected extra lean beef and flavory, tender pork. We use only mild seasoning—they get their flavor from the meat itself.

And the delicious mild barbecue sauce—voted first choice of 27 recipes tested—adds satisfying flavor to the plump, juicy, all-meat wieners. Try this delightful, economical food treat. At all good food stores—buy several cans today.

Also plain without sauce

ANOTHER Oscar Mayer PRODUCT

OSCAR MAYER & CO., General Offices, Chicago • Fine Meats Since 1883

*Trade Mark

(Continued from Page 111)

in refrigerator. When cold, the broth will have formed a stiff jelly. To serve, cut the veal en gelée into finger-sized strips and sprinkle with a little salad oil and vinegar. This is a very popular appetizer with us and I often serve it in strips big enough to be eaten with the fingers.

With the assorted hors d'oeuvres serve thin sandwiches made of pumpernickel, sour rye or Swedish bread spread with butter or margarine or a half-and-half mixture of one of these and cream cheese.

PEAS AND WATER CHESTNUTS
(to serve if mousse is hot)

Slice water chestnuts in thin rounds to make 2 cups. (In case you can't get them, use canned button mushrooms instead.) Put them in 4 cups chicken broth and simmer 10 minutes. Into another pan pour a little boiling water over peas and cook them for about 10 minutes. Drain peas, put them with broth and water chestnuts and cook until peas are tender. The water chestnuts never will become tender, which is their virtue. They retain their crispness no matter how long they're cooked. Taste, add gourmet powder and salt if needed and thicken with cornstarch mixed with cold water. Cook, stirring constantly, until the sauce has about the same thickness as very thin gravy, and is clear and glossy. Serve vegetables on same platter with mousse and garnish with parsley or water cress and a few spots of chopped pimiento.

Now we'll go back to the cold mousse, its decoration and vegetable garnishes and the soup that precedes it.

MUSHROOM-TOMATO BISQUE

Chop ⅓ pound fresh mushrooms into tiny pieces. Melt a little butter or margarine in a skillet, add chopped mushrooms and 1 finely minced clove garlic, and sauté a few minutes—don't brown. Add 4 cups chicken broth and 1½ cups tomato sauce and heat to boiling point. In the top of a double boiler make a thin cream sauce of 3 tablespoons butter or margarine, 3 tablespoons flour and 3 cups milk or milk and cream. Mix two hot liquids and season with salt, ½ teaspoon sugar and a pinch of cayenne pepper. Make the soup any time that suits your convenience—it reheats perfectly—and serve with a teaspoon of whipped cream and a few dashes of paprika topping each cup.

ASPIC

You'll need 9 cups chicken broth in all for the cold mousse dinner: 4 for the soup, 1½ for the mousse and 3½ for the aspic, so some stretching is indicated. This can be done by cooking with the chicken and veal an extra piece of veal and bone, some canned chicken broth or bouillon powder or cubes and water, but be sure that the broth has a strong chicken flavor. To make aspic, clarify 3½ cups broth, bring to a boil and dissolve in it 1½ envelopes unflavored gelatin which has been softened in ½ cup cold water. Stir in 2 drops yellow vegetable coloring. Grease a flat plate and a small square or oblong cake pan with salad oil and pour a thin coating of broth into each. Set these in refrigerator and put bowl containing the rest of the broth in cold water.

Cut a few truffles into thin slices and cut each slice into a perfect round with the inside ring of a doughnut cutter. If you don't have truffles—and they're rather hard to get and frightfully expensive—use slices of big stuffed or ripe olives instead. When aspic in plate and pan begins to congeal, add the pieces of truffle or olive, spacing them evenly in whatever pattern you choose and pressing them down a little so that they will be firmly embedded in aspic. The plate will contain the decoration for the top of your mousse and the pan will hold thicker slabs to be used around it. When the rest of the aspic barely begins to thicken, spoon a thin layer of it into the plate and put the rest in the pan. The aspic in the plate shouldn't be much more than ⅛ inch thick—just thick enough to handle.

If your mousse has a flat, solid top, cut the aspic into 4 wedges—as if you were cutting a pie into 4 pieces—and, using a pancake turner, transfer each wedge from plate to top of mousse. You'll find they can be fitted together easily and any aspic that sticks out beyond the edge of the top can be cut off. If you've used a mold with a tube, as I did, take a biscuit cutter the size of the hole in the mousse and with it cut a ring in the center of the aspic. Remove this center, cut the remaining aspic into 3 or 4 pieces, and transfer these to the top, fitting them neatly. This may sound like a fancy and difficult job, but it isn't a bit hard to do and it looks so pretty.

For a ring mold, cut the aspic into strips or pie-shaped wedges and drape them over the top of the mousse. Decorate the sides by sticking long slivers of pistachio nuts into the mousse. And if you don't want to bother with the aspic decoration, you could stick pistachios all over the mousse and get a very pretty effect.

To serve, put the mousse in the center of a platter and surround with slabs of aspic, cut from the aspic in the pan into any shapes you like, crisp slices of radish, cucumber and green pepper which have been sprinkled with French dressing, and lettuce cups filled with hollandaise. In cutting the aspic you will accumulate some ragged pieces. Cut these into cubes and put in the center of the mold or in groups around it. I hope you'll use the easy hollandaise recipe I gave you in my April Conversation Piece.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

A Garden for Ann-Elisabeth

BY EVE TRIEM

Asphalt, the grass; lamppost, the tree;
Brook and fish gleam of tin debris—

What a garden for sweet Ann
Whose two names open like a fan!

What bird chorale of screeching cars,
What alley dusk in neon stars!

Angels sigh with singing breath,
"No flowers for Ann-Elisabeth."

But Ann is smiling in a dream
Of willow earth and flowered stream;

Bright marigold, a butterfly
Is the sun in her small sky.

Little Ann knows mysteries:
Where I am, there God is.

Where God is, field or street,
A garden grows for His feet.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

CORN STICKS

Sift together 1½ cups flour, 1½ cups corn meal, 2 tablespoons sugar, 2½ teaspoons salt and 2 teaspoons baking powder. Into a bowl put 1½ cups buttermilk, add 1 scant teaspoon baking soda, stir well and add 2 well-beaten eggs and 3 tablespoons melted butter or margarine. Add dry ingredients and blend quickly. Grease corn-stick pans and place in preheated 425° F. oven for 5 minutes. Fill pans ⅔ full of batter and bake at 425° F. until well puffed up and slightly browned—20 to 25 minutes.

PEACH-AND-NUT CONSERVE

Combine 6 cups peaches, peeled and cut into cubes, juice of 2 lemons, 25 maraschino cherries cut into quarters, 1¼ cups broken nut meats and 3¾ cups sugar. Cook until thick, about 25 minutes, and stir often.

POIRES AUX FRAISES

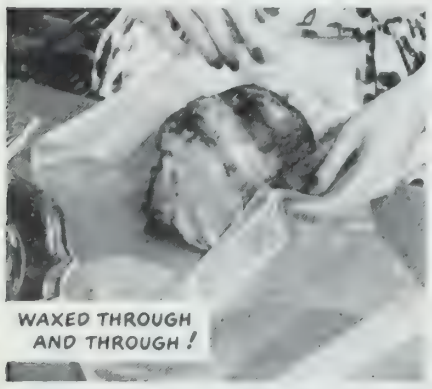
The sauce is the only cooking job connected with this dessert, so I'll give it first.

Strawberry Foam

In the top of a double boiler combine 2 tablespoons butter or margarine, 1 tablespoon flour and ½ cup sugar. Let these

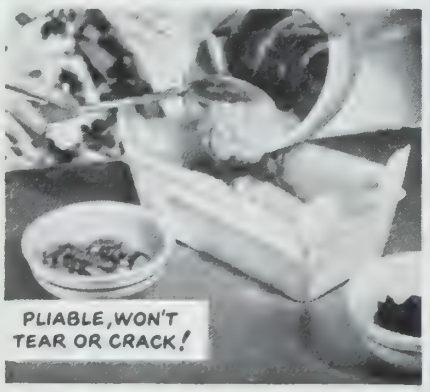
AGAIN! Two Popular Favorites Join To Make Full Flavored GELATINE DESSERTS

LIKE to hear your family say "Let's have it again"? Then serve delicious gelatine desserts made with Kool-Aid and Knox. Here's the home-made goodness they really enjoy because you can control the flavor by adapting the recipe to their particular taste-satisfaction. Choose from SIX zestful Kool-Aid flavors to give them tempting variety. Try this appetizing, easy-to-make recipe.



MIX THOROUGHLY: ½ package (1½ level tablespoons) Kool-Aid, any flavor; ⅓ cup sugar; 1 envelope Knox Gelatine.
Add: 1 cup boiling water. Stir until thoroughly dissolved.
Add: ¾ cup cold water. Turn into mold that has been rinsed in cold water and place in refrigerator.
NOTE: This base recipe adapts itself to any gelatine dessert or salad using fruit, nuts, whipped cream, vegetables, etc.

KOOL-AID & KNOX



THREE REASONS WHY WOMEN CHOOSE CUT-RITE

Turn your leftover dishes into compliment-winners! The minute you clear the table wrap that piece of roast, those extra carrots in Cut-Rite. Cut-Rite is waxed through and through . . . not just surface-waxed . . . to preserve fresh-food flavor.

Line cake pans with extra-heavy Cut-Rite . . . saves dishwashing, makes cake easier to turn out. Cut-Rite won't split. Wax won't flake off; moisture won't soak through. You can save icebox space by wrapping small things small to tuck in corners.

No waste, no mess. Cut-Rite's famous cutting edge tears evenly, always. Makes it so convenient, so easy to use. Keep Cut-Rite handy! A Scott Paper Product.

MORE WOMEN USE CUT-RITE THAN ANY OTHER WAX PAPER

cook over water 10 minutes, stirring frequently. Press strawberries through a fine sieve to make 1¼ cups juice and pulp, and add 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Pour this into ingredients in double boiler and stir until thick and smooth. When cold, fold in 1 beaten egg white and ½ cup heavy cream which has been whipped. If you like, 3 tablespoons brandy or kirsch may be added for extra flavor.

Wash, dry and stem some fine ripe strawberries and sprinkle sparingly with confectioners' sugar an hour before they are to be used. Store in refrigerator. The sugar will draw out enough juice to form a glaze over the berries. Chill a can of Bartlett pears. Arrange the two fruits on a platter and serve the sauce in a separate bowl, either in the center of the platter or beside it.

Service. I've used up so much precious magazine space that I've just about talked myself out of this service deal, so I'll make a forced exit—still talking. I think this meal—or, rather, these meals—should be eaten at the table, but both menus are perfect for self-service, and that makes everything easy for the hostess. If it's to be hot mousse, the guests can fill their hors d'oeuvres plates before they go to the table; if it's cold mousse, the hot soup can be at each place before they sit down—and from there on the pattern is simple, with or without help. No one minds getting up from the table to serve himself and, really, with food as pretty to look at as this will be, everyone should have a chance to see it before your carefully arranged platters are disturbed. While self-service is going on you can do some sleight of hand with the used dishes and your guests will return to a table that looks as charming as it did at the beginning of the meal. One thing you can be sure of: no one will be cool to this dinner, no matter which temperature line you take.

ALL THIS—AND A FREEZER TOO!

(Continued from Page 60)

home freezer, an upright model, is what finally threw it for a loop. I do love to cook, but right now the kitchen discourages me!"

There wasn't a place to put a chair to sit down in, she said, and she had to keep the ironer in the bathroom, and the freezer stood over a register—of all places.

There are five in the family: husband, wife and three children, and they live on a small farm a few miles out of the town where Mr. T. works. They raise chickens and grow fruits and vegetables, which will keep their new freezing center busy.

And what a freezing center it is! It really dazzles me. The freezer itself is an upright model, which looks like a refrigerator, and offers the maximum storage space with a minimum floor space. Beside the freezer, the JOURNAL planned storage cabinets for the freezing supplies, and this makes freezing a special joy. A handy wall chart gives an inventory of frozen food, so meals can be planned without diving through the freezer contents.

And how was room made for this business-like beauty spot? By efficient reorganization of all the service units in the kitchen, and a few structural changes that the JOURNAL staff decided were vital. One window was widened to let in more light and air; the porch door was moved to where the former porch window had been, thus making an extra wall usable for equipment. The area above the wall cabinets was enclosed to improve the looks of the room and eliminate dust-catching spaces, and this enclosure was carried across doorways and over the sink, with lights recessed in the bottom surfaces.

Next, the JOURNAL staff developed a kitchen plan that would make the equipment convenient and usable. The range, sink and refrigerator were grouped into the step-saving and easy-to-use U-shaped arrangement, with the sink placed under the garden window.

Steel cabinets were installed between the working appliances, providing both work surfaces and storage for equipment and supplies right where they would be needed. A nine-inch space between the range and the chimney now holds trays above the counter and sliding towel racks below. Open shelves over the refrigerator make room for recipe books and extra bowls.

With the business of cooking thus centralized, the kitchen now accommodated a laundry center on the other side of the dining-room door from the freezing center. The ironer was placed over the register. It does not interfere with the heat—and the warm air helps dry the clothes. The automatic washer went in the corner—the old washbasin was taken out, but the pipes made an easy hookup for water supply and drain. Above the washer went a cupboard for laundry supplies. Above the ironer open shelves were built for ironing accessories and the radio, with an open recess to make room for the ironing board—formerly hidden in the bathroom. Now at ironing time, the ironer or the board may be set up in the middle of the room without interfering with anyone walking through the kitchen.

Overhead a fluorescent ceiling light gives a good, clear light in the evening if Mrs. T. wants to seal up a few boxes of strawberries for freezing, put down extra Saturday-night baked beans, or chile con carne.

And last but far from least was the new wall covering, which is washable striped wall fabric in silver and blue and white. It is hung horizontally, which seems to lower the old-fashioned, nine-foot-high ceiling and carries the eye pleasantly from one center to another. It also gives texture to the room, something kitchens so often lack.

Dark blue linoleum-tile floor covering, lighter blue doors and ceiling, blue-and-white plastic counter tops give the room color and are practical too. Gay red accessories strike a bright note.

The small glass-enclosed porch opening from the kitchen was put to use as a breakfast-sitting room, a lovely place to rest, with room for a table, chairs and a porch glider.

It's a far cry now from the pretty hopeless setup Mrs. T. began with. Then, in the almost eleven-foot-square kitchen, the equipment was arranged any which way. The range was tucked in by the chimney, the sink had no counter space, the freezer and the refrigerator boxed in the door to the dining room like canyon walls. Between the range and sink, a sadly inadequate bank of cabinets held utensils and supplies. The counters were low and backbreaking to work at, and the wall cupboards so low that the space above the counters was dark and awkward, and the highest shelves practically useless.

Now the work centers are organized to save time, temper and energy, with a place for everything and everything in its place. And somehow the color makes the kitchen warm and light in winter but cool and restful in summer. I would like to spend a day there in July—baskets of fresh vegetables on the porch to be fixed for freezing, the kettle boiling for blanching, and the freezer counter ready with all the packages and containers. And chicken à la king for lunch. Why not, with a freezer at hand? THE END of facts about silverplate

Each wedding which takes place in the famous "Church in the Wildwood" is concluded by a brief ceremony not found in the ritual. As the newlyweds leave the sanctuary, the pastor stops them in the vestibule and tells the bride that tradition requires her to ring the church bell. Invariably, the bride pulls the bell rope—and finds herself unable to swing the heavy bell. The minister then motions to the bridegroom to help her. As the old bell peals out under their combined strength, he concludes the unique ceremony with the statement: "Remember, you'll find married life much like the bell rope; it is much easier when you pull together!"

—WEBB B. GARRISON.

A bridal shower ...

A DELIGHTFUL FACT!

Holmes & Edwards Silverplate stays lovely longer and here is the special reason why: Two blocks of sterling silver are invisibly inlaid at the backs of bowls and handles of most used spoons and forks.

A STARTLING FACT!

Ancient history to the contrary, all silverplate is not alike. Many kinds have extra plating for wear protection (overplating for instance) but only Holmes & Edwards is Sterling Inlaid with these

A HELPFUL FACT!

Look for the word Inlaid on the back of the teaspoon handle. It tells you it is Holmes & Edwards and will stay lovelier longer. You can't buy finer silverplate at any price!

HOLMES & EDWARDS

STERLING INLAID° SILVERPLATE

HERE AND HERE
It's Sterling Inlaid

WHICH PATTERN? Three to choose from. Lovely Lady, Danish Princess and Youth, all made in the U.S.A. by The International Silver Company.

HOW MUCH? Surprise! Unlike so many other things the price of Holmes & Edwards has not gone up! Still only $68.50 for 52 pieces, service for eight with chest. (No Federal Tax.)

WHERE TO BUY? At jewelry and department store silverware counters.

Copyright 1948, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Div., Meriden, Conn. Sold in Canada by: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd. °Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

LOOK! a new kind of washing action in the same famous package!

"Lifetime" OXYDOL washes clothes sparkling WHITE FOR LIFE!

OXYDOL

NEW! Even your whitest clothes wash to a brilliant new white!

NEW! Keeps clothes sparkling white for their entire life!

NEW! Colors, too, wash sparkling bright for life!

"Lifetime" Oxydol is a marvel of science that will change your whole idea of washday. For this amazing new Oxydol does more than wash clothes clean—it actually keeps clothes newer looking months longer!

Interested? You'll be more interested first time you wash with "Lifetime" Oxydol. You'll see clothes you thought were pure white turn whiter still. You'll see even dull and yellowed clothes turn sparkling white again. And then . . . then . . . you'll see the real wonder of this new kind of washing action: Those clothes will stay sparkling white as long as you wash them with "Lifetime" Oxydol! For life!

Yes, and you'll see washable colors take on a new brightness—proof indeed that "Lifetime" Oxydol is really safe. You'll see your precious print dresses stay sparkling bright washing after washing—for their entire lifetime. Get "Lifetime" Oxydol at your dealer's now!

REMEMBER...IT'S OXYDOL THAT BRINGS YOUR WHOLE WASH A LIFETIME SPARKLE!

Two kids, two careers and umpteen hundred problems—but the Gerald Curtins, of Watonga, Oklahoma, agree that they'll settle for more of the same.

The Curtins Knew What They Wanted

What makes a "working" marriage work?

"Love, loyalty and give at the seams," say these seven-year veterans.

by DOROTHY CAMERON DISNEY

Dr. Virginia Curtin at the Watonga Hospital and Clinic.

IT was Thursday morning in the small, brisk, prosperous town of Watonga, Oklahoma. Yellow dust from the prairies blew in little whirlpools along the paved treeless length of Main Street, powdering the cars, the farmers' mud-splashed wagons, the hurrying, quick-stepping people.

The Watonga Clinic, a two-story, fifteen-bed hospital where Dr. Virginia Curtin and three male confreres share midget-sized offices, sits back of Main Street. The hospital is exactly one block away from the squat red brick building where Gerald Curtin, Doctor Virginia's good-looking, energetic husband, owns, operates and publishes the Watonga Republican—a historic and fast-growing weekly newspaper.

Gerald Curtin, publisher and owner of the Republican.

Sometimes during the morning husband and wife speak to each other by telephone. This is rare. Usually the Curtins are far too busy pursuing their separate and demanding professional activities. At one o'clock every day, unless Virginia is held up at the hospital, they meet in their attractive eight-room home and sit down with their youngsters to a substantial midday dinner cooked by Mary, the colored maid. The meal is always gay and generally noisy. Five-year-old Charlotte and three-year-old Tim, a comic toy version of his broad-shouldered, football-playing (quarterback and captain, Oklahoma A. & M.) father, take charge of the conversation and provide the sound effects.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY RUSSELL W. LEE

Hard-working, hard-playing, ambitious Gerald Curtin rarely sets type, but can; became a newspaperman because the depression had no jobs for petroleum engineers.

Nicknamed "Cowboy" by football fans in college, Curtin's good-mixer talents make him a warm Watonga booster, Kiwanis member and American Legion leader.

There are so many Indian tribes—at least 35—in Oklahoma that The Republican devotes a section to them. Here Gerald interviews Cheyenne Big Chief Jo Yellow Eye.

Son Tim learns how fishing reel works.

"We take our jobs around the clock,

Virginia and Gerald (known to almost everybody by his college nickname "Cowboy") deliberately set aside the middle of the day to enjoy family relaxation and fun. Any discussion of Curtin professional or domestic problems is saved until late at night, in that hour when the lights are out and the parents of Charlotte and Tim have gone to bed. The Curtins occupy a double bed, which makes discussion easier—and which, by the way, represents a Curtin argument that Gerald won early in the marriage. Emergency telephone calls frequently rouse Virginia from sleep and send her driving miles into the countryside. As a brand-new wife, she saw no reason why Gerald's rest should also be disturbed. Twin beds, she thought, were sensible. Her groom thought otherwise.

"In a marriage like ours," said Gerald to his bride, "with two careers so taxing and so different, with two proud people trying to become one while under a constant physical, nervous and mental strain, the emotional end must be simple and easy. There'll be plenty of times, Virginia, you'll want a shoulder to cry on. You can find that shoulder quicker in a double bed."

Virginia and Gerald, physician and newspaperman, have been married seven years now. At this date their two dissimilar careers run as smoothly as two united parts of the same machine. They've got the hang of traveling in double harness. But it took a lot of learning.

On my visit to the Curtins, I stopped first at the newspaper office. Thursday is publication day for the Republican. A dozen blanketed Indians dominated the crowd filing inside to buy copies of the twelve-page paper fresh off the press. The Cheyennes and Arapahoes around Watonga decline to be tamely on a subscription list, preferring to drive twenty or thirty miles into town, pay out their weekly nickels for their papers in person, and chat personally with the editor.

Wearing a flannel lumberjack shirt and trousers tucked into his boots, Gerald stood just inside the door. Oblivious of the thump of three job presses grinding out some county printing work, he was cordially greeting his public, shaking hands, slapping backs, trading local gossip. On a newspaper the size of the Republican—the circulation runs around 2600, just a little less than the population of the town—the editor keeps his nose for news constantly on the job. By talking around on Thursday, Gerald often picks up leads for his next week's issue. He finds it pleasant. Friendliness, Western variety, comes naturally to both him and Virginia.

"And lucky it does," said Gerald to me. "The folks are certainly entitled to get acquainted with their editor and their doctor. Now let's get over to the clinic."

In Oklahoma no one walks who can ride, including ex-athletes like forty-year-old Gerald, who worries about his weight. We rode the short block in his battered, prewar Ford. At the hospital we pulled up beside Virginia's fine new Buick. The car was Gerald's last Christmas present to his wife. "A doctor," he remarked with a grin, "needs better transportation than a newspaperman. And Virginia is awfully generous about lending!"

The small reception room of the Watonga Clinic was jammed to the bursting point. People sat and people stood. Latecomers, who couldn't crowd inside, waited their turn in the hall. Frequently the four doctors see as many as two hundred patients in a single day. Virginia wasn't in her office when we knocked. One of the three busy nurses on the staff paused in flight long enough to say that Doctor Curtin was in the delivery room.

Upstairs, a second nurse went to see if Virginia could be safely and conveniently interrupted. Gerald doesn't conduct himself like a privileged character around the hospital. Virginia's husband respects her professional responsibilities as much as she respects his.

Few men like to see women in any kind of uniform. Before Doctor Curtin emerged from the delivery room, she whipped off her operating gown and gloves. Even so, thirty-five-year-old Virginia bore slight resemblance to a glamour girl or a lady who has just stepped from a bandbox. The sweater and skirt she wore were rumpled. An improvised bandage turban covered every lock of her red hair and bound it tight to her head. Her pretty, intelligent face was unpowdered, beaded with sweat. Her hands looked strong. Her small, slight body radiated nervous energy.

Someday Tim hopes to slick his hair back for sure—like Pop's.

"Tough?" asked Gerald, lighting and handing her a cigarette.

"No. Easy so far. It should be soon now."

"What color baby are you catching?"

"White. The mother wants a boy," Virginia said, flashed a quick smile at me and added, "My husband has lots of namesakes in these parts; nearly a dozen of my boys are named Gerald. For some reason none of my girls, and I've delivered over a thousand babies, has ever been named Virginia. Maybe it's don't take our troubles to bed."

because Watonga has plenty of doctors, and only one editor."

This remark wasn't displeasing to her husband. Virginia—or so she tells me—is tactful less by nature and disposition than by training. Her impulse, she says, is to speak out her mind. Observation and experience and seven years of marriage have taught her the value of sweet talk. Virginia is very feminine in manner, and this, too, she says, is by design. Long ago, as a small girl, Virginia loved and admired a highly successful woman doctor. "If you do take up medicine," the physician once said to the little Olson girl, "never forget that you are a woman." To this day Virginia uses the well-remembered bit of advice as a kind of talisman.

That single lesson—"Never forget that you are a woman"—helps Virginia a great deal. It helps her not only with her marriage, but professionally. She gets along beautifully with her three male partners and, equally important, with their wives. The wives of Doctor Cox, Doctor Bohlman and Doctor Anderson are among Virginia's best friends. When the four ladies get together, they don't discuss medicine either. They talk about clothes, the high cost of food and household furnishings, and their children.

"Make it early to dinner, if you can," said Gerald to his wife.

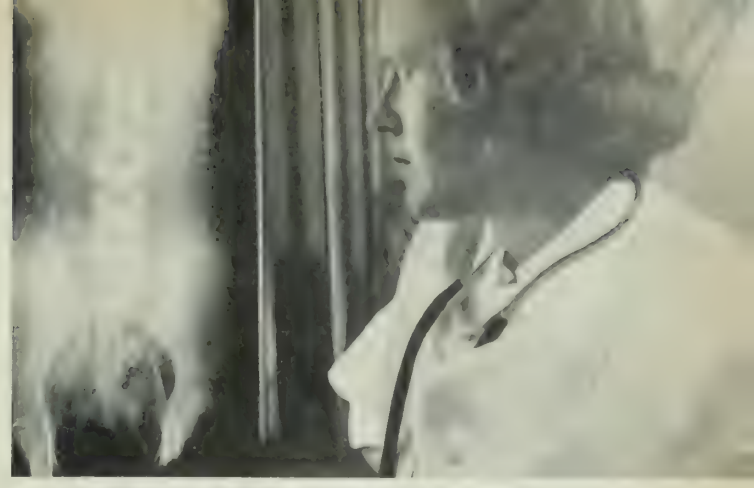
"I'll try," Virginia promised, dropped her half-smoked cigarette on the hallway floor, stepped on it, and returned to the delivery room in haste.

She wasn't early. It was nearly two o'clock and Gerald and the children had risen from the table when Virginia arrived home. The man of the house left at once. Virginia went into the kitchen and fixed herself a snack, so that Mary wouldn't be interrupted at the ironing. Dependent upon service, Virginia is considerate of household help. When she sees the maid is swamped, she sails in and assists, clearing the table, washing the dishes, tidying the house, doing whatever is necessary. On maid's day off Virginia does the family cooking, but, she confesses, with considerable leaning on tin cans. Tuna-fish soufflé, soup, chile and tamales, simple dishes. "Twenty minutes at a stove is plenty for me."

Lunch disposed of, Virginia engaged the Curtin small fry in a spirited game of make-believe that required every inch of the commodious living room, the use of two Teddy bears, the library chairs and all the divan cushions. Virginia, whose discipline is of a gentle, easygoing nature, doesn't insist on daytime naps. For one thing, she enjoys the company of Charlotte and Tim.

The game was interrupted by the ringing of the telephone. Virginia sprang to answer. A bed patient, twelve miles out of town, was calling for attention. Virginia announced the facts to Mary. Then in a series of almost simultaneous motions, Doctor Curtin put on her hat and jacket, bundled up her two youngsters and a moment later was efficiently stowing the pair of them on the front seat of the car outside. Her bag was already there. In the glove compartment was the blackjack that makes Gerald feel easier about Virginia's night calls. She has never had occasion to use it.

When Virginia goes on afternoon house calls—her brother physicians now handle the afternoon patient load at the clinic—the Curtin youngsters usually go along. Charlotte and Tim are trained to wait for mother in the car. Frankly, as Virginia explained to me on the drive, she is doing her level best these days to discourage house calls. By preference she would work only in the clinic, and only from ten o'clock until one. She sincerely hopes that the frantic times of the war, when she worked as much as seventy-six hours without taking off her clothes, are behind her for good and all.



"Since Gerald got back from the service," she said to me, "since Doctor Cox and Doctor Bohlman got back and we took in Doctor Anderson at the clinic, life has straightened out for me. During the past two years, I've had my first real chance to be of some use to my family. I'm not tired to death all the time."

She certainly showed no signs of weariness as she parked the car and briskly stepped out. The children and I watched her pick her way through mud and slush toward the farmhouse with the bedfast patient, and disappear inside. Fifteen minutes later, Virginia was back in the car. On the return to town we fitted in two other calls—a burn case that required fresh dressings, and an elderly heart case.

By half past four we were on Main Street again. There was a stop at the frozen-food locker where Virginia picked up frozen peas she had put away last summer, and chatted briefly with a friendly butcher who was just cutting up for the family a newly purchased quarter of beef. "You'll have fine eating, Mrs. Curtin," the butcher promised. Outside business hours, Virginia is seldom addressed as "Doctor Curtin." It's "Mrs. Curtin." The doctor doesn't mind.

Mother is casual about clothes—but Charlotte, five years old, isn't.

Dr. Virginia "reads" pelvic X ray of a pregnant woman. Surgeon, obstetrician, pediatrician and general practitioner, she has delivered more than 1000 babies.

Virginia checks Lulu Marie Rice. Her baby sister had whooping cough and measles. Virginia hopes soon to cut out home calls—and see more of her own children.

Dr. Curtin anesthetizes a patient. In medical school, she lived with an aunt who made her disrobe before entering the house because she smelled so of drugs.

"Dress up mommy, just like me."

OKLAHOMA—the plains are flat, the whe

Immortalized in the depression when Highway 66 saw penniless "Okies" trek out of the dustbowl, the near-by area has now struck it rich—last year fa

The children were now clamoring to see daddy. A block down Main Street from the Republican offices, we located Gerald at the scene of a new Curtin enterprise. The rapid growth of the Republican recently forced the editor to find larger quarters for the job-printing end of his business. When Gerald rented the additional space he decided to open an office-supply store as well, with the job presses to be installed behind a partition in the rear. Gerald was superintending the placing of the shelves and partitions. Waiting to confer with him was a traveling press repairman, arrived the day before from South Dakota.

When Gerald finished, we all drove home together. Supper was at seven. At eight Virginia and Gerald joined forces to undress and tuck the youngsters in bed. There were stories, nursery rhymes, numerous glasses of water. At half past eight friends dropped in to play cards and talk. By twelve, the lights were out and the house was quiet.

Kelly Duggan "calls" Legion square dance.

The Curtins' unusual marriage looks simple and easy. It is obviously successful. In order to understand why, it is necessary to know something of Virginia's and Gerald's history.

From the first, long before they met, these two people knew what they wanted. On occasion, particularly after they did meet, circumstances changed their desires, but only in a slight degree. Together, and, to a remarkable extent, Gerald and Virginia Curtin have got out of life what they wanted in early youth.

Courage, terribly hard work, intelligence and luck, a little luck, play a part in the Curtin success. But something else cannot be fairly overlooked. Gerald and Virginia are not average people. They are more patient and more stubborn and determined than most of us.

Gerald was one of eight children born to Wyoming ranching parents, back in the days when beef wasn't a quick way to fortune. At sixteen he was rounding up horses on a range where one could ride two hundred miles without seeing a fence. A romantic life, perhaps, but shy on comfort. According to Gerald, a blizzard that swept down from Canada blew him into college. On a day that the Wyoming temperature fell and fell to 25 below, in the midst of swirling snow, he hauled seven rack loads of hay to shivering cattle huddled behind sheds and windbreaks. That night he spoke to his father. "I know there are people sitting in steam-heated offices today who are earning more than fifty dollars a month and their grub and blankets. This fall I'm going to go to college and make a million dollars."

Gerald's first stop was a sports-conscious college in Denver, Colorado. There his talents at football paid his way; and there, too, startled professors relieved the student of the .45 automatic pistol he'd learned to wear and use before he put on his first necktie. Tales of an oil boom drew Gerald from Colorado to Borger, Texas.

A firsthand study of the oil business soon convinced him that a degree in petroleum engineering would be helpful. Preceded by his reputation as a football player, Gerald showed up at Oklahoma A.& M., was warmly greeted by the coach and provided with ample outside jobs. For three years he played quarterback on the varsity, captained the team, became known to thousands of Western fans as "Cowboy Curtin."

Gerald did fine both at football and petroleum engineering, was graduated with honors. Unfortunately, the year was 1932. Oil was selling at 25 cents a barrel. Degrees in petroleum engineering had no market value at all. The magic name—"Cowboy Curtin"—landed him in the newspaper business. For $10 a week Gerald got a job writing sports columns, playing professional football on the side until the starting salary rose.

Within four years, he became managing editor of the daily newspaper at Guthrie, Oklahoma. Throughout, he kept his eye fixed on that distant million. For a while he managed the Guthrie Chamber of Commerce and greatly enlarged his acquaintance over the state. His extra money went into oil leases and royalties.

Chief of police Leland Hinkle works hardest on Saturday night.

Town old-timer shows a farm boy how to make a rope "do tricks."

Clate Duncans, wheat far bring their grain to town is tall, the spirit high.

re sold a million dollars' worth of dairy products alone.

"Big news" Tuesdays in Watonga is what goes on at the livestock sale. Gerald Curtin likes to hobnob with farmers, is proud of local saying: "In every farmhouse, you'll find the Republican and the Bible."

Constantly with him now was the exciting dream of accumulating sufficient cash to buy his own newspaper. He analyzed and studied the weekly-newspaper field and settled upon the Watonga Republican, a paper founded back in 1892 in territorial days, the same newspaper that Edna Ferber wrote about in her novel Cimarron. But the owners didn't care to sell at any price.

Busy as a beaver, heart-whole and fancy-free, Gerald was well into his twenties when one day a candid friend remarked to the happy bachelor, "As each day goes by, Cowboy, you become a little more critical, and a little less desirable." Soon afterward, in her widowed mother's boardinghouse at Guthrie, where he was living at the time, Gerald met Virginia Olson—a slender, red-haired girl, who was as ambitious as himself. With that, his fate was sealed.

Virginia's sights weren't set on the precise sum of a million dollars. But, like Gerald, from a close acquaintance with family struggle and poverty, she had drawn a very active interest in acquiring financial security. A student at Oklahoma University, she was just beginning her first year of medicine.

Virginia was the fourth child of a pioneer Oklahoma couple, her father's favorite. When she was eight years old, the two of them got on a train to visit Kansas relatives. Mr. Olson fell ill on the journey. He and his little daughter gave up the trip to pass the vacation with a diagnostician, and the father discovered that he had a fatal disease—pernicious anemia. For the next three years, Virginia watched her father slowly dying while he attempted, with the aid of his valiant wife, to get his abstract-and-title business into shape to support the family he must leave. In 1924, when Virginia was eleven years old, her father died. By then her determination to become a physician was fully formed.

Friends and neighbors smiled at the child's ambition. Virginia's mother didn't smile. Mrs. Olson saved and scraped and sacrificed to make possible her daughter's education. When the Olson abstract business dwindled and virtually disappeared, she courageously opened a boardinghouse. In 1929 Virginia entered Oklahoma University, equipped with a wardrobe consisting of brown and black skirts (to save laundry), four sweaters, and muslin slips and underwear sewed at home. To this day Virginia hates those practical colors, black and brown.

Hard work and harder study filled her time. She managed her sorority house to earn her board. When she finished her pre-med course and began the three-year wrestle with anatsale. Oklahoma is second state in production of winter wheat.

"Promenade Right"—Saturday night.

Adam Harrison and son: ⅓ of U. S. Indians live in Oklahoma.

Eugene Wheeler, grain merchant, owns town's largest "elevator."

Virginia sings the children lullabies, romps with them after the everybody-home lunch, but takes no pleasure in discipline, cooking and housework.

Too much doctor nearly made no mother—baby Tim was born weak, grew strong when Virginia quit such things as working 3 days without sleeping.

"Cowboy" claims to be Oklahoma's champion "pitch" card player; plays daily at home with the boys while dinners grow cold and wives get hungry.

Separate in their egos, together in their hearts.

omy, pathology and the like, she worked first in the psychology department and then in the library, but at depression wages. A medical education is expensive. Mother bought the books, the inevitable sweaters and skirts and shoes, handled the incidental expenses; daughter paid for her own board and lodging out of wages of $15 a month: $10 a month rent for a tiny apartment shared with two other girls; $1 a week for groceries cooked on the grill. Every night except Saturday Virginia studied from seven until midnight. She loved it too. Often she was so excited by her studies that she couldn't eat or sleep.

Gerald Curtin was a persistent suitor. For those three years, Virginia's Saturday nights belonged to him. Usually the couple met at the university and dined and danced, or just drove around and talked about the future. On the night Virginia was graduated and first addressed as Doctor Olson, Gerald led the home-town cheering section. After waiting three years for his bride, he confidently expected to lead the newly fledged physician straight to the altar.

Things didn't work out that way. Virginia believed she would be a better doctor if she got further experience and took her internship outside the state. And Gerald agreed with her. So she went off and spent a year at the Iowa Lutheran Hospital in Des Moines, the first woman intern to be accepted there. Her record was so outstanding that there's been an O.U. intern at Iowa Lutheran ever since! A second year went by while Virginia acted as resident doctor in pediatrics at the Children's Hospital in Washington, D. C. She and Gerald kept up a steady correspondence, of course, and one Christmas vacation they managed to meet at the halfway point of Chicago.

In June of 1938, Virginia returned to Guthrie. Surely now, thought the newspaperman who'd fallen in love with a girl determined to be a doctor, his wandering sweetheart could settle down and open an office in the town where his own business interests were firmly established. This time economics threw a monkey wrench in the romance. Guthrie was amply supplied with physicians; a new doctor might wait a long, long while to build up a practice.

Virginia was determined to prove herself before she married. She borrowed $300, bought a secondhand car, secondhand professional equipment and sallied forth to case the state of Oklahoma for the proper place to locate. Sheer coincidence led her to Watonga, the little town where Gerald had earlier tried and failed to buy the newspaper.

Watonga was a county seat and remarkably shy on doctors. On August 4, 1938, Doctor Olson hung out her shingle. One week later, Dr. W. F. Bohlman moved to town and opened an office next door. Three weeks later, Dr. A. F. Cox arrived. The delicate situation speedily resolved itself. The three young doctors found they liked and respected one another. They got together and decided to open and operate a modern clinic. Doctor Cox, the best heeled of the three, purchased from a retired physician the small hospital where they practice now. They pooled resources and bought a modern X ray and other necessary equipment, and settled down to work in partnership. Inside six months, Virginia and her partners were doing very nicely.

What of Gerald? Well, in the next two years he wore out two cars bumping back and forth over the sixty miles of atrocious road between Guthrie and Watonga. Indeed, through business and political connections, Gerald raised so much commotion over the condition of that particular road that most of it was paved before he got the girl. The courtship wasn't much smoother than the road. Many an evening Gerald would arrive at Virginia's four-room rented house to discover that she was just leaving on a call, or had already gone. But he hung grimly to the thought, as did Virginia, that someday they would be able to marry and carry on their professions in the same town.

"Put Out Your Little Foot," the Curtins' favorite dance. Both love home, children, parties, quick out-of-town jaunts together and entertaining at home. "Never forget you are a woman, even if you are a doctor," Virginia was once advised, and she hasn't.

The Olson-Curtin nuptials occurred unexpectedly on New Year's Eve, December 31, 1940, in Fort Worth, Texas. Virginia and Gerald had gone to Texas on a house party, and suddenly decided it was now or never. They had waited eight years. Virginia was nearly twenty-eight, Gerald was thirty-four. Cautious to the last, they intended to keep the marriage secret until they could settle on a permanent home. In Oklahoma, friends and neighbors are likely to gossip about a couple who live sixty miles apart.

On January second, on their return to Watonga, the miracle happened and the Curtins received an undreamed-of wedding present. Out of a clear sky, the owner of the Republican offered Gerald a job with an option (Continued on Page 157)

"DON'T MOVE UNTIL I GET MY CAMERA!"

That's how our genial host greeted me when I arrived for a country weekend

NOW THE PICTURE'S IN MY ALBUM

Hathaway's House Party - June 1948.

Fresh as a daisy after driving 93 miles - thanks to that "sweet 'n' easy" Chevrolet ride!

DRESS BY CEIL CHAPMAN . . . HAT BY CHANDA

CHEVROLET
and only Chevrolet IS FIRST!

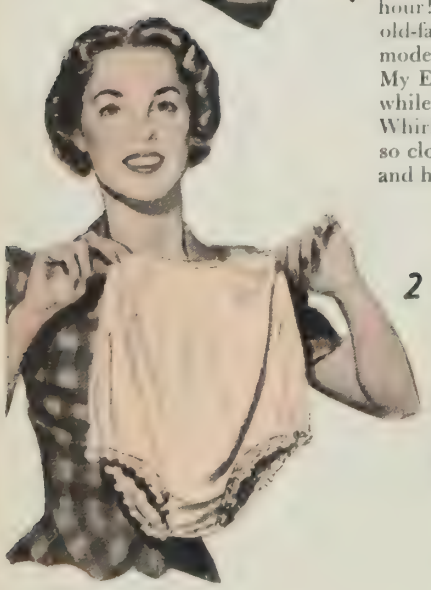
CHEVROLET How gently the miles roll by . . . as you cruise along in your steady, steadfast Chevrolet.

In place of strain and fatigue, you find a joyous "lift" in this road-hugging ride. You glide in cradled ease over humps in the highways, bumps on the byways.

Engineers call it Unitized Knee-Action—a Big-Car feature that Chevrolet alone offers among low-priced cars.

You'll call it the answer to a maiden's prayer for restful, relaxed driving. And when you add such other Chevrolet Big-Car comfort features as luxurious Body by Fisher, Shock-Proof steering, No Draft Ventilation that keeps every hair in place . . . you'll understand why every trip is more pleasant, less tiring, when you "go Chevrolet."

Promise yourself a ride in a new Chevrolet soon. Your Chevrolet dealer will welcome you.



CHEVROLET MOTOR DIVISION, GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION, DETROIT 2, MICHIGAN

Three June Brides

say what they think about today's best buy in washers!

1 Imagine your week's wash done in less than an hour! That's thrilling news for a bride who's old-fashioned enough to want a big family...but modern enough to want a quick, easy washday! My Easy's two tubs work as a team! One washes while the other rinses and spins clothes damp-dry. Whirls out up to 25% more water than a wringer, so clothes dry faster and are lighter to handle and hang up!

2 How wonderful not to feed a hungry wringer! Easy spins a whole load damp-dry at once. And so convenient for a small apartment. I don't even need set tubs. I just wheel Easy to the sink and power-rinse clothes right in the spinner basket. No waiting for a fixed "washing cycle." I can add forgotten items any time, or take out precious gift lingerie or blankets as soon as they're clean!

3 Money doesn't grow on trees when your G-I husband is still working for his degree. So we really appreciate Easy's low cost! No installation charge...that was a help! It's a miser with soap and hot water, I can use hot suds over and over. It saves cleaning bills by safely doing washable drapes and slipcovers at home! No wonder we think Easy's today's best buy! Easy Washing Machine Corporation, Syracuse 1, N. Y.

EASY SPINDRIER

SEE HOW EASY WASHES MORE CLOTHES FASTER

HAPPILY MARRIED THOUGH HOT-TEMPERED

BY LESLIE B. HOHMAN, M.D.
Professor of Neuropsychiatry, Duke Medical School

THIRTY-FIVE-YEAR-OLD Dr. Virginia Curtin and forty-year-old newspaper editor Gerald Curtin, of Watonga, Oklahoma, are two successful professional people each working in his own field but sharing in common seven successful years' marriage. They also share in a common quality that can easily wreck marriage—hot tempers.

Their story is the more interesting and instructive because of the many places their marriage could have run amuck. They belong to different churches—he to the Catholic, she to a Protestant church. They belong to different political parties in a state where people burn with political convictions. He's a Republican, she's a Democrat. Each belongs to a profession where the rules of secrecy are important and rigid. The catch is that the rules are different in the two professions. A doctor has to do everything he can to keep an item out of the newspapers, and an editor does everything he can to put it in.

The marriage adjustment was, in addition, beset with the difficulty of long separation because of military service and the exaggerated restlessness and irritability that Gerald brought back from his experience in the combat areas. Even their much desired children—Charlotte, five, and Timothy, three—at times threatened the marriage security. For Doctor Virginia there was overanxiety about their crying at night, and for him they aroused irritability when he came back from the war.

Virginia and Gerald had an excellent start in their marriage. They had an eight-year acquaintance and four years of courtship. Each had the ideal of a marriage of mutual respect and permanence. They both knew they wanted each other as a marriage partner as soon as their lives could be lived together in one place. For a long time this seemed difficult because she practiced in one place and he could not find a newspaper ownership in the same place. They finally decided to wait no longer and married anyway. Luck was with them. Gerald was able to buy an interest in the Watonga Republican after the marriage ceremony.

In the beginning, the first trouble arose when Virginia began to try to housebreak her then thirty-three-year-old bachelor-trained husband. He was used to flicking ashes on the floor and to let easy-housekeeping disorder reign supreme. Good-housekeeper Virginia at first tried gentle reminders, but this quickly turned into outright nagging. She found it difficult to compromise because she's not only hot-tempered, but stubborn.

At the same time, a conflict arose about single beds or a double one. Virginia thought that with her irregular night calls, and his restlessness in bed, they would be better off with single beds. At this point Gerald stood firm—it was to be a double bed, and it was a double bed. Behind this he had a sound principle. No matter how much conflict a day brought forth, he felt that a good cry on the other's shoulder at night would bring an easing of tension and a chance for reaffirmation of their deep desire for a successful union in marriage. His idea was not to facilitate passion expression, but to make easier a feeling of closeness. A child is relieved by crying out its heart on its mother's or father's shoulder; Gerald felt that the same child-parent pattern could be used in marriage adjustment.

Let us set down as a first rule for settling marriage disputes the one Gerald insisted upon:

1. There should be a daily time in every married couple's life when they can express their unhappiness to each other as a child does to its parent. It is common knowledge that physical contact seems to make it much easier to give vent to one's emotions. Think of the hand on the shoulder of a friend, or the embrace of a brother or a sister in distress; how often in this manner the floodgate of tears can be opened.

Early in the marriage of these two people distrust arose between them. True, Gerald knew that a doctor might be called at any hour of the day or night, and whom he was going to see was only the doctor's and the patient's business. Nevertheless, it was hard for him to accept this. When his wife left his bed at night and dashed out of the house with her doctor's kit, he found that terrifying doubts went through his mind. The fact that Virginia had several attractive medical male associates did not ease his problem. He had to say over and over to himself, "I trust and love her and I will not show this jealousy." Be it said to Gerald's great credit that not until the Sunday I interviewed this couple did Virginia ever know about his distrustful jealousy.

Let us put down as a second rule the one followed by Gerald in this situation:

2. If you feel unreasonable jealousy or distrust, maintain silence and handle this problem by yourself. Unjustified expressed jealousy may flatter for the moment, but ultimately wrecks confidence and love.

Virginia has handled her side of the problem with great wisdom. She insists that any woman can avoid "passes" if she really does not want them, and she cites her long, uneventful experience in medical school, internship and practice. But Virginia is no fool, and takes wise and sensible precautions to avoid even the show of embarrassing situations; and furthermore, wants to give to Gerald the security any man who loves a woman wants. While he was gone on his long war years she never met any business associates or medical friends or even patients at her home unless there was a group. Even now in their social life, when couples go from one place to another in automobiles, she goes either with Gerald or with a group of women.

Virginia and Gerald in the beginning not only had the problem of her nagging to housebreak him, with the resulting irritability on both sides, but they had the difficulty that is bound to arise when two people have different interests and professions. Each was living an active, professional life that excluded the other. They cast about and decided that they should and could unite on a common interest. That interest proved to be their love of the outdoors and nature. Deliberately they set aside one afternoon and evening in every week for a trip of adventure outdoors, with a picnic supper at the end. They found that Gerald could go most easily at the end of the week and Virginia arranged to have a medical colleague take her calls for these occasions.

Let us then set down a third rule this couple followed:

3. Find a common interest, and be certain the time is set aside to pursue it.

These picnics were like a moral holiday—out of the house and out of the business environment where it was easy to relax and drop away annoyance.

It was on one of these picnics that Doctor Virginia found that she could relax her feeling of that rigid independence that so frequently separates husbands and wives. Virginia had just made a medical-business ntract that worried her. She had not eviously consulted Gerald, thinking that r professional business was her own. He w that she was worried, and finally asked he could help her. She told him about her ubts and worries. To her amazement, she scovered the whole problem cleared com- etely. As a matter of fact, Gerald thought at she had been wise in her decision and ld her so, but the important thing was at she found she could trust him and his dgment. She learned that hers had been false kind of independence.

In most marriages where the woman is a ousewife the case works in the opposite irection: husbands do the concealing and ne secret brooding. The rule, however, orks the same way:

4. Problems and decisions must be hared in marriage even if they do not irectly affect the marriage itself. Inde- endence has no virtue in itself. It is mazing how often in actual fact the wife an supply the husband with good sense nd good judgment, even though she nay have no technical knowledge of his ob. So often she has the chance and bility to see the forest instead of the rees and can view the situation cleared f emotional tension.

These two people—she redheaded and ne Irish—"blow their tops" too readily. Gerald angers easily; Virginia, more lowly, but more violently. Like all peo- le with tempers, they can never be sure ust what will anger them.

The trouble with tempers, besides their eing disagreeable to watch and to live with, is that things get said in such ex- ggerated form that it is hard for the ther fellow to forget their sting, and it is hard for the individual who as said them to correct himself later. Everybody as a tendency to justify himself in every situa- tion, and after a temper outburst self-justification tends to fix us in our belief in the right- ness of our indignation. Then not only does a temper outburst bring statements that are painful, but holding on to the rightness of a former position creates a piling up of ac- cusation and recrimination.

A further handicap that anger produces is the "going to pieces" that results from anger. People do not behave to their own or others' good interest in rage. Gerald, with long training in college athletics, had to learn how not to "lose his head," and he has been able to turn his experience into good use for himself and Virginia.

It is important to realize that neither Gerald nor Virginia is prideful about the loss of temper. They regard it as a defect and not as a virtue. Having formulated princi- ples of conduct for handling a defect in one- self makes it easier to avoid temper-arous- ing situations.

Let us now add to our rules according to the Curtin pattern:

5. In so far as possible, let anger or tem- per be anger or temper and keep your mouth shut, even though you have to show the anger. Remember always that what you have not said, you do not have to get unsaid.

6. Learn to take stock of yourself after you have lost your temper. Then you won't have to build up your sense of self- righteousness. Stocktaking permits you to be objective, and prevents you from committing yourself permanently to what you have said or thought in anger.

Gerald was able to do this after he re- turned from combat. Everything in civilian life seemed to him trivial, selfish and childish. He was irritated, irritable and re- sentful. Virginia recognized the signs of war fatigue and was patient and under- standing. After a few months of this be- havior Gerald sat down with himself, used this habit of stocktaking and consciously and deliberately forced himself to change his attitude. He was able to see himself as wrong and to face the need for a change. When Virginia finally blows off, the scene, according to her, is pretty bad. Here the two invoke another rule which they have worked out:

7. Try to avoid responding to temper with temper.

Just as one is allowed to cry on the other's shoulder in bed, just so they try to avoid both getting mad at the same time. When Gerald, after the war, blew his top at a civic club during some innocent horseplay that he thought trivial, Virginia left with him without getting angry; or when he felt that he was insulted by a drunk she left the scene, trusting him to get out of his anger without trying to scold him. Just so Gerald tries to avoid getting angry himself when she has one of her outbursts—he tries act- ing the clown and bringing her, for example, a dandelion as a floral token; or if he sees that his clowning is increasing her anger, he puts on his hat and goes to the office.

It is easy to advise people that both should not get angry at the same time, but it is very much more difficult for people to follow this advice. Nonetheless, the Cur- tins insist, and I agree with them whole- heartedly, that if you have the policy of avoiding mutual anger your chances of avoiding it are much greater.

Another rule that their policy makes pos- sible is that from stocktaking you can ar- rive at a better and truer knowledge of what your anger means. These two people can say what so frequently is true of most of us today, "I am in an angry or irritable period or mood. I am picking on something only to justify myself in my anger." Often it is not the true cause at all; if there is one it is a disturbing situation far removed.

An eighth rule is:

8. Be able to handle and admit irritability and anger as such, with- out having to justify yourself by putting another in the wrong.

Both of them realize that they become irrita- ble because of physical reasons that are often beyond their control. Doctor Virginia frequently finds that sick children at home, late calls and serious illness in her patients rob her of actual sleep, and then worry of- ten keeps her awake when she is in bed ready for sleep. The irritability that fol- lows is purely physical fatigue and exhaus- tion. She knows that what she needs is a good night's sleep.

I feel that many women who read this story can profit from Virginia's wisdom in handling a sex problem. For several years she had given advice to young wives, and then discovered that she had a problem of her own. Two and a half years ago a serious illness of Timothy, then a tiny baby, caused Virginia a great deal of anxiety. Every whimper or cry through the open bedroom door brought Virginia out of bed with a start. In consequence, marital relations were increasingly difficult, and gradually poor Virginia found sex not only disturbed her but was actually distasteful to her. She then began her own stocktaking, with the result that each night she resolutely closed the door of their bedroom and used the same kind of healthy neglect of a spoiled, but by now no longer sick, child. She re- solved to practice what she had been preaching to her patients. She proudly re- lates the successful outcome of following her own advice.

I believe the story of how these two people worked out their successful mar- riage in spite of serious handicaps is basically dependent upon attitudes which they thought out and followed as guiding prin- ciples. They never allowed themselves to forget that they had fundamental love and respect for each other. They faced their defects frankly and worked out rules to solve the difficulties that arose.

Virginia's last remark to me was "I have everything a woman could ask of life." And then she looked lovingly at Gerald and said, "I hope he feels the same way about our marriage." I didn't need to hear Gerald's answer.

THE END

Sin has many tools, but a lie is the handle which fits them all.

—OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

Clean smells Sweet

Things that are completely clean have an unmistakable perfume. It's a delicate, fresh, sweet smell that never is noticeable where there is dirt in any form. It tells you instantly—this is clean!

When you unwrap a big bar of Fels-Naptha Soap, you get the immediate impression of cleanliness. This mild golden soap breathes the clean odor of naptha—the gentle, thor- ough cleaner that dirt and grime cannot escape.

When you wash with Fels-Naptha Soap Chips, your sense of smell registers "CLEAN" with every swish of suds. Here's where you discover the joy of sneezeless washdays. These husky golden chips shed no powdery dust to irritate your nose. They're the original no-sneeze chips!

Clothes washed the Fels-Naptha way have a fresh, clean smell which proves that golden soap and gentle naptha, combined, have done a dirt removing job no tricky soap substitutes can equal... Next time you wash your baby's things make sure they're completely clean... Use Fels-Naptha Soap.

Golden bar or Golden chips—

Fels-Naptha

banishes "Tattle-Tale Gray"

You can say "yes" to Romance...

because

Veto says "no" to Offending!

Veto says "no"— to perspiration worry and odor! Veto says "no"— to harming skin and clothes!

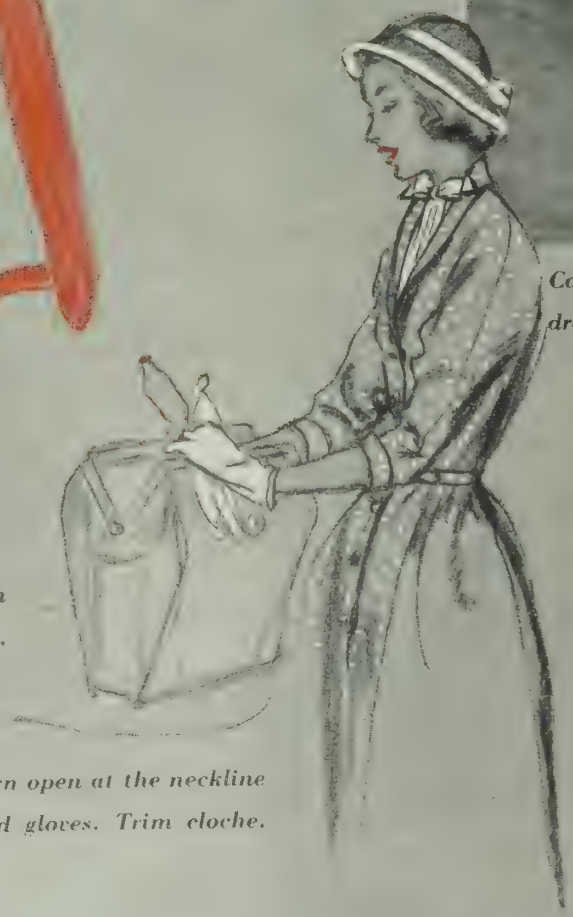
Soft as a caress . . . exciting . . . new—Veto is Colgate's wonderful cosmetic deodorant. Always creamy, always smooth. Veto is lovely to use, keeps you lovely all day! Veto stops underarm odor instantly . . . checks perspiration effectively. And Veto lasts and lasts—from bath to bath! With Veto, you feel confident . . . sure of your own exquisite daintiness.



So effective . . . yet so gentle—Colgate's lovely cosmetic deodorant Veto is harmless to any normal skin. Harmless, too, even to your filmiest, your most fragile fabrics. For Veto alone contains Duratex, Colgate's exclusive new ingredient to make Veto safer. No other deodorant can be like Veto! So trust always to Veto—if you value your charm!

Trust always to Veto if you value your charm!

The Dress That Takes You Everywhere

For fall: a lightweight tweed button-front dress with its own white dickey. Vogue Design No. 6516, 12 to 40.

The polka-dot shantung worn open at the neckline with white piqué vestee and gloves. Trim cloche.

SUÈDE PUMPS BY FYFFS

Cool shantung in a dolman-sleeve version of the coat-dress; pretty rolled collar. Vogue Design No. 6237, 12 to 20.

© VOGUE

Back Views and Prices on Page 140

The tweed with a bright scarf and beret. Note the link-button sleeve detail and slim pockets.

This year's version of the coat dress is the basis of Virginia Curtin's wardrobe. For summer and winter it is an all-round, changeable, wearable fashion . . . the smart answer to any busy woman's clothes problem. We photographed Doctor Curtin in a cool polka-dot silk shantung, dressed up with pearls and matching gloves. The smooth shoulders and deep armholes accent her small waistline. She can also wear this dress with crisp white touches. (See sketch.) Our fall version, in light-weight tweed, is slim with side pockets. There are two inverted pleats in the back of the skirt for easy walking. The dress can be worn with its own vestee or with bright scarfs and accessories, as shown in sketch. Whether you are a busy housewife, or a career woman like Virginia Curtin, you will find a coat dress one of the most versatile in your wardrobe. ★ BY NORA O'LEARY

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order by mail, postage prepaid, from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 21 Dundas Square, Toronto, Ontario.

LITTLE INJUNS

(BIG CHIEFS TOO)

CALL IT

HEAP GOOD!

One little, two little, all size Indians say . . . "and HOW!" First taste of those delicious crunchy-puffs and you'll say, "Me, too!" Loaded with start-the-day-right energy. Made from nourishing corn, with 2 B-vitamins and iron "restored." Mighty few foods can match the nourishment and flavor of KIX bobbing around in milk and topped with peaches. Makes breakfast click! Try it—you'll get a kick out of corn the new KIX way!

General Mills

KIX is a reg. trade-mark of General Mills. Copr., 1948.

Dr. Curtin believes that the sooner young children learn to eat with the family, the better for them. Saves time in preparing meals too.

Your Child and His Food

BY LOUELLA G. SHOUER

DR. CURTIN examines hundreds of children every year and does not believe that weight is necessarily an indication of good health. "Body firmness is much more important," she says. In fact, a child's height and weight need not agree with the height-weight table. If they are not more than 10 per cent above or below the average, do not become greatly concerned. The main idea is that a child gain as he grows, not lose.

The best way to a child's health is through his tummy. Every mother knows that if he gets the right food, and in the proper amounts, he will be well nourished.

Some children are poor eaters—others will eat everything served to them. Even in the same family children show varying interest in food. The two Curtin children are an example of this fact. There are many foods five-year-old Charlotte won't eat. Tim, age three, eats almost everything with relish—has since he was a tiny baby, except for a period when he was ten months old. At this time he suddenly refused to eat. For a week or so, Dr. Curtin had little success in feeding him. During one of these sessions he got hold of a spoon and started to play in his food. Soon he was feeding himself. Timmie had merely got to the point where he wanted to feed himself independently. Dr. Curtin thinks most mothers don't start letting children feed themselves early enough. Three is the average age for this.

How is His Appetite?

Food itself—and the way it is served—does most to create appetite, just as it does for grownups. Arrange on a child's plate foods that are bright, appealing and well cooked, and he will usually be attracted to eat. A quiet time before a meal is a good thing for any mother to practice. Here are a few menus for children of three to five. The dinners, with a few additions, can be served to, and enjoyed by, the other members of the family as well.

MIDDAY DINNERS WITH THE FAMILY

Broiled Lamb Chop
Peas in Mashed-Potato Nest
Tomato Sandwich
Milk
Surprise Custard

With the substitution of a salad instead of the sandwich and the addition of an extra chop, you and dad will enjoy this meal too. . . . For the custard, drop a few chocolate bits into each custard cup before baking. Children love surprises in desserts, and custards are so easy to vary. Other times you might try putting a whole stewed apricot or a spoonful of jelly, and so on, in the bottom of cups for that extra something. . . . Peas are usually hard for young children to eat. They do have an obstinate way of rolling around the plate. If you make a well in the mashed potato to hold the peas, little hands will have no trouble. . . . Because children adore sandwiches, they are a fine way to introduce nourishing foods. Make sandwiches small. They'll go over bigger with Junior.

Dr. Curtin examines Tim's teeth. Children need a diet that is rich in vitamins and minerals if they are to have strong bones and sound, even teeth.

Individual Fish Timbales with Parsley and Lemon
Creamed Potatoes and Carrots
Baked-Tomato Slices
Whole-Wheat Bread and Spread
Fruit Cup with Marshmallows
Milk

Fish is a good protein food, and in some sections much less costly than meat. Great care must be taken that no bones get into a fish dish served to a child. Therefore, the filleted fish are easiest to cook and prepare. Children like smooth foods, and fillet of flounder, being mild, is a good choice for timbales. Sprinkle with chopped parsley to make it look pretty. . . . Diced carrots add color to the plate, as do the baked-tomato slices. Children will eat cooked tomato long before they will eat it raw. . . . Fruit is a favorite food with children, particularly when it is cut up. A few marshmallows give just the right sweetness and make them think they are having a treat.

Minced Chicken on Rice
Buttered Green Beans and Celery
Carrot Sticks
Whole-Wheat Bread and Spread
Humpty Peach
Milk

Humpty peaches are simple to make. Arrange canned-peach halves cut side up. Put a pitted prune, stuffed in another pitted prune, in cavity of each peach half. Frost over with meringue. Bake until lightly tinged with brown in a moderate oven, 350°F. Cool. A two-egg-white meringue will top four peach halves. Serve with custard sauce. The prunes make the humpty.

SUPPERS

Poached Egg on Toast with Chicken Sauce
Lemon Milk Sherbet
with Apricot Purée
Milk

The canned condensed cream of chicken soup makes an excellent sauce, and if you have only one child you can use as much soup as desired for the sauce, saving the rest of the can to serve next day as soup. Thin with a little top milk, heat and pour over the poached egg. If you happen to have carrots and peas left from dinner, add these to sauce for brightness. . . . Make the sherbet in the refrigerator. The whole family will like it. The purée may be omitted as a topping, but if you have stewed apricots on hand, it's simple to make.

Hot Vegetable Soup
Make-His-Own Sandwich
Milk
Sugared Grapes

Little folks like to select foods from a tray as well as grownups do. On summer evenings an assorted sandwich-making tray pleases anyone. You might have the bread buttered and a selection of fills that you know are good for him—soft cottage cheese, slices of eggs, pieces of lettuce, and so forth. After the choice is made, cut the sandwich into several small pieces so it will be easy to eat. Have a bowl of crisp celery and carrot sticks to eat out of hand too. . . . Ripe seedless green grapes that are not too sour are fine as is, but dip small sprays or bunches first in beaten egg white, then in sugar, and you have something delightful and not too sweet. Let them dry a while before serving.

Hot Tomato Soup
Cheese-and-Bacon Balls with Orange Sections on Lettuce
Cooky Rennet Dessert Milk

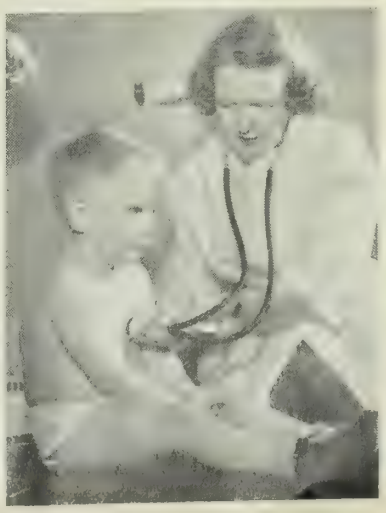
Be sure hot soups aren't too hot. If a child burns his tongue on a food, he's apt to be "leery" of it the next time. . . . Roll creamed cream cheese into small balls and roll in chopped crisp bacon. Arrange on shredded lettuce cut into manageable pieces. Children like the idea of having something that looks like a grown-up salad even though they don't have dressing on it. Garnish salad with sections of orange. . . . For the rennet dessert, crumble chocolate or sugar cookies into sherbet glasses and pour chocolate or vanilla rennet dessert over them. The cookies add texture and interest.

Scrambled Egg with Spinach
Bacon Curls
Diced Potatoes with Parsley
Grated-Carrot Sandwich
Milk
Stewed Pears Bright Eyes



You know best how your child likes his eggs scrambled. Though they are

(Continued on Page 150)

PHOTOS BY J. DI PIETRO

Body firmness is much more indicative of a child's health than weight, although he should, of course, be weighed regularly, believes Dr. Curtin.

A well-nourished child shows it. His hair shines, his eyes snap, his flesh is firm. There's a clear rosiness to his skin. He's happy, bright and alert.

FOR FREEDOM'S BIRTHDAY

(Continued from Page 58)

other exotic woods—a good deal of this has been preserved in the great houses of Williamsburg, capital of colonial Virginia, and the scene of some of the most stirring episodes in our history. It is a good place to revisit the past.

In the days we are remarking, Philadelphia boasted, too, of its great houses and great hostesses and great guests. And as for the china and candlesticks and other fine silver, they have come down from generation to generation and are treasures of first esteem.

The old cookbooks. These were mostly written by hand, until such ladies as Miss Leslie and her modest ilk burst into print and gave away secret after secret, which would have made Mrs. Adams and her generation turn over in their graves had they guessed that unregenerate hands were turning the faded leaves, and ladies of quality, as they described themselves, were bursting into print on the subjects of cookery and bringing up father and the children.

Hard reading and worse to follow. I own some of the handwritten books, the paper yellowed and the ink faded. And I've seen a lot more. They are charming because of their great age, as a very old lady in a lace cap is delightful, reminding one of a Dresden figurine, but the useful days are past. These books are hard to read, and if you try to follow them, you soon get bogged down in some elaborate receipt.

We've picked here and there. We've taken some of the early dishes for a menu that's fairly typical of those years, and you'll find them much like old favorites of your own. We eat less and we call our dishes by different names, but what was served then is served now.

When you come to think of it. First off you may not be able to imagine why anyone should call something to eat a "whet." But there are stranger names hung on many a package nowadays, and we catch on fast enough. So whets, you see, are little appetizer things to whet the appetite. And whigs are a raised light roll. That's all.

These whets are a tasty piece; and, always hunting around for something somebody else hasn't had, maybe, you are welcome to an old, reliable, stand-by receipt, right out of a Southern lady's book, and for all I know served to General Washington at some Sunday morning in Williamsburg or Philadelphia, and to Thomas Jefferson, the author of our liberties. And I can see Patrick Henry eating one after another, carefully poking in the center to see if there was a new gimmick. He was one who would have to know. But here's the receipt, and it's simple enough.

HAM WHETS

Cut sliced bread into 2-inch rounds. Toast until they are crisp throughout and get a light tan, in an oven at 325° F. These may be made at any loose moment. They keep. Toasted this way for canapé bases, the toast never sags under any sort of filling and stays good and crisp. For the spread, mix together 1½ cups chopped ham, ¼ cup mayonnaise, 2 tablespoons soft butter or margarine and 1 tablespoon prepared mustard. Spread on the toast. Dip the edges in chopped parsley. Put a rolled anchovy in the center of each. And if you like cheese, cheese can pinch-hit for the anchovy.

From cold waters. When the silver smelt were running and the shad coming in, those splendid fish had a high place on our forefathers' tables. But the tourmalinelike royal salmon was the fish reserved for the great and their wives, and it had a place of honor on many a shining mahogany table, with the priceless silver and china from the China trade. And because it was quite probably the fish course served on Independence Day, that has become a tradition, and salmon with new pease and Bermuda potatoes is as familiar on our tables on that great day as a clove-stuffed ham is at Easter.

BOILED SALMON

Buy a 4 or 5 pound piece of salmon. Wash it and handle it from start to finish with respect. That means with care. Tie it in cheesecloth. Now put it on a rack if that's convenient, or on a plate in the bottom of the kettle. If the water gets too low it will try to stick, cheesecloth or no cheesecloth. Add boiling water to cover your fish, 2 lemons, sliced thin, 2 teaspoons salt, 6 or 8 whole black peppers. Cook 10 minutes to the pound or until the fish is tender and done. Lift out of the kettle with care. Take off the skin and serve whole.

Always with a sauce. Now salmon demands a sauce. It's one of the drier of the tribe. Seen too much water in its life, probably. Be that as it may, you've got to have a sauce, and here is a colorful one, or you may choose the egg sauce of honest and ancient lineage, according to your time, place and occasion. Let's look into the green sauce, called by its fancy name Sauce Verte.

SAUCE VERTE

To 1 cup mayonnaise add 3 teaspoons chopped parsley, 5 or 6 teaspoons chopped chives and salt and pepper to taste. Now beat in just enough green vegetable coloring to make your sauce about the shade of new peas—or poplar leaves—or, you know what I mean, a beautiful light green.

This is better, I think, with cold salmon, but a lot of folks say "No, it's the sauce; hot or cold the fish." It isn't necessary to fiddle around with a bunch of spinach in order to get a green color. Provide yourself with a bottle of green coloring meant for such work. Pure vegetable stuff and gives you everything you want without poking and pinching and puréeing a few leaves, which I assure you isn't at all necessary. Unless you can't resist spinach in any of its manifestations. If this is the case, I withdraw my remarks. Some finely chopped cucumber in this sauce is remarkably fine; in fact, sliced cucumbers dressed with oil and vinegar are quite an addition to a salmon dish. Well, I leave it to you to decide whether to add cucumber to your salad, your sauce, or to your fish.

Even the cleverest and most perfect circumstantial evidence is likely to be at fault after all, and therefore ought to be received with great caution. Take the case of any pencil sharpened by any woman; if you have witnesses, you will find she did it with a knife, but if you take simply the aspect of the pencil, you will say she did it with her teeth. —MARK TWAIN.

There was variety. On the tables of the Colonial great was always to be found a great variety of condiments, jellies, pickles, jams and spiced fruits, all or most of them put up by the lady of the house and her retinue of servitors. They helped, but she bossed the job and did much of it with her own hands. Ladies of quality looked well to the ways of their households, and the results fully and wonderfully justified the effort.

Some things were imported, notably olives, as even a Philadelphia or a Virginia housewife could scarcely produce an olive. Pickled walnuts may have been imported, although receipts for doing them are found in most old cookbooks. But most of the delicious things were home products, and infinite pains went into their making and keeping.

One tiny item. One very old and very delicious jelly is the leaf jelly. We had it always, at home, when the crab-apple jelly was made. All there is to it is to pick for each glass of jelly one or two rose geranium leaves (or nasturtium leaves). Wash and dry them of water and put them in the glasses just before the hot jelly is poured in. That is all.

Same with mint. Apple and crab-apple jelly make beautiful mint jelly if you just express some mint juice to add to the jelly, then drop into the glasses a few perfect leaves. And have you run across those crystal-clear jars of orange jelly, with, believe it or not, a little goldfish or two cut out of orange peel, apparently swimming and looking too attractive for words? Well, currant-and-raspberry jelly is still my favorite. And always was.

The cold shape. Blancmange—which, as a little girl, I always thought of as being made of the flour paste they let me put pictures in my albums with (I thought it was left over, at that), but not so. A blancmange can be a nice dessert—only, like all things, it has to be nicely made. This receipt will get you a good one. You know you may put all kinds of fruits and berries, cooked or right off the bush, in and over this dessert. You may tint it with vegetable colorings, you may serve it by the light of the moon, but it is a good, staple, never-go-back-on-you dessert. Only don't keep it more than overnight and expect it to perform wonders. And if a lump gets left in it, you can hang up your fiddle right then.

BLANCMANGE

Scald 2 cups heavy cream and 1 cup milk in the top of a double boiler. Mix 6 tablespoons cornstarch, ¼ teaspoon salt, ⅔ cup sugar with 1 cup cold milk until smooth. Gradually add it to the scalded milk and cream. Cook over hot water 10 minutes, stirring constantly until thick and smooth. (Be sure no lump ever gets in this dish. The eater who finds a lump won't claim he's found any pearl. It will be only a lump. So stir and stir.) Cover and cook 15 minutes longer, stirring occasionally, until no taste of starch remains. Take it away from the fire, cool and add 2 teaspoons almond extract and beat it to a real creamy smoothness. Pour it into a quart mold which has been rinsed with cold water. Chill until firm in the refrigerator, overnight or not, as you like. Unmold. Garnish with sugared currants and red raspberries or any nice crystallized or sugared fruit you like. Don't have to have currants.

Cakes old and new. There was, of course no such thing as baking powder in the old days. The lightness of the cake depended on the beating. You beat until your arm was ready to drop off, rested a spell and started all over again. That was beating, with no mixers and such to help out, either. Just elbow grease did it. Poundcakes called for ingredients in pounds—you could knock out a big cake or several smaller ones. This receipt for half of a true poundcake uses a little baking powder. It makes 2 loaves. The original old poundcakes sometimes called for 12 to 15 eggs, depending on the size of the eggs.

POUNDCAKE

Sift together 3 times 2¼ cups cake flour with ½ teaspoon baking powder, ¼ teaspoon salt and 1 teaspoon nutmeg. Cream 1 cup butter or margarine. Add 1 cup sugar gradually, creaming until really creamed. Add 2 tablespoons lemon juice and the yolks of 5 eggs beaten very, very thick. Fold in the stiffly beaten whites of 5 eggs, then the sifted dry ingredients. Grease and flour a regular bread pan. Pour in the batter. Bake in a pretty slow oven, 325° F., for 1 to 1¼ hours.

Now for cakes like this I grease my tin and line it perfectly with white paper, then brush the paper all over with melted butter or margarine, and the cake comes out like a lady out of a bandbox—perfect in every way. Oh, by the way, since the size of the pan you use affects the time it takes to get it done, test your cake by the good old toothpick way. It never fails—but you might.

Keep it in mind. Just thinking about freedom doesn't make or keep anyone free Jefferson was a thinker about freedom, but he did something about it. The birthday of freedom ought to be especially significant to all who have seen the Freedom Train. Let us celebrate the nation's birthday with a toast to Washington, Jefferson, all the liberty-loving fighters for freedom. THE END

They asked you to bring potato salad?

It will be the hit of the picnic with

SAVE THE PINT AND QUART JARS FOR CANNING!

THE ONE AND ONLY

Miracle Whip

BEST-EVER POTATO SALAD

Here is the recipe for a super-special potato salad, one that any number of people have called the best they ever ate. Secret of its come-on flavor is a unique type of salad dressing, famous Miracle Whip. Miracle Whip, you see, combines the qualities of zesty boiled dressing and fine mayonnaise, gives you a just-right goodness you get in it alone. On this, and all your salads, just try the one and only Miracle Whip. You'll taste why millions prefer it!

6 cups sliced cooked potatoes
1½ cups chopped celery
6 tablespoons chopped pimiento
¾ cup Miracle Whip Salad Dressing
3 teaspoons Seasoned Salt
Freshly ground pepper
Lettuce
7 slices bologna
6 tablespoons tomato relish or chili sauce
Hard-cooked eggs

Lightly toss the potatoes, celery and pimiento with the Miracle Whip. Add the Seasoned Salt with pepper to taste. Place on lettuce arranged on a round chop plate. Form a cornucopia with each slice of bologna, fill it with tomato relish or chili sauce, and arrange around the edge of the potato salad. Garnish with hard-cooked eggs cut in scallops.

★ America's favorite! ★ Miracle Whip out-sells the next 20 leading salad dressings combined!

Women like this will CHEER !

So will all the many people kept awake, made nervous or jittery by the caffein in regular coffee! For . . .

THE NEW IMPROVED

SANKA COFFEE

now has a new, marvelous flavor to delight lovers of fine coffee! Yet it's 97% caffein-free. You can drink it and sleep. And you'll love the taste!

FINER FLAVOR in Sanka Coffee is due to a brand-new flavor-saving process . . . a miracle method of taking the caffein out of the coffee.

Try Sanka Coffee today. See for yourself what a great flavor-improvement has been made. Sanka comes in two forms: Ground for drip or percolator; Instant Sanka, made instantly in the cup. Products of General Foods.

DO WE NEED ADULT EDUCATION?

(Continued from Page 40)

to more people, the more people there will be who want more education. All this should be gratifying to those who believe that a properly educated electorate can be our country's greatest asset on the moral as well as the material side. But if the prospect is gratifying, many a harassed taxpayer will shake his head. On one score he can be reassured. Adult education need not be expensive. Private business and professional groups have offered their assistance. In some cases industrial organizations have provided both instruction and equipment for classes in vocational fields. The work of libraries, forums, historical societies, civic organizations, museums, men's and women's clubs, dramatic societies has in some centers received new life by this focusing of activity upon a community-sponsored project.

Some metropolitan centers have been gradually increasing their educational facilities to meet the needs of greatly increased populations, but even these lack co-ordinated systems. The development of adult education has been uneven and sporadic. Some states have done much, others nothing. And too many of our communities have not even made a beginning. Before further progress can be made, there must be, first, a wider understanding of the need for and possibilities of adult education after World War II; and second, an intelligent co-ordination of existing resources and agencies.

As we shall see later, every community of any size can and should do something now. In no field is it more necessary that efforts be locally centered and controlled. Since, however, this is a nationwide problem, it calls for action on three levels: national, state and local.

Although primarily concerned with higher education, the President's Commission wisely regarded adult education as so important and pressing that it dealt with it in three of the six volumes of its report. On the national level it recommends that the following action be taken:

I. The United States Office of Education should create a strong division of adult education—to provide leadership, inspiration and co-operation to state and community adult-education activities.

II. A national council on adult education, under the leadership of the United States Office of Education, should also be organized to enlist the co-operation and resources of all the interested national agencies.

III. Special commissions on education by radio and by motion pictures, representing both governmental agencies and voluntary organizations, should be established, to co-ordinate existing programs in these areas and develop new ones.

In substance, these recommendations would seem to be sound with the exception of the provision (II) that the council be under the control of the United States Office of Education. That office has rendered great service to education. But adult education is so new a field, and one which will in the long run affect so wide a range of interests, that a separate body, an independent commission more representative of all interests, would seem to be called for. There exists already a general professional council—the American Association for Adult Education.

On the state level: Every state presents a different problem. A few of them have made important appropriations for adult education. California pays about 85 per cent of the cost of operating the program for a million adults in high schools and junior colleges. Michigan has appropriated $250,000 annually to start community programs. Florida operates the huge Camp Roosevelt facilities as a state center for adult education. Rural areas everywhere present the most difficult problems. For them a state council will be necessary. It can provide necessary information and the transportation of materials and arrange for appropriate educational broadcasts through state- or state-university-controlled radio. Such councils have proved highly useful for clearinghouse purposes to various communities. Many states have no such council. In states where no council exists, one should be created.

It is, however, upon each community that the responsibility for any adequate program for adult education must rest.

Our American system includes both public and private agencies. We have dealt here with public agencies primarily, since the bulk of our population can be educated substantially only in public institutions. We shall continue to need the inspiration of great pilot projects like the New School of Social Research in New York, Cleveland College and the John C. Campbell Folk School in North Carolina. We need freedom for every kind of educational experiment, above all in this field. In many cases public libraries, museums, radio organizations and private agencies have done more than we had a right to expect. But the brutal fact remains that except in a few states most communities have been backward—some even recalcitrant. This in spite of the fact that many surveys have found that the common remark that most grown-up citizens are well satisfied with their present educational condition is false.

The average citizen will ask "What can we do?" and "Where shall we begin?" The most urgent need can be met at once and with very little expense. The first need everywhere is adequate guidance. There should be a competent educational counselor easily available for consultation by adults after work with office hours in the late afternoon and evening. In many cases the opportunity the worker needs and is qualified for may be already open. He can be spared the added frustration that comes from false starts and lost motion. His problem is far more baffling than that which confronts the freshman on our campus, yet a former Harvard president is quoted as saying that any freshman who can understand a college catalogue should be granted

(Continued on Page 134)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Grandfather and the Child

By Helen Howland Prommel

Grandfather and the child were never lost
For things to do—whenever summer tossed
Her fat and whispering branches to the day,
The two of them would softly steal away
To the bright meadow where a trickle flowed
In slow meanderings on its seaward road.
Each had a willow wand to fish the brook,
A string for line and a bent pin for hook,
And both would sit for hours with line dropped in
A shallow pool that never knew a fin.
But time went by and both were satisfied:
The child for being certain he had spied
The biggest fish that ever swam a stream—
The man for one with whom to share a dream.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

DOLE CHUNKS

*Pine-ana Split Salad

There's happy harmony here... a banana sliced lengthwise, topped with two spoondals of cottage cheese and a tropical center of golden Dole Pineapple Chunks. Those melt-in-your-mouth Chunks prod summer appetites — taste so cool. Isn't it a snap to make everybody "oh" and "ah" the pineapple way?

Summer favorites with Pineapple flavor..

DOLE SLICED

*Ring-around-the-Chicken

Praise will come from all around the table when this dish is served. To go on the platter with golden-fried chicken, sauté pineapple slices — sweet as a summer Sunday — takes just 2 or 3 minutes. Cover each pineapple ring with a thick slice of fried tomato. Garnish with parsley.

something new (and delicious!) by DOLE

DOLE CRUSHED

*Royal Shortcake

A rose and gold dream-dish that's a super-plus favorite. Put buttered hot biscuit-halves together with spoonfuls of golden Crushed Pineapple and sweetened sliced strawberries. Heap with Dole Crushed and drifts of whipped cream or marshmallow whip, then dot with strawberries. Smooth — just try it!

*By Patricia Collier
DOLE HOME ECONOMIST

(Continued from Page 132)

his diploma forthwith! Colleges assign to each student a faculty adviser, and in many cases call new students to the campus early for a "freshman week" of orientation—surely we can understand why working adults need guidance.

Competent counselors will meet an immediate and pressing need and will be helpful in preparing their community for the second step. This should be a thoroughgoing survey of the educational needs of its people and of its available facilities. It will indicate what agencies should be provided in due course. From that point on every community program must be shaped by its own requirements and resources. A clearer understanding of the problem, co-ordination of effort, and intelligent direction are more immediately necessary than large appropriations. It will cost something in money, and more in time and thought, finally to do the job. Even so, in no other field is there promise of improving American citizenship and of enriching American lives so much by expending so little.

There are still far too many Americans who, when they hear the term "adult education," think of a nice old immigrant woman, with fat fingers and corrugated brow, learning to write a letter. That was once part of the real situation; we had to have "Americanization" programs to make Americans out of immigrants. But the percentage of newcomers in our population has been cut down drastically since we set up the quota system. If this once engaging picture is fading, in wide circles adult education is now regarded as designed to plug up holes, or as a remedy for inadequate or completely missed opportunities in high school.

We should throw away these outdated attitudes and realize that this industrial civilization of ours is making life more difficult by making it more rational. This sounds like a paradox; it is surprising, but it is true. When our great-great-grandmothers brought up their children, they followed custom and that was all that was expected from them. Men and women today can rarely solve their problems by traditional rules; this is a time of change and spiritual chaos, and we are compelled, even if it is uncomfortable, to solve our difficulties by the full faculties of our minds, our hearts and our spirits. This is a more difficult way to live, but it may also be more rewarding. Inevitably we are coming to see that our civilization requires of everybody that he keep his mind alive and his information up-to-date in order to live at all in really modern conditions. As Sir Richard Livingstone, the British educator, noted in this same connection, most of our minds are like cars which, after years of routine use, need to be overhauled and tuned up—lest they get dangerously out of control and run downhill. Moreover, on the vocational side, many trades and professions now call for training and knowledge not available even five or ten years ago.

If we had a public-education system that was as good as it ought to be—and sometime will be—adults would have found the process of learning so helpful, so much fun and so necessary that they would think of it as a normal part of a normal life. And since—as shown by the studies of E. L. Thorndike, Irving Lorge and other psychologists—we know that the mind does not lose its learning power as we grow older, there is no reason whatever for believing that an educational system can be allowed to end with youth.

It will help us to rectify our perspective if we remember that most of us still have, hanging on the wall of our minds, the wrong picture of an American family. It is a nice picture, homely and comfortable, but just about a century out of date. It shows father and mother, with a grandparent tucked away in a warm corner, and a crowd of children. It was a good picture of the population make-up of this country—a hundred years ago. Not today. Today it would be nearer the truth to show several grandparents, two healthy parents, a few aunts and uncles, all grownups grouped solicitously and proudly around one or two small children. A century ago there were ten Americans under twenty-one for every eight adults. Now we have at least two adults in this country for every child, and the proportion of the population that reaches advanced age increases every year.

We adults are now the most numerous part of the population. We are also the self-governing citizens of a mighty nation. We cannot help making decisions now that will affect the chances of war and peace, poverty and wealth, happiness and pain, for most of the inhabitants of the earth. If there are going to be hatreds, it will be partly our fault; and if peace is to be achieved, we shall in great measure be responsible.

The President's Commission on Higher Education has recommended that "we need, and need quickly, to have millions of our fellow citizens become literate and competent in matters political, economic and cultural." Of all the momentous changes introduced into twentieth-century life by scientific invention and technological advance, the most important is the immeasurably greater physical power in the hands of men and nations, which can be used to build or to destroy. In the next few years, the citizens of our country must make their great decisions. The changes that we may make on the elementary, high-school and junior-college levels now cannot affect our political action in the years immediately ahead. In our democracy the great choices must be made by the voters, the adult population, educated or not, and that is why more adequate education on the adult level has to be provided as soon as possible. Only immediate action on that level can help our voters in time.

George Bernard Shaw, when asked for his definition of an educated man: "I'm sorry; I've never met one."

The principles upon which any sound program must rest are not new. Psychologists like those we have mentioned, who have studied the learning process, have merely brought us back to them. That is why they may sound old-fashioned. Let us consider them here in the light of what tests we can safely apply.

The most effective test of the adequacy of any education is this: Does the pupil who received it want more? The man who does not feel that he needs more education has already been educated beyond his means—or has been badly educated. It makes no difference how old he is or how many years he has been at school. A college graduate may go on to annex an advanced or professional degree. If he feels that he now knows it all, he has, as an educated man, passed his prime. He will really have less education at fifty than he had at twenty. Education is a continuing, lifelong process. It is not something which will keep if the recipient locks it away with his diploma. Education should and can be a man's richest and most permanent possession. But in this sense, it is perishable and can deteriorate. The mind may become flabby like an atrophied muscle. As the poet has Ulysses tell us, it rusts unburnished: it can shine only in use.

As recognition of these facts grows, so grows our chance to create in this country the greatest system of adult education in the world. The time is ripe now for action. And perhaps as we work, it is not too visionary to look forward to a time when the values of lifelong learning will be so completely accepted that our industries will grant leaves of absence for further study for their executives and workers alike, and colleges and universities will provide special facilities for adults who, leaving behind them the harassments of their daily lives, give their full attention for two or three months to the reviving of their faculties. This is a system that in other countries has increased the joy of living of the people and the prosperity of the state. Is it too much to ask that our country, with its vast resources and ready citizenry, do the same? THE END that adds to your poise!

The cosmetic deodorant

TUSSY CREAM DEODORANT

For a wonderful feeling of self confidence use Tussy Cream Deodorant. It eliminates perspiration odor and controls perspiration moisture. Made for you by skin care experts, it's always gentle to your skin and to fine fabrics. Fluffy—soft and fragrant, Tussy Cream Deodorant stays exquisitely creamy—does not dry out. You can trust this fine cosmetic deodorant to protect your personal daintiness hour after hour, after hour. $1 and 50¢ plus tax at better cosmetic counters.

TUSSY cream deodorant

Betty Crocker's* Chiffon Cake calls for Wesson Oil

CHIFFON-LIGHT, HIGH—LUSCIOUS AND MOIST!

. . . and delicate Wesson Oil assures delicate flavor.

Try Betty Crocker's amazing new Chiffon Cake and you'll be hearing "Simply divine!" As fluffy, as high as Angel Food . . . yet as rich-tasting as butter-type cakes. And amazingly moist, thanks to Wesson Oil —stays fresh for days, but gets eaten up in a hurry!

Betty Crocker uses Wesson Oil in her recipe. Yes, and you should use Wesson Oil to assure the delicate flavor of this glamorous chiffon-light cake.

Try these wonderful easy-to-make Chiffon Cakes. You'll find recipes in women's magazines or at your grocer's.

Many exciting ways to serve!

Chiffon Cake is delicious with or without frosting. A natural with ice cream!

Glamorous with whipped cream and berries—or with sugared sliced peaches.

Dreamy-tasting topped with sauces . . . such as lemon, orange, cherry, chocolate!

of General Mills, Inc.*

The same delicate flavor that makes Wesson Oil perfect for Chiffon Cakes, makes it ideal for waffles, muffins and brownies. Easier to measure . . . no melting of shortening . . . and no waste. And have you ever tried America's Favorite Salad Oil for frying? Doesn't smoke or burn at right frying temperatures . . . makes fried foods crispy, delicious—digestible.

Wesson Oil FOR SALADS & COOKING

TONGUE JULIENNE SALAD

¼ teaspoon each salt, sugar, dry mustard • Dash of pepper • ⅓ cup Wesson Oil • 2 tablespoons vinegar • 2 tablespoons pickle relish. Put these ingredients in deep bowl and use rotary beater to blend thoroughly. Makes ½ cup dressing. (M-m-m, the tang of relish! Delicious way to vary homemade Wesson Oil dressings. Wesson Oil is so mild, so delicate, you taste every flavor.) Arrange salad of greens, wedges of hard-cooked egg and strips of cooked tongue (or ham or chicken). Toss with Wesson Oil dressing.

QUICK AND EASY for two

BY LOUELLA G. SHOUER

TO HAVE good hot-weather meals that are still quick and easy, you have to use a bit of strategy. Keep the refrigerator well stocked. Cook more than you need of some foods on purpose. Be an early bird and do what you can toward dinner in the dewy part of the day. Recipes which can be doubled and redoubled help, too, if yours is a house where guests are always welcome.

Special Event

*Jellied Madrilene Aquamarine
*Deviled Shrimps in Shells
*Cucumber Coleslaw
Fruit with *Lemon Fluff
Iced Tea

There's an event coming up that means something special to both of you. You want your dinner for this evening to be perfection—light, refreshing, different from your everyday meals, but not elaborate to the extent that you'll have to spend any more time than usual in preparing it. Here is a meal for such an occasion. Jellied madrilene aquamarine is a cooling preface to the shrimp. Cucumbers transform the ubiquitous coleslaw, right with most fish dishes. For dessert, you'll have fruit with a sauce that's lemony and delicate in texture. A light meal, yes, but a good one for a summer evening.

Jellied Madrilene Aquamarine

Peel and mash ½ of a small avocado—a sieve or ricer makes the quickest work of it. Beat in the juice of ½ lemon; add 2 tablespoons sour or sweet cream, salt and pepper to taste. Snap up the seasoning with a dash of hot pepper sauce. Have 1 can condensed consommé or 1 can madrilene consommé—the kind that can be served either hot or jellied—chilled overnight in refrigerator. Madrilene consommé is much the nicer and prettier for this cooling first course, but either will do. Empty the jellied soup into a bowl and fold the avocado mixture into it lightly—not thoroughly. Serve in soup cups with a wedge of lemon or lime.

Lemon Fluff

Beat 2 egg yolks until thick. Put in top of double boiler. Add the juice of 1 lemon, 2 tablespoons hot water, ⅔ cup confectioners' sugar and the rind of 1 lemon. Cook over hot water, stirring constantly for the very few minutes it takes to thicken. Remove from heat. Fold in 2 egg whites, beaten stiff. Pour into bowl and chill. Serve alone or on raspberries or other fresh fruit.

Deviled Shrimps in Shells

Shell 1 pound fresh cooked shrimps, o use the frozen cooked or the canned ones drained of brine, for speed. Simmer cup chopped onion and ½ garlic clove finely minced or crushed, in 2 table spoons butter or margarine until yellow Blend in 1½ tablespoons flour, ½ tea spoon dry mustard, ½ teaspoon salt an a good dash of pepper. Gradually add cup milk and ¼ cup cream. Cook, stir ring constantly, until thickened. Add pound American Cheddar cheese, grated and if you like a wine flavor, 1 tablespoo sherry. Heat until cheese melts. Ad shrimps. Fill buttered scallop shells or individual casseroles. Place under broile to brown. Serve at once sizzling hot

Cucumber Coleslaw

Make coleslaw as you usually do, but d add ¼ peeled cucumber. Chop it righ in with cabbage. Use a little less dressin than usual so the salad won't be soupy Wonderful with any fish dish.

Porch Platter

*Kidney-Bean Salad
*Crunchy Deviled Eggs
Sliced Tomatoes
with Cottage Cheese
*Hot Blueberry Muffins—Jam
Iced Coffee

You don't go in for real put-it-in-a-baske picnics often, but you do enjoy picniclik suppers on the porch. A porch-planne meal should be simple to serve, for you'r going to carry it out on a tray from th kitchen. Instead of arranging everythin on separate plates, group on one cho plate—the kidney-bean salad in lettuc cups in center, the sliced tomato wit fluffs of cottage cheese and the crunch deviled eggs around it. Fill in the chink with slivers of raw carrots.

Kidney-Bean Salad

Drain juice from 1 chilled can kidne beans. Add ½ cup peeled and diced cu cumber, ½ cup diced celery, ¼ cup mince green pepper, 4 scallions, snipped fin with the scissors. Season with salt an pepper and add just enough mayonnais to make it of good juicy consistency.

Crunchy Deviled Eggs

Shell 3 hard-cooked eggs. Cut into halve lengthwise. Remove yolks and mas them. Add ½ teaspoon dry mustard, little grated onion, ¼ teaspoon salt, little minced parsley, ½ teaspoon vine gar and 2 tablespoons mayonnaise, an cup chopped nuts. Mix well. Heap mixture into the cooked whites of the eggs.

Blueberry Muffins

Use ½ package muffin mix. Follow directions for adding berries. This is the season for blueberries, and to my mind blueberry muffins are the best of the family and dessert enough for anyone, with tall glasses of iced coffee.

Reap the Harvest

*Hot Chicken Broth with Olives
*Broiled
Chicken-Salad Sandwiches
*Broccoli-and-Tomato Salad
*Three-Fruit Mousse
Coffee

Good leftovers never lurk in the refrigerator for long if you know what to do with them. Suppose you pressure-cooked a chicken yesterday: have some chicken broth and chicken; or you may have had chicken salad if it was a warm day. There's some of one or the other left over. The mousse combines odd bits of fruit. The salad starts from scratch. Make the mousse first. Each thing in the menu is simple to do, but will be a new adventure in good eating.

Three-Fruit Mousse

Whip ½ pint cream. Add ⅓ cup drained crushed pineapple, ¼ cup sugar, ½ large banana, mashed, ¼ cup maraschino cherries, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, a pinch of salt and ¼ teaspoon vanilla. Spread out in freezing tray. Set up refrigerator to coldest position. Freeze until just set. No stirring needed. The banana keeps it smooth.

Hot Chicken Broth With Olives

Clear chicken broth of all fat. Heat chicken broth. Cut meat off 4–5 ripe olives. Mince and add to broth.

Broiled Chicken-Salad Sandwiches

Spread toast thickly and clear to the edge with chicken salad. Sprinkle generously with grated cheese. When ready to serve, run under broiler until cheese melts and salad is well heated through.

Broccoli-and-Tomato Salad

Combine 1 cup chopped raw broccoli flowerets with 2 tablespoons French dressing, 2 tomatoes, cut into eighths, and ½ green pepper, diced. Add 2 tablespoons sour cream, 1 teaspoon prepared mustard, ½ teaspoon grated onion, salt and pepper to taste. Mix well and serve in lettuce cups with sprays of water cress. Save broccoli stalks to pare and cook another night.

Guests Welcome

*Quick Vichysoisse
Broiled Lamb Chops
and Tomatoes
*Mint-and-Onion Sauce
Lima Beans
Creamed Potatoes
*Pineapple Alaska
Coffee

You planned to have a simple broiled dinner tonight of chops, a frozen vegetable and creamed potatoes, with store-bought ice cream and cake for dessert. Along in the afternoon you hear from the other half of your household that you're having two guests. The meal as is wouldn't be very exciting to serve company, but with a few changes you'll make it so. You have a can of cream of chicken soup. From this you'll make an easy vichysoisse—a perfect little beginner for your dinner. Usually you like two lamb chops apiece. But you have only four. They are thick, however, and you'll broil large tomatoes, halved, to stretch the chops and mix up a mint-and-onion sauce for them to give your guests something to talk about. Luckily you have enough cold boiled potatoes for four in the refrigerator, as you always cook more than you need. One guest is known to have a conspicuous liking for fancy desserts. You have ice cream in the refrigerator—bakery-bought unfrosted cake. With canned pineapple and jam you'll make some really super Alaskas. Frequent and casual entertaining is much more fun than going to a lot of special fuss. Try it and see.

Quick Vichysoisse

Dice 1 potato fine and cut 4 scallions into pieces. Cook in 1 cup water with ¼ teaspoon salt and a dash of pepper. Put through fine sieve. Combine with 1 can condensed cream of chicken soup. Thin to good consistency with cream. Chill before serving. Sprinkle with chopped chives.

Mint-and-Onion Sauce

Wash and dry on a towel 1 bunch fresh mint. Pick off leaves and chop fine. Chop enough onion to equal the quantity of mint. Mix and add ½ green pepper, seeded and chopped. Season well with salt and pepper and toss together with ⅓ cup French dressing. Pass to serve on the chops, or pour over chops before serving.

Pineapple Alaska

Spread four 3½–4-inch squares of plain or spongecake with a favorite jam. If cake is too thick, cut squares in half crosswise. Lay a drained canned pineapple slice on each square. This can be done before dinner. After you've removed the main-course plates, make a 3-egg-white meringue, adding 6 tablespoons sugar gradually. This doesn't take long, and for these few minutes dinner conversation can go on without you. Then put a spoonful of ice cream on each pineapple slice. Ice cream should be very firm. Cover quickly with meringue—be sure to get ice cream completely covered. Put in very hot oven, 450° F., for 3–5 minutes, just until lightly tinged with brown. Serve at once. A good time to serve the coffee is while you're waiting for the Alaskas.

Dinner, Home Style

*Danish Codfish
Boiled Potatoes
Swiss Chard with Sliced Eggs
Raspberries and Blueberries with Cream
Coffee

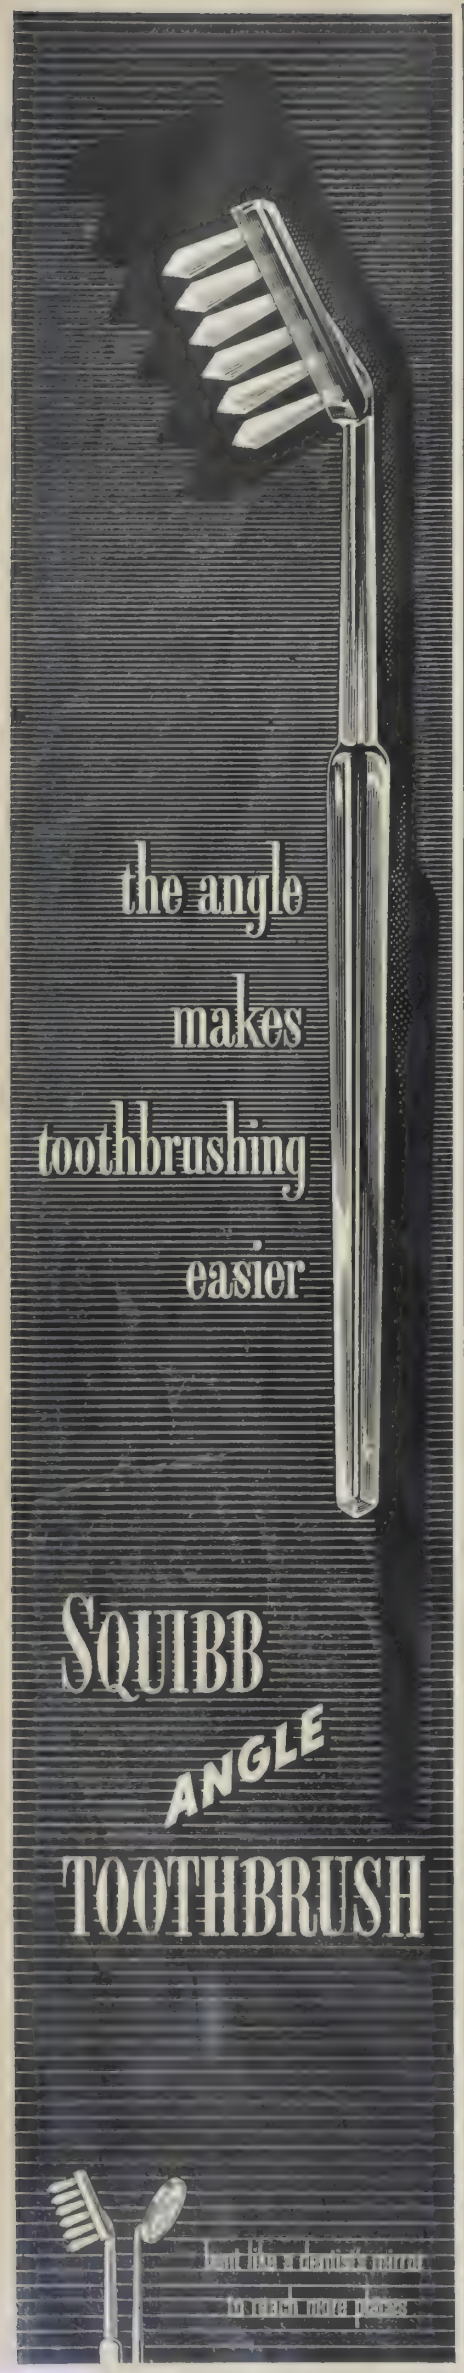
Simple homely dishes sometimes make the best meals—particularly when you're not in a dress-up mood: Swiss chard from the garden, a bowl of berries to lave with thick cream, little potatoes scrubbed and cooked in their skins and a flavorful fish dish that's quickly made and low in cost—these make a meal you'll remember with relish.

Danish Codfish

Cook, covered, 1½ cups diced Pascal celery, cut into 1-inch pieces, in 1½ cups boiling water with 1½ teaspoons salt until tender. Remove celery. Tie ¾ pound fresh codfish fillets in a piece of cheesecloth. Simmer in hot celery stock 10 minutes. Lift out fish. Make a sauce from stock, using 2 tablespoons butter or margarine and 2 tablespoons flour for thickening. Season with 1¾ teaspoons lemon juice, ¼ teaspoon curry powder and 1 teaspoon grated onion. Remove codfish from cheesecloth. Lay in sauce; add celery. Heat thoroughly and serve on boiled new potatoes.

GARDEN SALAD BOWL
with Tomato French Dressing

For a refreshing treat, serve a crisp garden salad, prepared in a Porcelain Enameled mixing bowl with this delicious dressing.



1 can (10½-11 oz.) Condensed Tomato Soup
¾ cup cider vinegar
1½ tsps. salt
½ tsp. paprika
1 tbsp. Worcestershire sauce
½ tsp. black pepper
½ to ½ cup granulated sugar
1 tsp. minced onion
1 tsp. prepared mustard
1½ cups salad or olive oil
1 peeled clove of garlic

Combine ingredients; shake until blended and chill. Keep in refrigerator ready to serve. To prepare this salad: Break lettuce into chunks. Combine with endive, sliced radishes, tomato wedges and egg slices. Add dressing just before serving.

What a joy in the kitchen! The gleaming beauty of your porcelain enameled kitchen utensils is restored with a mere swish of a cloth. They heat so quickly . . . so evenly, cooking is made easy, too! You can choose a gay, sparkling utensil for every kitchen use. And how wonderful to know . . . Porcelain on Steel Enameledware is stain and acid resistant . . . stays beautiful for years.

FREE! Packet of delicious, new kitchen-tested recipes for use with porcelain enameled utensils. On convenient, easy-to-file recipe cards. Write today. Dept. B, Enameled Utensil Manufacturers Council, Merchandise Mart, Chicago.

PORCELAIN ON STEEL
ENAMELEDWARE

A LITTLE MADNESS IN THE SPRING

(Continued from Page 39)

he never would have felt young, never would have felt that extraordinary something that he knew existed, that he had read about—and so experienced vicariously—but which had never happened to him.

He had supposed for a time that he had been too poor to feel young, but simply by keeping his eyes open he had been forced to decide that was nonsense. Too many poor people felt wonderfully young.

Then what was it?

He had never been ill, really. He could not blame his body.

Yet the fact remained.

So he said to himself, in the desperation of his thirty-sixth birthday, Why don't I inquire of myself what happened?

THE book was an examination of his eighteenth year. His theory was that, in the retelling, he might capture, might acquire those high emotions of youth which, in the living, the year had so noticeably lacked. If he did, it would not be full compensation for what he had missed, but he felt that now any consolation was worth a try. He was frightened.

Fortunately for John, the year he was eighteen had been a period of disappointment, adventure, courage, ingenuity, suspense and rescue. At the time it had seemed nothing but a series of fearful misadventures, but John saw, in looking back, that he had the material to make exactly the story which he wished he had felt.

So he began. For two days he wrote, then tore everything up and began again. In those two days, of course, he understood that he could not write for himself alone; nobody can—he must write to be read, and so he must cast his story in some suitable form.

He thought of the form soon enough: he wrote his book as a long love letter to the girl he had rescued; and that gave him his title, To Emilie, Wherever You Are.

To Emilie was by no means one of the grand successes of the year, but it was a best seller. However, it was not a critical success, a fact which led John—who, however much he regretted his lack of youth, had no desire to jeopardize his middle age—to keep his mouth shut. To Emilie did not sound like the sort of book a respectable librarian should have written. So while his name appeared on the cover, it went unremarked; the world is full of John Stevensons. To look at him, it would never have entered anyone's head that he could have written To Emilie, so his secret was safe.

Movie companies pay little attention to critics, however, so one announced to the press that it had paid fifty thousand dollars for To Emilie, and did give John fifteen thousand, and hired him to come out to California for ten weeks as a technical adviser.

Ah, reckless youth, John thought, as he drove down Sunset Boulevard in the large, black, chauffeured studio limousine.

The thought—if it needs explanation—was ironic, for of course John felt neither youthful nor reckless, but merely timid at the idea of visiting a movie studio. But the phrase was now in his mind constantly, it had become an obsession almost, a fear, an aching desire; for naturally the writing of To Emilie had not even begun to supply him with the sensation he had longed for.

In fact, during the seven months he took to write the book, Janet Wharton worried about him. "What is the matter?" she would say. "You must be working too hard. You look so tired." And she would make him cups of hot cocoa in Mrs. Burnett's kitchen and bring them to his room at night.

Probably, John thought as he watched the palm trees whiz by, just recalling that awful year was enough to make one tired.

Everything a man does, of course, leaves its mark upon him, and sooner or later, reasonably or unreasonably, that mark will reappear, to influence or interfere with his way of living. "That awful year" of John Stevenson's lay unnoticed for a long, long time, then rudely it came to change him. To understand the change, we shall have to examine the facts of the "awful year."

A few days after his eighteenth birthday, John, an orphan, was forced to leave college for money reasons. So he did what a good many disheartened youths have done before him: he went to sea, but not—such was the economy of the 1920's—on a romantic windjammer or a dirty tramp, but on a glistening cruise ship; he was, in fact, a bus boy in the first-class dining saloon.

John neither then nor later pretended he liked the ship. But he could do nothing about it; he was on his way around the world, and he was stuck.

John Stevenson did not get around the world; if he had, there would have been no book. Rather, when he was halfway, in the midst of nowhere—for the company, bent on providing some unhackneyed experiences for its passengers, had plotted the cruise far from the usual places, with the result that, at this particular moment, the ship found itself deep among the Solomon Islands—John Stevenson jumped overboard.

It was not a quixotic jump. He jumped to save a lady who had fallen from a deck far above him. It did not seem even very brave; perhaps it all happened too quickly.

He was standing in the little space of deck—it was near the water—where he was allowed to take the air; it was sometime after midnight, the temperature was warm, the ocean seemed friendly. He saw the woman fall and struggle. He threw a couple of life preservers toward her, called to a waiter who was standing at a companionway, and then jumped. The water was unexpectedly pleasant, and he reached the terrified woman in a few minutes.

She was a pretty thing—he had seen her in the dining room—older than he, but not more than twenty-two or twenty-three. He got a life preserver fastened around her, slipped into the other one himself, calmed the lady as well as he could and then looked to see if the ship were turning.

It was not; it had not even stopped.

Later there were, of course, many explanations and excuses for this action, the most realistic being that the captain did not wish to risk his vessel among these ill-charted reefs; but theoretical common sense could not comfort John Stevenson and the lady much during the next few hours.

The girl's name was Eva Windom; she came from Pasadena, California, she was with her father and mother, she had been sitting on the rail, alone, looking at the stars when suddenly she had lost her balance. She was in no way prepared to die; she clung to John and comforted herself by assuring him that daddy would make them turn that old ship around and come back. John, from what he remembered, thought daddy was most likely cockeyed in the smoking room, but he did not disagree with Eva—under the circumstances he had immediately thought of her as Eva, not Miss Windom—and took what comfort he could from the fact that they were moving in some active current. He could only hope that the current would lead somewhere. It did.

At the first smattering of dawn they made out the silhouette of a palm-fringed atoll, but better—oh, far better—they soon saw, not three hundred yards from them, a fisherman standing on a reef, a spear in his hand. He was a native, and not much to look at, but he seemed a beautiful sight.

They called. He soon reached them in his outrigger, and in half an hour they were on dry land, at a little cluster of huts.

John Stevenson's first day in a motion-picture studio was not what he had imagined from the satirical books he had read.

He appeared to have been expected; he was quickly led to the office of the producer, who greeted him in excellent English; he was given an opulent lunch in the company of people who were rather wittier than he was; he was treated with unobtrusive respect.

It was only when he was taken out on the back lot to see a reproduction of the atoll that he felt at all uneasy. He had promised himself to keep his mouth shut, but this village was not a Solomon Islands village. The flowers: these hedges and walks and bushes and gardens of flowers which here in Hollywood had been so casually and carefully planted and arranged, well ——

"If I might make a suggestion," John said.

Whatever the many abilities of the natives of the Solomon Islands are, landscape gardening is not one of them. John remembered the hard-packed ground around the house of the headman of the village, Uli; it did not show even a blade of grass. The regulation of Nature into logical patterns is not much the concern of primitive people, a fact which applies not only to gardening but to everything else.

The easy life does it, probably, but John remembered that the systematic frivolity of the natives had almost driven him crazy.

It had begun that first day. Now to him and Eva, their rescue took on the quality of a miracle, and they expected something to be done about it. True, they did not imagine they would be snatched out of the Pacific, given rooms and baths and telegraph blanks; but they did desire a little more than momentary interest in the clothes they were wearing, and then almost total apathy.

At first John put the situation down to the barrier of language. Though Uli and some of the other men spoke pidgin English, John did not, and it was several days before he realized that those monotonous sounds were a perfectly efficient means of communication. However, even after both he and Eva were able to talk fluently, they could find no native who would sustain much fascination with their plight.

LIFE on the atoll was not actively unpleasant. John and Eva were supplied haphazardly with a place to sleep and food. It was just that to former residents of Pasadena, California, and Hartford, Connecticut, everything seemed so aimless—which is perhaps another way of saying that none of the natives did anything he didn't want to do.

This lack of organization of the hours of the day was one of the hardest things they had to bear. Eva took it better than John, for she was naturally indolent, and in the end fell into a routine which passed the time for her much as beauty shops, luncheons and movies had at home. But John, after he had built a house and learned how to fish and cook, and had found out, from Uli, just what they were in for, took an active step. He opened a school for the children.

For it was plain that getting away from the atoll was to be a matter of chance. The two large outriggers in which the natives went to the "big island" had been destroyed in a

(Continued on Page 140)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Change

By Rhina P. Espaillat

My heart was like a prisoner,
  It dreamed of wings.
It envied the windy freedom
  Of soaring things.

Now that you've checked its flight
  And it captured stands,
Why does it sing like a nightingale,
  Locked in your hands?

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

…n saw.
…ell, I have an angle"; only Mr. Barber …'a yangle," and John pretended he …stood. "Now, this girl you were on the … with. You've never seen her in all this …"
…o," John said.
…o you correspond?"
…o."
…ell me something," Mr. Barber said. …; she good-looking?"
…ery," John said.
… Barber seemed to talk to himself. "We … fix her up, anyway."
…hat?" John said.
…et me put it to you straight. Circum…es have kept you two people apart. You …what's-her-name."
…va."
…ow after twenty years you meet. …ve been waiting. She's been waiting. …suddenly realize you've been waiting for …other. See?"
…y word!" John said.
…t's a setup," Mr. Barber said. "Island …rs Reunited. Memories of Tropical …ts Keep Pair True to Each Other. With …onnections I could plant that story in …the papers in the country."
…ut ——"
… know, I know," Mr. Barber said. …pose she's married. I could make her … still long enough to take pictures. That's …e need. Pictures."
…h," John said.
…t would be a swell break."
…ell," John said, "well . . . I would … little time to think this over."
…ure, sure," Mr. Barber said. "And by …vay ——"

"By the way" was another shock. Mr. …er paid the check, took John out and …sited him in a great …mobile and headed …e studio. The motion …ure that had been …e from John's book, …he way, was entirely …ed, cut, scored and …y for release. John …to see it, now, at midnight, in a private …ection room.

…r. Barber, inadvertently, did himself a …t favor. He could never have known … all John's hopes and fears, his passions … desires, his longings and his aspirations …ld find themselves made clear and plain, … little room at midnight.

…hn loved the picture. It was what his life …uld have been, and wasn't. Suspense … love had been added.

…he love he should have had with Eva. …n sat and drank in the story of the mo… t he had lost. He had thought about it …ften, but now he saw it. The moment of …th he should have seized. That, he …lly realized, was what youth was. Mo…its seized. However reckless.

…he girl on the screen was Eva. After the … half hour she even looked like Eva. The …, the hair, the body; John remembered so …tely he wanted to call out.

… determination flooded over him. He …st make no excuses to himself any more. …ith would not find him; he must find …th. Twenty years had passed, yes. But …had waited, somehow, for some reason. …haps Eva too. He must seize the moment. …re was no time to lose.

…When he got home, he called Mr. Barber … woke him out of a sound sleep. "Find …a," he said. "I will do what you want."

"Atta boy," Mr. Barber said.

…R over a week, Mr. Barber's minions …nt to the search in New York. They tried …vain to discover old passenger lists, cus…nhouse records or hotel reservations that …uld put them on the Windom trail of …enty years before. Finally it was Mr. …rber himself, who sooner or later never …ed to be a genius, who picked up the …sadena telephone directory and found …a's name listed.

…After that it was simple. He went to …sadena, took her to lunch, and obtained … enthusiastic consent to fall in with his plans. Not really very much had happened to Eva since she had got back from the Solomons. She had been married and divorced, it was true, but both had been rather apathetic ceremonies. Daddy still took care of her, but life wasn't really very exciting. John; yes, she remembered John with great pleasure. He had been very brave.

Mr. Barber had an idea. Eva and John would meet on the set of the atoll—right back where they started.

"Oh, lovely," Eva said. "I'll wear a Hawaiian print dress I just bought."

JOHN had not let his determination flag, or his ardor stale. He would seize the moment, even though it came two weeks late. He stood, his arms tight around Eva, in front of the bogus hut of Uli, and tried not to blink as the flash bulbs went off in his face. I must not fail myself, he thought.

It had been a struggle. In the first place, he had not immediately recognized Eva. She had changed, put on weight, and her face was covered with panchromatic make-up for the cameras. It was only after she began to talk that it all came back to him. Her voice was just the same.

They had had not one moment alone. Photographers, prop men, electricians, Mr. Barber, his publicity men, representatives of syndicates, all these and more had witnessed the reunion. John's private passion had had to wait.

From the set they went to one of the sound stages. Everyone was given leis; they drank coconut milk and ate poi, which John had never tasted before. And then, for a grand clinch, a screen was let down, and the life of John and Eva was shown.

John sighed. Ah, he thought, it will work on Eva just as it worked on me, the magic we have missed these twenty years.

When the picture had been running half an hour, John felt a nudge in his ribs. He leaned over and Eva whispered in his ear.

"Listen," she said, "couldn't I sue these people for showing me on the screen like this? I mean, daddy wouldn't want ——"

John said, "Excuse me a moment."

He got up, went over to the door of the set, let himself out, walked down the blinding studio street, across the lawns to the main official entrance. As he passed out he took off the lei he had been wearing.

"Here," he said to the gateman, "for you."

"Gee, thanks," the gateman said.

That's what youth is, John thought, moments seized. But seized, not disinterred. And perhaps the reason I never seized Eva was that I always thoroughly disliked her. Even at eighteen. Still, there are moments, right moments. That's what I have learned. My adventure twenty years ago has finally come back to teach me that much. I must not delay.

John packed his bag at the hotel, took a taxi to the airport and overnight was in New York. He took a train home, got out his dilapidated car and drove at once to his cottage on the lake.

Janet Wharton was amazed and delighted to see him.

He waited until they had eaten the excellent dinner which she had cooked for them before he came to the point.

"Janet," he said, "you told me once that philosophy's business was to justify our doing the things we want to do."

"Yes."

"I hope, then, you will find some passage that will justify the proposition I am about to make to you."

"Oh, John," Janet said, "at last!"

John started. It couldn't—it couldn't be this easy. "Janet," John said, "you know . . . I believe, I'm not sure, but I believe I feel reckless."

Janet laughed. "And young?" she wanted to know.

John considered. But not for too long, not really for more than five seconds. "And young," he said.

THE END

Good temper is an estate for life. —WILLIAM HAZLITT.

"Soaping" dulls hair—
Halo glorifies it!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or cream shampoos hides its natural lustre with dulling soap film

● Halo is made with a new patented ingredient. Halo—not a soap, not a cream—cannot leave dulling film! ● So Halo reveals the true natural beauty of your hair the very first time you use it, leaves it shimmering with glorious highlights. ● Needs no lemon or vinegar after-rinse. Halo rinses away, quickly and completely! ● Makes oceans of rich, fragrant lather, even in hardest water. Leaves hair sweet, clean, naturally radiant! ● Carries away unsightly loose dandruff like magic! ● Lets hair dry soft and manageable, easy to curl! ● Buy Halo at any drug or cosmetic counter.

Halo Reveals the Hidden Beauty of Your Hair!

Elizabeth

Now be sleek-legged the feminine way in record time!

SWEET-SCENTED

Sleek

the one fragrant depilatory, that's really easy to use!

Feel how satin soft and baby-smooth your skin is after you've sleek-ed away unwanted hair with SLEEK! No more old fashioned masculine stubble-leaving methods for you, once you've tried this easy, sure, so-quick way. Sleek, 1.00.

For extra-satin finish, use Hand Lotion, 65¢ to 4.50.

At exclusive stores everywhere. If not available in your city, write directly to Elizabeth Arden, Dept. LHJ, 691 Fifth Avenue, New York 22.

*prices plus taxes

Arden

MR. CROSBY AND THE FIFTH FREEDOM

(Continued from Page 48)

the woods on their right, and the happiest memories of his youth were of summers here. This was Shangri-La. He had been pained when Mrs. Crosby regarded the cabin with humorous disfavor. She liked to go places in the car, often with too many people, invited on impulse, invariably with too much luggage. Mr. Crosby liked to stay put among his own things. To him their summer jaunts had been a dreadful succession of Sandwiche Shoppes, hotel rooms with poor beds, early rising and long hours of driving.

Then too, Mrs. Crosby's expeditions had invariably for goal—no matter what scenic goal was set—some visit to friend or relative.

Gas rationing had put an end to all that. Mr. Crosby privately considered the gas and tire shortage as the best thing that had happened to the Crosby family since Walter, Jr., known as Terry, had been born ten years before. With no place else accessible, the Crosbys had gone to the cabin, and the children loved it, and Mrs. Crosby owned it was a godsend. With characteristic zest she had started in to make it more livable. "A real summer home" was her phrase, and Mr. Crosby liked the sound of that.

He had not liked having the old wood stove go out, and the white-porcelain gas range she had acquired by some unwelcome miracle come in, but he could see Mrs. Crosby's point about convenience in cooking.

Electricity he balked at for a time. Its installation involved endless deals for wire and cables and equipment almost impossible to get, but it was managed. He said, "Lamp shades instead of light," occasionally, but admitted, when pressed, that it was a relief not to pump and fill lamps each day.

That, he thought, was everything. Now the cabin could be considered a home. He was pleased to hear Mrs. Crosby say dreamily, "There's a primitive quality here—we want to keep it." It was not till he found a spinning wheel beside the fireplace where he liked to stack his wood that he discovered the divergence in their ideas of the primitive. A box for logs. A copper sirup kettle for kindling. No more casual cartons of cedar chips and Sunday papers. A Cape Cod lighter.

But all this was behind him. Mrs. Crosby was a homemaker, and she had created a home—and an attractive one, he owned—out of definitely camplike rooms with heterogeneous furnishings. The darkened and waxed floor certainly showed off the handmade rugs, braided and hooked, as it would never have done in the days when it was innocent of finish, the days when he had tracked mud in on it.

So now if Mrs. Crosby wanted curtains to complete her scheme of things, she should have them, Mr. Crosby thought benignly, without objection as to price.

She was saying, "I'll get them tomorrow, I can get them done in time," and it was merely his way of carrying on communication, no pricking of alarm, that made him murmur:

"Time for what?"

He was conscious that she looked at him a little strangely. "Why, for the Burtons. Have you forgotten they were coming?"

"The Burtons?" Uneasy recollection stirred. "I know there was some talk. . . . Yes, I knew they were coming, sometime."

"This week end. I'm sure I ——"

"This week end?" He digested that. Then he said restively, "I don't know why we have to have the Burtons. We see enough of them all winter."

"That's just it. When we're so close all winter and we've talked so much about this place, it would seem queer not to ask them to motor up, now they can come."

"All right. We'll have them this week end and get it over with."

"Why, Walter, you like the Burtons!"

"For sure I like the Burtons. That doesn't mean I want them in my hair up here. But if you've asked them ——"

He went back to his book. Extraordinary finds, those Azaba caves. Extraordinary, how from a few bones, a necklace of primitive teeth, you reconstructed the true past.

"I'll put them in Terry's room." Mrs. Crosby was planning out loud and Mr. Crosby let the words wing past his ears till he caught a recurrent "Marjorie" and something about the bathroom.

"Marjorie?" he said then, warily.

"Marjorie Kemper," said Mrs. Crosby. "Marjorie and Joan. That's her daughter, you know. The one Sheila's age. I thought it would be lovely for Sheila ——"

"You mean they're coming too?"

"DARLING, I've been crazy to have Marjorie come here, to show her this place, and I thought it would be nice to have them all at the same time. Her husband's still in Washington, so that makes it just right for the rooms. A real house party," said Mrs. Crosby happily. "I've always wanted to have a house party."

Her artless enthusiasm disarmed him. Oh, well, let her show it off—she'd worked hard enough at it.

Probably those Azaba cave women had tucked grain baskets into niches, had spread out animal skins with artistry. Then asked in the Joneses.

The thought amused him and he said merely, "It will be a lot of work for you."

"Oh, I've got that planned. Alva will come in to help. Her husband will bring her on his way to the lumber camp and pick her up nights. We can stack the dinner dishes."

They wouldn't, Mr. Crosby reflected gloomily. If he knew Mrs. Crosby, they would be doing them, surreptitiously, at midnight.

He asked, "Where do you plan to put them?"

"The Burtons in Terry's room. That's a bunk bed, but it's comfortable. And Marjorie and Joan in Sheila's room. That couch there was planned for an extra bed."

"They'll meet each other in the bathtub."

"If it's nice weather they'll do their tubbing in the lake, the way you like to. And having even one bathroom is certainly a lot better than the old way."

"I suppose the kids park on couches."

She said hesitantly, "I thought Sheila had better come in with me."

"With you?" he said dubiously. "Well—maybe." Sheila, at thirteen, was unpredictable, and rather critical of her young brother. They might scrap. So he said, more cheerfully, "Okay. Terry and I will camp on the couches."

"But that would mess up the room."

"Well, you've got to put us somewhere," he said reasonably. "You can't just hang us up on hooks."

"What I thought was . . . people aren't going to feel at ease if they see you're sleeping in the living room. So I thought—well, it would be perfectly natural for you and Terry to be together somewhere ——"

"But where?"

"There's the barn. I know it's cluttered up now," said Mrs. Crosby hurriedly, "but I could straighten it out. There's the brass bed you made such a fuss at parting with, and we could put up the Army cot for Terry. There's any amount of old furniture out there."

There was any amount of everything out there. The barn had not been a barn for twenty-five years. It had been a shelter for discards and a place for the occasional carpentry Mr. Crosby enjoyed. It stood at some distance from the house, close to the lake on a slope which had made it ineligible for a garage, a nice log building to look at, with its roof of silvered shakes, moss-grown; but the interior, almost windowless, was Stygian when the wide doors were shut, and it was damp and dusty, the floor rotten in places, the beams dripping cobwebs.

"It will be like camping out," was Mrs. Crosby's preposterous declaration.

"Camping out, my eye!" said Mr. Crosby. "You don't pick a junk house to camp in. Well," he subsided, "I can make do for a week end."

Campho-Phenique Helps SOOTHE AND HEAL MINOR BURN

RELIEVE PAIN! COMBAT INFECTION! T the 2-way help you get from Campho-Pher the liquid antiseptic that relieves pain too!

APPLY CAMPHO-PHENIQUE QUICK, to cuts, burns; cold sores, fever blisters; scrat non-poisonous insect bites. Relieves pai aids Nature to heal by combating infe USED BY MANY DOCTORS, dentists and es. Ask for "Cam-fo Fen-eek". Soothing stainless. Popular more than 50 years.

CAMPHO-PHENIQ

THE PAIN-RELIEVING ANTISE

Pain soothed Promptl

BOILS BROUGHT TO A HEA

Quicker

Nature often causes a boil to to a head and thus ease pa misery..BUT..doctors agree moist heat coupled with a poultice action helps bring boils to a head quicker. An easy, practical way for you to apply moist heat is by using proven, world-famous

Antiphlogistin

MEDICATED POULTICE DRESSING

Helps in 3 ways. eases pain and te ...2—softens the relieving soreness.. increases blood cir tion, localizes and b the boil to a head qui

Arlene H money for YOU

Greeting Cards

SHOW California CHRIST AND EVERYDAY CARDS

50 for $1

It's EASY to earn extra cash Christma year 'round. Just show Arlene's beautifull trated greeting cards. DESIGNED IN CALIFC Christmas—name imprinted—Everyday, Rel etc. Created by Arlene for HER REPRESENTA ONLY—Obtainable from no other source. 50c profit on fast selling assortments. Wri GORGEOUS FREE FOLDER and money m plan today—don't delay. Be first with these CALIFORNIA cards—and get that extra Send no money.

Write to ARLENE GREETINGS 4618 PACIFIC BOULEVA LOS ANGELES 11, CALIF.

or Arlene Greetings Allendale, New Jersey

Sell NEW, DIFFERENT, EXCLUSIVE CHRISTMAS CARDS 50 with name imprinted

Pen-n-Brush STUD

EXTRA $$$ New Bonus Plan earns you up to and OVER 100% PROFIT

Compare our 21-folder "Cha Cheerio Ass't, sells for $1, sent proval, no investment. Also new mas Carol Ass't with music; Seals, Religious, Gift wraps, L Personal Album; Birthday, etc Candlette decorations everybod Full line personal stationery. Get SAMPLES many extra-profit impri Work with a leader. Write today. Pen-'n-Brush Studios 154 Nassau Street, New York 7,

Mrs. Crosby didn't say anything for a moment. Then she said flurriedly, "Why, Walter, I couldn't ask people to motor up from Chicago just for a week end! I said a—a visit."

"How much of a visit?" demanded Mr. Crosby.

Guilt, contrition, defiance and entreaty were in her voice. "I said a week or two."

A week or two. People on their necks every instant of that time. He was to be thrust into an outbuilding, away from his own things, his comfortable bed, his wife.

He didn't want to be separated from Mrs. Crosby. He loved her. He loved having her in the room with him, her head on the pillow beside him—no single bed for him!—cozily within sound and touch. Why, the times in their own room would be their only times together while those infernal guests were in the house. Didn't that mean anything to her?

He looked at her mutely. He was not an articulate man except in the classroom. A personal thing was difficult for him to reveal, and he did not attempt now to communicate his sense of secret hurt.

Mrs. Crosby was running on about things to make the barn comfortable and how nice it would be for Terry to have his father to himself, and he said dryly:

"Don't pile it on. It's all right. You're entitled to a house party if you want one. I'll take care of the barn myself."

He heaved, pushed, rearranged and broomed while Mrs. Crosby—he couldn't keep her out—made the beds, washed the enamelware, washed and dusted everything she could get her hands on. He found old screen doors and, splicing them together, made a screen for the wide barn door. He dragged out the wood stove and ran a pipe up through the roof. Wisconsin nights can be cold, and he did not propose to freeze while the Burtons and the Kempers basked by his wood fire or by the oil heaters in their bedrooms. He went up to the roof and nailed old sheets of tin over the cedar shingles about the pipe, and if Mrs. Crosby found the effect aesthetically distressing she did not say so. He had a feeling that he would really like to have her try to say so.

The final effect was bizarre, a combination of warehouse, bedroom, kitchen and workshop, but at least there was a lot of space—the barn was a long structure with no loft. "And it will give you privacy," Mrs. Crosby pointed out. He snorted, "Privacy—with Terry!" but already he was conceding that shaving at his leisure was better than getting up early to sprint into and out of a communal bathroom.

But, hang it, he didn't like this separation from Mrs. Crosby, and he didn't like carting his belongings down here. House party!

MRS. CROSBY was having an orgy of preparation. The curtains, beige and rust—or was it henna?—were bought, made and hung. The house was cleaned. It was no use in the world to tell her the place was clean enough as it was. By the time the guests were expected to arrive, the scene was set. The long chairs in which no one had time to rest were plumped invitingly with cushions, and low tables by them held alluring magazines that no one had had time to open.

The worried-about weather behaved itself, and the sun shone on the arriving guests. "Absolutely up to specifications," said Mr. Burton, and Mrs. Burton said, "Oh, you lucky, lucky people!" Marjorie Kemper said it was divine. "Such peace! Such quiet!" She praised the color scheme—"So right for this place"—and Mrs. Crosby beamed.

Dinner went off well. The sunset put out extravagant colors. The two girls roamed about outside, the Burtons, Mrs. Kemper and Mr. Crosby played cards. Mrs. Crosby pretended to knit, but she flitted out a good deal, and Mr. Crosby suspected she was doing the dishes. Everything went smoothly except when Mrs. Crosby reminded Terry of bedtime and he protested he didn't want to go alone down there.

"Where's down there?" Mrs. Kemper asked.

"Oh, he and Walter have a hide-out," said Mrs. Crosby. "A sort of rumpus room. That building down by the lake."

"It's a ratty old barn," said Terry.

"It hasn't been a barn for ages," said Mrs. Crosby quickly.

"It's a queer dump, but our own—eh, son?" said Mr. Crosby genially. "Come, Terry, I'll go down with you. You take my place, Sally. Time for you to play anyway."

"WE looked in the door," said Joan. "It's got a cookstove."

"It certainly has," said Mr. Crosby. "And any time I don't like the meals up here ——"

"Smart boy, Walter!" The way Burton grinned at him made Mr. Crosby wonder how Burton felt about being a guest. Just as every man felt, probably.

"Maybe I'll ask you down sometime," he said, grinning back.

He lighted a couple of gasoline lamps to have the place cheerful for Terry, and chatted away to make this bunking down here seem a lark to the boy. "I'll take you out fishing early tomorrow," he promised, and it occurred to him that it would be rather a relief to go out on the lake as early as he liked without waking Mrs. Crosby. He'd bring some coffee down here, and that old percolator; a little cedar would make a quick fire. He might make some toast. . . . He shaved cedar kindling and fussed over his bait box till the boy was asleep, and when he got back to the house the game was over.

"We were coming to look you up," said Mrs. Kemper.

"For men only," said Mr. Crosby.

A house party was something that required constant manipulation, Mr. Crosby discovered in the ensuing days. The idea, apparently, was to keep in incessant motion. It wasn't enough to sit and look at the lake or sail on it or swim in it; you had to get out in the car and drive over to inferior lakes and look at them, and eat chicken dinners at roadhouses in rooms with no view. And when you stayed on your own place you never, by any chance, just read and relaxed. You played cards or talked. There would have been no bearing it, Mr. Crosby came to feel, if it had not been for what Mrs. Crosby had rightly christened the hide-out.

He and Terry were out early each morning on the lake, and they managed their own breakfasts, which now included bacon and eggs and cereal. Cream, as Mr. Crosby remembered, could be kept sweet in a jar in a pail weighted with stones, sunk in the ice-cold spring. This did away with having to appear at a family breakfast—a meal that invariably coincided with the moment you had a good strike. And it made two less for the family breakfast, as Mr. Crosby pointed out when Mrs. Crosby remonstrated.

He found himself thinking it might be pleasant to fish as late as he liked afternoons, and have a meal here in the barn. He might do it—later on, of course, when all this frenzy of entertainment had subsided.

The Hutchinses had guests and gave one of their big buffet suppers. It was surprising to Mr. Crosby how many people there were now on the lake. Some quite interesting too.

(Continued on Page 145)

The Year Between

By Cathleen M. Carpenter

Too late now
To regret,
Too soon now
To forget.
This is the year between. . . .
After regretting,
Before forgetting,
How lonely this year between.

LITTLE LULU

"Kleenex pops up, too!"*

Little Lulu says... Only Kleenex has the Serv-a-Tissue Box—pull just one double tissue—up pops another! Compare tissues, compare boxes—you'll see why Kleenex is America's favorite tissue.

© International Cellucotton Products Co. *T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

MAKE EXTRA MONEY NOW
Sell 50 PERSONAL CHRISTMAS CARDS for $1
Easy quick way to earn daily cash. Show amazing value Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards, 50 for $1. FREE SAMPLES. Also show stunning new $1.00 Assortments—Christmas, Everyday, Gift Wrappings. Special money plan for churches, lodges, clubs. Get samples.
WETMORE & SUGDEN, Dept. J-21, 749 Monroe Ave., Rochester 2, N. Y.

CORNS
Removed by Mosco, also Calluses. Quick, easy, economical. Just rub on. Jars, 30¢, 50¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.
MOSCO ★CORN★ REMOVER

EYES TIRED?

TWO DROPS

QUICK RELIEF
Just put two drops of gentle, soothing Murine in each eye... then quick as a wink tired eyes feel wide-awake and... oh, so very rested. You're ready for work or play again... your eyes cleansed and refreshed. Murine—a scientific blend of seven important ingredients, is absolutely safe and should be used as often as your eyes tell you to.
MURINE FOR YOUR EYES

DRESS for YOU FOR ORDERING 3!
Thrilling new plan! Your choice of gorgeous new dress in your favorite style, size and color GIVEN to you for sending orders for only 3 dresses for your friends or family. Write for style presentation showing scores of latest fashions with actual sample fabrics. No money needed. You can get extra dresses and extra cash too—up to $22 a week in spare time. Write now!
Harford Frocks, Dept. P-9012, Cincinnati 25, Ohio

ENJOY ALL-OVER PROTECTION all day with fragrant scientific Cuticura
Let's face facts! Every normal person perspires all over all the time. That's why neither underarm protection nor daily bath is enough. You need two dependable safeguards: A daily bath with fragrant, medicated Cuticura Soap for exquisite cleanliness and sheer luxury. Then a dusting with Cuticura Talcum, the enticingly fragrant, silky-soft powder made to absorb and deodorize perspiration. You'll revel in this surer, longer lasting, daintier way to freshness —do try it!
Cuticura

PLEASE DON'T SKIP...

Disease Germs Thrive in Summer Heat!

Yes, Mother, she's right! Disease germs lurking in ordinary household dust and dirt thrive during the hot weather months. They're a constant menace to your family's health. That's why you should disinfect with "Lysol" every time you clean.

So DON'T SKIP adding "Lysol" brand disinfectant to the cleaning water this summer. When you see dirt go, you know that disease germs go as you clean. For "Lysol" is an effective, proven germ-killer that gives your family the kind of germ-killing protection you simply can't get with ordinary household cleansers.

For general cleaning use, you just add 2½ tablespoons of economical, easy-to-use "Lysol" to each gallon of cleaning water.

Keep your whole house hygienically clean with "Lysol." Disinfect floors, doorknobs, bathroom fixtures, shelves, stair rails . . . every time you clean.

More housewives use "Lysol" than all other household disinfectants combined! Play safe in your house by keeping two bottles handy...one in the bathroom and another in the kitchen...for every-time cleaning use!

The Largest Selling Household Disinfectant in the World!

ALL AROUND THE HOUSE, EVERY TIME YOU CLEAN . . . DISINFECT WITH . . .

"Lysol" Brand Disinfectant
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

A Concentrated Germicide

"ATHLETE'S FOOT" INFECTION and many other summer diseases lurk on bathroom floors. Keep yours safe with "Lysol"!

KILL GERMS WHERE THEY BREED! Empty your garbage pail, then disinfect and deodorize it with "Lysol" brand disinfectant.

KEEP SINK AND DRAINBOARDS . . . kitchen cabinets and shelves . . . hygienically clean with economical, easy-to-use "Lysol."

For FREE booklet on fighting disease germs, write to Dept. L.H.J.-487, Lehn & Fink, 192 Bloomfield Avenue, Bloomfield, N. J.

(Continued from Page 143)

He liked the Parmenters, and discovered Parmenter's brother was an ex-G.I. taking one of his own courses.

He wasn't sure he liked the Hildreth woman, but she stirred his curiosity. He had seen her about the lake, fishing or swimming or walking, almost invariably alone after her boy left to visit his father and his father's new wife, but this was the first time he had met her. She had taken her own name after the divorce. Her husband had been a fairly conspicuous playboy and Ellen Hildreth had certainly been about a lot, but now she made a point of blue jeans, no make-up, and a negligent manner. She had discarded the blue jeans this evening for a chartreuse frock, and she seemed to forget that fact, Mr. Crosby thought uneasily, when she crossed her long, slim legs.

Looking elsewhere quickly, he caught her grin at him. "I hate skirts," she said. "As a matter of fact, I rather hate being a woman."

Her directness evoked directness. "Why do you?"

"I like doing things alone. Women have to flock. Or cling."

"You seem pretty independent."

"Up here, yes. Here I do what I like when I like. But in town—a woman alone at a night club. That would be something, wouldn't it? If they let her in."

"Why do you want to go to a night club alone?" Or at all, he thought.

"Sometimes I like to be by myself. And just look on. A man can. It's the thought I can't that irks me." She had odd, light eyes with a trick of intent staring when her interest was caught and of remote gazing when bored, and now they looked bored with the explanation, the conversation.

"You would be very unhappy as a Batak," said Mr. Crosby.

"I dare say. . . . Oh, Spence!" Her voice raised to reach a man halfway across the room. "Can you find me more of that smoked salmon before I starve to death?"

"I'll find some," said Mr. Crosby, and went for it.

When he brought it she was gone, and after asking several people where she was he discovered her with the man Spence and practically a platter of salmon.

Strolling back from the party, Mrs. Crosby bantered, "I heard you were terribly taken by Ellen Hildreth. Several people reported you were running around asking for her."

"I was trying to bring her the salmon she asked for. She'd walked out on me."

"Ellen Hildreth—is that the woman who went off by herself when the moon came up?" asked Mrs. Kemper.

"Yes." Mrs. Crosby explained about Ellen Hildreth. "We all call her Ellen Hildreth behind her back," she said, "because she's so well known up here. Actually, I've scarcely spoken to her till tonight."

Marjorie Kemper said, "I thought it was rather affected—going off like that to be alone with the moon."

"She could be sincere," said Mr. Crosby thoughtfully.

"Those Hutchinses are nice people," said Thad Burton, and the talk shifted.

Two nights later the Newcombes—cottagers behind the point—gave a chowder party on their beach. Mr. Crosby did not think that chowder parties, away from the Eastern seaboard, were worth the name, but he and Burton and Parmenter got together and had some interesting talk. Then Mrs. Newcombe came up with a "We can't have you deserting the ladies like this!" and Parmenter and Burton trailed off behind her.

Mr. Crosby sat where he was. Presently a tall shape in blue jeans stood before him.

"Why would I be unhappy as a Batak?" asked Mrs. Hildreth. "And what is a Batak?"

Mr. Crosby told her, "It's a tribe in Sumatra. An extremely patriarchal tribe where woman is so negligible that there is not even a name for her as wife, only words like 'disher up of food.' She is always under orders—her father's, then her husband's. I just happened to think of it when you were talking about doing things on your own."

"She's a fool to put up with it," said Mrs. Hildreth, dropping down beside him.

"It's the tribal custom." Mr. Crosby's voice had its interested, informative ring. "You conform to your tribal customs."

"As few as possible." Mrs. Hildreth had a sudden laugh, attractive in its spontaneity.

"Ah, but you acknowledge them."

WALKING back across the point, her arm through her husband's, Mrs. Crosby asked if he'd had a good time.

"Yes, I did." Mr. Crosby was surprised that it was so. "That Ellen Hildreth, as you call her, is an intelligent girl to talk to."

"You seemed to find her so," said Mrs. Crosby without rancor. "I never know what to say to her. I don't believe she likes women. . . . I think every one had a lovely time," she said happily, sinking her voice not to reach the group behind. "And day after tomorrow we're giving a barbecue."

"We are?"

"We've got to do something. And that will pay back. And a barbecue isn't much work—I mean, it doesn't take elaborate things," she amended quickly before Mr. Crosby could say it was plenty work for the man at the grill. She added, "You'd better see that outdoor place is all right. We haven't cooked there for a year."

"Right." They were at the barn now, and they paused and he said, "Come on, Terry. Here's where we came in."

Every one said good night, and Mr. and Mrs. Crosby kissed. The kiss was a reminder and a stab. He said under his breath, "This is the heck of a life!" and she said quickly, "Sh-h!" and then fervently, "Oh, I do hope it will be good weather!"

It either would or it wouldn't, he thought, and if it wasn't good they could eat inside, and that would free him of the grill job. He rather liked grilling things in the open for the family, but a flock of people was a definite chore. However, this was important to Mrs. Crosby and the house party would end sometime—one week was already over—and then there would be peace. But those two weeks had been bitten out of this month's vacation—he taught the rest of the quarter—so soon there would be only week ends.

The day of the barbecue dawned bright and clear in spite of a worrying prediction from the radio of possible showers, and it continued bright till four o'clock, when tables and chairs had been set out, and dishes stacked, and then the sky grayed over ominously, and at five the rain began in a steady, relentless downpour.

Mrs. Crosby was anguished. "They won't come," Mr. Crosby told her, comfortingly, but she said, "Of course they'll come! They'll expect to eat inside."

"Then feed them inside."

"I can't!" Her eyes were wide with horror. "I've asked nearly thirty people."

"Thirty?"

"I had to," she defended. "The Hutchinses and their guests and the Newcombes and some boys for the girls and a boy for Terry—and I can't pack them in. That living room isn't big enough. And with no dining room—we can't use the porch, for the rain's coming in there. They'll be like sardines."

The vision of thirty people in that living room presented itself remorselessly. Mr. Crosby showed admirable restraint. He did not say, "Why did you count on the weather?" He said something about putting the kids in the kitchen.

Mrs. Crosby said despairingly, "I can't grill all those things on that gas stove. . . . I thought it would be so jolly."

"I'll grill them in the barn," said Mr. Crosby briskly. "I'll give the barbecue. That old wood range is just the thing."

"Walter! You really think—in that old barn ——"

"It will be a knockout," said Mr. Crosby. "Now let's get the stuff down there."

It was a knockout. The barn had room for everyone: on the old furniture, on the beds, cushioned like couches, on more cushions on the floor, on the buffalo robe spread on a discarded mattress. The lamps and lanterns shed circles of light. Dripping raincoats were parked in stalls; muddied feet did not matter on the old rugs.

The big stove gave a cheerful warmth, and over its hardwood coals and in iron spiders on its top the hamburgers and hot dogs were gloriously browned. Coffee percolated fragrantly. Formality was impossible. Mr. Crosby was a genial master of ceremonies. Being behind his own stove seemed to inspire him as did being behind his desk, and he spoke with authority. He played hillbilly records on the phonograph that had to be wound up, and then everybody started singing. The party lasted till after midnight and the rain had stopped by then and the dispersals were lingering.

Mrs. Crosby, at parting, kissed him gratefully. "You were wonderful," she said. He thought he was too. Not once had he said, "What did you expect to do if it rained?"

The only trouble was that now the hideout was in the limelight. People took to drifting down to it when they came to the house. Ellen Hildreth sauntered along two mornings later, and paused at the open door. Mr. Crosby was putting a new generator in a gasoline lamp and she looked on, then her eyes roved about the place.

"This is cute," she said. She gave her sudden laugh. "Much saner than divorce."

Mr. Crosby looked up sharply. "There's no question ——"

"It's a revolutionary idea—a zipper on the bottom where everything is!"

"MY TWINS proved Chix gauze diapers softer, more absorbent"

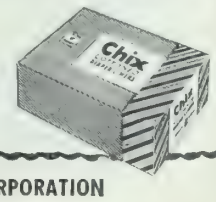
"For several weeks I diapered Bobby with these wonderful CHIX diapers with the soft cushion weave. Joanie kept on wearing old-fashioned diapers," reports Mrs. Robert McHugh of Bergenfield, N. J. "What an amazing difference! Absorbent CHIX were easier to wash . . . dried so much quicker than heavy, bulky cloth. And cushion weave gauze was softer for Bobby's sensitive skin. P.S. Of course my twins' diaper test convinced me. I soon switched Joanie to these softer diapers too."

CHIX gauze diapers will make your baby more comfortable, lighten your work. 20 x 40 inch size folds to fit as baby grows. Sold at leading stores.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

THE DIFFERENCE IS IN THE SOFT CUSHION WEAVE

. . . and remember



DIAPERS DON'T SOIL

when you use

Chix

COTTONED DIAPER LINERS

- DISPOSABLE
- FOR USE INSIDE REGULAR DIAPERS

CHICOPEE SALES CORPORATION
New York 13, N. Y.

One woman tells another—

Secrets? Gossip? Perish the thought! What the women in this story tell one another, they'd be glad to shout from the housetops.

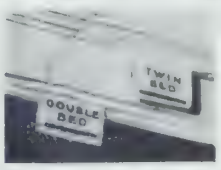
We got it straight from the pen of young Mrs. J. B. Patterson, Jr., of Cincinnati.

Seems Mrs. Patterson was married during the war, when there were practically no Pequot Sheets available for civilians. So she bought whatever brand she could find . . . and thanked her lucky stars when her grandmother sent her two of her own long-used Pequots. Writes Mrs. Patterson:

"Those Pequots had seen plenty of service, but they still looked firm and soft, and so white. They still do today!"

And so do the Pequots, cut down to crib size, which her mother sent along when the Patterson baby was born. So now:

"Four generations of my family use Pequots. And at the rate mine are not wearing out, I expect to be able to pass them on to my granddaughter."



There are plenty of grandmothers around today who had Pequots in their trousseaux. And whose daughters advise their daughters to get Pequots for good looks, value and long wear.

Today, you get two plus Pequot features*—two more fine reasons to buy dependable Pequot Muslins—America's most popular sheets.

Pequot Mills, Salem, Massachusetts
Also makers of Pequot Fine Combed Percales

so good-looking .... so long-wearing

PEQUOT MUSLIN SHEETS PILLOW CASES

*Projecting size tabs for quick finding on the shelf.

*Double-tape selvages to give extra strength.

PEQUOT SHEETS

Pronounced "PEE-KWIT"

Her eyes flicked admiration at him. "Shaken off the shackles."

"Just for the duration," he said, grinning in spite of himself. "This is merely an overflow receptacle."

Her glance wandered along a row of books on a table. "I wish I'd known you when my boy was here. He's got a good mind, but I don't know enough to direct it. And his father's too flighty."

"What about his school?" asked Mr. Crosby.

She told him about the school and they talked school problems while he worked. He felt sorry for her—a nice girl, making do with a thin time.

She carried off two of his books. "To improve what I laughingly call my mind," she said, with a funny grimace.

That day the Burtons left. They'd meant to stay only a week, they declared, and here they'd stayed ten days! Such a wonderful time. Mrs. Kemper and Joan were staying a few days more.

That afternoon, when Mr. Crosby was pottering around the garage, Mrs. Crosby came out to him. She said, "You know I could put Terry back in his room now. And Sheila could take one of the couches. If you wanted to move back."

"Wouldn't that mess up the living room?"

"That doesn't matter with just Marjorie. I mean, she's seen how nice it can be."

"Oh," said Mr. Crosby. "We might as well carry on as we are a few days more."

"I just thought you wanted to get back to your room."

"Oh, no. I'm all set down there now." Plenty of drawers and shelf space, ties on convenient nails, kindling in cartons, books and tools where he could put his hands on them. "I'm doing very well down there," he said, and then, as Mrs. Crosby's silence seemed to expect something further, he produced, "And it's a good thing, as you said, to see so much of Terry."

A man who so long has to fight against misfortune, wants strength to meet a sudden kindness.

—PAUL GERALDY: quoted in The Treasury of Wit and Wisdom: Norman Lockridge (Biltmore Publishing Company).

Mrs. Crosby said nothing for a moment. Then she asked, "Did you give him permission this afternoon to go out in that canoe with Mrs. Hildreth?"

"Why, yes. She paddled in and asked me if it was all right."

"It looks awf'ly tippy."

"Oh, she's expert—and Terry's a good swimmer. And she misses her own boy."

"Then you don't want to come back?"

"No, I'm fine," said Mr. Crosby.

That night the moon was full. Mr. Crosby regarded it admiringly as he stood at his barn door in his pajamas. Brilliant whiteness and dark shadow lay about him; across the lake swept a wash of white light. The diving raft, anchored offshore, stood dark in it and the raised platform and ladder to it looked sketched in charcoal.

Then he saw that someone was moving on the raft. A slim figure stood on the platform and a voice called, "Hoo-hoo!" to him. Ellen Hildreth was out there, having herself a lonely moonlight swim.

His first reaction was to duck inside, then he told himself that pajamas were more covering than a swim suit.

"I'm borrowing your raft," she called. "Only diving spot there is. D'you mind?"

"Not at all. Go right ahead," said Mr. Crosby.

She poised, her body a fine arc, then shot into the water. In a moment her head appeared, near shore. "Come on in," she said. "It's heavenly."

"Well, I ——"

"What you 'fraid of?" She laughed across the water to him. "It's wonderful."

The night was hot and the water tempting. And it seemed prudish to refuse—there had been a challenge in that laughter which pricked him. He said, "Coming right up," and went indoors. Terry was sound asleep on his cot. The voices had not waked him, but Mr. Crosby tiptoed into his bathing trunks and shut the door cautiously behind him. Ellen Hildreth was diving off the raft again. He watched her, then plunged in.

It had been years since he had gone swimming in the moonlight. It was like swimming in quicksilver, he thought. And the coolness was delighting. He raced Ellen Hildreth and she won, they climbed on the raft and dived, then swam about lazily, then sat on the raft, not talking, just sitting and looking out. There was a sense of escapade in him, of buoyant escapade, only faintly tinged with uneasiness. This was a perfectly natural thing to do, he told himself, this moonlight swim; it was a pity that people couldn't always be natural and untrammeled.

She tilted her head to look at him. "Now aren't you glad?"

"Very glad."

The moonlight was so bright that he could see the pale color of her lips. She was smiling at him. "Now what do we do?"

She meant dive or swim, he supposed. He supposed it quite urgently. He said, "One more dive and then back to shore for me."

"And so to bed and no harm done." She was paraphrasing Pepys, and he laughed with her.

She took the dive first, then raised a moonstruck hand from the water. "'By!" She was swimming off toward the point, swimming back to her cottage. Reckless woman—ought he to get a boat and watch over her? No, he thought, that must be the way she had come, her way, and she would want no interference from anyone. A singular girl.

The whole thing was rather singular, he reflected. It was quite lovely and unique, but already it seemed fortunate that Terry had not waked and that this would be no subject for future conversation.

So he said nothing about it the next morning and it was disconcerting to have Mrs. Hildreth toss it into the middle of their luncheon table. She had appeared, as they were eating on the porch, and invited them to her cottage that afternoon. Some friends of hers were coming through.

"Theater people," she said vaguely. "They've just been to the Lunts or somewhere. Very amusing people." That was for them all, then she threw at Mrs. Crosby, "I hope you don't mind the way your husband and I were carrying on last night?"

Mrs. Crosby looked blank. Ellen Hildreth laughed.

"Didn't he tell you? . . . Sorry, chum," she said humorously to Mr. Crosby. "I thought you'd reported back." To Mrs. Crosby again, "Just good clean fun on the raft. A moonlight swim to cool us off."

"Oh!" said Mrs. Crosby. "Oh, yes. Yes. We often do that."

Once, before Terry was born, Mr. Crosby reflected, an excessively hot night had sent them into the lake.

"Well, do come," said Mrs. Hildreth. "Fivish."

"It would be lovely," said Mrs. Crosby politely, "but we are going to the island for a picnic supper."

"Well, get it in if you can. Picnics are more bearable if you're pie-eyed." She drifted off with that casual, indifferent wave of her hand that had been so charming in the moon-touched water.

"Well!" said Mrs. Crosby in a flurried voice. "I don't see how we can get it in—unless you particularly want to, Marjorie?" She didn't look at Mr. Crosby at all.

"I'm not exactly fascinated by the notion of getting pie-eyed," said Mrs. Kemper.

"That's just a façon de parler," said Mrs. Crosby.

She was badly rattled, Mr. Crosby knew, when she took to French. He couldn't say, "There wasn't a thing to it, Sally!" in the presence of Marjorie Kemper, who was

(Continued on Page 148)

New Rinso with SOLIUM

—the scientific Sunlight Ingredient

puts sunshine in your wash

...even on rainy days!

That's why ONLY NEW Rinso

1 WASHES WHITE CLOTHES WHITER THAN BRAND NEW

2 WASHABLE COLORS GET BRIGHTER THAN BRAND NEW

THINK of it! All the year 'round . . . rainy days or sunny days . . . whether clothes are hung indoors or out . . . new Rinso with Solium, the scientific Sunlight ingredient, puts a new brilliance in your wash—a brilliance never known before!

Results will amaze you! In your very first wash you'll see white clothes come whiter than brand new! You'll see washable colors look brighter than brand new! You'll even see yellowed and grayed clothes made whiter than brand new! No other soap can do this because no other soap contains Solium.

And, the oftener you wash clothes THE WHITER AND BRIGHTER THEY GET! What's more, you'll see these results no matter how hard the water. Get new Rinso containing Solium today!

No other soap can give these results because no other soap contains Solium

SOLIUM

. . . the miracle Sunlight ingredient . . . is an exclusive development of wartime scientific research by the world-famous laboratories of Lever Brothers Company.

NEW Rinso WITH SOLIUM

SO SAFE FOR CLOTHES . . . SO KIND TO HANDS

you're safe at home with new Mennen baby powder

a cool winner—New Mennen Baby Powder really works wonders when the mercury heads for a hundred. It helps keep baby cool, cooing and comfortable. Acts fast to absorb excess perspiration. And it's borated, too, for extra protection.

defeat prickly heat! New Mennen Baby Powder shoos away mean old Prickly Heat. And this silky, snow white powder helps prevent and relieve chafing, itching, diaper rash and urine irritation.

so flower fragrant! Gives you a wonderful, breeze-swept feeling just to get a whiff of that light, lovely scent. It's tops with the crib crowd! P. S. New Mennen Baby Powder is fine for mother and big sister, too! Get some today!

so soft! so white! so cool for baby!

(Continued from Page 146)

soaking all this up like blotting paper. So he said, "That's her New York pose."

"Gee, dad," said Terry wistfully, "why didn't you take me out?"

"I didn't want to wake you, son."

"Aw, I could have gone to sleep again."

"We'll all go tonight, if it stays hot," said Mrs. Crosby.

They would, too, Mr. Crosby reflected. She'd make moonlight bathing an evening routine as long as Marjorie Kemper stayed.

She was careful not to seek him out when they rose from the table. "Now, girls, we've got to start packing for that picnic."

Mr. Crosby removed himself from the scene. He was tinkering at a box he had promised to repair for Mrs. Crosby when she suddenly materialized in the doorway.

"Where's Terry?" she asked in a lowered voice.

"He went off with the Riggs boy."

"Oh! Well, I just wanted to say," said Mrs. Crosby, her voice carefully muted and very, very steady, "that I'm not one of those clinging, possessive women. I don't want you to feel that you have to consider me at all. I know people change. Quite suddenly. Or perhaps you were tired of me for a long time and didn't know it. I am not going to stand in your way. If love means anything at all it means you want the other person happy, even if not with you."

"What are you talking about?" exploded Mr. Crosby.

"About—about you and Mrs. Hildreth." Her voice was less steady and her words came faster and faster. "If she's the one you want . . . out on the lake with her at night—always stopping at this place and hanging around—and not wanting to come back to me and not missing me at all ——"

"Are you crazy?" said Mr. Crosby. "Mrs. Hildreth doesn't mean anything more to me than"—his eyes roved wildly and hit on an incongruous object—"than that cuckoo clock. I can't help it if she comes over; she's lonesome, I expect. It didn't mean a thing, my going out to swim with her. It seemed standoffish to refuse. There wasn't a thing to it. You ought to know that." Sincerity blazed in him. "And you do know it," he said. "You know no other woman in the world matters to me."

"But you didn't want to come back to me," said Mrs. Crosby.

"Of course I wanted to come back to you!"

"No, you didn't. You said you were fine. And it seemed so queer—and I got to thinking that this way you could see her ——"

"I never wanted to see her. She made a nuisance of herself."

"But you didn't miss me."

"I missed you terribly." He went over to her now and gave her a little shake, then hugged her up to him. "Don't you think I've missed this?"

"But you wanted to stay down here ——"

"Well—this place ——" He looked about, then he said hesitantly, "I've sort of made this my place. There's something about being on your own. I missed you every night, but there's something about being your own boss. A man," said Mr. Crosby, "likes to have the fifth freedom."

After a moment she raised her head. "The fifth freedom? Why, what do you mean?"

It was his profession to clarify his statements, but he couldn't make this clear. Nothing he could say seemed to be the whole of it or fitly represent his feeling. He said finally, "Oh, I guess that means being himself. The way he is." That sounded inadequate and he said, "You wouldn't understand."

"Oh, but I do!" said Mrs. Crosby earnestly. Still in the circle of his arms, she looked about her: at the starkly realistic place of blunt convenience, the brass bed, the buffalo robe on the cot, the stove, the rocking chair, the workbench, the books. "I can see what you mean. It's a nice place, Walt, a man's place. You ought always to have it to come to, when you like. And I could fix it up ——"

"No!" said Mr. Crosby. "That's what I'm talking about. Freedom from being fixed up!"

"Oh!" said Mrs. Crosby. THE END

DAVOL

My Candidate is . . .

the NEW NURSER with the ANTI-COLIC* NIPPLE

High spot of Davol's new complete "Anti-Colic" Nurser is the famous "Anti-Colic" Nipple—year-in, year-out favorite!

The "Anti-Colic" Nipple has a short tip and firm sloping shoulder. This encourages correct sucking action for proper mouth development! "Dual-Purpose"†, it fits narrow-neck bottles too!

DAVOL'S SLIMMER BOTTLE—Easier to hold, fill, clean.

DAVOL'S AMBER RUBBER SEAL—Keeps formula sterile while traveling or in icebox.

DAVOL'S PLASTIC COLLAR—Holds nipple firm!

DAVOL Anti-Colic* NURSER

*T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.
†Registration applied for.

Department L8-7
Davol Rubber Company
Providence 2, Rhode Island
Gentlemen:
Please send me the free booklet, "Baby Feeding Made Easy," containing helpful, informative answers to my feeding problems.
Name .....
Address .....
City .....State.....
Age of Baby.....

Keep Baby SAFE from S-P-I-L-L-S

BABEE-TENDA*
STURDY FOLDING SAFETY CHAIR

Tuck your young squirmer in this low, tumbleproof chair for feeding or play. Patented safety features. Folds for easy carrying or storage. Converts to many-use junior table. Grand baby-gift. Doctor-approved.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

SEND FOR FREE FOLDER
Not sold in stores. See phone book for authorized agency or write today for helpful illustrated folder.

THE BABEE-TENDA CORP.
Dept. 5G, 750 Prospect Avenue, Cleveland 15, Ohio

PHOTO BY ELIZABETH HIBBS

Infantile paralysis is no longer necessarily a crippling disease; parents can help check its spread by understanding and precaution.

Protecting Your Child From Polio

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen

President, Chicago Board of Health

S we approach the "infantile-paralysis months" (late summer and early fall) I wish I could tell you that there is a miraculous preventive and cure. Unfortunately, I cannot do this. Poliomyelitis is still one of the few diseases against which science has failed to find a sure weapon in the form of a cure or preventive. However, the picture is much brighter than it was even a short time ago. Thanks to research by groups of doctors in all parts of the country, I can assure you of two things: First, if your child should get poliomyelitis, there is a better chance that he will recover, without lasting disability, if he has prompt, expert treatment. Second, that if you will read this article carefully and follow out the suggestions I am going to make, you can reduce the likelihood that your child will get polio.

We in Chicago have concerned ourselves deeply about this disease, and I am proud to report that some of the most notable contributions in recent years to knowledge of it have come from researchers in the Chicago Health Department.

During one polio outbreak in our area, our doctors and nurses spent weeks making visits to homes in the polio neighborhoods. In addition to careful studies of the condition of sick and well children alike, the research workers made exhaustive records of the date, nature and duration of every contact between children who were sick, or became sick, and those who remained well.

As a result of these and other similar studies, there have emerged two definite facts about polio:

1. Many children are infected with the virus of poliomyelitis without ever getting such characteristic acute symptoms of the disease as fever, nausea, headache, stiff neck, muscle pains or paralysis. In fact, some of the evidence indicates that only a tiny fraction of the infected children have the disease in its acute, recognizable form. The other, or "subclinical," cases have no symptoms at all, or only a mild fever or other signs of a slight cold or upset.

2. While the disease may be spread by several methods, possibly including contaminated food or water, and filth-carrying insects, our studies indicate that by far the most important method is direct contact. Generally speaking, the children who get sick during an epidemic are those who play closely with other children at the time they are coming down with the disease.

This is in contradiction to the favored theory of recent years that polio was disseminated in some way from the stools of victims, possibly through the medium of flies. An argument used to reinforce this hypothesis was that two children in the same family seldom contracted polio, but our records show that such cases happen frequently.

Here is a typical chain of contacts and infections of the kind our polio-research team traced down during one of its studies: A nine-year-old boy became ill within a week after coming home from summer camp. On the day his first symptoms GRATEFUL young mothers from Maine to California tell us that Doctor Bundesen's baby booklets have been of the greatest help to them in caring for their own babies. The first eight booklets cover your baby's first eight months. They sell for 50 cents. The second series of booklets covers the baby's health from nine months to two years—seven booklets for 50 cents. The booklets will be sent monthly; be sure to tell us when you want the first booklet. A complete book on the care of the baby, a necessary supplement to the monthly booklets, OUR BABIES, No. 1345, is 25 cents. A booklet on breast feeding, A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER, No. 1346, sells for 6 cents. Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

Still trying to say—
"Um-m-m, Good!"

Okay, honey, tuck in your tongue!

It'll be quite some time before mother hears you say, "Umm, Gerber's all taste so good!" But like thousands of other tots, you've been smacking your lips over the wide variety of Gerber's—ever since you began to eat from a spoon.

Babies certainly go for variety.

The doctor said so way back when we started you on Gerber's 3 Cereals. And ever since, Gerber's have kept your spoon filled with tempting surprises—Soups, Vegetables, Fruits, Meat-Combinations and Desserts!

Calling all Mothers!

Remember, doctors approve Gerber's too! So, you know baby's flavor-favorites are as nutritious as they are delicious! For easier change-over and less leftovers, Gerber's 15 Junior Foods come in the same size container as Gerber's 20 Strained Foods! All are the same low price too!

Babies are our business... our only business!

FREE! Samples of Gerber's 3 tasty Cereals. Write Dept. 87-8, Gerber's, Fremont, Mich.

Gerber's
BABY FOODS
Fremont, Mich. — Oakland, Calif.

3 CEREALS • 20 STRAINED FOODS • 15 JUNIOR FOODS

THEY dry in record time, indoors or out. And just look at the many other advantages.

Easier to wash — their open weave permits speedier washing with pure Ivory Flakes, Ivory Soap or Dreft.

Faster drying speeds diaper laundering, indoors or out.

Highly absorbent — their surgical weave absorbs more thoroughly.

Have no hems to chafe or irritate baby's tender skin.

Curity Foldline, a patented feature, woven into the fabric, for easy, convenient size adjustment as baby grows.

Endorsed by medical authorities and leading hospitals.

NURSERY PADS • BIBS • MASKS • COTTON

Pat. No. 2145137

KENDALL MILLS — Division of The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. JN-7

Enclosed is 25¢ for full-size Curity Diaper and literature on Curity Nursery Products. (Only one diaper to a family.)

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

appeared, he was playing with his cousin, whom he did not see at any other time during the summer. Eight days later, the cousin became ill. Four days after that, one of the cousin's sisters came down with polio, and the next day a second sister was taken sick. A young brother and baby nephew of the sisters both had polio ten days later; they had been playing with the sisters the day the first one became ill!

The reason these infections are passed so devastatingly from child to child is that the disease is transmitted most easily, it seems, during the period just before the symptoms appear—that is, by children who are apparently well at the time.

This fact gives us a definite method of attack, and one that everyone can employ. It is simply this:

If polio should appear in your neighborhood, keep your child out of close contact with other children until the scare is over.

This doesn't mean that your youngster must be completely isolated. Casual outdoor play may be permitted, so far as we know now. But the intimate contact of prolonged indoor play can be responsible for the spread of the disease, as is shown by the case of the cousins.

If one child of your family has been exposed or shows any signs of illness during the polio season, the doctor should be called immediately to make sure whether it is or is not polio. But the sick child should also be isolated completely from brothers and sisters. Children should not sleep in the same room.

At the time polio is prevalent, too, it is important to insist on plenty of rest for children, and to avoid chilling. The precise significance of these factors is not definitely known, but it seems likely that excessive fatigue, chilling and other exposures make the child more susceptible to infection.

Few doctors today will permit a child's tonsils and adenoids to be removed during the months when polio prevails, and mothers should insist that any such operation be performed early in the summer, or else postponed until cold weather returns.

No matter where your home is located or what the financial circumstances of your family are, your child need not lack expert care if he should get poliomyelitis. This is the great work of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis: to see that every polio victim gets all the care he needs, regardless of cost. Your doctor will decide what type of treatment is called for. In severe cases he may wish to call in an orthopedic surgeon, or a neurologist, or an ear, nose and throat specialist. A long period of hospitalization and special nursing care may be necessary.

These costly measures are often beyond the means of the average family. If this would work a hardship on your family, you shouldn't hesitate to ask the National Foundation for help. Your doctor or community hospital will tell you how to get in touch with the Foundation chapter nearest your home.

If hospitalization is not needed for your child, as may happen if the attack is very mild, your doctor will see that you get all the technical help you need to nurse the child so he will be as comfortable and safe as possible during the acute phase of the disease.

Equally important with this, however, is the effect of your mental attitude on the child. No matter how upset and apprehensive you yourself may feel, it is essential that you remain calm and cheerful when you are in the child's room. As it is in many other diseases, the will to get well is important in polio. If your child should get sick, you owe him full moral support in his fight back to health.

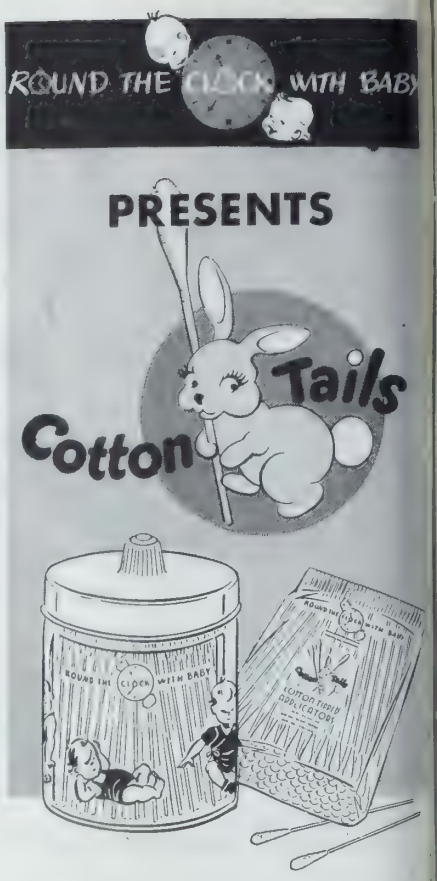
YOUR CHILD AND HIS FOOD

(Continued from Page 129)

better for him soft, some children like them firmer and will not eat them otherwise. Serve eggs in a nest of cooked greens. . . . It's no trouble to curl the bacon and he'll appreciate the change. . . . When you stew pears, add a few seedless raisins. To him they will be bright eyes, if not to you.

FEEDING TACTICS WITH TOTS

Cooking. Taste the food you cook for your youngster. His food should be good. Remember, too, that he doesn't like much seasoning and wouldn't appreciate dark-looking spinach or a scorched potato any more than you would. If you want him to learn to like the stronger-flavored vegetables, such as cabbage, broccoli, cauliflower, and so on, try cooking them in a larger quantity of water than usual, even at sacrifice of vitamins, so the flavor will be milder.



Serving. Don't heap his plate. Meals in miniature go down faster. He'll ask for more if he wants it. Serve his food so it's easy to eat. Stimulate his imagination about food by talking about it and by serving it as attractively as you can. Doctor Curtin believes it is possible to develop a child's taste almost immediately, even though she has had difficulty with Charlotte because of an allergy.

At the table. Be gay at mealtime. Children need happy companionship if they are to be good eaters. Pinch yourself when you feel the urge to coax or remind the child he isn't eating this or that. Being a good example by enjoying your own food brings the best results. Give him time to eat. Some children are naturally slow eaters. Of course, if he's really just dawdling, it's best to remove his plate after a certain length of time. Eating at least one meal a day with the family gives a child a feeling of being part of the family. He learns table manners more readily this way too.

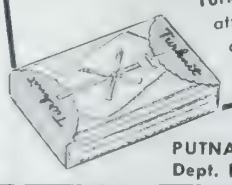
'Tween Meals. Eating between meals is not always a bad habit. Some children are small eaters at mealtimes—really need more food than they can comfortably handle in three regular meals. They are growing fast—using up their energy in play. Be sensible, of course. Fruit, milk, or a simple sandwich is the best choice. Sweets spoil appetite.

The Won't Eats. What to do when a child refuses to eat certain foods? First, try to find the cause. Is it the way it is prepared—its texture—its taste—the way it looks? If it's eggs, for instance, try serving them firmer or softer as the case may be, with another food mixed in—toast or chopped bacon, for example. Some children take streaks of not liking a food, but if you continue to tempt them without coaxing, they will eventually come around. If it's a food you know he needs, make substitutions for a while with other foods. Not in every instance, but sometimes, a child will refuse to eat a food because he knows his mother wants him to eat it. He purposely creates the situation to gain attention. Every child is different, and often refusals may be due to a sensitivity or an allergy. Check with your doctor if you suspect such an indication. Charlotte Curtin, for instance, is a problem eater due to an allergic condition which she developed in infancy. As Doctor Curtin says, "She has really cured herself by limiting the food she eats. You couldn't get her to eat an egg if her life depended on it. She eats quantities of fruit, plenty of bread, butter, milk and meat, but simply won't touch green foods." Doctor Curtin feels she would eat better if her mother had had the time to be at home and cook and feed her herself, and I agree—for she probably won't learn to like these foods until she's much older. It takes a lot of doing to get a child over the idea that he doesn't like something, if it's just a notion—more so if he has suffered from it physically in earlier life or knows you are concerned with his not eating it. Tim, in contrast to Charlotte, is a happy little eater—eats positively everything with relish.

Always remember that children are people. Don't expect them to fit a pattern. Know your own child. Lead him into good eating habits—don't force. THE END

What a buy! 400 cotton-tipped, 3-inch "Cotton-Tail" applicators in re-usable decorated glass jar. Charmingly gift-boxed! $1.00. A member of the Round-The-Clock-With-Baby family of inexpensive, scientific baby needs. Box of 100 "Cotton-Tails" for refill . . . $.25. Glasco Products Co., Chicago, Ill.

KNITTED FOR SOFTNESS



Turknit

10 cents brings you an authoritative, helpful, illustrated 36-page booklet "How to Bathe and Dress Baby." Send a dime today for your copy.

BABY BATH BLANKETS
TOWELS . WASH CLOTHS
At Leading Stores

Turknit Gift Sets are attractively packaged. They make ideal presents.

PUTNAM KNITTING CO.
Dept. L Cohoes, N. Y.

MAKE EXTRA MONEY EASY
SHOW Christmas CARDS

JUST SHOW friends our beautiful Christmas Cards. Astounding values in Name-Imprinted Christmas Folders, 50 for $1 and up. Gorgeous designs. Big money-makers. Easy to earn plenty cash taking orders.

GET FREE IMPRINT SAMPLES

Also sell Art Gallery, Imperial, Religious and other fast-selling $1 assortments; also Gift Wrappings and Stationery. Big money easy and quick. Send for our 21-card Christmas assortment on approval. WRITE TODAY.

FRIENDSHIP STUDIOS, INC
117 Adams Street, ELMIRA, N.Y.

Hi-Life

9 out of 10 DOGS LIKE IT!

CANNED DOG FOOD

PUP CHEF

Vitamin Rich!
At your Grocer

READY FOODS CO. CHICAGO, ILL.

KVP Household PAPERS

A STORY WITHOUT A MORAL

(Continued from Page 50)

"You must at least leave a deposit," gued the clerk with growing irritation.

"I don't see why," retorted the singular istomer. "Why should I make a deposit? ll pay the entire amount now, in cash!" nd he drew from his pocket a thick roll of ills which had apparently been prepared r this moment.

The clerk, of course, resumed at once his olite whisper, undoubtedly explaining that ie money could be paid out at the cashier's ffice. They both left the room.

The auction could not proceed. Business as interrupted for the moment by an ruption of noise such as had never before nvaded this salon. People roared with aughter, called out to friends across the oom, and inquired of neighbors as to the dentity of the madman. As for me, from the noment I had heard his voice, I was more han ever convinced I had come across him omewhere, and I tortured my memory in n effort to remember where and when it had een.

Just then I heard Lewis, sitting in the row head of me, say to Burns, "The man is bviously not American-born. Judging from is accent, I'd say he's French."

"French? Ridiculous," was the answer. 'He's never been near France. I have a ood ear for accents. I say Hungarian—from Budapest, in fact. If he's not Hungarian, 'll—I'll eat . . . what shall I eat? My hat, f you like."

Hungarian . . . French. . . . The answer suddenly flashed through my mind. Of ourse—it was Antal Pal! Paris . . . twenty years go . . . the Hungarian ainter. But then he had vorn a small Menjou mustache.

I stood up. "Gentlemen," I said to Burns and Lewis, "don't bet, and lon't eat any hats; it's ot necessary. You're both right. I know he man; he's a Hungarian who lived in Paris or years."

I tried to leave, but Burns held me tightly by the arm. "You must tell us more about im. What is his name?"

"Antal Pal. But you must excuse me. I vant to try to catch him in the office."

Burns accompanied me to the door. "Is ie really so rich?"

"That I don't know. When I first met him, ie was a pauper, as I was myself. But sometimes he had lots of money and then he hrew it away with both hands."

"A pauper . . . lots of money . . . that loesn't make sense."

"He was something of a genius. There were so many stories. He always had new deas for raising money. A really gifted ellow and a wonderful friend. Why, he supported the entire Hungarian artist colony or months, the time he had his idea for the painting factory."

"A painting factory?"

"Yes. I worked in it too. He was my boss."

BURNS and I had by now reached the stairway. "I must go back now," he said, "but you'll have to tell me more about this man."

I hurried downstairs and found Antal Pal n the cashier's office. He was counting the money out on the counter, one bill at a time. I didn't want to interrupt and dropped into an easy chair near the door. I sat for some time, waiting.

Like stills from an old movie, scenes from my Bohemian days in Paris passed through my mind. Yes, life had not been too easy the time I chanced to meet Antal in the Rôtisserie de la Reine Pedâuque. We met, not among guests in the restaurant, but in the kitchen washing dishes. I had come to Paris to gain fame as a painter, and six weeks later I was indeed a renowned artist, but at the drainboard. And there in the kitchen I met Antal.

"I expect to stay here," he announced as he began to work, "only until I hit on the right idea for making money, not a second longer. You must know that I have experimented before this, and have learned that the worse things are for me, the quicker come the good ideas."

We laughed about it. This is customary for beginners. Each tries to apologize to himself for the fact that he is washing dishes. He feels so inferior. The first few days are particularly bad.

One Sunday evening Antal had his idea. In his excitement and delight he dropped a trayload of dishes he happened to be holding. Perhaps it was even intentional; no one can say. He was fired immediately.

SEVERAL weeks later he returned to the Reine Pedâuque, but as a guest. He brought a gay crowd along. Jean, who served their table, excitedly reported on every detail. They were celebrating, and champagne flowed. I watched through a crack in the kitchen door. There sat Antal, and several others whom I recognized. And of course there were a number of pretty girls.

After a while Antal came back to the kitchen. I happened to be carrying a heaped-up tray. He knocked it from my hands without a word. "You're discharged," he cried. "You start tomorrow in my business. Take off your apron and come out to our table. We're celebrating the opening of our painting factory."

Yes, the painting factory. That was a comic business. We produced oil paintings on the assembly line. Of course we copied only the most renowned masters. Fifteen painters worked ten hours a day. One traced the designs on the canvas. Each painter had to work on a different color. One the red tones, another the green, another the blue, and so forth. I did yellow and orange shades.

In this manner it was possible to produce twenty Mona Lisas or twelve copies of Rembrandt's Night Watch in one day. And the impressionists—they were a game for us; thirty Manets or Cézannes was an average daily quota. I imagine that even today I could close my eyes and paint the Sunflowers of Van Gogh. Of course, only the yellow and orange shades.

The most difficult and important phase of the whole process came at the end. Any errors were corrected, and the pictures were varnished in such a way as to give them the appearance of age. Our chief customer happened to be a Turk, who sold the copies throughout the Orient as originals. When on the back of an occasional picture we stamped "Louvre" or "British Museum," the Turk told his customers the picture had been stolen and had to be disposed of cheaply.

Antal was a master at the finishing technique. With a few strokes he could change the entire character of a picture. He used to boast, "I have merely to look at a picture, and out of sheer fright it will immediately turn a hundred years older."

And now I saw him again. He was not tall and slender as I had always described him. Actually he seemed rather short and with signs of a small round paunch. The hungrily burning eyes had been sated somehow, and the cheeks had filled out. In fact, he looked so different from my by-now-legendary hero that it was not surprising that I had not immediately recognized the original.

Antal had finished counting out the money, and now stood boredly looking about the room while the cashier checked the bills. Suddenly his eyes remained fixed on me. He stared, and as I nodded and got up from my chair, he rushed over toward me.

"I beg your pardon," he said, "but did you ever wash dishes in Paris?"

"Yes indeed," I replied, "but only in the finest restaurants."

"Of course it's you," he cried. "How could I doubt it? The master of the yellow

(Continued on Page 153)

Little superstitions are spiders of the mind. Look out! Brush 'em away, or they'll choke it.

—LOGAN PEARSALL SMITH: All Trivia (Harcourt, Brace and Company).

When baby is cross because of "Childhood Constipation"

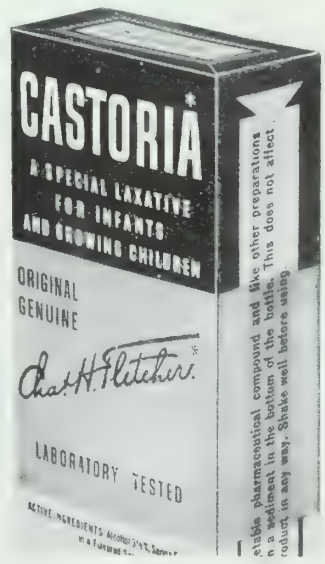
...give Fletcher's Castoria!

"It's the laxative made especially for infants and children."



WHEN your baby frets and fusses . . . when she's cross because of "Childhood Constipation" . . . it's wise to know what to do. Give her Fletcher's Castoria.

Thorough and effective—yet so gentle, it won't upset sensitive digestive systems.

Made especially for children—contains no harsh drugs, will not cause griping or discomfort.

So pleasant-tasting—children love it and take it gladly without any struggle.

Get Fletcher's Castoria at your drugstore today. Be sure you see the green band and the Charles H. Fletcher signature on the package—then you will know that what you are getting is the original and genuine.

Chas. H. Fletcher

The original and genuine

CASTORIA

You can tell a Meat-fed baby!

Nurses Report: babies on

Swift's Strained Meats

were more satisfied

. . . slept better at night!

What a big difference meat makes to a little baby! During actual feeding tests with bottle-fed infants, nurses reported that babies who received Swift's Strained Meats in their formulas were "more satisfied and slept better at night"† than babies who received no meat.

Doctors felt that meat-fed babies were in better physical condition generally! They had good red blood, too—higher hemoglobin level and better red blood cell value! Now, with these specially prepared Swift's Strained Meats, it's easy to give your own baby this head-start on health!*

Meat—to grow on! Swift's Strained Meats provide complete high-quality proteins—the kind baby needs for sound, sturdy growth—B vitamins, plus blood building iron which helps prevent anemia. Swift's Strained Meats are 100% meat, not mixtures. Because you feed them separately, you help baby form good eating habits. He gets to know the distinctive flavor of six tempting meats he will be eating all his life: beef, lamb, pork, veal, liver and heart. Stock up now on Swift's Strained and Swift's Diced Meats at your neighborhood food store.

All nutritional statements made in this advertisement are accepted by the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

ACCEPTED COUNCIL ON FOODS AND NUTRITION

†Meat in the Diet of Young Infants—Ruth M. Leverton, Ph.D. and George Clark, M.D. Journal of the American Medical Association, J.A.M.A., 134: 1215, August 9, 1947).

ASK YOUR DOCTOR when to start and the amount of Swift's Strained Meats to feed. You'll be surprised at how much meat a fast-growing baby can eat!*

Swift's Diced Meats for Juniors Chopped—tender and juicy. (Confidentially, the whole family will go for these meats!)

SWIFT... foremost name in meats... first with 100% Meats for Babies

(Continued from Page 151)

ades." He embraced me with emotion, n looked me over. "A little older, a little avier—but not much changed. I've ought of you so often. Are you still inting?"

"No, I'm an art dealer; have been for a mber of years. And you? Still running e painting factory?" I asked jokingly.

To my amazement he nodded. "Painting tory is correct, but somewhat different m Paris. We make art prints. The shop is Chicago. I have my own process, and two ndred employees, doing well."

"That was a fine time in Paris. I was very happy when I had to return to the States. d I remember someone hearing from meone that our factory didn't last much nger."

"No; shortly after your departure we gave the business. It was partly my fault. I ft Paris too. There was a girl ——"

"For a change," I interrupted, laughing.

"This time it was very serious and I de-ded it was better to disappear for a while." e was silent for a moment. "And it was pparently for the best. Fate often leads us ong strange roads, and we stumble without alizing it into good luck or bad." He emed to be sunk in his thoughts. "You e probably surprised to hear such words om my mouth," he continued with an em-rrassed smile. "It doesn't suit me. But the uth is that you've found me in an unac-stomed solemn mood today. And since his is so, and we are old friends, I will gladly ll you about it." He looked around. "But ot here."

"I know a little bar around the corner here they serve real French wine."

"French wine!" he exclaimed. "What are e waiting for?"

Antal drank the first glass slowly and with vident enjoyment. "Were you upstairs at he bidding, before we met?" he asked at st.

I nodded.

"The people must have thought I was crazy."

I was puzzled. "You don't consider the Saint Anthony an original? I examined it thoroughly before the auction began; there can be no doubt that it is a copy. You can tell from the canvas; the weave is no more than forty years old."

"The canvas is eighteen years old."

"How can you be so specific?"

"I myself painted the copy," he said slowly.

I stared at him without comprehension.

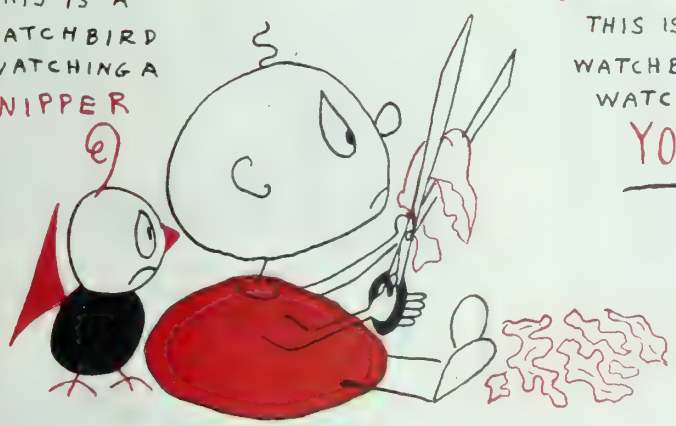
He filled his glass. "Do you remember Giselle? She also worked in our factory. Painted the grays. Or rather, she messed up the backgrounds. I always had to go over her work."

"Didn't you have an affair with her?"

"Yes, first an affair, then I fell in love with her, and finally I managed to convince myself that I couldn't live without her. You know how these things develop. There was a Spaniard who was also interested in her and he pursued and tortured her with demonstrations of his love. Since she would have nothing to do with him he became madly jealous and tried to kill her. Two knife attacks failed only by a miracle. She didn't want to run the risk of a third attempt and talked me into fleeing Paris with her. We went to Vienna. There she confided that the Spaniard was her lawfully wedded husband—purely incidental information.

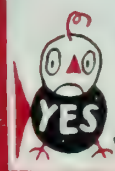
"Things didn't go well for me in Vienna, and she quickly wearied of living without money. After four weeks she left me flat and went to the United States with an American whom she had met in some hotel lobby. It was the first and only time a woman had left me, and the thrust went deep.

"For weeks I remained in a state of complete lethargy. When at last my will to live returned I concentrated all my energies on one idea: to find Giselle again. And for this I needed money.



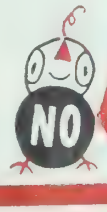
"You remember now, I always said that the most important thing in life was to have

THIS IS A SNIPPER



THIS IS A WATCHBIRD WATCHING A SNIPPER

THIS IS A WATCHBIRD WATCHING YOU



By Munro Leaf

NEVER, never trust a Snipper with a pair of scissors. Snippers just don't seem to have any sense at all once they start cutting things up. This Snipper started out cutting up little pieces of paper, but no sooner had its mother gone out than the Snipper went to work on other things. This one has ruined two blankets, a rug, three curtains, and those little pieces you see on the floor used to be its mother's best dinner napkins. What a horrible thing a Snipper is to have around the house.

WERE YOU A SNIPPER THIS MONTH?

Nannette ORIGINALS

*"Looking Over A FOUR LEAF-CLOVER"

. . . and lucky are the lassies who wear NANNETTE Autumn ORIGINALS. Each little creation sings its own sweet song of a glorious Fall harvest—divinely done in wearable, washable fabrics.

Babe Frocks, Sizes 9, 12, 18 mos.
Toddler Frocks, Sizes 1, 2, 3 . . . About $3.00
At Better Stores Everywhere

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE

*© by Remick Music Corp.

MATERNITY DRESSES WRITE FOR CATALOG
Summer Styles
Smart, youthful styles for Morning, Street or Afternoon. Also Maternity Corsets & Lingerie.
CRAWFORD'S, Dept. A, 729 Balt. Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

MARK EVERYTHING WITH Cash's
12 DOZ. $3.50 — 6 DOZ. $2.40
WOVEN NAME TAPES
Order from your dealer, or write
CASH'S, South Norwalk 4, Conn.

MOTHER!
USE THUM
THUMB SUCKING IS UNHEALTHFUL AND UNBECOMING TO A CHILD use like nail polish easy to apply - 50¢
ASK YOUR DRUGGIST

Dennison, Dept. G-1, Framingham, Mass.
FREE Please send me a whole day's supply of Dennison Diaper Liners.
Name.....
Street.....
City.....State.....

FOR THE SEAT OF YOUR DIAPER TROUBLES

HEY, MOM! Don't be a Diaper Drudge! Dennison Diaper Liners reduce unpleasantness in changing and washing my diapers. Just fold a Liner inside diaper next to my skin. When soiled, flush away. No hard scrubbing. Sanitary. Helps prevent diaper rash. Costs only a few cents a day. DELUXE: 180 for $1; CRADLE TIME & DOWNEESOFT: 180 for 69¢.

Dennison
DIAPER LINERS
Wherever Baby Goods Are Sold

Why a single tipped applicator helps protect your baby better!

Sterilized Mennen Tips-For-Tots are safe for your baby, because they're cotton-tipped at only one end! Your hand touches only the smooth, orangewood shaft—never the cotton tip that's hospital-clean.

Single-tipped Mennen Tips-For-Tots are the type of applicators doctors and hospitals use. There's no second cotton tip end to be soiled and carry germs! Get Mennen Tips-For-Tots for baby care, for first aid! They're safe—and economical!

Mennen Tips for Tots
100 for 25¢ 200 for 50¢

The S. O. S. Company, Chicago, Illinois, U. S. A. • S. O. S. Mfg. Co. of Canada, Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

the right idea? I walked the streets for hours, looking at signs and window displays, and then sat in some coffeehouse brooding and racking my brain, waiting for the sudden flash of genius. And then one day as I leafed through a newspaper I noticed an ad: 'Room to rent in distinguished household. Antique furniture.' I leaped from my chair—I had my idea at last!

"The first room I went to look at was not the right one. But after a number of days of climbing stairs and inspecting apartments I found what I wanted. An elderly lady, living alone, the widow of the Austrian General von Frank, one-time adjutant to Kaiser Franz Josef, wished to rent an elegantly furnished room. Her apartment with its antique furniture and the genuine old pictures on the walls fairly breathed culture and wealth. Obviously it was not need which compelled Frau von Frank to rent a room. She was merely afraid of being alone in the big house.

"I was invited by my elderly hostess to join her in a cup of coffee, and we chatted for a long time. I extended myself to be charming and amiable, and won her sympathy completely by telling the story of my unhappy love for Giselle, who had deserted me.

"There is no tested recipe for capturing a young woman's heart. One may be impressed by intelligence, another intrigued by money, for many it is enough that they are young. There is no formula. But to win the affection of an elderly lady there is a sure technique. You let her mother you. I discovered very quickly that Frau von Frank was looking not for a tenant, but for a son.

"I moved in that very day, determined to carry through my plans."

Antal paused for a moment, finished a glass of wine, and continued his story:

"One of Frau von Frank's ancestors had been the military governor of Milan, at the time that part of Italy still belonged to Austria. He had brought back a painting which was the showpiece of the house, The Temptations of Saint Anthony. It hung in the room which I was now to occupy, and full of pride, Frau von Frank had drawn my attention to it. She explained that it was a genuine Magnasco, a seventeenth-century Italian painter. Her grandfather had given a hundred gold ducats for it that time in Milan, an appallingly high price for the period.

"I didn't believe the story of the hundred gold ducats. No secret had been made of the devices employed by the military of that time to acquire pictures and other art objects. However, I kept my opinions to myself and dutifully expressed my astonishment: 'One hundred gold ducats! I understand nothing about pictures, but I find this one wonderful.'

"Well, it had not been absolutely necessary for Frau von Frank to thus impress on me the high value of the picture. I had noticed the Saint Anthony as soon as I had walked into the room, and I realized at once that there before me was a genuine old Italian master. Even the frame was of the same period. This was what I had been searching for.

"The next morning I set to work. I locked the door and set up my easel. You know how quickly I can copy a picture; however, I took plenty of time with the Sai Anthony. I had never before worked wi such thoroughness and such ambition ar when finally, after twelve days, I place Alessandro Magnasco's initials in the co ner of the canvas and threw aside my brus I sensed the joy and satisfaction that accon panies the creation of a work of art. I wa convinced that no one would be able t differentiate between the original and th copy without examining the canvas. I ex changed the pictures, and the followin evening I smuggled the original out of th house and shipped it to a gallery in Ne York with instructions to sell it as quickl as possible.

"To my shame I must admit that not fo a second did I have the sense of doing some thing wrong. Frau von Frank was a wealth woman and all the members of her famil lived in the most comfortable circumstance My copy hung in the genuine frame an differed in no way from the original. True sometime in the future the falsificatio would be exposed. In fifty or a hundre years, when one of her grandchildren o great-grandchildren would be forced to sel the Magnasco because he had squandere his inheritance on horses and wanton women he would make the surprising discovery tha the governor-general of Milan had paid a hundred gold ducats for a copy, and th young good-for-nothing, who had probably never worked, would have to take life seri ously at last: And this would not only be o no harm but would actually be a contribu tion to maturing him. No, I had no pang of conscience.

"A few weeks later, I received word from New York that the picture had been sold a a much higher price than I had dared antici pate. Immediately arranging to have par of the money transferred to me, I set all th wheels in motion for my departure for the United States.

"Frau von Frank was very sad when I told her I was planning to leave Vienna. She confessed that despite the briefness of our acquaintance she had come to love me like a son. She helped with all the preparations for my trip and even accompanied me to the station. As she embraced me at parting she whispered, 'If things should not go well for you over there and you should need money, wire me. Remember that you have someone in Vienna who feels toward you like a mother.'

(Continued on Page 156)

"Why should I worry about these teeth? I'm going to lose 'em anyway!"

Get your best smile set for a kitchen keyed to your every whim. Youngstown wall and base cabinets fairly shout, "Room for everything!" Wide work surfaces snap chores to a time-table schedule. Eye the efficient 48″ twin-bowl Youngstown Kitchenaider cabinet sink. M-m-m-m! Sliding-removable drainboard, 11″ super-deep second bowl. Remember, Youngstown units are steel. Only Youngstown could design such a beauty and make it so easy to own. It's all yours installed complete, for about $14.25 per month on most budget plans, including financing through your local bank or your dealer.

Your kitchen dream...so easy to own ook! Youngstown 66″ twin-bowl Kitchenaider cabinet nk. Five drawers. Two huge compartments, sliding shelf. o-splash bowls, rinse spray, swinging faucet. Get plus alue with a new Mullinaider, automatic waste-disposer nit. Fits all Kitchenaiders. Sold as optional equipment.

We took a page from your fondest kitchen dream — then peeked into your budget.

Result? A Youngstown Kitchen in snowy, white-enameled steel. Depend on Youngstown — the kitchen leader—to know just what you want.

Yes, you can arrange Youngstown units to any kitchen plan, any floor area. New home or old.

And just wait till you see how the price matches your purse. Your Youngstown dealer will show you kitchen plans galore. See him today—he's a good man to know. Be sure to tell your builder you want a Youngstown Kitchen—nothing else!

MULLINS MANUFACTURING CORPORATION
WARREN, OHIO
World's Largest Makers of Steel Kitchens

Youngstown Kitchens
BY MULLINS

Kitchen magic! New Mullinaider, automatic waste-disposer unit, makes food scraps vanish. Turn on cold water, flip Mullinaider switch, scrape waste down drain opening. Sold as extra equipment.

Close-up of swinging mixing-faucet and speedy rinse spray featured on all Youngstown Kitchenaiders. Spray reaches all parts of sink top. A boon for dishwashing. Wonderful for rinsing all vegetables, too.

SEND COUPON TODAY!

GET THIS EXCITING BOOKLET! 20 pages featuring beautiful Youngstown Kitchens in full color. It gives you details of every Youngstown unit and helpful tips on arranging your new kitchen, whether you plan to modernize or build. Send coupon with 10c in coin. Sorry, no stamps.

Youngstown Kitchens
Mullins Manufacturing Corp.
Dept. L-748, Warren, Ohio

Please send me your Youngstown booklet of ideas for dream kitchens.
I enclose 10c in cash.

I plan to remodel ☐ I plan to build ☐

NAME (PLEASE PRINT)

ADDRESS

CITY ZONE

COUNTY STATE ★

One Permanent Cost $15...the TONI only $2

Your hair will look naturally curly the very first time you try Toni. For Toni Home Permanent gives you soft, smooth curls. Curls that look lovely in any weather, wherever you are, whatever you do. But before you try Toni, you'll want to know:

Will TONI work on my hair?
Yes, Toni waves any kind of hair that will take a permanent, including gray, dyed, bleached or baby-fine hair.

Can I do it myself?
Sure. It's easy as rolling your hair up on curlers. That's why more than a million women a month give themselves Toni Home Permanents. Women with no more skill or training than you have.

Is there a "frizzy-stage" with TONI?
No. Your Toni will be frizz-free right from the start. For Toni Creme Waving Lotion gently coaxes your hair into deep waves and luxurious curls . . . leaves it soft as silk, with no kinkiness, no dried out brittleness, even on the very first day.

How long will my TONI wave last?
Your Toni wave is guaranteed to last just as long as a $15 beauty shop permanent—or you get back every cent you paid.

Will TONI give me a loose or tight wave?
With Toni you can have just the amount of curl that suits you best . . . from a loose, casual wave to a halo of soft ringlets. All you do is follow the simple directions for timing.

Will TONI save me time?
Toni puts half-a-day back in your life. For you give yourself a Toni wave right at home—and you are free to do whatever you want while the wave is "taking."

How about having a TONI party?
Grand idea! Invite your friends next Saturday afternoon—and have each bring along a Toni kit. While your permanents are "taking" have fun—listen to the radio or enjoy your favorite records.

Which twin has the TONI?
Pictured above are the Dublin twins of New York City. Frances, the twin at the right, has the Toni. She says, "My Toni-savings paid for a darling new hat. Now Lucille calls me the smarter half."

(Continued from Page 154)

"I am not a sentimental person, but this farewell speech shattered my spiritual equilibrium. As the train pulled out I sat and wept like a small boy. For the first time in my life I experienced regret. My guilty conscience plagued me and I toyed with the idea of writing to Frau von Frank immediately after my arrival in New York, and confessing everything. I began at once to construct the letter in my mind, but it was hard to find the right words, and the search for appropriate expression so wearied me that I fell asleep. When I awoke an hour later, I found that my equilibrium had returned. For now to my pleasure I discovered an enchanting young girl sitting across from me in the compartment, whose presence I had not even noticed earlier.

"All that I've told you up to now is merely the prologue to my story, and took place long ago," commented Antal. "As for America, I was spared the years of poverty and struggle with which most people are initiated into the New World. I had money, was able to look about the country, to make tests, to busy myself with the development of my patents. Before two years had passed I had established my own factory for the manufacture of art reproductions, which has developed from small beginnings to a very respectable business.

"But then came the German occupation of Austria. Newspapers reported innumerable horrors, among others that all monarchists were arrested and taken to concentration camps. I thought with uneasy concern of Frau von Frank and her family. After all, her late husband had at one time been adjutant to Kaiser Franz Josef.

"I arranged for a Swiss attorney to make a trip to Austria. After some delay he reported that my anxieties were unfortunately not without foundation. All members of the von Frank family had been first arrested, then deported and their property confiscated. And an important Nazi functionary was living in Frau von Frank's apartment on the Opernring.

"Following a lengthy search, she was at last discovered in Paris by one of my agents. He reported that the only real emotion remaining to her was the desire to come to the United States, where somewhere a niece of hers was living. I made arrangements for her to immigrate and took care of all the details of her journey. I even advertised in an effort to locate her niece, now the only living member of her family, and discovered the young girl here in New York. She lived in modest circumstances, so that it was necessary for me to arrange to make a regular contribution for Frau von Frank's needs. Of course, the good old lady had no idea what impelled me to such generosity. After all, I had lived for such a short time in her home in Vienna.

"On the day of her arrival, I came to New York and met the boat. 'Blessed be the day on which you entered my house,' she said as we greeted each other. And I stood there ashamed and was unable to speak.

"Her once-gray hair had turned white, but she looked well and healthy in spite of her age. But I noticed a peculiar change in her. The events in Austria had apparently affected her. She had become quite religious.

"'It is due to a miracle that I am still alive today,' she told me. 'Yes, one of God's miracles had to occur to get me out of Austria alive. All members of my family were taken prisoner. They came for me too. They took my money and my jewelry. They made it quite plain that I should "vanish" from Austrian soil as soon as possible. I did not hesitate and started to pack. They forbade me to take anything of value from my apartment. But how should I make a living abroad? I decided to take one genuine picture with me, and chose the picture of Saint Anthony painted by Magnasco. It was not a very big picture and fairly easy to hide the rolled canvas at the bottom of my trunk. I thought that they probably would not search an old woman's luggage too carefully, even though I knew about the frontier controls. But right after my departure a Nazi official moved into my apartment. He fou the empty frame and wired the front officials to detain me. I was more than little surprised by the politeness which n me at the border. "Frau von Frank? Spl did! We have been expecting you, co with us." I had to leave my compartme and they searched my luggage. Of cou they found the picture at once.

"'Two men accompanied me on my w back to Vienna, where they delivered me the prison on the Elizabeth Promenade.

"'"You wanted to take a valuable pie of art to a foreign country," said the poli commissioner. "You know the punishment

"'"I did not know that the picture was any great value," I lied.

"'"Oh! You had no idea of its value?

"'"I took it with me only because I a extremely fond of it. I don't know if it valuable and I don't believe it is."

"'"So, you don't believe it is valuable the officer mimicked in a malicious manne "Well, we shall see. We shall turn over th picture to an expert. If it is of no value, yo can continue your journey abroad tomorrow but should it be genuine and worth mo than twenty marks, then you will go in an other direction—concentration camp. Tak her away."

"'My case was hopeless. The director the Museum of Art in Vienna had years ag examined the picture and found it to be genuine Magnasco. There had even onc been an article published in an art magazin about this one Magnasco in private pos session.

"'I withdrew to a corner of the cell. have never been religious, but there ar situations in life where one feels so lost an helpless that one feels the need to pray. felt that in spite of the people around me was alone, alone with God. I had a long tal with Him in that cell in the prison of th Elizabeth Promenade. We made a pact If —— But this is more or less privat between God and myself and nobody's busi ness.

"'The next morning I was called before the commissioner. He had the picture in his hand when I entered. "The expert has ex amined the picture. Why do you carry stuf like this abroad? It is a reproduction valued at about fifteen marks." He was leafing through his papers and therefore did not see that I almost fainted. "I would advise you to continue your journey as soon as possible," he said, "before we change our minds and keep you here for good. Take her away. And take your junk along," he called and threw the canvas after me. Yes, a miracle must have happened.' And, when she said this, a mysterious smile was on her lips. 'Of course I thought that the expert had done it out of pity or another motive unknown to me. But this was not the case! The genuine picture actually had changed to a reproduction. I brought it with me and wanted to sell it right after my arrival. Three art dealers looked it over and all three declared it to be a reproduction. You will smile, but I believe a miracle has occurred, and my belief goes even farther. I am convinced that one day, perhaps only after my death, the picture will change back into the genuine one. Yes, I do believe this.'

"You can perhaps imagine how deeply I was moved by this narrative, nor did I have the courage to tell her the truth. I found the embarrassing confession too difficult, and so I did not disturb her deep conviction that a miracle had taken place.

"I made it a practice to visit her every time business brought me to New York, and always brought some small present for her and her niece. When several days ago I returned from a rather lengthy business trip to England, I was shocked to learn that my old friend had died during my absence from the States. The news moved me, but despite the fact that I was deeply shaken I could not refrain from asking what had happened to the painting by Magnasco.

"Her niece was very much surprised by the interest I displayed. 'But it's not a genuine Magnasco, just a copy, and of no value at all,' she explained. 'You probably ed that my aunt was rather strange g the last few years. She had the fixed that someday this picture would be for a high price. She must certainly told you the story of her miraculous e.'

nodded.

'Well then,' she continued with an int ent smile, 'if you've heard about the cle of Saint Anthony you know the whole . You probably remember that she had fantastic notion that the process of sformation from copy back to original d be completed after her death. And e has left orders in her will for the pic- to be sold at auction and the proceeds ed over to her lawyer, who has strict uctions as to how the money shall be —undoubtedly for charitable purposes. know that I'm working and have been busy. I really haven't had the time to n touch with the lawyer. And what pur- would it serve? The picture is the only g of value which she left, and the ex- s have assured me that it can't possibly g more than twenty dollars. But I've red it at auction nevertheless. She shall her wish, she believed so strongly.'

'Your amused smile is really out of r,' I said seriously. 'I also believe in it.'

And so the gentle old lady's faith has justified. It is true that the copy was transformed into the original, but the it brought at the bidding was as large the painting had been genuine. I had red the galleries with the intention of ng the same amount for the picture h I had received from the museum so long ago, not one cent less. That's why I insisted on forty-seven cents and was not satisfied with forty-five. The money had certainly been destined by Frau von Frank for philanthropic purposes, and after all, one can't bargain with God; no, one can't expect to make such deals with Him. I felt that He had been generous enough with me these many years, and had waited patiently for me to find a way to repay my debt.

"So there you have the story of the miracle of Saint Anthony," finished Antal, and filled his glass once more. "And now perhaps you can understand why I am in such a serious mood. Today I have been able to draw a line under a very questionable chapter of my life."

When Antal and I parted we exchanged addresses, with the intention of arranging another meeting soon. I was more than a little surprised, however, to receive a phone call from him the following afternoon. He sounded excited.

"I'm very much upset," he told me. "It looks as if the story of the picture isn't finished yet. Can you imagine—Frau von Frank's attorneys notified me today that their client, out of gratitude for the paltry monthly allowance I had made her, has designated me as her heir. All that money will come back to me, minus the inheritance taxes. And the picture too. It's really very disturbing. I can't imagine what the dear Lord is planning for me, but I'm beginning to understand that to conclude a bargain with Him is more complicated than I ever dreamed."

THE CURTINS KNEW WHAT THEY WANTED

(Continued from Page 122)

uy a one-quarter interest in the paper. reporting job paid $110 a month, consid- ly less than half of what Gerald was ing, but he grabbed it eagerly. Gerald i't make the financial sacrifice for Virgin- a sake, nor would Virginia have agreed to h sacrifice. Both of them were gambling Gerald's future as a newspaper owner.

week after the marriage, the couple sat n and worked out a ten-year Curtin plan, ch they innocently supposed would cover y contingency. Within ten years they ted Gerald to own 100 per cent of the Republican, they wanted to own a nice, e-equipped modern home, and they ted a family. The family couldn't wait. bride and groom weren't youngsters.

The Curtin financial arrangements were ple. Gerald's entire earnings went to- d the purchase of that one-quarter in- st. Virginia carried the cost of the ple's living expenses. Her surplus also t into the newspaper fund. The fact that bride was earning a great deal more than husband was tacitly understood, but er mentioned.

Money matters n't then, or ever, se Curtin disa- ments or dis- es; both earners epted that finan- ly they were king toward a mon goal. Vir- a does confess, wever, that she glad Gerald's in- e surpasses hers day; somehow t seems more ural. She still ts all the family sehold bills. Ger- 's money and her ings go into a e variety of Cur- investments, dis- sed together. In s department ald has the ma- vote. Virginia is businesswoman. e Curtins don't budget. For them, because of a special and fluctuating income setup, budgeting hasn't been necessary. "When we're in a tight," the couple say, "we both get thrifty automatically. When we're not in a tight, we both spend what we like."

Financially, the ten-year plan was sensible and concrete. But the honeymooners hadn't figured on intangibles. They didn't take into account the fact that each had led a fairly satisfactory existence apart, and thereby acquired a strong and separate set of convictions, strong personalities, strong egos. Gerald flatly had no intention of being known as Doctor Curtin's husband, but he moved to a town where Virginia had staked a primary claim. He joined the Kiwanis Club, the C. of C.—last year he was Chamber president and now serves on the board of directors of both service organizations—and soon made his own place in the community.

On the domestic front the real battles were waged. The demands of the Curtins' professions, like their personalities, were different. Gerald is the more gregarious and likes to keep late hours, which don't interfere with his efficiency on the job. Virginia needs a fresh mind and steady hands to administer anesthesia at the clinic in the morning. If a party runs too late, he drives home alone.

Independent Virginia wasn't used to aski g anybody's advice. Unthinkingly she signed an important contract at the clinic which, willy-nilly, involved her husband too. Gerald was told about the contract only after the ink was dry. Virginia wouldn't do that now. She makes no important business agreements without such was the stuff of living, back in 1940, for Henry Rood and his wife, Vera. Farming their 160 acres under a tenant-purchase loan, they owed $12,800, had to make ends meet on less than $1500 a year.

A Debt and a Dream—

But, today, with hard work—and some hard knocks—the dream has come true and the debt vanished. Budgeting comfortably on 1947's $9000 income, with the mortgage paid off in six years instead of forty, the six Roods have made success a family enterprise.

Meet a Farming Family from Wahoo, Nebraska.

How America Lives

BY HARLAN MILLER

THE AUGUST JOURNAL

Give your feet an Ice-Mint treat

Everyday, people who suffer from tired, burning feet are enjoying quick, thrilling comfort by using Ice-Mint. Under the touch of this frosty-white medicinal cream, you actually feel tired muscles relax, as your feet respond almost instantly to its refreshing coolness.

Grand, too, to help soften up stinging corns and callouses. Get foot-happy today the easy Ice-Mint way. At drug and department stores. Also sold in Canada.

. . . wonderful for discomfort of sunburn, too!

*Spare Time—Full Time

Earn Money EASY PLEASANT WAY

Sell CHRISTMAS CARDS

AS LOW AS 50 for $1 WITH NAME IMPRINTED

Take orders for stunning new Personal Christmas Cards. Amazing values pay you BIG CASH PROFITS! Show FREE SAMPLES to friends, others. Also sell Assortments of Christmas and Everyday Cards. Famous Matched Gift Wrapped Ensembles, Stationery. Nationally advertised. Write for Samples. 1225 Clifford Av., Dept. X-4 Rochester 5, N. Y.

TRADE JANES ART STUDIOS INC. MARK

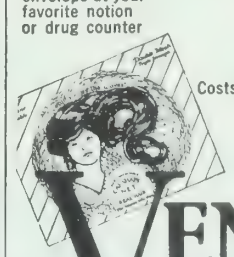
Coets

WHENEVER YOU USE A HOME PERMANENT WAVE KIT

HANDY COTTON SQUARES LARGE PACKAGE 29¢

PROTECT your new Summer hairdo

Hairdo by Michael House of Beauty



Stray wisps never straggle, the perfect "set" is never spoiled when you wear a Venida, the net that "nets" you compliments. Entirely hand made of strength-tested human hair. Venida Hair Nets come in 8 styles, all matching hair shades. Invisible—only you know you wear one.

Costs less because it lasts longer!

20¢ White, grey, purple 25¢

Single or double mesh

Ask for the familiar "Venida Girl" envelope at your favorite notion or drug counter

VENIDA The Guaranteed HAIR NET "rules the waves"

FAMOUS VENIDA HAIR BEAUTY AIDS BY RIESER CO., N.Y.

• Actual delivery-room scene. Nurse attaches identification tag to baby's wrist.

her husband's knowledge. But she had to learn.

Virginia was quick-tempered, quick-spoken. Gerald, long a bachelor, was blissfully unaware of husbandly domestic obligations. One example from the Curtin book of memories: After boasting about his bride Gerald dragged a friend home to lunch, forgetful that it was maid's day off. As it happened, Virginia had had an unusually trying morning at the hospital, and, exhausted, walked into a messy house, carrying a can of peaches and a loaf of bread for a pickup lunch, to meet a beaming, hungry Gerald and his beaming, hungry friend. Virginia took one look.

"There it is, boys," said the hostess crisply, and pointed to the can of peaches and the bread. "Now if you'll excuse me, I have a call to make," said Doctor Curtin and left the house.

That night Virginia and Gerald went into executive session, agreed upon two inflexible family rules. "Never embarrass your married partner in public. Hold your anger, irritation, annoyance, however justified, for later discussion," was the first rule. That one was meant for Virginia. The second rule was for Gerald: "Don't bring home unannounced guests. Remember there's always a telephone."

Then, too, in the first weeks of marriage Gerald was introduced to medical ethics, Virginia's special brand. His wife would fly from the house in the middle of the night, return in the morning and refuse to discuss the case or even tell him where she'd been. An accident would occur on the highway, Virginia would be called to tend the injured, and the editor of the Watonga Republican would be among the last to hear the news.

Eventually, after many a battle, the Curtins threshed the whole matter out and clarified the Hippocratic oath. Together they arrived at a definition of what Virginia was obliged to keep secret and what Gerald was entitled to hear. She began informing him where she was going on a case and how long she expected to be gone, came to be proud of her husband's very natural interest in her whereabouts and welfare. Another compromise was reached when Virginia finally admitted that in a small community part of a doctor's business is legitimate news, of interest both to the public and to the patients involved. A column of hospital notes is now one of the most popular features of the Republican.

Virginia learned the hard way that no real union was possible without mutual trust. By the end of their first year the Curtins had achieved a real union. And then Pearl Harbor caught them.

The war was a complicated time for Gerald and Virginia. Ultimately Gerald served as a lieutenant with an aircraft carrier in the Pacific, but for a lengthy period he was at a naval air-training field in Kansas close to home. Virginia couldn't join except for visits. Her profession held Watonga, where the war created a medical crisis.

Inevitably the practice was enormously increased, and inevitably, too, the number of doctors was diminished. Doctor Cox into the Army first. When he subsequently received a medical discharge, Doctor man was called. Virginia carried a cruel work load those years. She can't begin recall the number of sick she tended, but does recall that she administered anesthetics 2500 times without a single fatality and delivered more than 500 babies.

She bore her own two children during the war. The Curtins had no idea of putting the family; they were getting no younger. Virginia worked straight through her pregnancy with Charlotte, and worked desperately hard. But her hardest time, the one she doesn't like to remember, came during her pregnancy with Tim and with Tim's birth. On the afternoon before her son was born, Virginia drove thirty miles to treat an elderly patient who'd suffered a stroke and made it back to the clinic just in time.

With Tim's birth, both of the Curtins knew they abandoned for good and all their ambition to acquire a million dollars. The baby boy was afflicted with a mysterious gastrointestinal malady, which was never satisfactorily diagnosed. To this day Virginia is occasionally haunted by the feeling that her own overwork may have been responsible in some way, for the child's illness.

For many weeks it seemed that Tim would not live. Virginia had plenty of money in the bank—her hard work had been financially rewarded—but it looked as though money wouldn't save "Gerald's boy for us." Even then, at a time when money had lost its meaning and she was crazed with worry, Virginia made the painful discovery that she was the victim of her own success, the pioneer of her profession. She couldn't quit to look after her own baby. She had a career and now must pay for it. Hundreds of people depended upon her services. The whole community needed her.

When Tim was twelve days old, burning with fever, down to half his birth weight, Doctor Cox collapsed with illness and exhaustion. Virginia crawled out of bed and returned to work. With great difficulty a day nurse for Tim was found; Virginia took over the night care of the baby herself and somehow managed until Doctor Cox was back in harness. Mercifully, the period was short.

But there was always more work than two physicians could handle. Doctor C

What the Curtins Spent Last Year

Food at $125 per month	$1,500.00
Clothing and cleaning	875.00
Household expenses, lights, gas, taxes, insurance, water	419.00
Professional traveling expenses, medical meetings, press conventions	200.00
Personal recreation, pleasure trips, movies, cigarettes	427.50
Automobile expense (two cars)	748.65
Life insurance	291.70
Domestic help, partially a business expense.	1,310.00
	$5,771.85

Virginia is allowed by Internal Revenue Dept. a deduction of $5 a week on the maid's salary, because the maid takes professional telephone calls for her.

The Curtins carry an unusually small amount of insurance. They prefer to make their own investments. Also, of course, they have the security of the two professions.

Virginia's clothes looked very smart to me. Her clothing bill is low because she has cousins who operate a fashionable shop in Hot Springs. They sell to her at wholesale rates.

The first time they call you "mother"

Slowly, you drift back to a happiness that's new and wonderful.

A small voice is yelling lustily. Your child! Whitecoated figures cluster around him. One comes over and says, "A lovely baby! Want to see him, mother?"

Mother! You're suddenly impressed with the responsibility . . . the need for knowing how to take the world's best care of this small stranger who belongs to you.

A baby's first interest is comfort. The right food . . . the right treatment for his delicate skin.

Today there's a new way to protect your child from skin irritations that make him cry . . . all-over care with smooth, snow-white Johnson's Baby Lotion!

This amazing Lotion is hospital-tested . . . proved to give amazing protection against externally caused rashes, even in hot summer months.

Use Johnson's Baby Lotion exactly like baby oil . . . after baby's bath, at diaper changes. You'll find Lotion care so pleasant . . . so effective!

Make your baby a Lotion baby—a happier baby. Get a bottle of Johnson's Baby Lotion for his nursery tray—today!

NEW! Hospitals prove it's better!

JOHNSON'S BABY LOTION

Johnson & Johnson

snapped this picture on his fourth birthday d NuAce Snapshot Mounting Corners have st it safe all these years."

protect your precious snapshots, stamps, d other hobby collections, ask for NuAce, the tter mounting corners, at 5¢ and 10¢ stores, ug stores, or at your favorite film counter. vailable in a choice of 12 colors for only 10¢ per ckage of 100. (Also available in transparent, gold or silver.) Three sizes—Regular, Junior and Senior.

ACE ART COMPANY, READING, MASS.

3 SIZES } REGULAR JUNIOR SENIOR

BEFORE IT'S LOST OR DAMAGED..

MOUNT IT WITH NUACE Snapshot Mounting Corners
TRADE MARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

EYE-GENE

AFELY Relieves TIRED, SMARTING
/ES In SECONDS!

onderful EYE-GENE! Just o drops in your eyes that are d or irritated from wind, re, overwork, lack of sleep smoke—will relieve, rest, resh, clear them in seconds. e it every day. EYE-GENE afe and gentle. 25¢, 60¢, and eye-dropper ttles at uggists. sist on E-GENE!

Dull morning look...

Snap back with dazzle!

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY ★ Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

July is the month of Drownings

More of the 7,000 annual drownings in the U. S. occur in July than in any other month. A large percentage of victims are children 3 to 12 years old.

Protect your child this Summer with Stay-A-Float, the safety vest that encourages kids to swim. Filled with superbuoyant NEW Java Kapok for utmost safety. Small children love it, and it trains as it protects. Make sure you get genuine Stay-A-Float . . . at most sporting goods, marine and department stores.

THE AMERICAN PAD & TEXTILE CO.
Dept. 4 Greenfield, Ohio

Write for free HOW-TO-SWIM Folder by Adolph Kiefer, world's backstroke champion. It tells you how to teach your children.

TESTED AND COMMENDED PARENTS MAGAZINE

Ta-pat-co
TRADE MARK REGISTERED US PAT OFF
STAY-A-FLOAT
THE MODERN CHILD'S SWIMMING AID

and Doctor Cox were never finished. Chronically, of course, both were short on sleep and rest. Chronically, too, like all married career women, Virginia was harassed by a double set of problems: professional problems, family problems. Tim slowly improved, within four months was out of danger. The servant situation was a nightmare. At one point, on the morning the last available maid in the community decided to quit tending the Curtin babies, Virginia despairingly acknowledged that the end had come. There was no answer except for her to take her children somewhere, look after them like other mothers, and forget her professional responsibilities until Gerald's return.

And then an elderly woman, far better off financially than the Curtins, and whose own children were grown, abruptly decided to do some war work herself. She offered to move into Virginia's home and take complete charge, cleaning, cooking, baby tending, everything. Extra help would be welcome when available, but was unnecessary. Virginia accepted. Thanks to this valiant woman, who is dead now, Doctor Curtin was able to serve the community until the end of the war and the emergency.

When Gerald got back from the service, he found his wife a nervous and physical wreck. After Virginia took a long several months' vacation and picked up some of her vanished weight, she and Gerald settled down and assayed the Curtin present and the Curtin future. The two children were healthy and husky. But obviously they needed more of mother's attention and a more stable family life.

The financial ten-year plan was outmoded. Actually, partly because of Virginia's work load during the war, the Curtins accomplished more in seven years than they expected to accomplish in ten. Gerald now owns 100 per cent of the Watonga Republican, and he is prepared to turn the weekly into a semiweekly at any time local conditions permit. The Curtins own their pretty, recently remodeled home, and they own as well two small houses which they bought when Gerald could find no rented premises for a couple of his employees. There are other investments too.

Two years ago Gerald and Virginia decided that Virginia could not only afford to take it easy, but that she must. She owed a rested mind and body to her husband and children. She owed them time. So a fourth physician was invited to join forces at the clinic with the original three, and Dr. Virginia Olson Curtin, wife and mother, really began to live.

She is well acquainted with her children now. She can go out with Gerald for an evening of pitch and bingo. She can take short vacations, without feeling guilty. When Gerald sees his wife is getting overtired, he hires an experienced newspaperman to look after the Republican and direct his seven employees, and the Curtins go on a trip. This may happen several times a year. Very often Gerald and Virginia merely spend a week in an air-cooled hotel room in near-by Oklahoma City.

"Just getting Virginia away from that damned telephone does the trick," says Gerald. Virginia loves her new freedom. So does her husband.

The Curtins never got that million dollars. But Virginia and Gerald feel that what they do possess, in their family, in themselves and in their hard-won knowledge, is worth the million. Their period of conflict and stress and bitter differences of opinion is long since behind them. They know now the cost of two careers, the compromises that are necessary. These two proud, independent, intelligent, vain people are really one.

Would Gerald and Virginia change the past, if it were possible? I asked them. Would they marry sooner, have their children sooner? Would they skip the early quarrels that they laugh at now? No, the Curtins would change no experience that they have gone through, separately or together.

"That's how we learned," Gerald and Virginia say. THE END

NO WONDER FOLKS
Make Good Money!

. . . These Exquisite DOEHLA Greeting Cards Sell On Sight!

HERE'S a friendly way to make a fine income, spare-time or full-time. Show lovely Doehla Box Assortments of richly decorated Christmas and All-Occasion Cards, Gift Wrappings, Stationery, "NAME-IMPRINTED" CHRISTMAS CARDS, 25 FOR ONLY $1. Many other Doehla items so exceptionally beautiful that your friends, neighbors, and co-workers will be delighted to give you big orders. NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED—our FREE BOOK shows you easy ways for any beginner to make money! You make up to 50¢ on each $1 box, even more on bonus orders.

Mrs. Lily Inglehart

of 723 Mayne Ave., Bellflower, Calif., writes: "My Doehla earnings have enabled me to purchase $1,100.00 in bonds, a washing machine, refrigerator, vacuum cleaner, gas range, other furnishings.

Mail coupon below—without money—for sample boxes on approval. No obligation. Send coupon NOW.

HARRY DOEHLA CO., Dept. L21, Fitchburg, Mass.

HARRY DOEHLA CO.
Dept. L21, Fitchburg, Mass.

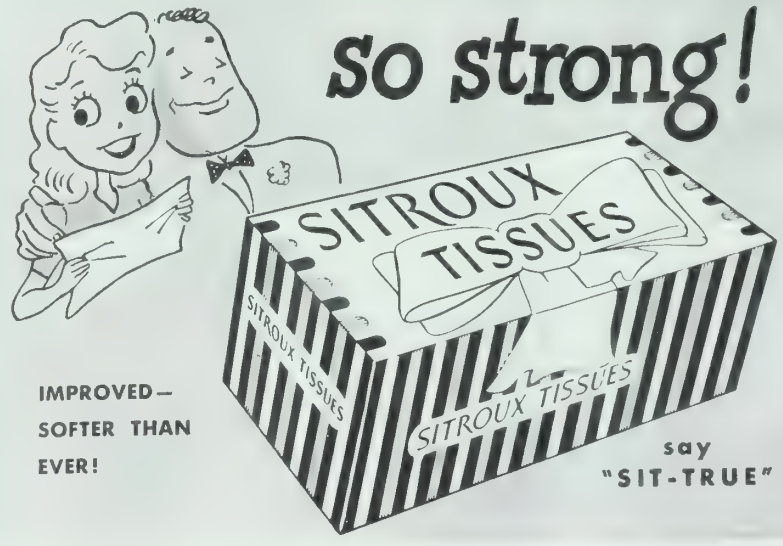
Please rush—for FREE TRIAL—sample boxes on approval, money-making plan, extra-profit bonus offer. Also send FREE BOOK of easy ways for anyone to make money.

Name.....
Address.....
Zone No.
City.....(if any).....State.....

HOW MUCH Is Your SPARE TIME Worth? You can earn up to $1.50 an hour, representing Curtis Publications and other popular magazines. For details write M. E. NICHOLS, Manager of Agents.
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 754 Independence Square, Phila. 5, Pa.

AMAZING OFFER—$40 IS YOURS
FOR SELLING ONLY 50 BOXES CHRISTMAS CARDS
Each box contains 25 brand new, entirely different Deluxe Christmas cards with or without name imprinted. All 50 for $1.00. Free samples. Other boxes on approval. Write today. It costs nothing to try.
Cheerful Card Co., Dept. G-12, White Plains, N. Y.
FREE SAMPLES

Has a New Love



Brunette Suzy Mulligan, glamorous Conover model famous for her petal-fresh complexion, has fallen in love with the beauty-magic of Edna Wallace Hopper White Clay Pack. You, too, will love the way your tired face responds to the quick pick-up of this white cream clay. And it's so easy to use. Simply smooth on—let dry about 8 minutes—rinse off, and thrill to your new look of radiance—of fresh, clear glowing loveliness that men adore. Get Hopper White Clay Pack today. Make it your twice-weekly "beauty special." And for everyday care, use Edna Wallace Hopper Homogenized Facial Cream. At cosmetic counters.

Look Better!
Feel Better!
WITH OR WITHOUT YOUR NYLONS

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY ★ Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

WEAR GENUINE Footlets TRADE MARK
Regular, Open Heel and Toe Guard Styles
At good stores everywhere
Protect SHOES FEET • COMFORT
Makers of Randolph Knit Socks & Anklets

Every smart woman has a Secret up her sleeve

She firmly refuses to suffer the embarrassment of unsightly perspiration . . . to let an ugly stain spoil a pretty dress. She guards the underarm of every garment she owns with Kleinert's guaranteed† Dress Shields. Money can't buy any better protection!

Sew-ins from .35 to .75
Pin-ins from .39 to .55

†Read the guarantee on the package.

Kleinerts
DRESS SHIELDS

*® at your Favorite Notion Counter

ARISTOCRATIC BEAUTY—

with the famous flexible instep that never curs or binds

America's favorite pump in the opera silhouette, so delicate he'll whisper, "You're lovely as a princess". New narrow toe, Louis heel in black, brown suede; green, red, black, brown calf. $12.95.

Paradise Tango Pump

BRAUER BROS. SHOE CO., ST. LOUIS 8, MO. • WRITE FOR NAME OF NEAREST DEALER

Even on those July days when the air is like a flannel blanket dipped in steam, the house at Stillmeadow promises peaceful coolness through each open window and door.

Diary of Domesticity

By Gladys Taber

I HAVE never had any trouble with the law. Once, when I was sixteen, I was stopped by a policeman for speeding, but I was only spoken to firmly. And once I had a brush with a parking meter in Danbury which I fed fifteen or twenty pennies and which never registered, so a policeman collected a dollar extra from me, but even that was not too serious. But I have always been afraid of policemen, just the same. Bowling along at thirty miles an hour, I tremble when a police car rolls by. Traffic men inspire me with the shakes.

But all that is over now. For last week, Jill and I went with Fay to the Bethany police barracks and had lunch with a tableful of state troopers, and they are lovely men! It came about because Fay was doing a kind of state information thing on the radio and two of them had broadcast.

Now I am wondering how many women know as little as I did about the services of their state police. They are protectors, and not persecutors. And meeting them informally gave me a lesson in the value of democracy I shall never forget, for the police employed by the state in other countries is a far different organization.

The Bethany barracks is a brace of brick buildings overlooking the gentle hills. The main office building was filled with tall, easy-walking troopers when we went in.

"How do you do?" said the lieutenant pleasantly. "It's nice to see you. We'll show you around, then have lunch. Let me know if there is anything I can do for you."

He was a big man, with bright, twinkling eyes and a smile Hollywood could do a lot with, a soft and easy voice. He stood up when we came in, and when we went out with Officer Foley to do the tour. He did not bark, or scowl, or chew his words off. He did not ask for my license, which I had forgotten, or my car papers—or where I was the night of the twenty-first.

We went to the workshop first. There was the ambulance—the most comfortable and speediest type—just back from taking a farmer to the hospital after he had fallen from a hayload and broken his back. We saw the wrecker, built right there by the civilian workers, which could lift a car right out of a river bed or haul fallen timber from a house flattened by a hurricane. W saw the shelves of grappling hooks for drown ing accidents. We saw a lot of contrivance I couldn't even list, for first aid and fire an traffic accidents.

Then we went back to the kennels an saw the dogs. The bloodhounds greeted u with sad and gentle eyes. And right the and there we revised our ideas of them a Eliza-crossing-the-ice animals. They ar used most often to find lost people, strayed little children or mentally ill older folk, an they simply follow a trail and lead th troopers to the lost one. We met the sta who had followed a scent after twenty-fou hours and saved the life of a woman lost i a swamp, and up to her waist in muck an water.

"He went right to her," said Office Foley. "Picked up that two-day-cold scent as easy as anything."

We met, politely, the Doberman pin schers. Now I do not like the idea of dogs at tacking people, and yet I had to admit that an escaped maniacal murderer ought to b captured as fast as possible. The dogs bring the man down, when a man would have t shoot. We went back and said a special good-by to the dog who saved two lives i one week.

Then we had lunch—and it was very gay and informal at the sunny dining-room table. The dishes were set in a service shelf, and I have seldom felt so proud as when the arm of the law was used to set my lunch in front of me, for the officers did the serving.

We talked about dog training and got some sage advice on how to make Hildegarde heel more closely, and keep Maeve from jumping fences. "Every dog has its own personality," said Officer Foley, "and you have to understand him. You can't get anything from a dog by cruelty, you need patience and a feeling for the dog."

"Of course," he added, "we have a black cocker at home, and he doesn't do anything except run the house. But cockers and setters are fine dogs, we just spoil ours."

"Well," I said, when we left, "the next time anything goes wrong at Stillmeadow, I

(Continued on Page 162)

THE MAGAZINE WOMEN BELIEVE IN · AUGUST, 1948 · 25

JOURNAL

BURLINGAME PUBLIC LIBRARY
Burlingame, Calif.

IS NOTHING TO ME · A COMPLETE NOVEL BY NELLA GARDNER WHITE

RED ROPE
MAGAZINE BINDER

Manufactured by
TAYLORD BROS. Inc.
Syracuse, N. Y.
Stockton, Calif.

DICK ASHBAUGH

"Two years ago, with things more or less settled on the battle fronts, I left the Army and retired to our upstairs bedroom in Dayton, Ohio. (First door on the left and go easy—he's probably sleeping.) Source material for the 100 or more family-humor sketches since then is my family: a pretty wife and three daughters, Molly (in photo above) Melinda and Michaella—the last a well-preserved infant of five months. Party Dress is one of my first full-size short stories."

NANCY GARBETT WILBUR

"I was born in Wales twenty-five years ago and started writing at the age of five, with a one-act drama called Coralie and the Sea Serpent. Coralie, the adult, must be Emily in Isn't Emily Marvelous?—I'm not. During the war I served in the ATS (British WAC) and afterward joined the staff of the United Nations. I came to New York with the United Nations in April of 1946 and later married an American. I like to cook but, oh, how I hate housework!"

GEORGE AND CICELY RODGER

As photographer-researchers for the People are People series, George Rodger and his wife, Cicely, traveled 15,000 miles to visit families in Pakistan, Egypt and Equatorial Africa. In Lujulu, near the Uganda frontier, they found our African family. They turned down one family in which the husband had 8 wives and 43 children as editorially unwieldy. Mrs. Rodger was seriously disturbed only once—when she found a hippopotamus nosing at the door of their car near the Congo.

JOURNAL CONTENTS

AUGUST, 1948

Vol. LXV, No. 8

NOVEL COMPLETE IN THIS ISSUE

		PAGE
IT IS NOTHING TO ME	Nelia Gardner White	34

FICTION

PARTY DRESS	Dick Ashbaugh	38
ISN'T EMILY MARVELOUS?	Nancy Garbett Wilbur	42
TELLTALE HANDS	Val Teal	50
THE QUARREL	Bentz Plagemann	52

SPECIAL FEATURES

THE CENTURY OF WOMEN'S PROGRESS	Dorothy Thompson	11
OUR GREATEST TREASURE	I. A. R. Wylie	11
WHAT YOUTH WANTS MOST	Elizabeth Tate	31
I SAVED $8 ON MY MONTHLY FOOD BILL	Eleanor Faherty	36
PEOPLE ARE PEOPLE THE WORLD OVER	John Godfrey Morris	40
IF YOU ASK ME	Eleanor Roosevelt	44
LOOK THE MONEYLENDERS OVER	G. M. White and Sidney Margolius	45
WHAT KIND OF HIGH SCHOOL DO YOU WANT?	Francis T. Spaulding	48
FRENCH ART	John Walker	49
HOW AMERICA LIVES: THE ROODS' PROMISED LAND	Harlan Miller	119
HOW TO CONQUER SHYNESS	Irma Simonton Black	126

GENERAL FEATURES

OUR READERS WRITE US		5
UNDER-COVER STUFF	Bernardine Kielty	14
HOMES . . . MILLINOCKET BUILDS		23
HOUSING HOPES	Margaret Hickey	23
REFERENCE LIBRARY		24
MAKING MARRIAGE WORK	Clifford R. Adams	26
FUN OUTDOORS (The Sub-Deb)	Edited by Maureen Daly	28
FIFTY YEARS AGO IN THE JOURNAL • JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN		33
ASK ANY WOMAN	Marcelene Cox	95
DIARY OF DOMESTICITY	Gladys Taber	97
THIS IS A STAIR-RUNNER	Munro Leaf	147
THAT "I WON'T" STAGE	Dr. Herman N. Bundesen	149
BRINGING UP PARENTS	Dr. Barbara Biber	170

FASHIONS AND BEAUTY

WHO'S THAT GIRL?	Wilhela Cushman	54
JOURNAL ORIGINALS GO TO COLLEGE	Wilhela Cushman	58
EARLY BLACK	Ruth Mary Packard	60
WHY NOT SEW FOR YOUR CHILDREN?	Nora O'Leary	62
DUET IN COTTON YARN	Nora O'Leary	92
TEEN-AGERS DO THEIR OWN HAIR	Dawn Crowell Norman	129
YOUNG IDEAS FOR QUILTING	Nora O'Leary	131

ARCHITECTURE AND INTERIOR DECORATION

CONNECTICUT SALT BOX	Richard Pratt	46
THIS ROOM FOR $395.14 AT AUCTION	Henrietta Murdock	106

FOOD AND HOMEMAKING

NOW IS THE BEAUTIFUL MONTH OF AUGUST	Ann Batchelder	64
LINE A DAY	Ann Batchelder	66
QUICK AND EASYS FOR TWO	Louella G. Shouer	90
KITCHEN ON THE FARM	Gladys Taber	132
LUNCH BEFORE BREAKFAST	Louella G. Shouer	134
CAN WE AFFORD A NEW BATHROOM?	Margaret Davidson	136
CONVERSATION PIECE	Ruth Mills Teague	160

POETRY

THE GARDEN	George Brady	71
SHORE GRAVEYARDS	Robert P. Tristram Coffin	81
À MINUIT	Rhina P. Espaillat	98
NOTATIONS FOR MIDSUMMER	Gladys McKee	110
GIRLS WITH HOOPS	R. H. Grenville	115
THOUGHT FOR A FRIEND	Julia Collins Ardayne	139
MAGIC LENS	Mae Winkler Goodman	141
TEXTURE	Catherine Haydon Jacobs	151

Cover Design by Wilhela Cushman

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, copyright 1948 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries.

Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICES: U. S. and Possessions, Canada, Newfoundland, Labrador, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas, 1 yr., $3, 2 yrs., $5, 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTY. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copies of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company, Walter D. Fuller, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President and Treasurer; Lewis W. Haverd, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Robert F. MacNeal, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Send your Journal change of address to

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL
Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living persons is a coincidence.

...opping today
...ew Chevrolet—

...y to park—so easy to handle in traffic.
...let really makes driving a pleasure!

ACCESSORIES OPTIONAL AT EXTRA

...k and with a flick of the finger, steer with a light touch of the wheel.

...—and And when you spot a parking space—how sweetly and neatly you'll slip into it with this easy-handling Chevrolet!

...heart! What makes Chevrolet such a dream to drive? The answer lies in Positive-Action hydraulic brakes for sure stops—Vacuum-Shift with finger-tip control—Shock-Proof Steering—Unitized Knee-Action Ride responsive Valve-in-Head engine—t comfort and visibility of Body by Fish

...liday

...adds

...s way You'll know how much these featu mean to your driving enjoyment fr the moment you "take off" in yo own Chevrolet. Why accept less th Chevrolet's Big-Car Value . . . when i yours at lowest cost.

...ith a

...gears

MOTOR DIVISION, GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION, DETROIT 2, MICHIGAN

...OLET and only Chevrolet IS FIRST!

Our Readers Write Us

Husbands are People Too

Chicago, Illinois.

Dear Editor: Lest some of the brides among your readers may fear that they have no chance in marriage, after reading Jane Allen's article, "Why I Still Love Him," I hasten to assure them ——

I too was doing well—I had doubled my salary in six years, was supervisor of ten girls in the accounting dept., and the boss was starting to "show me the ropes," in his line, when I shucked it for the man in my life.

Now after almost eight years of marriage I have four children (two of each) and am expecting a fifth. I do my own washing, ironing, cooking, sewing and the cleaning of a five-room bungalow (oh, for an extra room!).

My husband and I take each other for granted—frankly. I like it that way. We know that however nasty we get at times, the other will forgive and forget after the storm. We know we will be together when our grandchildren start arriving.

Perhaps I should mention the things I especially appreciate and like about my husband; but I do not love him because of these good points. I say you love your man regardless of his good or bad points.

A sexually adjusted couple rarely seeks a divorce in spite of other unfavorable factors. If any wife feels she needs some advice on this subject I suggest sending a dime and a stamped self-addressed envelope to Dr. George W. Crane, c/o WGN, Chicago, for his bulletin called Sex Problems in Marriage.

Any woman can have a happy marriage and stay in love (or fall in love again) with her husband; even if he is an ornery cuss at present. In fact, after a couple is sexually adjusted they will find that most of their bad points disappear or become inconsequential. Sincerely,

GLADYS STACY.

P.S. I think the reason Jane Allen and her husband stay in love is because they are sexually adjusted. If they weren't, his attitude toward her (even if it stayed the same) and all his good points would still leave her disgruntled.

BBC Bore

Hingham, Massachusetts.

Dear Editors: I agree that radio is not all that it might be. My radio is off at this moment because I can find nothing to interest me.

But let's not speak blithely of having another BBC. All newspaper reports to the contrary, the BBC is far far worse than radio in the U. S. I've recently returned from almost two years in England and, like everyone else, I listened principally to Radio Luxembourg or the American Forces Network. The BBC lecturers, whether on the atomic bomb or a new cake recipe, talk down to an audience they evidently consider completely moronic.

There, I've said it at last. I've been bursting to tell someone ever since I got home. Sincerely, HELEN C. BROWN.

There was no proposal to start "another BBC." Reader Brown should reread Spingarn. ED.

Is Your Magazine Open Now?

Allentown, Pennsylvania.

Dear Mr. Ziesing: The article Is Your Radio on Now? by Jerome H. Spingarn in the May issue was most interesting. After reading pages 60 and 61, I turned to page 136 and read one column, then to page 137 and read one column and completed the article on page 139. Could these interruptions be due to commercials in your magazine?

I am not opposed to advertising. But how can you criticize radio commercials? Perhaps we should have several Government-operated magazines without advertising devoted to unedited political articles and the fine arts! Yours very truly,

H. H. BRENAN.

Because of the nature of printing there will always be room for one more magazine. Many of them, notably The Reader's Digest, carry no advertising. In short, readers have choices denied to listeners. ED.

Program for Clubwomen

Kearney, Nebraska.

My dear Mrs. Gould: As state chairman of international relations in the Nebraska Federation of Women's Clubs, I am very much interested in your picture survey of family life the world over.

My goal this coming club year is to create an interest in international affairs in the hearts and minds of every Nebraska clubwoman. Since they are primarily homemakers, I believe we could accomplish more in international understanding with these pictures and articles than any other material I have read so far.

I am so positive you have something "big" here that I am most anxious to make the best possible use of it.

Yours sincerely,

FLORENCE H. DAVIS.

Men Never Grow Up

Burbank, California.

Dear Editors: I have read articles in your magazine which seem to blame women only for marriage failures. I admit there are a few scatterbrain women, but men are often the ones to blame. They waste their money, get into debt, make bad financial deals. Many of them drink, bet on the races and prize fights.

I've had three, and they did all those things.

I am very fond of men and I adore my son. But I feel that they must see themselves as they really are.

Sincerely,

MRS. FRANKLYN PARKER.

Oughtn't you to take a good square look at yourself—after you have removed the beam from your eye? ED.

Ham on Wry

The Duke's Cottage, Rudgwick, England.

My dear Bruce and Beatrice: I thought I had been immensely clever when I joined a pig club six months ago, and became the proud owner of a porker, with a license to kill same in four months.

With fond dreams of home-cured bacon and luscious hams, we slayed our pig a month ago. Now dreams have gone. What we should have gone in for with it is boot repairs. At a colossal sum, I have acquired any amount of old leather. We have tried to eat it—and I still have all my own teeth so should have triumphed. But it defeated even me. All I can think of to do now is stitch what remains of the two sides together and make a suitcase. It's sad. It will take me a long time to get over the humiliating moment when I met my butcher face to face, and he said, "Did you kill it, or did it die of starvation?"

Later. The New Look isn't catching on much here. How could it? Here and there a young thing parts with everything she has, and appears looking curved and feminine and graceful. Here and there, courageous persons do unwise things with bits of velvet and contrasting materials let in at hem and waist. But it's never a success.

It is suddenly quite a bit easier to purchase in our shops the sort of things you don't much want—like trays with flowers painted on them, or rather gaudy vases, and tricksy kitchen fittings. But those things for which our souls long so—speaking as a housewife—curtains, sheets, wipers, towels—no! Children under four and over ten are quite lavishly catered for. What is supposed to happen to those between those ages—I am at the moment trying to cater for one—I just don't know.

With my love to you all,

DOROTHY BLACK.

Home is Never the Same

The Duke's Cottage, Rudgwick, England.

My dear June: I am still shattered at not being able to get away this summer, but hoping now for the fall, and please when you write do not mention Martha's Vineyard, or Miami, or any other delec-

Exciting PRELL REMOVES DANDRUFF
IN AS LITTLE AS 3 MINUTES!
LEAVES HAIR Radiantly CLEAN Radiantly SMOOTH

Prell—Prell—Prell . . . that's all you hear! Because this new emerald-clear Radiant-Creme shampoo leaves hair far more shining and radiant than old-fashioned soap or soap shampoos—leaves it free of unsightly dandruff. Doctors' examinations proved that Prell removes ugly dandruff in as little as 3 minutes—that regular Prell shampoos control it.

And Prell Goes Farther than any known shampoo—cream or liquid—because it's concentrated for economy. The Prell tube is so handy too—no messy jars or slippery bottles. Prell's a favorite with grownups, teen-agers, and children—it's America's "family" shampoo. Get a tube of Prell today—your family is sure to like it.

With Prell, hair curls so much better—shines so radiantly—feels so lovely, so soft, so smooth.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

YOU name it!

- Automatic lighting . . . no matches.
- Automatic clock control . . . times and cooks oven meal all by itself.
- Automatic heat control . . . no guessing at temperatures.
- Smokeless broiling . . . no pre-heating.
- Perfect baking . . . only Gas air-circulated ovens bake and brown so evenly!
- Extra insulation . . . cooler kitchens.
- Speed . . . nothing else cooks as fast as Gas.
- Streamlined design . . . easy to clean.
- Economical . . . both to buy and operate!

You'll do the fastest, cleanest, easiest cooking in your life on a new automatic Gas range. This super-modern CALORIC Gas range is just one of the many built to "CP" standards. Choose one for your "New Freedom Gas Kitchen"* from the choice now available at your local Gas Company or Gas appliance dealer's. For perfect performance, make sure that it carries this "CP" seal.

AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

*Cert. Mark, Amer. Gas Assoc., Inc.

GAS has got it!

table place to me, or I shall scream! I pine and long for the sea.

In some ways we haven't changed at all. The same horsy girls ride around the village on bicycles in jodhpurs, with small dogs in baskets on their handle bars. There is no marriage, or giving in marriage, and very little death. If Rip van Winkle came back here after a hundred years, I don't think he'd notice any difference. There would be the same people leaning over gates, and the same people drinking in the inn. Only the beer is otherwise. "Looks like rain," said the innkeeper, handing over a pint of bitter to a visitor. "Yes. And tastes like it, too," was the reply.

. Love to you, darling, oh, lucky girl in the land of the free. MOTHER (Dorothy Black).

Watching for Watchbirds

Concord, New Hampshire.

Dear Sirs: I am making a scrapbook of Munro Leaf Watchbirds for my granddaughter. When she comes to visit, she brings it for the latest to be pasted in. And you can tell by her face which ones hit home. MRS. P. L. COVEY.

Cute kids cut Watchbird collars. Robin and Luida, children of Mr. and Mrs. R. P. White, Mecca, California.

So Much—So Cheap

Milan, Italy.

Dear Editor: When my mother sent me a bundle of old magazines, I decided that the best and most interesting was the JOURNAL. Then I received a gift subscription, so here I am with two new JOURNALS and doing miracles to get through my housework as fast as possible. My husband says I was a better housewife before the JOURNAL arrived. But even at that he keeps praising the wonderful paper, beautiful colors and how well they are printed. He can't believe such a magazine sells for only twenty-five cents.

Sincerely yours,
RENA MANZOLI.

Batchelder Teaching Germans

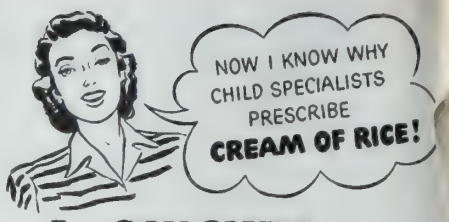
Nuremberg, Germany.

Gentlemen: I wonder if Ann Batchelder realizes how many of her articles are used to teach American cooking to German nationals. After the magazine is practically worn out, all pictures, recipes, and so on, are cut out and made into scrapbooks by GYA clubs. Sincerely,
MARGARET A. FLANDERS.

Where Credit is Due

Port Hueneme, California.

Dear Editors: On page 99 of the June issue of the JOURNAL, the filler "Life is a grindstone . . ." is a "Benedictine" by Elsie Lincoln Benedict. I read over her little booklet (published in Australia in 1927) a few days ago for a theme for a short story (found one, too—always do! "Bury the past and don't visit its grave!").



Sincerely,
MONA SAUNDERS.

Fifty—and Stylish

Mason City, Iowa.

Gentlemen: Everyone designs clothes for young eighteen with a beautiful figure, with clothes displays for older women centering

(Continued on Page 8)

1. QUICKER NUTRITION

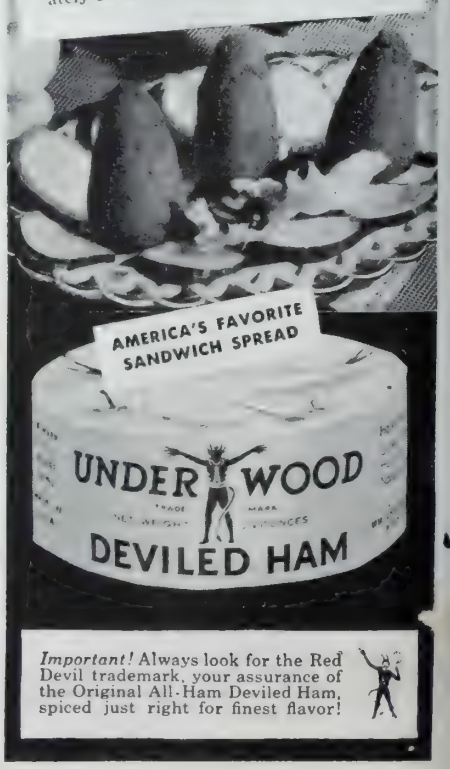
2. MORE ENERGY

3. EASIER TO DIGEST

3 advantages over any wheat, oat, or baby cereal*

Gives more nutrition faster. New life begins to pour into the system in a few minutes! Gives more energy! And . . . Vitamins B_1 B_2 and Niacin are added—plus iron—for rich, red blood and better growth! Is easier to digest! Many doctors recommend Cream of Rice as one of baby's first cereals.

*Test data available upon professional request.



READY IN ONLY 5 MINUTES!

RECIPE FOR

UNDERWOOD DEVILED HAM RICE CROQUETTES

2 cups cold boiled rice
1 tablespoon melted butter
½ teaspoon salt
1 egg yolk, beaten slightly
1 tablespoon flour
1 can UNDERWOOD DEVILED HAM

Mix all the ingredients, and let stand for thirty minutes. Form into croquettes, dip in egg, roll in fine crumbs and fry in deep, smoking-hot fat. Drain and serve immediately on a hot platter with currant jelly.

Important! Always look for the Red Devil trademark, your assurance of the Original All-Ham Deviled Ham, spiced just right for finest flavor!

In the most dramatic beauty test ever made

Women Prefer Woodbury to their Own Favorite Face Powders

From Coast to Coast, enthusiastic women voted New Woodbury Powder better than the powder they had been using, according to a recent nation-wide test.

4 out of 5 women preferred New Woodbury Powder!

NEW WOODBURY POWDER WINS 4 to 1

TWICE NEW!

—A new Secret Ingredient in Woodbury Powder gives a satin-smooth finish to your skin. It gives a natural, "unpowdered" look... yet covers tiny blemishes.

New Revolutionary Blending! In all cosmetic history there has never been anything like Woodbury's new "Super-Blender." It whirls color and powder together with the force of a tornado. Result: fineness of texture that's "incredible!"... richness of shade that's "unbelievable!"... freedom from streaking that "couldn't be true" before New Woodbury Powder!

over all leading brands of powder!

Preferred for Every Beauty Quality!

In this most exacting test of all ...a test against each woman's own favorite face powder... women preferred New Woodbury Powder for every beauty quality! Today—discover for yourself that "Woodbury gives a smoother look to skin"... "Clings longer"..."Covers skin flaws better"...that Woodbury is, literally, the world's finest face powder!

clings longer

warmer, lovelier shades

less "powdery" appearance covers skin flaws better better, finer texture

smoother look on skin

more color-true

finer fragrance

Get New Woodbury Powder—in new "Venus" box—at any cosmetic counter. Large size $1.00. Medium and "Purse" sizes 30¢ and 15¢. (Prices plus tax.)

6 exciting shades!

Today—see the dramatic difference ...the astonishing beauty that's yours with New Woodbury Powder!

IT'S LIKE STARTING LIFE ALL OVER AGAIN WITH AN INCREDIBLY LOVELIER COMPLEXION!

Look! Now Ivory Flakes brings you 2 SPECIALS!

SPECIAL CARE!

Your fine washables are in for a brighter, longer life once you discover what special care with pure, mild Ivory Flakes can do for them.

Once you see how Ivory Flakes care helps keep your nice things looking bright and fitting right, you'll never again trust your lovelies to strong soaps and rough handling. Remember, one wrong washing can fade and shrink them. Gentle care with Ivory Flakes will keep them looking their best far longer.

And that's not all! Not only will Ivory Flakes ca help preserve the loveliness of your gay cottons, daint undies and precious nylons—but Ivory Flakes has a other "special" for you! Yes, Ivory Flakes is making very special offer to win new friends and delight ol ones! Read the good news!

SPECIAL OFFER!

$1.50 Stainless Steel Carving Set FOR ONLY 50¢ AND ONE IVORY FLAKES BOX-TOP!

Talk about bargains! This colorful carving set has "sure-grip" plastic handles molded on so they won't come loose or come off! Both knife and fork are of stainless steel—won't rust, stain or tarnish! The big 8" blade has a safety edge near the grip to help you carve in comfort. And this wonderful "Quikut" carving set is yours for only 50¢ and one Ivory Flakes box-top!

But hurry! This offer is for a short time only. So fill in that order blank now! Send it with 50¢ and one Ivory Flakes box-top and get your carving set at this amazing bargain price!

Mail this order blank TODAY!

IVORY [illegible] Dept. C, [illegible], Ohio

Please send me [illegible] carving set. I enclose 50¢ in coin and 1 Ivory Flakes [illegible] from [illegible] wrapper.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ ZONE _____ STATE _____

Two cents a piece. September 30, 1948. Be sure to put enough postage on your letter. Offer [illegible] ages 14 to 18 years. Not good in Canada. Void where prohibited, taxed or restricted by law. Offer good in the United States and [illegible] only.

If it's lovely to wear it's worth Ivory Flakes care

The fast flake form of baby's pure, mild Ivory, 99 44/100 % pure

LADIES' HOME Journal

BRUCE GOULD

AND BEATRICE BLACKMAR GOULD, Editors

MARY BASS, Executive Editor

LAURA LOU BROOKMAN, Managing Editor

Associate Editors: HUGH MAC NAIR KAHLER, BERNARDINE KIELTY, ANN BATCHELDER, WILHELA CUSHMAN, FRANK ELTONHEAD, ALICE BLINN, RICHARD PRATT, HENRIETTA MURDOCK, LOUELLA G. SHOUER, MARY LEA PAGE, MAUREEN DALY, DAWN CROWELL NORMAN, JOHN GODFREY MORRIS, JOAN YOUNGER, LONNIE COLEMAN, MARGARET DAVIDSON, NORA O'LEARY. Contributing Editors: GLADYS TABER, LOUISE PAINE BENJAMIN, GLADYS DENNY SHULTZ, BARBARA BENSON, MARGARET HICKEY. Assistant Editors: JOHN WERNER, CHARLOTTE JOHNSON, ROBERT C. ATHERTON, DONALD STUART, RUTH MARY PACKARD, RUTH MATTHEWS, ALICE CONKLING, JUDY BARRY DEE, JUNE TORREY, LILY GLENDINNING, DOROTHY COUNSELMAN SELBY, JOSEPH DI PIETRO, ANNE EINSELEN, GLENN MATTHEW WHITE, BETTY NILES GRAY, KATHLEEN EDGELL, JAN WEYL. Editorial Assistants: KATHERINE W. MILLER, SELMA RUTHERFORD BURGESS, ALICE KASTBERG, IRIS WILKEN, BETTY COE, JEANNE LENTON TRACEY, MARGARET ARCHER, DOROTHEA CORNWELL, CYNTHIA McADOO, JEANNE SCRIBNER, HELEN WAHLBERG, ELEANOR POWNALL SIMMONS, ADRINA CASPARIAN, VIRGINIA PRICE, MARION PLUMMER, MARY JEAN STRAIN, LOIS WITHERSPOON, ALEXA CARROLL, PHILIPPA HERMAN, JEANNE STILES.

Our Greatest Treasure

By I. A. R. Wylie

"I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it." —Voltaire.

"NO amount of political freedom will satisfy the hungry masses," declared Lenin. "Real freedom," announced Oswald Mosley, the English Fascist, "means good wages." Both Communists and Fascists base their dogmas on a demonstrable fallacy. In fact, all through history, men—even hungry men—have fought most bitterly and cruelly for ideas—of course, their own ideas. It was only with the dawn of the democratic conception of life that they fought for every man's idea, for the belief that at the heart of humanity's dignity and significance was man's power to think and his right to express his thoughts.

Establish any economic system. However bad it may be, sooner or later, so long as we retain our freedom to express our opinion of it, it will conform to our desires. Take away that freedom and sooner or later the best economic system will crush us.

Tyrants of every color know this. They goad our worst intolerances and fears so that in the name of our own freedom we stifle the freedom of others. But for every silenced voice of an opponent we pay with our own eventual silence.

Lincoln, one of the greatest men in history, spoke for the best in us: "Those who deny freedom to others deserve it not for themselves and, under a just God, cannot retain it."

These words should be engraved over the doors of every place of learning and every public institution. Above all, they should be engraved on our hearts. If we forget them, we shall have fought at least two terrible wars in vain and deserve that our children shall inherit nothing but their ruins.

THE CENTURY OF WOMEN'S PROGRESS

By Dorothy Thompson

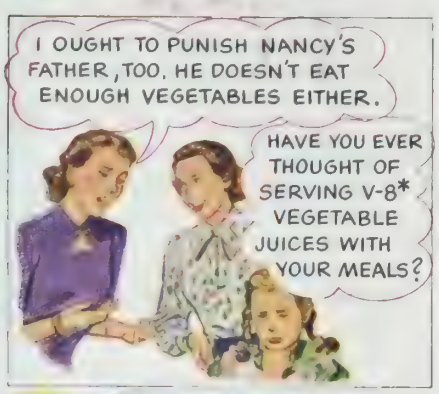
THE issuance of a series of three-cent stamps, bearing the pictures of three pioneers for the rights of women—Elizabeth Stanton, Lucretia Mott and Carrie Chapman Catt—marks 100 years of the progress of American women, from 1848 to 1948.

Today, when almost as many women are attending colleges and universities as men, it is difficult to believe that though universities for men have existed all over the western world since the dawn of the Middle Ages, it is only a little over a hundred years since the first American college admitted women: Oberlin. Not only here but everywhere in Europe, women, whom the factory system first welcomed as a source of cheap labor, today occupy positions in every rank of commerce, industry, the professions and government. There are women industrial executives, newspaper publishers, engineers, architects, physicians, scientists, scholars, lawyers, artists, writers, composers, journalists and cabinet ministers.

Although they are present in all such positions in far less numbers than men, the average of their eminence is not, I believe, lower than that of men, except, oddly enough, in the more original and creative arts, which have actually been open to them longest. There exists, neither in this nor any preceding generation, an absolutely first-class woman painter or composer; there is no "great" woman dramatist, though from the days of Sappho there have been women writers easily rivaling the best of their male contemporaries, as is true today. Nor has there ever been a great woman philosopher, capable of building one of those monumental systems of thought which represent perhaps the highest reaches of intellectual activity, though dubiously the most useful.

There has been a great deal of speculation as to why this is so, since no intelligence tests or brain analyses indicate any inferiority in the brain structure of women. It would seem, however, that women are more "balanced" than men, and less gifted with genius, which, except in rare cases, represents an exaggerated development of one part of the brain and psyche at the expense of the rest. I believe, also, that the inferior showing of women in the top ranks of creative art is due to psychological reasons. Great art is created by a combination of intellectual, emotional and imaginative energy, requiring concentration of all three on the work, to their exclusion from everything else. This is practically out of the question for any womanly woman. Her emotions, especially, are always divided. No matter how prodigiously gifted she may be, she cannot put all her emotional life into her work, to the exclusion, for instance, of her children, who in her feelings, at least, represent her highest creative function. The greatest men artists have deserted their wives and forgotten their children, in concentration on a compelling dream.

But woman is much more closely tied to the race, and lives much more profoundly in her children. And it is no doubt



IMAGINE!

Now I give my family a delicious blend of 8 vegetables in a wholesome drink they love!

THIS IS HOW IT HAPPENED...

IMPORTANT!

Serve your family V-8 at every meal — and between meals, too. Every delicious glass contains nutrition of 8 different vegetables.

CELERY • LETTUCE
PARSLEY • CARROTS
SPINACH • TOMATOES
BEETS • WATERCRESS

*V-8 is a trademark owned in the United States by Campbell Soup Company; in Canada by Campbell Soup Company Ltd.

extremely well for the race that this is so. For one thing stands out too clearly to be a mere coincidence. The biographies of great men reveal that the great majority of them appear to have inherited their talents, predilections and energies from the maternal strain. And it may be that it is the latent unfulfilled genius in women which is transferred to the great sons of the race, since it also appears to be true that extraordinary paternal talent, used up in action, seldom repeats itself in successive generations, unless some extraordinary mothers come into the picture, to contribute unused-up energies.

What has always seemed remarkable to me, however, is the obvious talent of women in the field for which they are popularly considered least fit: government; the conduct of the affairs of great states.

People are still startled by the idea of a woman president, though not at all startled by the concept of a woman painter or composer. Yet experience would seem to indicate a much higher proportion of chances that a woman would make a great president than that she would rival Michelangelo or Beethoven.

For the talents required in government are common sense, human judgment, prudence, and consciousness of the race, all eminently possessed by women. The really greatest feminine figures have emerged in the field of statecraft. Joan of Arc was a mystic, directed, she believed, by the voices of Saints, but she was also one of the shrewdest and most sensible leaders who ever buckled on a sword to settle once and for all a condition that had caused a hundred years of war.

In the thirteenth century, which marked the pinnacle of Western European unity, with the church as the center of all social activity, the common folk caused great concern to the theologists by creating the concept of Mary, the Virgin, as the Empress of Heaven, on a plane, to say the very least, with the Trinity. And it may be that they were influenced by the example of two great queens—Blanche of Castile and Eleanor of Aquitaine.

The two greatest British epochs—the Elizabethan and the Victorian—take their names from queens. Any Austrian will tell you that Austria's greatest time was under Maria Theresia. And even the Soviets have had to acknowledge that the German woman, Catherine, belongs among the greatest tsars.

Women, too, seem to have done best when they had most direct responsibility, and worst when they worked through men rulers, as wives or mistresses, participating in court intrigues and otherwise pulling strings.

However that may be, one thing seems clear, that women for all their influence in America are not getting the feminine prin ciple of nurture and conservation as we expressed as it should be.

There is a certain irony in celebrating Century of Progress of Women, merely b pointing to their achievement of all th civil, legal, property, and educational right possessed by men.

It is obvious that they have not achieve happiness in their relations with men, con parable to their other gains, or this cou try would not have such a record wrecked marriages. It is obvious that the influence is not properly functioning in s cial life, or we would not have such an a palling record of juvenile crime.

It is clear that they have not manage to turn into power their inchoate year ings and revulsions, or we should n have a United Nations helpless to pr vent war.

Perhaps in the century-long struggle f equality with men, women and human s ciety have lost, as well as gained. Perha in the competition to enter the world men, women have too eagerly accepted t standards and values of men, losing con dence in their own intuitive knowledge life, and in the values deriving from the unique experience of life.

The ultimate measure of their emancip tion will not be the equality of rights whi they share, but the contribution they ma to improved standards of individual a social behavior. All highly civilized soc ties (which ours, at present, is not) ha been refined by the influence of dist guished women on morals and manners. a human society is uncouth, obscene, ov blown, strife-ridden, psychologically in cure and lacking in common sense, wom somehow, are failing to produce the atm phere which it is in their power to cre and which is essential to the fulfillment their own natures, and to the balance society.

If, therefore, the first century of wome progress has accomplished—as it has revolution in the status of women, we m hope that the second century of wome progress will find them competing less w men and aping less the values of men, introducing with more strength, firmne and calm confidence their own values i the pattern of organized society. Equal of right never has and never can me identity of function. On that rock ma a democracy has split, as everyone en the function of someone else and does lence to his own. The basic unit of hun society is and will remain—if civilizat and freedom persist—the family: The ther and mother equal but with differ roles and contributions; the children bo to both in equal respect; and the freedo all disciplined to the obedient service love.

THE F

The Way of Free People

FREEDOM TRAIN, in its year-long 300-city tour of the United States, is doing much to create awareness of our heritage of freedom. The main purpose of the American Heritage Foundation, which sponsors Freedom Train, is to encourage active personal participation in public affairs.

Freedom is not a spectator sport. You take part by practicing good citizenship in your family, your neighborhood and your community. You participate by voting in local and national elections. Freedom begins, or begins to end, in the behavior of each person.

Freedom Train is only the symbol of the American Heritage Foundation's educational program for better citizenship. Schools, libraries, clubs and church groups in many communities are already participating. Publications and films to give special emphasis to the good-citizenship program in your community can be obtained through:

THE AMERICAN HERITAGE FOUNDATION
17 East Forty-Fifth Street • New York 17, N. Y.

FREEDOM IS EVERYBODY'S JOB

Hot Ideas FOR Cold Dishes!

BY

Virginia Coates

The same but so different! That's the kind of delicious potato salad you'll get when you use the recipe on this page. The real trick is in the dressing—and that's Durkee's Famous Dressing. The hot potatoes soak up all its rich tang, all its keen, spirited flavor. This famous-for-taste Dressing is a blend of 14 rare spices, rich with fresh eggs and other fine ingredients.

• • •

Celery Seed is a "must," of course, in potato salad. Take a tip from one who has tried 'em all—and choose Durkee's. Durkee's Celery Seed—like all Durkee spices—is always fresh, full-flavored and properly blended.

Fillings—original and delicious! Try the Chicken Nut Sandwich Filling recipe in the panel. It's something! And here are some more surprises:

Sardines mashed with a little grated lemon rind; cream cheese and enough tomato paste to color; devilled ham and mayonnaise; chopped hard-boiled eggs and green pepper with salad dressing; cold sliced meat loaf, sliced tomatoes and minced pickle; grated tuna fish with chopped cucumber and mayonnaise; grated American cheese and relish; blue cheese creamed with an equal amount of Margarine.

• • •

In sandwiches, it's the inside story that counts—so use the best spread. That's Durkee's Margarine! It's so mild and sweet—made of pure nutritious vegetable oils, churned with fresh, pasteurized skim milk. Healthful, too—with 15,000 units of Vitamin A to a pound the year 'round. And note this, good cooks, Durkee's Margarine is as perfect for cooking, baking and hot vegetables as it is for a spread.

IMPORTANT! In more than half the states, you can buy yellow Durkee's Margarine right now. If your state is not one, write your state representative to repeal the obsolete laws which make you color margarine at home.

For many interesting recipes, write to Durkee Famous Foods, Dept. L8-8, Elmhurst, Long Island, New York.

Accessories from Mayhew Shop

Here is my favorite Potato Salad

4 cups diced, hot potatoes
2 tbsp. chopped pimento
10 stuffed olives, sliced
¼ cup Durkee's Famous Dressing
6 slices cooked bacon (crisp and crumbled)
2 tbsp. chopped green pepper
1 tsp. Durkee's Celery Seed
¼ cup Durkee's Mayonnaise

Mix all ingredients thoroughly and let stand in refrigerator until well chilled. Can be served in salad bowl lined with lettuce and tomato wedges if desired.

Dress it up with DURKEE'S DRESSING

Chicken Nut Filling

1½ cups cooked chicken
6 tbsp. walnuts, ground
½ cup chopped watercress
6 tbsp. Durkee's Mayonnaise
6 tbsp. Durkee's Margarine
12 slices bread

Put chicken through food chopper using medium blade. Add watercress, ground nuts and Mayonnaise and blend well. Cream Margarine and spread on bread. Spread filling. Makes 6 sandwiches. If you have some cold duck, use it in place of chicken and substitute a little grated orange rind for the nuts. Thrift note: Save all the crusts and use them for croutons and puddings.

Men like this will

REJOICE!

So will all the many people kept awake, made nervous or jittery by the caffein in regular coffee! For . . .

THE NEW IMPROVED

SANKA COFFEE

now has a new, marvelous flavor to delight lovers of fine coffee! Yet it's 97% caffein-free. You can drink it and sleep. And you'll love the taste!

FINER FLAVOR

in Sanka Coffee is due to a brand-new flavor-saving process . . . a miracle method of taking the caffein out of the coffee.

Try Sanka Coffee today. See for yourself what a great flavor-improvement has been made. Sanka comes in two forms: Ground for drip or percolator; Instant Sanka, made instantly in the cup. Products of General Foods.

BY PERMISSION, COPYRIGHT 1943, THE NEW YORKER MAGAZINE, INC.

"Why don't you wait and see what becomes of your own generation before you jump on mine?"

UNDER-COVER STUFF

BY BERNARDINE KIELTY

WELCOME TO LIFE is an admirable collection of stories and poems and sayings about birth and babies, about parents and parenthood. "Children begin by loving their parents; as they grow older they judge them; sometimes they forgive them," is Oscar Wilde's contribution. "Nothing is to me more distasteful than that entire complacency and satisfaction which beam in the countenance of a new-married," says Charles Lamb, the bachelor. "Parents may have a dozen children, but each one is the only one for them," is an old Yiddish proverb. But these are only scraps. There are full-length pieces from Clarence Day and Laurence Sterne; from the Bible and Salvador Dali, Rabelais, Dorothy Canfield Fisher, the Book of Common Prayer, Ogden Nash—and about seventy-five others. Edited by Hallie Burnett and Eleanor Gilchrist, who must have had a wonderful time doing the collecting, it has a foreword by Whit Burnett, who is a mere father.

• • •

The Englishman to whom the desert has special appeal seems to conform to a type. Glubb Pasha, now so important in the news, the English officer who heads the Arab Legion (the tough, well-seasoned army of Israel now speaks of

(Continued on Page 16)

REPRINTED FROM JOURNAL AMERICAN

"John! Why don't you stop that silly haggling, and just tell the man I'm not for sale?"

The Refrigerator That Dared To Be Different...

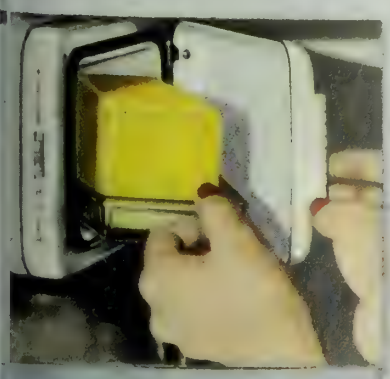
Hotpoint

See The BIG Difference In Refrigerators!

America's Foremost Kitchen Planners Bring You Sensational Advantages In A Completely New And Different Refrigerator—More Room Inside, More Wanted Features, More For Your Money.

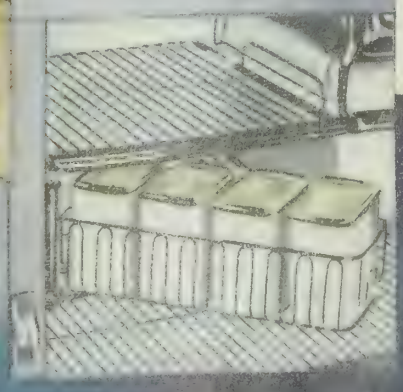
COMPARE The Storage Space!

● ● Hotpoint's revolutionary design gives up to 33% more food-storage space in the same kitchen area as before. This extra room inside is saved by the new, improved sealed mechanism which uses less electricity than ever and saves you money.



COMPARE The Conveniences!

● ● No other refrigerator offers you all these wonderful features: butter conditioner, leftover rack, hi-humidity drawers, extra-deep meat compartment and Speed-Freezer that stores 31 pounds of frozen food. These conveniences result from 44 years of kitchen-planning experience. Hotpoint alone brings all of them to you.



COMPARE The Extra Value!

● ● Quality engineering puts extra years of dependable service into every brilliant Hotpoint Refrigerator. From their sealed-in-steel mechanisms—designed to stand a quarter-century's use—down to the smallest parts, Hotpoint Refrigerators reflect the most exacting standards in the industry. See for yourself today why everybody's pointing to Hotpoint! Your nearest Hotpoint dealer is listed in the phone book.

HOTPOINT INC. (A General Electric Affiliate), CHICAGO 44, Ill.

Hotpoint's new butter conditioner keeps butter and other spreads at just the right consistency for table use. (Separate control regulates inside temperature.)

Hotpoint's exclusive leftover rack swings out of the cabinet with clear plastic-covered jars for your leftovers. Serves as an egg basket without the jars, or can be removed for use as a snack bar

Everybody's Pointing To Hotpoint Refrigerators

(Continued from Page 14)

the Arab Legion as Glubb's Girls), is described as small of stature with thin white-gray hair, pale-blue eyes and a face of gentleness and sensitivity. T. E. Lawrence was very short indeed and slight of build. When Arnold Bennett saw him once in a restaurant in London he mistook him for a boy, and Lawrence was then already a colonel. Robin Maugham, nephew of Somerset Maugham, and author of NOMAD, one of the best recent books about Arabs, is slight and far younger-looking than his thirty years. It may be the remoteness from the competitive world or the "mystery of the singing sands" that appeals to the poet in them.

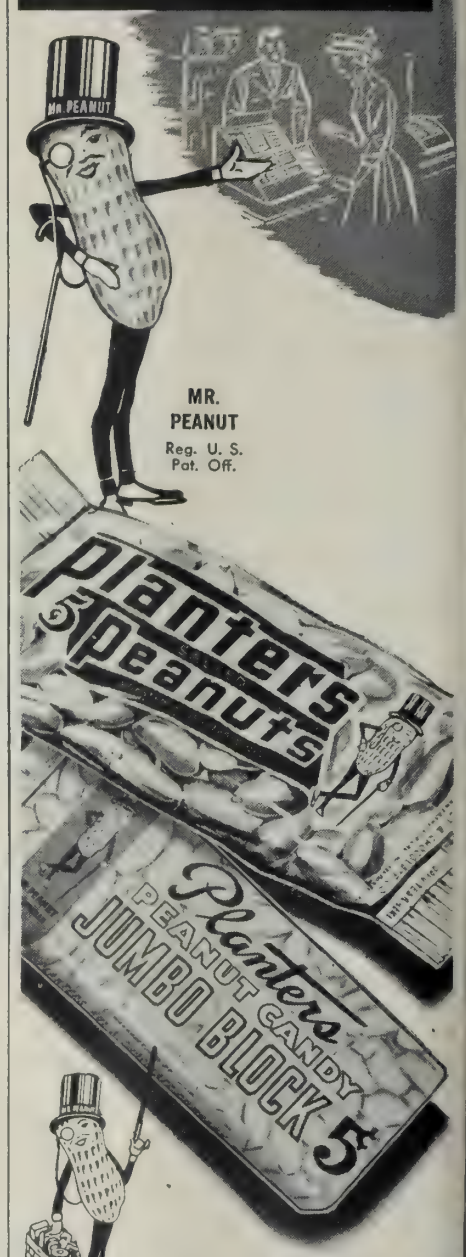
We can see how desert life might appeal even to women. Maugham describes a typical morning getaway from last night's camp.

"After we had finished breakfast in the remaining tent, the women began to dismantle it. They ripped out the pegs which held the lengths of stuff together, they rolled up the black cloth of hair, gathered in the tent cords, packed up the furniture, the rugs and mats and bolsters, and collected the Bedouin implements, the flat spoon, prongs, trident, kettle, coffeepots, mortar and pestle—their worldly goods. The camels for the women were saddled with a high frame superstructure, into which were placed the babies and small animals, a puppy and three hens." And then the family was off—donkeys, sheep, goats, dogs and camels. "Of the place where their home had been I could see no trace." It sounds so relatively simple.

• • •

It's a relief to find a pair of travelers who admit to discomfort, disillusion, distress and occasional mutual distrust. S. J. Perelman, screwball wit, and Al Hirschfeld, cartoonist, went around the world together in the interests of Holiday

REPRINTED COURTESY THE SATURDAY EVENING POST



"Just a minute . . . is this included in my all-expense tour?"

magazine. WESTWARD HA! is their hilarious, though jaded, travelogue. Before they even left the country they began to sour. They were in a plane: "Two hundred miles away, in the broad plain washed by the Pacific, lay its goal, the Athens of the West, the mighty citadel which had given the world the double feature, the duplex-burger, the motel, the hamfurter, and the shirt worn outside the pants—the Great Pueblo, the City of Our Lady the Queen of the Angels—Los Angeles." In Penang they stayed

(Continued on Page 18)

If you want a Wonderful Bracer, say "PLANTERS"

These long summer days, when the energy just seems to ooze away, are the days you need and appreciate PLANTERS more than ever.

Those crisp, tasty PLANTERS SALTED PEANUTS in the cellophane bag are famous as America's "Nickel Lunch." The finest, big Virginia peanuts roasted and salted as only PLANTERS can. They pack more energy—vitamins—proteins—than meat, fish or eggs.

If you've a sweet tooth, try PLANTERS famous Jumbo Block. Just pure peanut candy at its most wholesome, delicious best. They're both, still only 5c—both Planterrific.

These PLANTERS products are also made in Toronto, and sold everywhere in Canada.

PLANTERS is the word for PEANUTS

"I shop my way at A&P ...and save money"

When you market at A&P, you shop as you want to . . . buying what you wish and selecting what best meets the price you want to pay. For example, you don't get just a kind of meat. Instead, you pick a cut to suit your purpose and your purse. And you don't just get a can of fancy-quality tomatoes for a sauce . . . rather, you choose a less costly grade because you know it will serve your purpose equally as well. And you shop in this manner for whatever you need . . . from breakfast cereal to dessert for dinner . . . satisfying your requirements and benefiting your budget.

Today, when almost every homemaker is striving to beat high food prices, thousands find that shopping the departments of A&P Super Markets, looking over the seemingly endless offerings, reading labels and price tags . . . is the best way to net neat savings.

Pieces from the open stock New Travis Court Grouping

It's tidy... It's trim...

IT'S NEW TRAVIS COURT

Small rooms look larger with New Travis Court by Drexel. These exquisite mahogany pieces are especially scaled to give spacious charm to today's compact homes . . . . Take the new oval Sheraton extension table, with so much foot room, for example, or the handsome corner china cupboard that makes such good use of so little floor space.

You'll appreciate those lovely lyre-back chairs, with their serene, classical lines. Like all the rest of the grouping, they combine structural soundness with exquisite beauty.

New Travis Court is finished in beautiful, warm-hued mahogany veneer, hand-glazed and hand-rubbed until it gleams like satin. See it at leading department and furniture stores. Look for the "by Drexel" brandmark—your proof of superior craftsmanship.

Write today for booklets: "Traditional"—26 pages [illegible] "Provincial"—24 pages [illegible] "Drexel" case pieces, furniture—[illegible] and a. Address 272 Huffman Road, Drexel, N. C.

Drexel Furniture Company

DREXEL · NORTH CAROLINA

WORLD'S LARGEST MANUFACTURER OF QUALITY BEDROOM AND DINING ROOM FURNITURE

(Continued from Page 16)

three and a half weeks: "If you ever want a perfect honeymoon spot, a place where scenery and climate fuse to produce unadulterated witchery, where life has the tremulous sweetness of a plucked lutestring and darkness falls all too soon, go to the Hotel Plaza in New York."

• • •

MY FATHER'S DRAGON, written by Ruth Stiles Gannett, and illustrated by Ruth Crisman Gannett, is the most delightful juvenile (6 to 9 years) that this department has seen in many a moon.

• • •

Ellin Mackay Berlin*, daughter of the late Clarence Mackay, head of Postal Telegraph and Cable Co., and wife of Irving Berlin, song composer, is the author of a second novel, LACE CURTAIN. It deals with an Irish Catholic family of great wealth—the family of eight young Reardons who grow up in a palace on a vast estate on Long Island, the background of which may possibly be assumed to be in part autobiographical.

The story concerns the men and girls that the Reardons love, marry and separate from, the two wars through which they fight, and the domestic clashes over religion. In fact, the fragrance of incense, the words of prayers and the whispers of the confessional, which permeate the pages, are like a curtain of heavy velvet against which the strident sounds of modern life are dulled. It is curious to see the intimacies of the Church, hitherto so rarely discussed, now aired with such surprising openness. Is the preoccupation with religion, not only in this novel but in several that have recently been published, a symptom of the war?

• • •

The really great Catholic book is THE HEART OF THE MATTER, by Graham Greene, though it does the book an injustice to narrow it to any sect, for this story of a man's denial of his God will be equally comprehensible to people of all faiths. It is the tale of a small unimportant civil servant stationed in a British port in West Africa. Assistant Police Commissioner Scobie is a man whose honesty and kindness are his downfall, a man who has pity for everyone except himself, when he it is that needs pity most of all. There is Conrad magic in the exotic steaming-hot port, and in the Englishman's struggle to adjust to the native life and at the same time keep his own Anglo-Saxon integrity. But the steady downpath to corruption is clearer than ever Conrad would have written it.

Best known as a mystery writer, Graham Greene has used in this story of personal tragedy the same exacting technique and the same deft handling that are the prerequisites of every good mystery. (He is the author of ORIENT EXPRESS, THE CONFIDENTIAL AGENT, BRIGHTON ROCK, and many other psychological thrillers.) In the crafty, powerful Hindu trader, the young girl alone and helpless, the petty, nagging, socially ambitious wife, the "informer," he has a cast for melodrama, but never does he allow these figures to become types. It would not be fair to the reader or to Graham Greene to tell the story. But it is one of the best English novels in many a long year.

• • •

THE WORLD IS NOT ENOUGH, by Zoë Oldenbourg, is a medieval tapestry come to life—one of those rare historical novels which sweep you out of your own humdrum world. It is the story of Alis of Linniéres, who lived and died amid the rude splendor of

(Continued on Page 21)

Wedded to a sloshy dishrag?

Don't rub and scrub crusty muffin tins with a slimy dishrag! Use a metal-fiber Brillo pad-with-soap!

Shine pans easy with

BRILLO

A Brillo pad-with-soap cleans scorchy pots and pans fast! Shines 'em, too! Use Brillo every day!

GREEN box—pads and cake soap

RED box—soap-filled pads

contains JEWELER'S POLISH

Shines aluminum fast!

"...and of course a leetle garlic"

If you agree with master chefs that French Dressing needs a touch of garlic, Miracle French is the kind for you. Kraft quality ingredients; superbly seasoned.

Miracle FRENCH DRESSING by KRAFT

Note: If you don't want even a "leetle" garlic, get Kraft French Dressing. Perfectly delicious; immensely popular.

ANY TIME is iced coffee time with NESCAFÉ*

How to make perfect, full-flavored iced coffee:
Place 1½ teaspoonfuls of Nescafé (rounded more or less, according to strength desired) in a large glass. Leave spoon in. Add a little hot water to dissolve. Stir. Add ice, cold water.

You know how hard it used to be to make good iced coffee. You not only had the bother of making it, but then you often had the disappointment of weak or bitter coffee. But with Nescafé you can make one glass or a dozen—and make it exactly the way you want! You get a full, rich flavor that's really distinctive. Quick! Right strength! Thrifty! That's Nescafé. Try it iced or hot.

That's why more people drink NESCAFE than any other instant coffee!

NESCAFÉ makes delicious coffee
QUICK AS A WINK!
EASY... DELICIOUS...
ANY TIME ... EVERY TIME!

*Nescafé (pronounced NES-CAFAY) is the exclusive registered trade mark of The Nescafé Co... Inc. to designate its soluble coffee product. It is composed of equal parts of pure soluble coffee and added carbohydrates (dextrins, maltose and dextrose) added solely to protect the fl...

You ought to be hugged...not squeezed!

How Warner's miracle 3-Way-Sizes bring you heavenly comfort through heavenly fit Warner's exclusive 3-Way-Sizes make "standard sizing" as old-fashioned as your Aunt Matilda.

- Twins may be the same height and weight—yet need different girdle lengths. Warner's* foundations come in four lengths; short, medium, long and extra long.
- In addition to your own length, Warner's come in three hip sizes, too; straight, average and full.
- What's more, from over 200 styles and sizes you can select fabrics and designs to give you just the control you want.
- If you want to lose inches without feeling pinches, get the Warner's that's "individually yours"—3 ways.

Sta-Up-Top Warnerette #634, in white, pink, blue, $5.00. Extra large, $6.50

In your size... your correct length

Ever get a girdle that's too long . . . makes you hobble? Or a "too short" that pulls at your precious nylons? Not in a Warner's. They're sized; short, medium, long and extra long. The Sta-Up-Top* Warnerette* above features Warner's famous patented waistband that won't roll over.

your correct hip size

Hip, hip AWAY! Wonderful—but it never happens in a girdle that's too wide and forms gaping pockets at the sides. Or one that's too small and binds your thighs. You'll find a Warner's that's just right—they're hip-sized; straight, average and full.

your choice of control

For tummy-tucking there's a Warner's to give you just the control you want. For example, the Warnerette illustrated is especially designed for little figures that don't add up to much. For a lot of control, you'll find a Warner's that inches you in—but comfortably. At finer shops and stores everywhere.

Girdles · Corselettes
Pantie Girdles · Bras

WARNER'S

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

WORLD FAMOUS FOR LE GANT* • STA-UP-TOP* • ABC* ALPHABET* • REDFERN

there's a reason why this is America's favorite bobby pin

All over the country, smart heads turn to Gayla Hold-Bobs to keep hair lovely, smooth, in place. Hold-Bobs slide in smoothly, stay more securely, feel better, hold better. They're strong yet flexible. The small heads are "invisible." And the rounded-for-safety ends won't catch hair. Remember, only Hold-Bobs have these exclusive features.

Gayla® HOLD-BOB
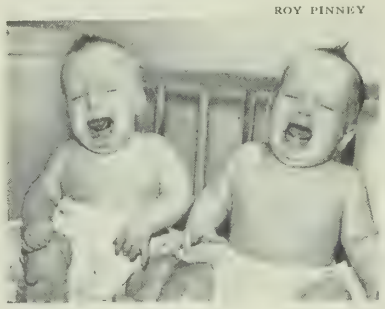
BOBBY PINS

"Gayla" means the best in bobby pins • hair pins • curlers

©'38, GAYLORD PRODUCTS, INCORPORATED, CHICAGO 16, ILL.
® REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Zoë Oldenbourg, author of The World is Not Enough.

(Continued from Page 18)



the feudal world; who was married at fourteen, and had her ears boxed because she did not at once become pregnant; who in her time had a husband, nineteen children and a lover; who listened to the clang of armor, and beheld the pageantry and the piety as the knights started out for the Crusades, and the wreckage that returned; who ran a cold, rough, damp castle singlehanded, and almost singlehanded brought up her enormous family.

It is hard to believe that the author of such an opus is only thirty years old, and that she was only eighteen when she started it. Russian-born, she was Paris-educated.

• • •

Not to be outdone by Alis of Linniéres, there is a young mother out in Illinois, a woman of twenty-seven, who is the mother of ten, five girls and five boys—all single births. On the other hand we have heard of a family of five sets of twins, the eldest pair just recently celebrating their 80th birthday. These two gentlemen are identical twins—which, accurately speaking, are the only real twins. Fraternal twins, as we understand it, are just brothers or sisters born at the same time. Identical twins are of the same sex, same blood group, have the same pigmentation, similar features and shapes. If one is color-blind, the other is too.

ROY PINNEY

Are they identical or merely fraternal?

• • •

Perhaps you know a man such as Taylor Caldwell describes in MELISSA—a man who is vain in the most disguised and subtle way, who is educated but pretends to an education and to an intellectuality which actually he hasn't the mental capacity to attain; whose pleasure it is to point out the shortcomings of others, especially of plain people with no pretensions to learning or culture; who is just clever enough to deceive his own family—notably his children—into the belief that he is a man of superior wit and understanding; in other words, a man who is the worst kind of intellectual snob. MELISSA as a novel is not without faults. As it now stands, it cries for a perfectionist like Henry James. But it still is good, and possibly Taylor Caldwell's best to date.

"Soaping" dulls hair—
Halo glorifies it!

Yes, "soaping" your hair with even finest liquid or cream shampoos hides its natural lustre with dulling soap film

• Halo is made with a new patented ingredient. Halo—not a soap, not a cream—cannot leave dulling film! • So Halo reveals the true natural beauty of your hair the very first time you use it, leaves it shimmering with glorious highlights. • Needs no lemon or vinegar after-rinse. Halo rinses away, quickly and completely! • Makes oceans of rich, fragrant lather, even in hardest water. Leaves hair sweet, clean, naturally radiant! • Carries away unsightly loose dandruff like magic! • Lets hair dry soft and manageable, easy to curl! • Buy Halo at any drug or cosmetic counter.

Halo Reveals the Hidden Beauty of Your Hair!

Better than words, that warm wood-smoky aroma says here's

AMERICA'S LUXURY BACON

Dry-sugar-cured for less shrinkage, more flavor

"Extra-easy dish for take-it-easy days"

Says Marie Gifford Director, Armour Consumer Service

When you want to make it easy for yourself—and still make a hot meal, here's your dish. Golden-brown Armour Bacon broiled with garden-fresh tomatoes in a matter of minutes. Simple—and oh so satisfying! For this is no ordinary bacon. It's the very "heart of the bacon"—the choicest center slices from hand-picked bacon sides. What's more, this luxury bacon is dry-sugar-cured without water or curing solution. And that means less shrinkage—bigger bacon slices on your platter.

To make this easy dish, dot fresh tomato halves with Cloverbloom Butter or Mayflower Margarine. Broil 5 minutes under low heat 3½ inches from unit. Add bacon slices and broil 5 minutes longer, turning bacon once.

For other delicious ways to serve bacon, write: Marie Gifford, Dept. 301, Box 2053, Chicago 9, Ill.

You can also get this same fine Armour Bacon in the familiar parchment package. And by all means try Armour Vacuum-Packed Bacon—there's no other like it! Remember, too, Armour Smoked Ham is America's Luxury Ham.

Tune in HINT HUNT — CBS Monday through Friday afternoons

The best and nothing but the best is labeled ARMOUR

HOMES... Millinocket Builds

HOUSING HOPES

BY MARGARET HICKEY

THREE years after the end of World War II, the national housing situation shows no marked improvement. The Commission on Housing of the Social Welfare Assembly estimates the need to be 2,750,000 dwellings. About 860,000 housing units were started in 1947, and thousands more have gotten under way this year, despite shortages of material and labor. But better homes are still far out of the reach of most of the people who need them.

The problems of housing are by no means limited to any one income class. They affect the man with an income of $10,000 who wants to buy a good home for his family just as they do the man who earns only $2000 a year. Families of moderate or low income were cautioned at the National Family Life Conference, held in Washington, against paying more than 20 per cent of their normal income for rent, or twice their normal annual income for the purchase of a home. Sound family budgeting is almost impossible under present conditions.

There are, however, a few bright spots in an otherwise dismal outlook. In Portsmouth, Virginia, a private construction firm has circumvented high building costs by purchasing no-longer-needed two-story barracks of the U. S. Naval Shipyard. These were remodeled into four-room houses and placed in an area so planned as to assure a permanently attractive neighborhood. Each lot has a frontage of 60 feet, an average depth of 100. The FHA has insured a twenty-year mortgage of $3400 at 4 per cent; this the buyer may pay off at the rate of $26 per month.

Brought together by their mutual need for homes, a group of veterans in Washington, D. C., has formed the Veterans Co-operative Association, and undertaken a housing development known as Naylor Gardens. The association took over a 748-unit project built by the Government in 1943 for $6,587,000 and declared surplus in 1945. It made a down payment of $512,500 last February. Today 425 of the 748 units are owned by co-op members. Titles to the remainder are being held by the association. Individual homes in the development cost the veteran from $6750 to $8450, depending upon the size. Interest rates are only 3 per cent; monthly payments range from $59.50 to $80.

Nonprofit American Legion sponsorship has helped home-seeking veterans in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. Through their locally organized homestead association, two-bedroom homes may be purchased for $6300, three-bedroom units for $7700. These prices include every item from raw land to the keys to the front door. Veterans move in without any down payment. Beginning the second month, they pay from $40 to $49. Enactment of the Veterans Homestead Association Bill of 1948, as urged by the American Legion, would make it possible for five or more veterans to organize similar projects in any part of the country.

The state of New Jersey and 48 local communities have assumed joint responsibility for putting up 8000 dwellings; 3000 of these homes are completed, another 3000 under construction and 2000 more in the planning stage. This is made possible under a bond issue of $35,000,000 passed in 1946 and a further direct appropriation of $6,000,000.

In New York, squalid neighborhoods are being rehabilitated, and the state is financing 38 new housing projects to accommodate 110,000 members of low-income families. Commissioner Herman T. Stichman's housing field laboratories get to the heart of housing troubles by development of ideal basic designs within the means of lower- and middle-income people; better distribution of materials without needless mark-up; training efficient workmen; publishing facts about materials, labor costs and contractors' services; and adoption of simplified building codes.

New York City, like New York State, is not waiting for money from Washington. It already has two veterans' housing programs. One program will require the city to supply a relatively small annual subsidy for 6 projects which will accommodate approximately 5,600 families. The other calls for 15 or 16 projects with a total of about 17,000 apartments which will be operated by the City Housing Authority without any cash subsidy.

The story of the housing shortage must be repeated until results are obtained. This isn't the time to forget the millions of American families who must find homes. Perhaps a housing council in your community, fully representative of all public interests, could do its share in solving the nation's most urgent postwar problem.

THE END

EVER watch a crowd standing around to see the new house going up in the neighborhood? In the summer of 1947 that sort of interest was mighty keen in Millinocket, Maine, where the sidewalk superintendents finally got a chance to go to work.

In this pleasant little New England town of about 6300 people, men and women who wanted homes of their own have by working together succeeded in getting them. They decided to join forces to dig basements, pour concrete, put up frames and roofs, and finish inside floors. They were for the most part people without previous building experience. They were auditors, accountants, clerks, secretaries, a few engineers and finishers. They had a common ambition: to get their families into decent homes at prices they could afford to pay.

In Millinocket today there are twenty-two shiny new houses to prove that it is possible to have a new, well-built, six-room house for under $6000—maybe for as little as $4000: fifteen more houses are in the process of going up. Children are welcome in the new housing project. There is room on each of the lots measuring 60 x 100 feet for privacy and growing things. There are children to be seen on the sidewalks, and busy little groups in the back yards. There is room here for baseball, with no heavy traffic constantly threatening young players. There are no landlords here to raise the rent. Each man's home is his castle. It ought to be. For most of these houses were built brick by brick by their owners.

Millinocket is a young town. Before the Great Northern Paper Company bought the township in 1899, the location was only a wide stretch of sandy fields and pine-studded slopes in the shadow of majestic Mount Katahdin, about 25 miles distant. But Millinocket grew gracefully. The streets are lined with neat, freshly painted clapboard houses, substantial and comfortable-looking. Some are small, some ramble in true New England (Continued on Page 102)

PHOTO BY ARTHUR GRIFFIN

Houses go up faster and at less cost when neighbors lend a helping hand. Here Mrs. George Raymond and John Tracey, a neighbor, are shown working on the Raymond house with the help of a hired carpenter. The Traceys are already in their house.

NEW!

Shasta beauty cream shampoo

leaves your hair more beautiful

all 3 ways!

STARLET

Lola Dunn

rates far higher in RKO Studio screen test after a Shasta Beauty Cream Shampoo!

Recently discovered by RKO, Lola says she proved "100% more glamorous" in pictures that followed her first Shasta shampoo. "Before-and-after photographs show the difference!" beams Lola. "My hair which had been sort of drab, suddenly became shining and soft and smooth!"

Procter & Gamble's amazing a—the beauty cream shampoo.

Fragrant, satiny Shasta cream- ses your hair . . . beautifies your all 3 ways—as no soap—bar or d—will! In one Shasta shampoo, hair will have

that lustrous "alive" look!
• that sm-o-o-oth-as-satin look!
• that soft, caressable look!

3! Yet your hair has "body"
t limp, not dried out. Shasta is safe, kind to hair. Makes mountains of lather even in hardest water. Removes flaky, unlovely dandruff, too. And doesn't spill or run into eyes.

Hurry! For more beautiful hair all three ways—get Shasta. Convenient sizes. All toiletries counters.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

PROCTER & GAMBLE'S
Shasta beauty cream Shampoo

REFERENCE LIBRARY

For Sub-Debs

NOW is the time to plan a self-improvement project. School will be starting before you know it. There will be football games, soda dates and get-togethers with the gang. And that means FUN! Provided, of course, that you're the gal who always is invited; and if you're not, then begin right now to get rid of those personality problems. The booklets listed below are just what you need!

YOUR PERSONALITY

1022. How to be Popular. What Sub-Deb doesn't want to be a popularity leader? 5c.
2275. Don't Shy Away. Life really isn't frightening. Don't be a timid soul. 5c.
1539. Do Girls Like You? If you're really popular, they will. Do you need pointers? 5c.
1514. Personality Report Card. Includes a chart for you to test your personality rating. 5c.

YOUR DATE-ABILITY

1658. Do Boys Like You? Naturally you want them to like you. How do you rate? 5c.
2269. How About a Date? What sweet music to your ears. Do you hear it as often as you should? 5c.
1532. Know Your Man. Every date is different, and the popular gal knows how to have fun with more than one fellow. 5c 1669. Going Steady. You've got a steady fellow and you think he is really grand—but how about keeping things that way? A few hints will help. 5c.
1228. Rating for Dating. What do fellows think of you as a date? Do you get their approval or are you last on the list? Check up on yourself now. 5c.

YOUR LOOKS

2253. Let's be Lovely. Be the gal with sparkle in your eyes, crisp and rosy-fresh. 5c.
1207. Mirror Magic. Be particular about your complexion—it's really important. 5c.
2268. Glamour for Glasses. Wearing glasses won't make you a wallflower. Select a flattering style, the latest in frames, and be the talk of the crowd. 5c.
2277. Facts About Figures. Watch those extra pounds! 5c.
2322. Clothes Checkup. Learn how to choose a wardrobe that does the most for you. 5c.
2324. Count Your Calories. Can your figure stand a sundae, or should you order lemonade? 5c 1378. The Way You Wear Your Hair. These cutouts will help you choose your hair style. 5c.

FOR YOUR MEN

1192. Gentlemen Preferred. Girls aren't the only people with problems. Fellows have them, too, and here are the hints they should have on etiquette and general behavior. 5c.
1668. Know Your Girl. The popular man can have a good time with all the girls. 5c.
1546. If I Were a Man! Get the girl's viewpoint about the pros and cons of a good date. 5c.

YOUR DOINGS

2270. Nix on Necking. The gal in the know can say "no" and still be popular. 5c.
2272. Memo for Manners. Make sure you know what to do at the right time. 5c.
1344. Act Your Age. High-school babies are on everyone's black list—how about you? 5c.
2276. Sub-Deb Club Handbook. Thinking about a club? Here are all the rules. 5c.
2225. Fun and Funds. Moneymaking ideas to boost your club's treasury. 5c.
2306. Speak Up! Does conversation leave you tongue-tied? Try these suggestions. 5c.

YOUR FUN

1515. Fun Outdoors. Make your next party an outside affair—it will be different and it will be fun! 5c.
2254. It's a Date for a Party. A party idea for every holiday on the calendar. Twelve complete plans for gay affairs. 5c.
1504. Let's Eat. The food you serve helps make your party a hit—try some of these new ideas. Your gang will love them! 5c.
1376. Parties to Give. Give a party that's different—give a party that will make you No. 1 hostess in the crowd. 10c.
2210. Let's Have a Party. And let's make it a party that is really fun! Here are loads of helpful ideas. 5c.
1691. Halloween Antics. It isn't too soon to begin plans for the biggest fun night of the year. You'll want these ideas. 5c.
2307. Dance Doin's. Planning dances is fun when you have all the suggestions right at your finger tips. 5c.
1303. Let's Dance. More ideas for dancing parties that will make history! Also suggestions for mixers. 5c.
2271. Banquets to Give. Includes plans for a football banquet, junior-senior banquets—even an initiation banquet. 10c.
1377. Games to Play. When the party lags, it's time for lively games. Keep this book on hand for your next get-together. 10c.

THE PLAY'S THE THING

2308. Sixteen. Only six gals and four fellows are needed for this one-act play. All about a Sub-Deb and her first big moment—at the skating rink! 10c.
2309. Objective: Johnny. Two gals after the same fellow make this one-act play. Three girls and two fellows make up the cast. 10c.
1952. Sub-Deb Scoop. A paper edited especially for Sub-Debs. Read about other clubs, gather ideas for your own group. Order a copy each month. 5c.

OTHER FEATURES

Lists are sent free on request. They give title, number and price of all our booklets and patterns.

2008. List of Departmental Booklets. For your home, garden, beauty, entertaining and child care.
1695. Sub-Deb Booklet Library.
1660. List of Journal Hat and Bag Patterns.
2333. Children's Patterns List.
2076. Things-to-Wear Patterns. Aprons, blouses, accessories.
1571. Reference List of Knitted and Crocheted Patterns.
1752. Handicraft Pattern List. Things for you to make for your home, your children, gifts or yourself.

We will gladly send any of these booklets and patterns if you'll order by name and number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of stamps, cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes or Savings Stamps. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

Modess .... because

MAKING MARRIAGE WORK

Ways to make marriage last are not learned from love alone

BY CLIFFORD R. ADAMS

Ph. D., The Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

TRAINING FOR MARRIAGE

NEARLY all jobs require training. Special instruction or practical experience—and sometimes both—is essential for achievement in almost all fields. Yet for the one occupation which sooner or later becomes the career of almost all women—that of housewife—there are no formal standards of proficiency whatever. To be legally eligible for marriage, a girl need only have attained the prescribed minimum age; her qualifications for the job of homemaker are not investigated.

The situation is the more paradoxical because real competence as a housewife demands a combination of skills and aptitudes far more varied than most paid jobs. To be a qualified homemaker a bride should at the very least have some knowledge of cleaning, cooking, housekeeping, child care, nursing—to say nothing of a mature understanding of the complex relationship of marriage itself.

Nor are men much better prepared for their jobs as husbands. Though they are generally trained to discharge their first obligation—that of earning a living—other requirements are left to the individual, and to chance.

The ideal spot for training for marriage is the home. Here we have the facilities, the personnel and the example. However, under modern circumstances, children do not automatically acquire in their homes the knowledge and attitudes they need to prepare them for a satisfying marriage and family life; a deliberate effort is required of the parents. The effort is well worth while; if wives and husbands (for it's a man's job, too) made the most of their opportunity to prepare their children for marriage, our climbing divorce rate would begin to drop.

Fifty years ago, you could take it for granted that a boy or girl of marriageable age was prepared for marriage. The typical circumstances of family life were such that, in the mere process of growing up, children naturally acquired the skills and attitudes they would need in their own homes later on. Most people lived on farms or in small villages, where family life was the basis of everything. Each undertaking, whether painting the barn, planting the garden or ordering a new piece of furniture from the mail-order catalogue, was a family enterprise shared and promoted by all.

Under such circumstances, every child perforce served an apprenticeship in preparation for marriage. A daughter learned to cook, to sew, to take care of a home. A son was familiar with hammer, saw and machinery, as well as with gardening, working in the fields and caring for animals. The older children learned about the care of babies by looking after their younger brothers and sisters.

Such training in practical skills is invaluable. For the lack of it, many a modern bride is reduced to tears when the dinner fails; many a young mother is physically and nervously exhausted by the sudden responsibility of caring for her new baby; and many a husband spends money which he can't spare on household repairs, because he lacks the skill to do these little chores himself.

Yet practical knowledge is not the only benefit to be gained from this kind of family background. The child who grows up in an atmosphere of mutual affection and respect, of problems and pleasures shared, is not likely to yearn for divorce as an escape from minor domestic irritations.

Under today's circumstances, what can you do to build toward stronger family life for yourself, and toward happy marriages for your children?

- Recognize the fact that one of the strongest influences affecting your child's chances of happiness in marriage is the example you set now. If the atmosphere in your home is one of affection—affection between husband and wife and between parent and child—that is the atmosphere your child will accept as natural and will try to attain in his own home.

- As your child develops, increase his responsibilities. Assign him regular duties, and see that they are performed. Such discipline helps him acquire in youth the habit of co-operation for the family's welfare.

- Sons and daughters alike should be taught specific household skills, and husband and wife should share the teaching. While Johnny helps his father put on the screens, or mow the lawn, Jane can bake a cake, or can set the table for company. Both the skills acquired and the feeling of family solidarity will help the children achieve harmony in their own homes later on.

- Give them a part in family planning. If you are choosing a vacation spot, listen to their opinions. If you can't afford both the game room they want and the new car your husband's business requires, tell them so, and explain the reasons for your decision. Don't try to shield them from financial worries; give them their share—however small—of responsibility for the family's welfare.

Perhaps you alone cannot stabilize American family life, but you can stabilize one family—your own. By doing so, you will increase your children's chances of happiness later on.

MALADJUSTED COUPLES

THE word "maladjustment" is applied to a variety of conditions ranging from ordinary worry to shell shock. Like "complex," "neurotic" and other psychological terms, it is overworked and misunderstood.

Adjustments, in the psychological sense, can be thought of as habits, or ways of behaving, which people develop to satisfy their wants and serve their motives. Adjustments become bad—or maladjustments—only when in some way they fail to satisfy individual or social requirements.

In marriage, the maladjustment of one or both partners frequently leads to unhappiness, separation or divorce. A wife (or husband) may seek to conceal a deep sense of inferiority by being overaggressive—bossy, argumentative and domineering. Though such behavior may lead to a reputation for conceit, it is actually a defensive adjustment.

Almost everybody avoids uncomfortable situations, but some individuals carry the practice to such an extent that it becomes retreat, and normal life is impossible. Because it is surrender, this type of maladjustment is much more serious than defensive behavior.

Many "nervous" wives, physically sound, develop the habit of relying on delicate health to get the sympathy and attention they crave.

The true hysteric becomes genuinely ill whenever she (or he) is faced by anything unpleasant, because illness provides a socially acceptable way of escaping the difficulty. The hysteric is not shamming; but, because there is nothing physically wrong, such behavior is likely to lead to family quarrels and misunderstanding.

In each case, the maladjustment is a device used to escape or relieve some unpleasant situation. All of us use many of these types of adjustment to some extent. Even the hysteric's behavior seems less queer when we think of the sudden headaches that sometimes overtake us when confronted by a sudden problem.

If you suspect that you are maladjusted, talk things over with your husband. Confessing your worries will at least bring relief; it may even reveal the source of the trouble. And once the problem is understood, a solution can often be found.

Perhaps your husband shows signs of maladjustment. If you can avoid blaming him, you have taken the first step toward helping him. Now try to determine what is lacking in his life. It may be he doesn't feel appreciated, and needs more praise and affection from you. If he isn't happy in his work, perhaps he should get another position. If he feels insecure, home ownership may be worth considering. Interesting him in a hobby, getting him to join a club, and taking time out for social activities may not cure him—but they will make him easier to live with.

ARE YOU A GOOD HOUSEKEEPER?

The well-adjusted wife, or one who has had good training from her mother, usually becomes a good homemaker because she masters her housework. Answer these questions with a thoughtful yes or no in terms of what is true most of the time.

1. Does arrival of unexpected guests upset you?
2. Are you a "fussy" housekeeper?
3. Does your work pile up and get badly behind?
4. Do you complain to your husband about being overworked?
5. Do you kill yourself one day, loaf the next?
6. Can you prepare meals from stock if shopping is delayed?
7. Do you have several household skills your friends envy?
8. Can you share two evenings a week with your husband?
9. Do you always know how your budget stands?
10. Are all clothes mended before laundering?
11. Do you keep remedies and medical aids in a definite place?
12. Are there two comfortable chairs with good light in your living room?
13. Before shopping, do you carefully list your needs?
14. Is your work conveniently scheduled for saving of steps?
15. Are you neat and clean when your husband returns from work?
16. Does your home have a relaxing "lived in" atmosphere?
17. Are your meals served promptly for the family's convenience?
18. Does your work schedule permit flexibility if weather changes?
19. Can you speed unpleasant tasks by thinking of other things?
20. Does your husband think you are a good housekeeper?

The first 5 questions should be answered "No," the last 15 "Yes." With 17 or more correct answers, you are a homemaker, not just a housekeeper, who has only 13–16 right answers. A score of 12 or less is rarely the case if a woman really loves her home and family.

DO YOU AGREE?

My fiancé and I are not sure we should marry, since we are first cousins. We are both 25 and have dated for six years. Are such marriages illegal?

Yes, in some states, but not where you live. Assuming that neither has hereditary defects, that the parents approve, and that you yourselves will have no feelings of guilt, I see no reason for not marrying; but talk it over with your physician, minister and lawyer.

So it's Luxury you want?

Dreaming in the summer shadows, you are cool . . . so cool. As cool as flowers in a crystal vase . . . cool as the shimmering texture of your Pepperell Peeress Sheets! For this is truly "trousseau" texture—each inch 24 threads finer than ordinary percales. Pepperell Peeress Sheets are woven for this precious smoothness of expensive all-combed yarns, 204 threads in each square inch. High thread count, firm weave—that also means extra strength, for extra wear! Best of all, at today's prices, Pepperell Peeress is your best buy in quality sheets. At any price, you just can't buy more exquisitely loomed American percales. In white, and "personality colors"!

PEPPERELL MANUFACTURING COMPANY, BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS

PEPPERELL PEERESS

PEPPERELL FABRICS

Percale Sheets

Fun Outdoors

STREET DANCE . . . Here's a perfect party to plan for fun, for funds or both—and it's a natural for big-group planning for a Sub-Deb club, youth group or class at school. If you've never had a street dance (it's an outdoor, under-the-stars event—a cross between a sweater hop and a small carnival), you've missed some novel excitement. Make it an ordinary swing-and-sway affair, or plan a gala Square Dance Special, with the fellows coming in Levis and bright shirts and the gals in their best full skirts and cotton blouses, like dressed-up country cousins.

The first step in making plans is to find a good location, so select a dead-end or little-used street in your neighborhood and get permission from the city street commissioner in your town to hold a dance there. (Or how about a cement tennis court or a large private driveway as a dance floor?) If it's a "straight" dance, get a teen-aged band to provide music, or else rent a record player and loud-speaker system for an evening. If it's a square dance, check your town's resources to find a square-dance master of ceremonies who can be hired, complete with band or records, loud-speaker and a "swing your partner" lingo, to set the pace for the evening.

Decorations can be kept simple with crepe paper and leafy branches twisted round the lampposts, lanterns hung everywhere, and balloons and garden flowers dressing up the refreshment booths What's for sale at the refreshment stands? Why, pink lemonade, of course, and big wax-paper cones of carameled corn (you can make it yourself) to keep the guests on the side lines happy. Or, as square-dance fare, sell chilled apple cider, taffy apples on a stick, and big, sticky sugar doughnuts. Charge 50 cents admission per couple and 25 cents for spectators who just want to watch the fun. (Little brothers and sisters admitted free for just one hour before bedtime.) Let everyone in on the secret that it's going to be a big night. The bigger the crowd, the more fun for everyone—and the more shekels your club will take in for the evening!

PAPER CHASE . . . This is a hare-and-hounds kind of outing, over the hills and through the woods with something more substantial than rabbit food at the end of the trail. It's a chance for the track team and their long-legged girl friends to strut their stuff! And since it's more fun to stage this hunt in pairs, get the guys and gals to meet at the hostess' house early some sunny afternoon for some preliminary paper work. Everyone lends a hand (and a pair of scissors) to fill four large gunny sacks with pieces of cut-up newspaper. You'll need plenty of paper, cut about four inches square, to mark trail. Pick some rugged woodsy spot outside town as a starting place (you may have to bike out to save breath for the chase). Next give two speedy "hares"—the two fastest fellows in the crowd—a half-hour head start. These two boys run as a pair through the woods, over logs, round ponds, across rivers—twisting, backtracking and going in circles—anything to confuse the "hounds" without ever completely breaking trail. The hounds come bounding behind at a leisurely pace, following the trail as accurately as possible. The chase comes to an end after a mile or two in some clearing or picnic spot where the two hares are waiting with full picnic baskets, delivered ahead of time. Tell the hounds to save their speed for the last dash, because the first racing couple to reach the clearing is awarded a prize—how about a matching handkerchief-and-tie set, with the gal receiving the handkerchief so she can play twin to her beau boy with a bright neck scarf?

Now it's time for an early sunlight supper for the whole crowd, with cold cookery right out of the basket. Everyone will be ravenous after the chase, so provide at least two big Dagwood sandwiches per person (use a ground ham-and-pickle spread between three slices of whole-wheat bread) and don't forget the big, juicy dill pickles and hard-boiled eggs. Add cold baked-bean salad packed individually in paper cups with lids, all set to be eaten with wooden picnic spoons. It's wonderful! Then settle back for a real treat while the "hares" roll out the big watermelon that's been cooling under the shade. Who wouldn't run a mile or more for this kind of finale?

BEACH PARTY . . . The wind, sand and stars (plus a little mood music on the accordion) set the background for this one and it's all as glamorous as a Guy Madison movie. Just add two lunch baskets, swim suits for everyone and a ball and bat for a fast game of softball just before the sun goes down.

This is the kind of party on which the food makes the fun. It's a feed-yourself affair with picnic hampers packed with the kind of food everyone can roast, toast and improvise himself. Get the ex-boy scout in your crowd to put his skill to the fire (better bring along a bag of charcoal to give it a good cooking glow) and pack enough toasting forks or long, sharpened green sticks for all the crowd to cook with. Toasted cheese cubes, made by cutting cheese into one-inch cubes, wrapping in bacon and broiling until bacon is crisp, can serve as warmer-uppers. As the main course, how about a variation on the classic "roast doggie"? Try your crowd out on a specialty called Doggies de Luxe, made from fat frankfurters, slit halfway through lengthwise and stuffed with a small piece of cheese before toasting. Serve, all crisp and crackling, in a hot-dog bun spread with chopped-pickle relish. And now for dessert (is anybody still hungry?) bring out the green sticks again for Date Dreams, a sweet bite made by alternating pitted dates with halved marshmallows on the sticks and toasting ver-r-y slowly over the fire. Sound good? It's date dreamy!

Finish off the evening with a round-the-fire musical spelldown, either in couples or with the Perry Como of the crowd acting as "partner" for everyone. Write the names of popular songs—plus a few oldies—on slips of paper, let each team of two draw a slip and sing the first chorus of the number chosen while the whole crowd joins in on the second. No prizes necessary—just divide up the evening's fun equally and everyone will be a winner. And don't let summer go by without at least one sundown-to-moonup soiree to mark in your diary as "super"!

"Star Light, Star Bright . . .

. . . should I let him kiss me good night tonight?" There's no quick-and-easy response to that one—so why not check the Sub-Deb booklet, NIX ON NECKING, No. 2270, for advice? Just send 5c to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Every gal ought to know a few quick answers!

P.S. Test FRESH yourself at our expense. See if FRESH isn't more effective, creamier, smoother than any deodorant you've ever tried. Only FRESH can use the patented combination of amazing ingredients which gives you this safe, smooth cream that doesn't dry out . . . that really stops perspiration better. Write to FRESH, Chrysler Building, New York, for a free jar.

FRESH
CREAM DEODORANT
STOPS PERSPIRATION

"—under the beautiful finish you get the strength of steel —and this label means the product is made of quality steel!"

PORCELAIN ENAMEL ON UNITED STATES STEEL

USS TRADE MARKS Vitrenamel

The U·S·S label shown at the l is one of a family of U·S·S lab Some say "Stainless Steel," or "F mier Spring Wire" or just "Ste but all have the letters U·S·S pro nently displayed. Whenever you see letters U·S·S — the trade-mark of Uni States Steel—you know the steel is go

LOTS of things for your home, like refrigerators, stoves, cabinets and freezers, are made of steel . . . but you don't see the steel. You see, instead, the beautiful finish which is put on over it. But it's nice to know that you've got the strength and ruggedness of steel under that finish, for long life and faithful service. And if the article you're buying carries the U·S·S trade-mark, you can be sure the steel under the finish is good steel. For that's what the U·S·S trade-mark means . . . that the manufacturer has made his product of quality steel.

FOR THE VERY BEST GARDEN TOOLS, be sure they're made of U·S·S Steel.

FINEST STRINGS for musical instrument of U·S·S American Music Steel Spring W

USS

AMERICAN BRIDGE COMPANY · AMERICAN STEEL & WIRE COMPANY · CARNEGIE-ILLINOIS STEEL CORPORATION · COLUMBIA STEEL COMPANY
CYCLONE FENCE DIVISION · FEDERAL SHIPBUILDING & DRY DOCK COMPANY · GERRARD STEEL STRAPPING COMPANY · NATIONAL TUBE COMPANY
OIL WELL SUPPLY COMPANY · TENNESSEE COAL, IRON & RAILROAD COMPANY · UNION SUPPLY COMPANY · UNITED STATES STEEL EXPORT COMPANY
UNITED STATES STEEL PRODUCTS COMPANY · UNITED STATES STEEL SUPPLY COMPANY · UNIVERSAL ATLAS CEMENT COMPANY · VIRGINIA BRIDGE COMPANY

UNITED STATES STEEL

WHAT YOUTH WANTS MOST

By Elizabeth Tate

WHAT are the dominating aims and aspirations of young boys and girls today? What qualities of mind and spirit do they most admire and seek or themselves?

An extraordinary opportunity to learn he answers to these questions was provided ecently by a nation-wide essay contest, pen to high-school seniors. Nearly two housand papers (1918) were written in an- wer to the following question:

"If you could suddenly acquire superiority in one characteristic or ability, which one would you choose? Describe this characteristic or ability, and give reasons for your choice."

The answers, statistically tabulated, fall nto the following categories:

I. The largest group expresses the desire to make friends, to be popular, to succeed in human relationships.

II. The next group desires musical ability, chiefly in piano playing and singing.

The rest of the papers are pretty miscel- neous and cover a wide range, from the ery vague to the highly specific. At one xtreme stands the boy who wishes for "the ility to entertain so well that I'll be a adio comedian with my own program over nation-wide network at 8:30 Sunday eve- ng" or the boy who wishes to improve his aseball so that he can "join the Brooklin odgers." At the other extreme are papers xpressing nothing ore specific than the esire "to help the orld" or "to be more ke Jesus."

Between one third nd one half of the apers clearly show a ominant desire for opularity and friend- ips, for understand- g of other people, nd ease in getting ong with them. ney call it by many mes: self-confidence, self-assurance, smoothness," "the ability to be an all- unded-out person," "the ability to know nd understand my fellow-mankind." One nd all are seeking the same end, with a fas- nating variety of approaches. Some crave t or humor; "personality," "dynamic rsonality," even "overwhelming person- ty"; some long for "the ability to speak ell" in private or in public; for a better cabulary; for advanced skill in mathe- atics ("so that I could explain some of e mysteries of the universe, and be a tter member of society").

YNIE writes humbly that she would like "gain friends through the ability to e the English language," and adds: "I ve a greatly defective ability to grasp d hold vocabulary of any kind."

Wit, or humor, is the quality Jerry en- es. And he has reasons. He longs to be me what he calls a "comidian," because can't "get up at a party and start crack- g jokes for fifteen or twenty minutes." e admits that he is "good-looking, rich, th plenty of personality," but adds mourn- lly: "But the one, the most important ing is: I'm not funny. . . . I'll be honest; other reason I want to become a joker is cause my girl friend likes to laugh, and I n never think up anything funny to say. he only way I can escape this phobia is to t a new girl friend."

They were asked to give the reasons for eir choice of "characteristic" or "abil- ." Some of them state their reasons with rity and simplicity.

Tom writes, "There is a feeling of secu- y in having friends that nothing else can give you. Whether I am a success in business or not, I will feel myself a success in life if I have the ability to make and keep friends."

Girls share evenly with boys, the survey showed, the ambition to achieve friends. Some feminine variations on the familiar theme are: the ability to make others happy; the ability to forgive and forget, not to bear grudges; the ability to "be a better friend than I have been in the past, and not to talk about people behind their backs"; the ability to "make others feel at ease with me"; to "be a gracious hostess, like my mother." One girl envies "the wit and savoir-faire of my best friend, who can chatter gaily with strangers while I am dumfounded." Another longs to be "the kind of person who always sees the best in people." Even a stage career can be translated into a form of personal popularity plus aid to mankind. Diana aspires to "ascend to the greatest heights in dramatics . . . because I would not only be making my life happy, but also helping other people, making them forget about themselves."

IT is interesting that the survey showed comparatively few girls with ambitions to act, and not one who specified a desire for a career in the movies. Possibly the high-school senior preparing for college has outgrown the lure of the klieg lights.

But the movies and the radio have fostered one powerful urge, among both girls and boys. That is the desire for musical ability. The reasons for desiring musical ability are three:

1—personal popularity;
2—success among contemporaries;
3—public recognition.

Among the musical aspirants, more than half wish to perform neither for their private pleasure, nor for professional reasons, but as a means to social success, "to be the life of the party," or in even more general terms, "to help other people."

The boys who aspire to be musicians are far less numerous than the girls. Some of them take a very practical view of the accomplishment they envy. Writes one:

"If my wish were strong enough to make me a José Iturbi or a Carmen Cavallero, so much the better. How I envy these men! They are earning almost fabulous salaries for doing the work—if work it is—which they most desire."

Another boy describes himself as a saxophonist, "no expert, but I haven't been pestered by the neighbors—yet!" He adds: "One of my main ambitions is to have a name band. Most adults wish to earn money fast. Well, here's your big chance. If you're lucky, you might find yourself playing in a café, or a night club. Now all you have to do is to go to Hollywood, or New York, and get yourself known there."

That's all. The Great American Dream of easy money has a new twist. By a sort of spontaneous generation, the "name band" springs into being, and then one finds oneself in a café, or a night club, or Hollywood, or New York.

The touching thing about these musical fantasies is their naïve and wistful reiteration of the old desire for popularity. One girl writes: "Singing is also of great value in friendly get-togethers, and a singer is always a help in making any social affair a success."

From the vantage point of middle age, almost anyone can recall a social affair where a singer was not a help. As Conrad writes: "Ah, youth, youth!"

THE END

The greatest doer must also be a great dreamer. Of course, if the dream is not followed by action, then it is a bubble; it has merely served to divert the man from doing something. But great action cannot take place if the man has it not in his brain to think great thoughts, to dream great dreams.

—THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Sunbeam

DOUBLE AUTOMATIC

IRONMASTER

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

You've got it UNDER YOUR THUMB!

HOT in 30 seconds

HEATS QUICKER, STAYS HOTTER, IRONS FASTER

Until you've used Sunbeam Ironmaster, you've no idea how much faster and easier ironing can be. No waiting for it to heat up—it's ready to go in a split minute, and always delivers the correct, steady heat for whatever fabric you're ironing. That's why you finish quicker, feeling fresher with a Sunbeam on the job.

SUNBEAM HAS the Thumb-tip Heat Control Dial up in the handle, where it is always cool and convenient. Easy-to-see. Easy-to-set. A finger-touch sets it for the correct, safe heat you want.

SUNBEAM HAS the Quick, Steady Heat made possible by Double-Automatic Heat Control, an exclusive Sunbeam invention. Heats faster—but never overheats. Reaches safe Low Heat for rayons in 30 seconds, quick High Heat for heavy, damp linens in 2½ minutes.

IN ADDITION, IT HAS the air-cooled, wrist-resting handle . . . larger ironing surface . . . permanently attached cord set . . . new streamlined beauty.

See your dealer.

SAFE steady Low heat that will not scorch the finest lingerie.

QUICK steady High heat for your heavy, dampened linens.

© SUNBEAM CORPORATION, Dept. 50, Chicago 50, Illinois • Canada: 321 Weston Rd. So., Toronto 9

Famous for Sunbeam TOASTER, MIXMASTER, COFFEEMASTER, WAFFLE BAKER, etc.

It's that NEW OXYDOL just see the difference!

Now lifetime Oxydol washes Clothes to a new whiteness the very first time . . . then keeps 'em

WHITE FOR LIFE!

The secret is Oxydol's new washing action!

Never again will clothes get that dull gray look the way they used to do!

New "lifetime" Oxydol has a new washing action that makes something wonderful happen inside your washing machine. The very first wash, you'll see even dull, yellowed clothes turn dazzling white again. Your very whitest clothes wash to a brilliant new white. Colors, too, take on a new brightness.

And every time you wash your clothes in "lifetime" Oxydol, they take on a brilliant new whiteness! Yes . . . week after week . . . month after month . . . clothes keep white for life!

Think what that means! Never again will clothes get that dull gray look the way they used to do.

But remember, only a soap like Oxydol with its new washing action . . . can do this for your wash. Get "lifetime" Oxydol — and try it today!

OXYDOL

Fifty Years Ago in the Journal

IN August, 1898, the four-month-old Spanish-American War ended. The U. S. lost 2803 men; a little over 300 from battle wounds, and over 2400 from disease. Elsewhere in the world, the Czar of Russia proposed a disarmament conference, and Wilhelmina became eighteen and the Queen of Holland.

"Now that warm weather is at hand, and women are tired of the conventional receptions and teas, and it is too hot for continuous dancing, the possibilities of the veranda should not be overlooked," crisply advises the JOURNAL of August, 1898.

Infants' clothes: "An infant dressed according to the most modern ideas will wear a shirt of fine all-wool, diaper, band of wool flannel, a high-necked and long-sleeved slip, and a second sleeveless garment. Over this, a nainsook slip and a fine wool night-gown," says Emma Hooper.

Chides Ruth Ashmore: "I confess to be provoked when I think of all the money spent on lotions, creams and powders which have nothing like as good an effect upon the skin as a tepid bath with a good soap taken at least once a week."

"Ice cream may be colored blue, but I cannot imagine that this would be even artistic," remarks cooking expert Mrs. Rorer to an inquiring reader.

Care of the fingernails: "The ridiculously long nail, which looks like a claw, is entirely out of fashion. Take the least little bit of red nail paste and smear the tiniest morsel on each nail. Then sprinkle with a pinch of powder and polish."

Remarks Ruth Ashmore: "At a certain age the average boy has a slight inclination to laugh at religion. This boy stands sadly in need of special personal influence from a devoted sister."

"I consider coffee, as it is usually made in the American family—strong and from the pure bean—an injurious drink, especially for nervous people," believes Mrs. Rorer. "Why not a cup of clear hot water?"

Journal About Town

The cast of this dinner party has earned some of Mrs. Teague's good cooking for one of her Conversation Pieces.

AS the multitude of readers who follow Ruth Mills Teague's Conversation Piece in the JOURNAL each month have no doubt discerned (their mouths watering as they make notes for future parties), the pictures are taken on location—the location in most cases being the Teagues' own place in the Hunterdon County hills of New Jersey, fifty miles or so from the Workshop here in New York. And as readers refer in this issue to page 160, where Mrs. T. is holding forth, they will see what happened when the sun finally came out—the sun for which everybody's waiting in the picture above; Mrs. Teague sitting down front on the steps, and around her photographers, models and helpers. What they're waiting for as much as for sunlight is for the time picture-taking is finished and they can pitch into those hamburger specials. There has to be much more food than meets the reader's eye in the magazine, Ruth says, for after the JOURNAL workers have taken the pictures and gone back to the city, neighborhood friends of the Teagues begin dropping in to pass on Ruth's masterworks of the month—a regular ceremony out there in Hunterdon County. Which means that one complete portion gets hidden away, so that when Walter Dorwin Teague, the celebrated industrial designer of many things which you use, gets home from town, he'll know what his wife's been up to this time for the JOURNAL.

Mary Lea Page reads the magazines—including the New Yorker. Faced with the problem of providing a birthday cake for Laura Lou Brookman which could be cut into many portions, she remembered Cartoonist Steinberg's drawing of the woman who ran out of space and had to bake another cake to make room for the end of "Happy Birthday." Result: 70 people had their cake and ate it too.

Friends of Mary Bass were at the home recently of one of the country's leading industrialists when, on the dot of eight, the butler announced dinner, though several guests had hardly removed their wraps—and the chief guest, General Eisenhower, had yet to arrive. As the party promptly proceeded to the dining room, the host explained that his home was now staffed entirely with union employees, and that the chef, especially, was very particular about having dinner right on time. In fact, he had put it in his contract.

In 1870 there were nearly 2,000,000 wage-earning women in the U. S., mostly in domestic service. Today 17,000,000 women hold jobs—more than one quarter of the working population. . . . There are more than 2,000,000 twins in this country. . . . According to Chicago police captain Timothy Lyne, his sixty policewomen are more efficient than his men cops—"They're so darn stubborn it's only natural they should keep on digging at even the smallest clue!" . . . Portland, Oregon, got its name by the toss of a coin—heads, it would be Portland; tails, Boston. . . . A mouse's heart beats 600 times a minute, and he dies in two or three years. An elephant's heart has 28 beats to the minute, and he lives seventy or a hundred years. Great athletes have slow hearts, 45 to 50 beats a minute. . . . If all the magazines published by The Curtis Publishing Company in the last twelve months were piled up, they would form 3400 stacks, each as high as the Empire State Building.

When a Mrs. Ferris came in with a couple of her new collapsible hats to show to Dawn Crowell Norman and Nora O'Leary, she told them how she'd got the idea from country girls in Switzerland, who'd be strolling along under these great wide-brimmed hats, when all of a sudden the hats would disappear. In her version, what holds the outer brim in shape is a circle of the kind of springy, nonrusting piano wire they use for deep-sea sounding: you twist it into a figure 8, fold the two halves together, and stick the whole hat in your pocket. At midday, you wear the hat on top of your head; when the sun's at your back you wear it halo-fashion, like Nora. The hat comes in two sizes—mother and daughter.

J. DI PIETRO

Sleight-of-hand bonnet.

Steinberg-inspired birthday cake for Laura Lou Brookman.

In the course of getting together material for an article on shy celebrities, Louise Benjamin found herself waiting backstage at the hit play Harvey to interview, between the acts, that shyest of all actors—James Stewart. Too late to do anything about it, as the curtain came down, Mrs. B. suddenly noticed that her slip was showing all around, and here was Jimmy coming up to greet her. Ordinarily calm, cool and collected, for once she was flustered; while Jimmy, sensing the situation, was the soul of self-possession and poise. Shyly, he had Mrs. B. feeling at ease in no time at all.

Gossip about people you know, editors you like and what goes on in New York.

She was like a pool—icy deep and dangerous. He had everything—to some of which he had no right

It is nothing to me—

BECAUSE SHE WAS OLD AND WISE, ADELINE KNEW WHAT A YOUNG WOMAN WANTS FROM LOVE—AND WHAT SHE WILL DO TO GET IT. ★ THE JOURNAL'S COMPLETE-IN-ONE-ISSUE NOVEL

BY NELIA GARDNER WHITE

"I AM dead," the old woman said. "I cling to the world like that moss on the oak out there, but I am dead, Charles. Please do not flatter me. I have good bones and they have served me well. My shoulders have no hunch and my knuckles have no knots. But there is no blood in my veins—there is no feeling in me. When one no longer cares for anything or anybody, one is dead."

"I don't believe you, Aunt Adeline," Charles said. "You are the only one in the whole family that I could come to. I don't ask favors of dead people."

"You will please ask no favors of me. I can recall when I was fond of you, Charles, but it is a memory and has nothing to do with you, sitting there on the middle of your back in those disreputable clothes. Ten years ago I would have sent you packing till you made yourself more respectable. Now you have nothing to do with me. I am too old. I do not care."

He did not move from his slouching position in the big chair. He said with a touch of sharpness, "If garrulity is a sign, as they say, then perhaps you are old."

But she did not rise to that. She sat erect and ancient in her clothes that still had style and an air of grandeur, and there was no change in her remote politeness. "Yes," she said only.

"I've come two hundred miles to see you. No one told me you were dead."

"No one's noticed."

He laughed. He had a pleasant face, long and hard of flesh, with a small fair mustache. He had light-blue eyes that looked tired. "But you noticed. You notice everything, Aunt Adeline. And if it doesn't mean anything to you, it means everything to me. I'd rather have you notice, not caring, than all the rest put together, caring but not seeing."

"You were always one to cajole, Charles."

"You don't even want to hear? It would serve you right if I walked out and said to myself, 'The old dodo's dead!'"

A ghost of a smile touched the old woman's thin rouged lips. "That's what you call me—'the old dodo'?" she asked.

"No. I'm trying to make you ashamed of yourself. I call you 'darling, wicked Aunt Adeline.'"

"How old are you, Charles?"

"Thirty-four. As you know. The day and the hour, too, I expect."

"Old enough, I should think, not to depend on others to solve your problems."

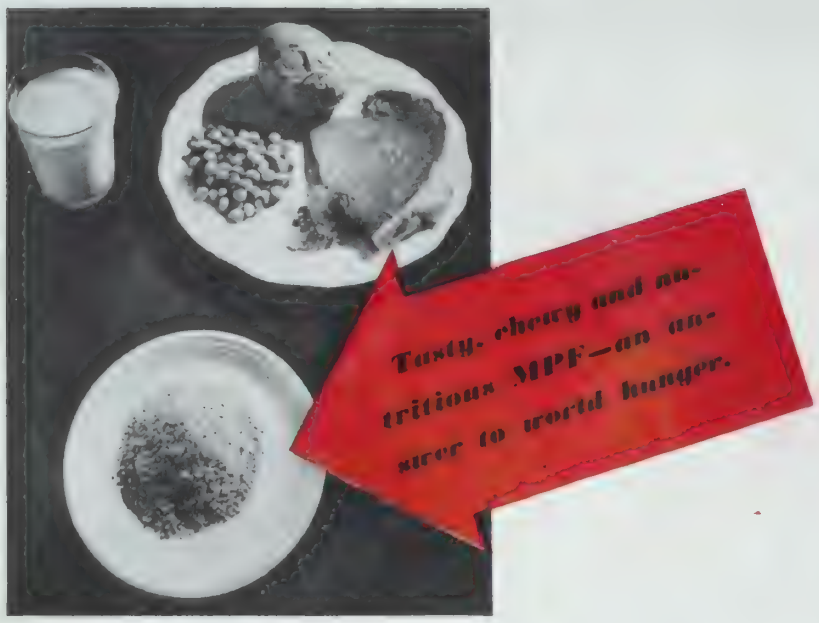
He seemed to sink farther into the deep chair while the tiredness of his eyes spread over his whole face. "There's no answer to that one, Aunt Adeline. I am old enough," he said at last. "But this has never happened to me before. Perhaps fate won't leave the decision up to me anyway. It's quite possible."

"You didn't pick up malaria during the war, Charles? Your eyes have that look. I remember your Great-uncle Ellison who was in the war with the Filipinos. His eyes had the same look."

"No, I didn't pick up malaria. I was in England and Germany most of the time, you know. No, I'm not ill, Aunt Adeline. Not that way. I'm jittery, a little, but I think I'm quite sane. I don't yearn toward a psychiatrist or anything like that. I only yearn toward your worldly wisdom."

"I see. Well, you might as well tell it. I can see you have every intention of doing so, no matter how much I protest my indifference."

He was still for a long time. His hands on the chair arms looked very limp and weary. "Would you come down to the farm for a week or two, Aunt Adeline?" he asked finally.



"The farm? Certainly not! I stick to my own home, as a person my age should. Besides, I have no passion for Nature—nor for your family either, Charles."

"I know. You have no passion at all, or so you say. But if your memory still remains intact, you do remember what passion is, don't you?"

"Yes, Charles, I remember. . . . But if your too sudden marriage has not turned out satisfactorily, I can do nothing about it."

(Continued on Page 68)

ILLUSTRATED BY ROY SPRETER

Two ounces (5c worth) of MPF equals in nutrition a meal of beef, peas, potatoes, milk.

"I saved $8 on my monthly

BY ELEANOR FAHERTY

THIS is the diary of a housewife of Hopewell, N. J., and her adventures last March with MPF—a soybean food base now primarily used to fight hunger and disease abroad by the Quakers, by LARA, other relief agencies and by the United States Government. Because it can be cooked over a candle flame, because it keeps indefinitely, because of its low cost and satisfying flavor, Paul de Kruif has nicknamed it "the modern manna." It's produced for the nonprofit Meals for Millions Foundation.

Chuckie, two years old, likes the can as well as the food, set a record for no colds on MPF.

Bobby, nine, vowed he wasn't going to like MPF, said after trying it, "I ate it, didn't I?"

Mrs. Faherty used MPF largely in hamburgers, fish cakes and soup, called it a "super-stretcher."

DIARY

March 2. An editor of the JOURNAL visited me today and asked me to try a new food called Multi-Purpose Food. It is a protein "base" food or food extender, fortified with vitamins and minerals, is supposed to be pleasant-tasting, inexpensive and can be kept without refrigeration. It is made chiefly of soybeans, onions and spices, and millions of meals of it have been sent abroad to feed the hungry. Bob studied the MPF idea over at night and decided with me that it is well worth trying. He's a meat-and-potato man: needs plenty of energy for his work at the factory. But it should help reduce our food bill—it's amazing how much an average family spends on only the most essential foods. We spent an average of $22 a week last month at the grocery store; and after all, we budget on only $40 a week income. And MPF will also give us a good supply of vitamins we may not be getting otherwise. I figured out Bobby and Chuck can do without their A and D vitamins if they have two meals a day of MPF. Shall begin March 5—my day for shopping for a week's supply of groceries.

March 3. Discussed project with mother and friends. I think it will be interesting and feel it may help other people on a low budget or for food-distributing centers. Bobby, who at nine knows simply everything, says he is not going to like it.

March 4. Worked out several menus and recipes for MPF.

March 5. Cooked ⅓ cup MPF in 1 cup water to try it; is easily cooked and has an appetizing smell. Had small piece of broiled fillet of mackerel left from lunch, which I used with 1¼ cups MPF, some onion and potato, and made fish cakes. They were delicious. Bobby and Chuckie enjoyed them as well as Bob and I. They fry up very crisp on the outside, soft and tasty on the inside. As a first course, I added 2 tablespoons MPF to noodle soup (package) before cooking. The MPF added body to the soup, gave it a pleasant oniony flavor.

March 6. Made sausage pies—an old favorite—but used only ¼ pound sausage, whereas usually use at least ½ pound. Used 1 cup cooked MPF. Good.

March 7. Tried MPF in tomato soup. This is good and very economical, because it's practically a meal in itself. I'm really enjoying cooking with MPF and we are liking the food.

March 8. Alice and Donna here today for lunch. Had 1 pound ground meat, so mixed up a meat loaf, adding 1 cup MPF. Felt a little shaky about serving guests, but told all when Alice had finished her second serving of meat loaf. Said she would be interested in using it, as she has three grown men to cook for besides her two daughters. At suppertime served it cold and Bobby kept asking for more. Bobby has been the real test for MPF—because if he likes it, it has to be good!

March 9. For lunch today I cooked 1 cup MPF and mixed it with ¼ pound sausage, little onion and parsley. Made sausage patties, which I really liked better than plain sausage. The MPF took away the sharp, spicy taste of sausage, but did not spoil the good taste. MPF definitely blends in with any kind of meat and is a wonderful extender. I must try some vegetable dishes with it.

March 10. Had just a little roast pork left over and so ground it, mixed it with 1 cup MPF and used the fish-cake method, substituting meat for the fish. These were very good—food bill"

PHOTOS BY JERRY COOKE

The Faherty family eat an MPF dinner de luxe. In Europe and Asia, hungry people eat it plain or stew it with greens. MPF's father: Clifford Clinton, of Los Angeles; developer: biochemist Dr. Henry R. Borsook, of California Institute of Technology.

makes so much out of so little. I like the crispness MPF gives.

March 12. For lunch today I used a recipe for Chinese MPF, using a little salmon, cabbage and tomatoes, with onion and green pepper. We weren't too fond of this—neither Bob nor I like Chinese-style food. For dinner I used the remaining salmon in MPF fish cakes, which we like very much. Bob's mother had dinner with us and thought they were very good too. Actually, ¼ cup salmon, combined with MPF, served 5 people!

March 13. I am beginning to think automatically of MPF as a necessary part of each meal—like I must always have potatoes. Now I think of the meat I am having and can I extend it with a cup of MPF. I know I have saved buying meat for at least three meals (a week) and have had good meals by using the MPF and a small portion of meat or fish. Today for lunch I used only ½ pound hamburger, 1 cup MPF, a little onion, parsley, salt and pepper, and had sufficient for four people. Tonight for dinner with just ¼ cup chicken, ground, mixed with 1 cup MPF, onion, parsley, a little flour, salt and pepper, I had grand croquettes which all of us liked—and the chicken alone would have served but one person!

March 14. Made onion soup with MPF. It was good, but the children didn't like it any better than they like any onion soup.

March 15. Today I added 1 cup cooked MPF to ½ pound hamburger, had the patties for lunch and still have enough for our lunch tomorrow. (Usually it's a pound a lunch.) On figuring my weekly food bill, I have saved over $2.00 on what I usually spend. I have used MPF in one meal each day. A food bill could be cut $4.00 a week, I believe, if MPF were used in at least two meals a day.

March 16. Tried a meat-cake recipe with 1 cup MPF added. MPF really improved the flavor of this dish as well as "stretching" it farther. We all enjoyed this dish. Think I'll try using MPF several times a day.

March 17. Reheated roast beef in gravy and served it on hot MPF. Children didn't like this too well. Bob and I prefer it mixed in loaves, meat cakes and browned in fat. Works out swell in any favorite meat-ball recipe to use with tomato sauce and spaghetti, which we had for dinner at night.

March 18. Becky, one of my girl friends, came for tea this afternoon and I served small rolls filled with a good meat filling—I ground a can of luncheon meat, used over half of it for my luncheon loaf and the remainder used with ground sweet pickles and a little cooked MPF and mayonnaise for my rolls. Both Becky and I enjoyed them. One nice thing about MPF is the fact that it can be cooked and stored in the refrigerator until you are ready to mix it with your recipe. It also reheats perfectly.

March 19. Served MPF tomato soup for lunch. This is so good and yet costs only about ten cents for four servings. Used ½ can tuna in my salad—remaining tuna goes in MPF fish cakes for dinner. These I prepared ahead of time—stored in refrigerator until dinnertime. I shall always use MPF with fish—flavors blend perfectly and cakes have more body.

March 20. Made potato pancakes tonight with 1 cup MPF, ½ cup shredded raw potato, and a little onion and flour. These we liked and it was a nice change from plain potato and easily prepared.

March 21. Served a delicious stuffed shoulder of lamb. So good I will write up the recipe in full. Absolutely no taste of MPF in the dressing. My family here—all enthusiastic over it.

March 22. Two slices of pork roll (prepared ham), ground, mixed with ¾ cup MPF, little onion and shaped into patties, served four persons very nicely.

March 23. Served MPF onion soup for lunch. Bob and I like this better than the children do. Men would go more for this, I believe.

March 24. I ground the remainder of the lamb and made MPF lamb patties. Very good, have enough lamb left to use tomorrow—perhaps stuffed peppers?

March 25. Served stuffed peppers for dinner (recipe follows), which were very good and a definite change in our menu. It still amazes me how much I can make out of so little by adding MPF. I've also been thinking that it is three weeks that I've been using MPF and no one in my family has had a cold—this is very good for the month of March. Mrs. Faherty and Tom came for lunch unexpectedly and my hamburger extended very nicely for all of us, thanks to MPF!

March 26. Three weeks and I find I average a good $2.00 saved on my former weekly food bill!

March 27. Had one of our favorite MPF dishes—meat loaf. This would be very good and easily prepared for schools and other organizations cooking in large quantities.

March 28. Served MPF tomato soup, which we all like and which is so economical to make. MPF meat loaf slices perfectly cold. MPF makes it more solid and actually improves the flavor.

March 29. Mixed ¼ pound sausage with 1 cup cooked MPF, shaped into patties, browned lightly, arranged them in baking dish (flat) with tomato wedges and eggs and baked in oven until eggs were set. This is a grand luncheon dish. For dinner, I reheated the remaining meat loaf over boiling water, very good. (Continued on Page 139)

If you want any MPF, write direct to Meals for Millions Foundation, 648 South Broadway, Los Angeles 14, California. Trial package, 25 cents; six 20-ounce cans, $4.00. Postage prepaid.

In spite of hims

Party Dress

DO YOU REMEMBER THE "PERFECT DRESS"—AND THE THINGS THAT IT MADE HAPPEN? • BY DICK ASHBAUGH

WHISTLING a Gershwin melody, Steve Carmichael climbed out of his 1941 automobile, carefully circled a bicycle sprawled across the back walk and came in the rear door. He shut his eyes briefly as he crossed the threshold so he wouldn't see the loose screen he had meant to fix a week ago. Once inside the door, he slowly removed his hat, took a careful stance, and snapped it toward the coat rack at the end of the hall. It whirled satisfactorily, picked up a nice tail wind passing the kitchen door, and spun onto the top hook.

"Nice eye for a man my age," he said. "Nice arm too."

He went on through the kitchen, vaguely conscious of the unusual quiet in that department, and pushed open the swinging door leading to the dining room. It didn't push very well. He tried again and managed an entree into a scene of casual confusion. Tissue-paper patterns, sewing baskets, odds and ends of cloth combined in a sort of flowing avalanche that led up to the peak—his daughter, Marybeth, poised on a footstool. At her feet knelt his wife, Pamela, still more than a reasonable facsimile of the mirror-eyed blonde he had married fifteen years before.

Steve circled carefully around the room, ankle-deep in the debris. "Don't tell me," he said. "Let me guess."

They ignored him completely. "But, mother," said Marybeth, "it's positively got to sweep the floor. Let's face it."

"We'll face nothing of the kind," said her mother. "Two inches off the floor it is, and two inches off the floor ——"

"It stays," finished Steve, playing the heavy father.

A surprised cigarette girl disposed of her entire quota of carnations.

"But mother, it says in the pattern you're supposed to float. How can I float if my feet stick out?"

"I'll give you a dollar," said her mother, "for every girl of fourteen who floats. It takes years to learn that trick."

"You looked like a duck at fourteen," said her husband.

"Yes, dear, I looked like a duck at —— Hey! Oh, hello. It's you." Pamela sat back on her heels and released a small bell-shaped sigh. "What brings you home this early, my sweet?"

"Early, my eye," he said. "It's past six." He picked up the profusion of patterns covering the table and peered underneath. "No plates," he said plaintively. "No knives and forks. No salt and pepper. No steaming tureen. Cold stove in kitchen. All is lost." He sank down on a chair and put his head in his arms.

"Mur-der," said Pamela softly. "I plumb forgot poppa. Look, angel, clamber off the footstool and get going. We're shirking our duty."

"Oh, daddy, I'm sorry. It's really my fault. I was late getting home from school." Marybeth hurried around the table and cradled her head on his shoulder.

"I'll take no blandishments," he said, "from children of fourteen. I want squab under glass." He raised his head and looked at her intently. "You wearing lipstick, honey?"

"Oh, no, daddy," said Marybeth, backing away and upsetting the telephone stand. "Only at parties."

"Pick up the phone, baby," said Pamela, "and float out into the kitchen. I can use you." (Continued on Page 108)

ve whistled softly. It was Pamela all over again.

ILLUSTRATED BY

FRANCE: Soap is still rationed in the Redouin household, but splashing is not. Sylviane and Yves now sit in one washtub, but it won't be for long. In cold weather, the Redouins bathe in the kitchen. Mme. Redouin has a lovely skin, and seldom uses cosmetics.

JAPAN: This is typical traffic jam as the large Okamoto family takes its daily evening bath. No soap is used in the tub; washing and rinsing are done on a wooden platform. A small stove under the tub keeps the water warm. Men and boys bathe first, females follow.

UNITED STATES: Don Pratt indulges himself in one of the minor miracles of the electrical age: a dry shave. One advantage: it doesn't tie up the bathroom. The Pratt home has hot and cold running water, but (like the majority of rural U. S. homes) an outdoor toilet.

EGYPT: The el Gamel boys, Sebai and Hassan, wash before their noonday meal. Hassan pours from a solid copper jug into a washbowl called a tesht, which has a small soap dish in the center. The el Gamels take daily baths, sponge-bath style, and a barber stops by every few days to shave father.

PAKISTAN: In the torrid heat Indian summer, the sons of hamed Usman like nothing ter than to plunge into the

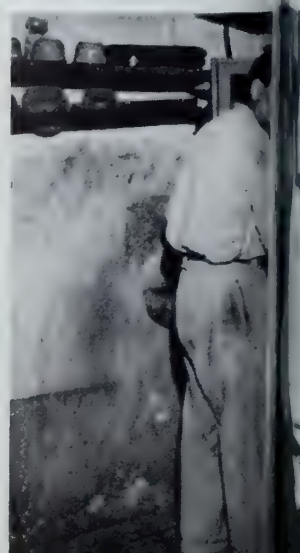
THIS IS THE WAY



ONE of the world's unwritten laws is that hands must be washed before meals. All the same, it is easy for children to forget, and Mrs. Hiatt, of Hook Norton, England, often has to remind seven-year-old Peter to use a little soap before supper. In the Carpathian foothills of Slovakia, Mrs. Anna Balogh pours a fresh pail of water into the basin behind the house, and daughter Maria helps with the smaller children. In Egypt, as is the Mohammedan custom, the el Gamel boys wash mouth as well as hands before each meal, and also before praying toward Mecca. South near the Equator the law still holds, and Zamba Aluma makes sure that his sons wash up before they plunge into their dinner gourds. Dirt is the common outlaw of civilization, and the sun never sets on the soap dish.

Outdoor plumbing is no joke to the twelve farm families we photographed. None had an indoor toilet; in China there was not even an outhouse. The Guercinis, of Italy, have a fifteen-minute walk to the spring which provides their water. The Hiatts pump a tank of water each day by hand. In France, Mme. Redouin has the blessing of an electric pump, but the children are bathed alfresco—two to the tub. More often than not, and especially in cold winter weather, our farm families wash in the ENGLAND: The Hiatts have converted a spare bedroom into a bath. Here Mrs. Hiatt bathes Joyce and Peter by candlelight. She can't understand how Peter can get grubby so fast, but Peter doesn't seem mystified. Like many farm wives, Mrs. Hiatt uses make-up only when she goes to town.

ITALY: Armando Guercini ar son Loreno wash in the kit when they return from wo the vineyard. Water is pre ion canal to cool off. The Usns have simplest of sanitary fa-ties, but the women use care-make-up on face and hands.

MEXICO: Little Maria Virginia Gonzalez doesn't seem to enjoy her bath, but mother has come to expect a certain amount of fuss and takes it in stride. Behind are some of the cactus plants which grow like weeds around the Gonzalez home. There is a spring close by, but no plumbing in the house.

- Germany
- Japan
- Czechoslovakia
- France
- China
- Italy

By JOHN GODFREY MORRIS

THE WORLD BATHES

kitchen. There is plenty of hot water as long as you heat it on the stove, and to regulate the shower you pour the water fast or slow.

Next to cleanliness come cosmetics. Mrs. el Gamel, of Egypt, who must not show her face in public, uses henna on the palms of her hands and kohl to shade her eyes. In the United States, it is now the custom of women to use lipstick, and Pauline Pratt is no exception. In Italy and Japan, cosmetics are used according to generations; grandmothers refrain, their daughters use the works.

Hair styles are fickle. Señora Gonzalez sticks to simple braids. Mme. Redouin prefers an upswept bun. Mrs. Hiatt was blessed with wavy hair, and makes only occasional trips to her hairdresser in Banbury. Frau Stieglitz goes about once in three weeks. All the men shave regularly, but Tom Hiatt is the one man in twelve families who shaves every day. A barber visits Hag Zaki el Gamel every few days to shave him at home. However, it is Sozo Okamoto, patriarch of the Japanese family, who enjoys the greatest masculine prerogative. At the end of the day, it is he who bathes first, followed by his sons in order of seniority. Only then may the women bathe, and it is they who are left to wash out the tub.

PHOTOGRAPHS for the Journal by Horace Bristol (Japan and China), Larry Burrows (England), Robert Capa (United States and Czechoslovakia), Marie Hansen (Italy), George Rodger (Egypt, Pakistan and Equatorial Africa), Phil Schultz (Mexico), David Scherman (France and Germany).

GERMANY: When Herr Stieglitz comes in hot and sweaty from the harvest, he strips to the waist and washes in the barnyard. He shaves every other day. Frau Stieglitz has a ruddy complexion, seldom uses cosmetics. Water is supplied by the town of Wollau.

CHINA: In the dirt-floored room that serves as living room, dining room and bath, grandmother Ho bathes young Ho Shun while his brother awaits his turn. The women use no cosmetics, but carefully comb their hair. Ho Fu-yuan shaves whenever he gets a haircut.

EQUATORIAL AFRICA: Zamba Aluma and his two wives are very strict with little boys and girls who forget to wash their hands before eating. Sometimes the boys wash in the river Ini, a 15-minute walk. The girls do one another's hair in plaits close to the scalp.

l must be hauled from a spring most a mile away. The girls use stick and rouge, but grand-ther won't touch cosmetics.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA: Bare feet but clean hands is the rule when the call to supper sounds in the village of Furolac. Baby Anna Balogh takes a dim view of the proceedings, but would rather wash than go hungry. Water has to be carried in buckets from the near-by well, which is operated by windlass.

Isn't Emily marvelous?
A corporation president said so—and he should know—because he's Emily's boss.
Isn't Emily marvelous?
A doting grandmother said so—although Emily turned down her grandson's proposal of marriage.

Isn't Emily marvelous?

BY NANCY GARBETT WILBUR

JIM THOMPSON and I bumped into each other on the northeast corner of Park Avenue and Forty-ninth Street one rainy evening early in March—the first time we had met since leaving Yale. For some unknown reason he asked me to spend the week end at his home in Connecticut—he was married, I discovered; for some equally unknown reason, I accepted, and that was how I met Emily.

Emily had been at Smith with Pamela Thompson, but they didn't appear to have much more to say to each other than Jim and I had. It didn't matter: by Saturday noon Emily and I were talking to each other pretty steadily; by Saturday evening I was in love with her; by Sunday noon she was in love with me, and on Sunday evening we got engaged on the train somewhere between Stamford and Grand Central.

After leaving the station we went down to the Village, where Emily lived, and sat in a small, friendly restaurant, smiling inanely and finding out what we were really like.

Emily came from Columbus, Ohio, where her father had been a doctor. Both her parents were dead, but she had one older brother who was a lawyer out West, and married, with two children whom Emily had never seen. She liked Bach and Duke Ellington and Shakespeare, disliked Prokofiev, Picasso and Henry James, and her favorite color was green. She liked to dance and to read and to walk in Central Park, but she didn't like any sports at all, except swimming. She had never been engaged before.

When we finally wandered out into the street, I felt as if I had known her all my life. I couldn't imagine how I had ever lived without knowing her. And I was glad that her background was simple and uncomplicated, like mine, although it would have made no difference whether she had been an heiress to millions or an illegal immigrant: I should still have loved her.

"I feel so surprised," she said, smiling at me. "Here was I, the typical career girl, and now ——"

I had completely forgotten that she would have a job. It had simply not entered my mind, probably because I had been painting pictures of her in a home—our home—fluttering around doing a little mild dusting, darning my socks, fixing dinner in readiness for my return from the office.

"What is your job?" I asked her. "Do you realize you haven't told me? No, don't tell me. Let me guess. Actress?"

"No."

"Buyer? Copy writer? Teacher? Secretary?" She shook her head to all four. "So I give up. Tell me."

She said, "I'm personal assistant to the president of Consolidated Plastics."

I whistled. "It sounds impressive. What do you do? His confidential letters and that sort of thing?"

"Not exactly. I just assist him. See people who get past his secretary, but mustn't reach him. I keep in touch with the various branches and departments and give him the complete picture."

"Oh." It did sound impressive. Consolidated Plastics. The biggest new thing in years. "Must be interesting. Have you traveled at all?"

(Continued on Page 92)

Isn't Emily marvelous?

And the man who loved her agreed with them all—and wished he didn't have to.

ILLUSTRATED BY

IF YOU ASK ME

By Eleanor Roosevelt

★ We are coming to you for advice because we are ashamed to go to our pastor or anyone else we know. We found out recently through a note which we discovered in our seventeen-year-old son's pocket, that he and his seventeen-year-old girl friend have had illicit relations with each other for more than two years. When confronted with the evidence they defiantly admitted everything. Our son wants permission to marry this girl as he says that he loves her. Her parents do not know about them. Should we tell them and have them help us decide what should be done? We truthfully told our boy the things which he should know through the years so he did not fall into temptation and yield through ignorance. He is conscience-stricken about the whole affair but the girl seems to be utterly devoid of a conscience.

I think your son and the girl should go to her parents. It is their story, not yours, that has to be told. Then you and her parents could talk the situation over. It would seem to me that if you are able to do so, you would want your son to finish his education so as to be as well prepared as possible to take care of the girl he marries. Her parents, I should think, would feel that they wanted her to finish her education so that she would be well prepared to be a good wife.

In addition, two or three years may make a very great difference in both of them and the fact that they had to wait to marry until they were able to earn a living would probably mean a happier future for them and give them time to mature and realize that marriage is not just a question of physical attraction but a life companionship into which many other things have to enter if their lives are to be useful and happy together.

★ My husband and I do not agree on an important matter. I think we should help our daughter while her ex-serviceman husband is attending college. They have some help from the Government and his folks have been contributing each month. Our incomes are about the same, approximately four thousand dollars a year. Do you think that the boy's folks should stand all of the expense just because the man is supposed to be the breadwinner? The young couple have a small child so my daughter is unable to help her husband make a living.

I think perhaps your husband is right in feeling that the boy and his parents would prefer not to have you give stated sums of money toward the support of your daughter. They certainly would not object to your giving presents now and then, as you are able, either small sums of money for specific things the young couple need, or some things for the baby. That would not hurt the boy's feelings or make him feel he was less the breadwinner and responsible for his family.

Letters should be addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, care THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. It should be understood that Mrs. Roosevelt's answers reflect only her own opinions and are not necessarily the opinions of the Editors of the JOURNAL.

★ Were you a Republican before your marriage?

I am afraid before I married I did not know much about political parties. I was very fond of my uncle, President Theodore Roosevelt, and admired him greatly as a person. As far as knowing what the Republicans or Democrats stood for, I fear my knowledge was nil. My bringing up in my grandmother's home was completely lacking in any kind of political education. Women did not have the right to vote at that time, and my interests lay along many other lines.

It was not until we were on our honeymoon and went to visit some Scotch friends where the lady of the house asked me to explain our form of government that I realized I was deficient in the most elementary knowledge of my own country's government. From that time on I began to study and become better educated, though I cannot say I have had the hidebound feeling which some people seem to acquire about belonging traditionally to one party or the other.

★ What ten books should one read before considering oneself well educated?

I am afraid there are no ten books which will educate anyone. Education is not merely a question of reading ten books. You might get from a library a list of ten books that everyone should read, but that would not mean that because you read them you were educated. Education goes on all the days of our lives and is acquired not only in school but in actual living.

★ Do you approve of the return at Government expense of the bodies of servicemen who were buried overseas?

Naturally if the bodies are going to be brought home they must be brought home by the Government. One does not approve or disapprove of this. Different people feel differently about it. I happen to belong to a family whose members have always wanted to be buried where they died, but I know many people who feel differently and I think it is a question for individuals and their families to decide.

★ I had the great fortune to escape from a mad and bloody Germany and it took long to overcome bitterness and an inferiority complex. But I feel double the responsibility to work for peace. Stronger and stronger grows the conviction within me that it must be the mission of the women to unite against war. Do you think it possible to reach the Russian women?

I doubt that we can find a way to reach the Russian women at the present time. Communications are very difficult between our two countries, information is restricted and friendship is not encouraged.

I wish it were not so, but I feel that any effort to break the barriers down would be looked upon with a good deal of suspicion and be entirely unsuccessful.

GARDNER REA

"But what if America and Russia don't exactly love each other—why can't they just get along together like husband and wife?"

Look the Moneylenders over!

Would you like to buy the use of $100? You can't wear it, you can't eat it, and you always give back more than $100, but still there are ways to get your money's worth. • By G. M. White and Sidney Margolius

WHEN forced to apply for a small loan (under $300), people are usually nervous and unable to think straight. For them the important thing is to get their hands on cash—often a pitifully small amount—now. In their need, they cannot discriminate; they cannot wait to inquire how much interest they will pay or what kind of service they will get. They are easy victims for illegal, unlicensed or unregulated lenders. The time to judge lenders is before the need to borrow arises.

"I want to lend you money!" See the happy little man on the poster with his hands full of green stuff? "Consolidate your debts with us—save time and worry." Such inducements can be seen in almost every advertising space. Direct-mail advertising is often used by the salary buyers, who aim their offers as "Money for Salaried People," or "Money for Teachers." Teachers are often plagued because on their salaries they, like many white-collar workers, are unable to save money, and they make reliable borrowers. Licensed finance companies and small-loan departments of commercial banks also advertise. Their purpose in advertising is not to encourage people to go into debt. Like the mortician, they say they advertise so people will know where to go when faced with an unanticipated need. And besides, they need the business. Do you need money? The best sources are cautiously eager to lend you some.

Small loans are made by several different types of consumer-credit institutions which take varying amounts for interest and service charges. Among them are the commercial banks, the small-loan companies, industrial banks and loan companies, and credit unions. To borrow from a credit union you must be a member, and the rate is usually 1 per cent a month. In a few large cities there are remedial-loan societies which lend at low rates. And then there are pawnbrokers and the illegal lenders, who exact the highest rates of all.

The most important and most readily available sources from which to borrow money are the small-loan departments of commercial banks and the personal-finance companies, which together account for more than half the consumer installment loans. Only within the past ten years have the majority of banks opened small-loan departments from which qualified borrowers can get loans under $300 discounted at 6 per cent.

When a loan is discounted at 6 per cent it means that 6 per cent is deducted from the face amount of the loan at the time the loan is made. On a loan of $100 running for a twelve-month period the commercial bank would deduct $6 at the time the loan is made, leaving the consumer $94. Since the consumer repays the original $100 in 12 equal installments of $8.33, actually he has the use on the average of only $47 throughout the year, so that the charge amounts approximately to 13 per cent. The banks prefer to lend amounts larger than $100, for they cannot make money at this rate for small amounts.

Ten thousand of the country's 15,000 commercial banks are engaged in the small-loan business. The skyscraper Independent National Bank of Detroit lends to some of the country's wealthiest industrialists, but it also has a Stork Plan that lends Detroit families almost $1,000,000 a year in small loans for maternity expenses. In New York the Chase National Bank advertises daily, "Chase Makes Low-Cost Small Loans." The huge Irving Trust Company has a system of receiving applications by mail, as do some personal-finance companies. In many cases a mailed application or a phone call beforehand reduces the transaction to one personal interview. In Philadelphia, the Pennsylvania Company, staid, conservative and almost as old as the nation itself, reports it now makes small loans for sofas, schooling and almost any other personal need, without either collateral or cosigners.

Fraud is not an important cause of failure to repay. Whenever it appears it is because the dead beat has been able to outwit an experienced interviewer, who is usually able to prevent unscrupulous persons from getting loans. For the most part, common business prudence prevents any serious inroad by the dishonest. W. F. Kelly, of the loan division

(Continued on Page 100)

PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

Connecticut Salt Box

BY RICHARD PRATT

Architectural Editor of the Journal

Nestling back in from the coast line of Connecticut, and on all the way to Cape Cod, you will find the remnants and relics of these wonderful old houses from the 1600's; and occasionally, like this one here, an example so well preserved that it brings that far-off past right up to the present. You can be sure it is not the fault of the house when you find one in ruins, for only neglect and disaster have ever been able to damage or destroy them. The heavy oak with which they were framed has taken on the enduring strength of steel, and the massive single chimneys which furnish great open fireplaces for every room, upstairs and down, are built like the pyramids. Simple to the point of severity, these houses come by their beauty through honest construction.

The typical rear roof line of the 1690 Ogden house at Fairfield, like an old-fashioned salt container, gives these houses their name. The present living room was once the lean-to kitchen, its huge fireplace—center of domestic life—filled with cooking implements. Note the hand-hewn beams after 2½ centuries.

The bed in the principal bedroom is covered with a spread of linsey-woolsey—a homespun, colored with butternut dye. Early primitives decorate the walls, and a Chippendale child's chair stands by the fire. During the Revolution, when the British landed at Fairfield and burned most of the town, the Ogden house escaped destruction probably because it was off the line of march to Danbury—the invaders' next objective.

The smaller bedroom, with its little canopy and bed chest, is also completely decorated with homespun fabrics. . . . The Ogden house is now in the fortunate possession of Miss Mary Allis.

The dining room contains many splendid examples of early American furniture, including the gate-leg table and the 1690 banister chairs against the wall. The principal items of furniture in this house date prior to 1750, and all retain their original finish.

What Kind of High School Do You Want?

A high school's effectiveness is measured by the behavior of its pupils as citizens and workers. Book learning is not enough. ★ By Francis T. Spaulding

Commissioner of Education, N. Y. State

IN the early nineteen thirties the high-school boys and girls in Marshfield (a real town, though that was not its name) got badly out of hand. The town had been hard hit by the depression. Young people had almost no spending money and few chances for wholesome fun. Petty thefts and burglaries became common; gangs of boys, and sometimes girls, took to various kinds of malicious mischief; the town's juvenile-delinquency rate became one of the highest in the state. People did not know just where to put the blame, but they charged the high school with a good deal of it.

Then, one day, a group of the older high-school boys, resenting the efforts of the principal to make them obey a rule they did not like, picked the principal up and threw him out his office window. The window was less than three feet above the ground, and the principal was not seriously damaged, but the board of education promptly obtained a new man for his job. The board informed the new principal that the first duty of the school, as they saw it, was to teach its pupils to be honest, decent, law-abiding citizens of the community. Schoolwork was important, they said, but the way the pupils behaved was even more important, and they would back the principal in anything he proposed to do about it.

What the new principal did, with the support of his teachers, was to give the pupils in the school a share in making new rules for the school. Some school activities he turned over to the pupils completely—athletic contests, for example. In addition, he offered the pupils a chance to raise money by selling candy at school games, giving concerts, putting on plays, collecting and selling wastepaper and old metal; and he allowed the pupils to decide for themselves how the money should be spent. Out of the pupils' concern for their own affairs there grew presently a student council, which made and enforced regulations for the whole school. The council brought about a new spirit in the school, which showed itself outside the school as well. The result, within a few years, was not the lowest delinquency rate in the state, but one which compared favorably, at least, with those of other towns in similar economic circumstances.

The story of Marshfield High School illustrates an important axiom: A high school can do for its pupils practically any educational job the community really wants it to do, within the reasonable limits of the pupils' own ability to learn. It can do so provided the community is honestly ready to support the school in doing the job that needs to be done, and is willing to judge the school's success by results, however unconventional the methods which lead to those results.

The truth of this axiom has been demonstrated for years by many public schools and most private schools, in their preparation of boys and girls for college. Private tutoring schools have given an especially striking demonstration of it. Concentrating solely on training boys and girls to pass college-entrance examinations, they have been able almost to guarantee a successful examination record for any boy or girl of at least average intellectual ability. Similarly, high schools which have made it their goal to provide effective vocational training have been able to place practically all their graduates, under

(Continued on Page 166)

ÉDOUARD MANET 1832–1883

The principal pleasure to be gained from Manet comes from the beauty of his brushwork. He mixed on his palette the exact tone he needed and with swift and certain dexterity delineated on the canvas each area of light and shadow. In The Old Musician this virtuosity of handling can be seen most clearly in the trenchant strokes that define the folds in the shirt and trousers of the boy with the straw hat, or in the more caressing, feathery touch on the shawl and dress of the girl holding the baby.

Manet's method of direct painting caused him to suppress the transitional tones of modeling which particularly suggest volume. Like Velázquez, who was also a master of brushwork, he chose an illumination which would flatten form as much as possible. Thus the light falls directly on the figures from behind the artist's head, and the shadows are reduced to a minimum. Through this arbitrary elimination of shadow Manet was able to state local color more freely. He attained, especially in such early works as The Old Musician, the most subtle harmonies of yellowish white and faded blue, here contrasted with warm browns and blacks and soft grays. This color scheme was as far as possible from the high intensities and broken colors of the Impressionists, which he adopted at the end of his life.

For Manet, in spite of a strong instinct for the traditional, became a leader of the Impressionist revolt. The public attacked his pictures, as they attacked the other Impressionists, but less because of his method of painting than because of a certain outré quality in his subject matter. In The Old Musician, for instance, what is the meaning of the brooding octogenarian on the extreme right, who is bisected so unconventionally by the frame? Perhaps he was put there simply to balance the composition, for Duret, who knew Manet well, said he painted this troop of beggars merely because it pleased him to preserve a record of them and for no other reason. And yet one senses a significance which just escapes, a hidden meaning which is baffling. In Manet's pictures these recurrent and tantalizing affectations infuriated his contemporaries and were in part the reason he never attained the popular admiration which he so desperately desired.

—JOHN WALKER, Chief Curator, National Gallery of Art

HERMON-LEE COURTESY SHEPHERD DALE COLLECTION, NATIONAL GALLERY, WASHINGTON, D. C.

TELLTALE HANDS

Years ago Helen had turned mother's life topsy-turvy. Now she was doing it again.

BY VAL TEAL

MY mother's hands are not pretty. Her fingernails are short and all her fingers are different shapes. "That means I'm good at everything," she said once when she was trying to fix her nails. "And those crooked little fingers, that means an artistic temperament."

"Really," Pud said and he looked at his hands. "What does it mean that my fingers are so big where they bend?"

"Mine are too," mother said. "That means we're philosophers. It means we understand people and are satisfied with our lot. It means we're generous and silent and strong. And that long crooked little finger," she said, "that means influence with people and mental power."

"Does it really?" I asked, looking at my fingers.

"Of course it does," mother said. "I wouldn't have this fine character if I didn't have hands like this. But," she said, and she pushed her hands into a bowl of stuff she was soaking them in, "I sometimes think I could do with less character."

"Hear! Hear!" father said. "And do you notice that blue coloring in the creases of mother's hands?"

"Let's see," Pud said.

I went and looked too. Sure enough, they were blue!

"Do you know what that means?" father said. "That means influence with me. It means grape jelly next winter."

Mother looked at father and laughed. "That's right," she said. "Grape jelly next winter and gloves, I'm afraid, at tomorrow's dance."

ILLUSTRATED BY PRUETT CARTER

Mother always laughs about her hands, but I think she really minds them not being pretty. Because she keeps trying to make them different, like pushing down the skin around the nails when she has time and soaking them in stuff and trying to make them better.

I don't mean I don't like mother's hands. Hands are for doing things and mother's hands can do about everything and they're cool when your head is hot and warm when your hands are cold. But they're not pretty.

And I think that was really why she didn't like the lady.

It was one night after dinner and father looked up from the paper and said, "Do you remember Ray Smith?"

"Well, sure I do," mother said. She was darning socks. "Of course I do," she said. "He married Helen Gleason."

"They're being sent down here," father said.

"Helen Gleason!" mother said, and she stopped darning socks and stared at nothing on the other side of the room. "She had more clothes than any other six girls put together," mother said. "I can remember a yellow velvet formal that was out of this world. You know she was one girl who could wear any color. We used to think she did something to her hair to make it gleam so."

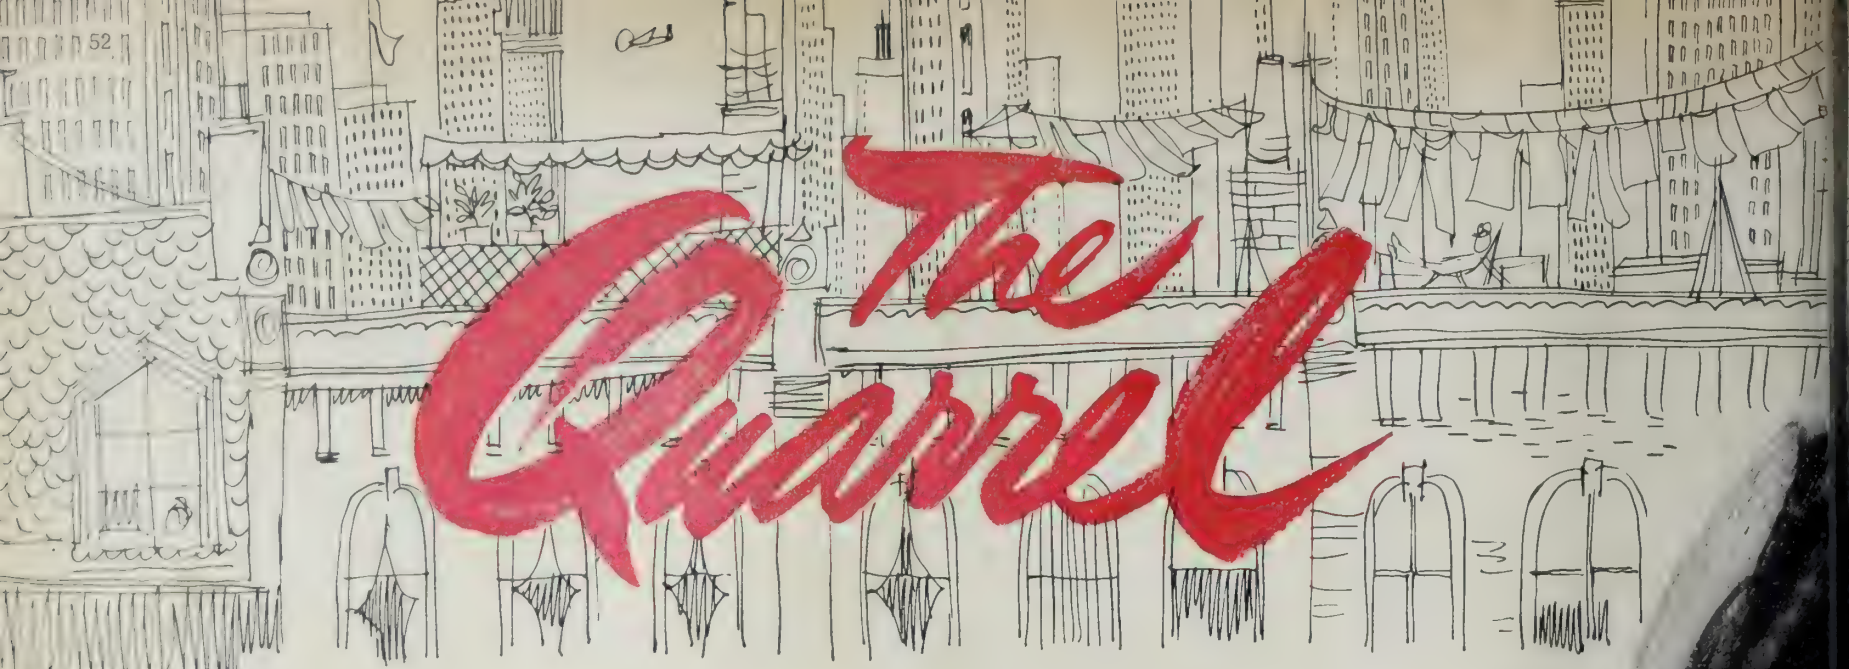
"Did she?" I said.

"I doubt it," mother said, starting to darn socks again. "It was probably just wonderful care. She used to have it washed every fifth day—in a beauty parlor. That was before I had ever seen the inside of one. I thought they were kind of wicked. I still don't know but what I think it's a gyp," mother said, "having all that beauty and money too. She even had manicures. Her fingernails were long and narrow, and moons in every one. She even had two fur coats!"

"At the same time?" Pud said.

"Sure at the same time. One for dress," mother said, and she bit off a thread with a snap, "and one for school."

"They're being sent down here," father said.



"Paris may have led the rest of the fashion world," mother said, looking through some more socks for holes, "but Helen Gleason led our part of it. My goodness, I can remember one spring when gray shoes were going to be the thing. That's what the papers said and that's what Sally True, whose cousin worked on a big fashion magazine, said, and a lot of girls got them. I was one of them. And then comes Helen Gleason with sand-colored shoes."

"That was too bad," I said. "Couldn't she exchange them for the new style?"

"Too bad!" mother said. "I'll say it was too bad. It made everyone's gray shoes passé. We might as well have been wearing high-topped button shoes. You simply were not in style if you didn't follow Helen Gleason. She was a very beautiful girl," mother said, and she stared across the room again.

(Continued on Page 150)

The Quarrel

EVERY morning when she awoke, even after a year, Jane still said to herself, The war is over. She had begun saying this when Ken came back, and she would turn and look at his tousled head on the pillow beside hers. She had been married to him long enough—six years, including the war years—to think no longer that he was absolutely irresistible when he slept—not so irresistible, for example, as after he had a shave; and sometimes he did sleep with his mouth open—but she had begun to say, The war is over, because now she was no longer alone.

She had found herself unable to be heroic about the war. After all, it wasn't as if Ken had been in any great danger (except for that one month when she had learned that he was on his way overseas, but the fighting had stopped before he had a chance to see any). No, most of the time he had sat at a desk in that blessed Pentagon Building that everyone laughed about—they had a few sergeants, even there. She had sat out the war, or so it seemed, on the front porch of her parents' house in Chillicothe. The Pentagon Building and Chillicothe—they both sounded awfully funny when she wrote about them to their old friends in Chicago. And now she was trying to forget the dull ache, like heartburn, of those years that seemed so wasted and sterile, when time stood still, and even their baby had waited, somewhere, to be born. They had lived only for the time when it would all be over and they could go back to the life and the friends they had made in Chicago.

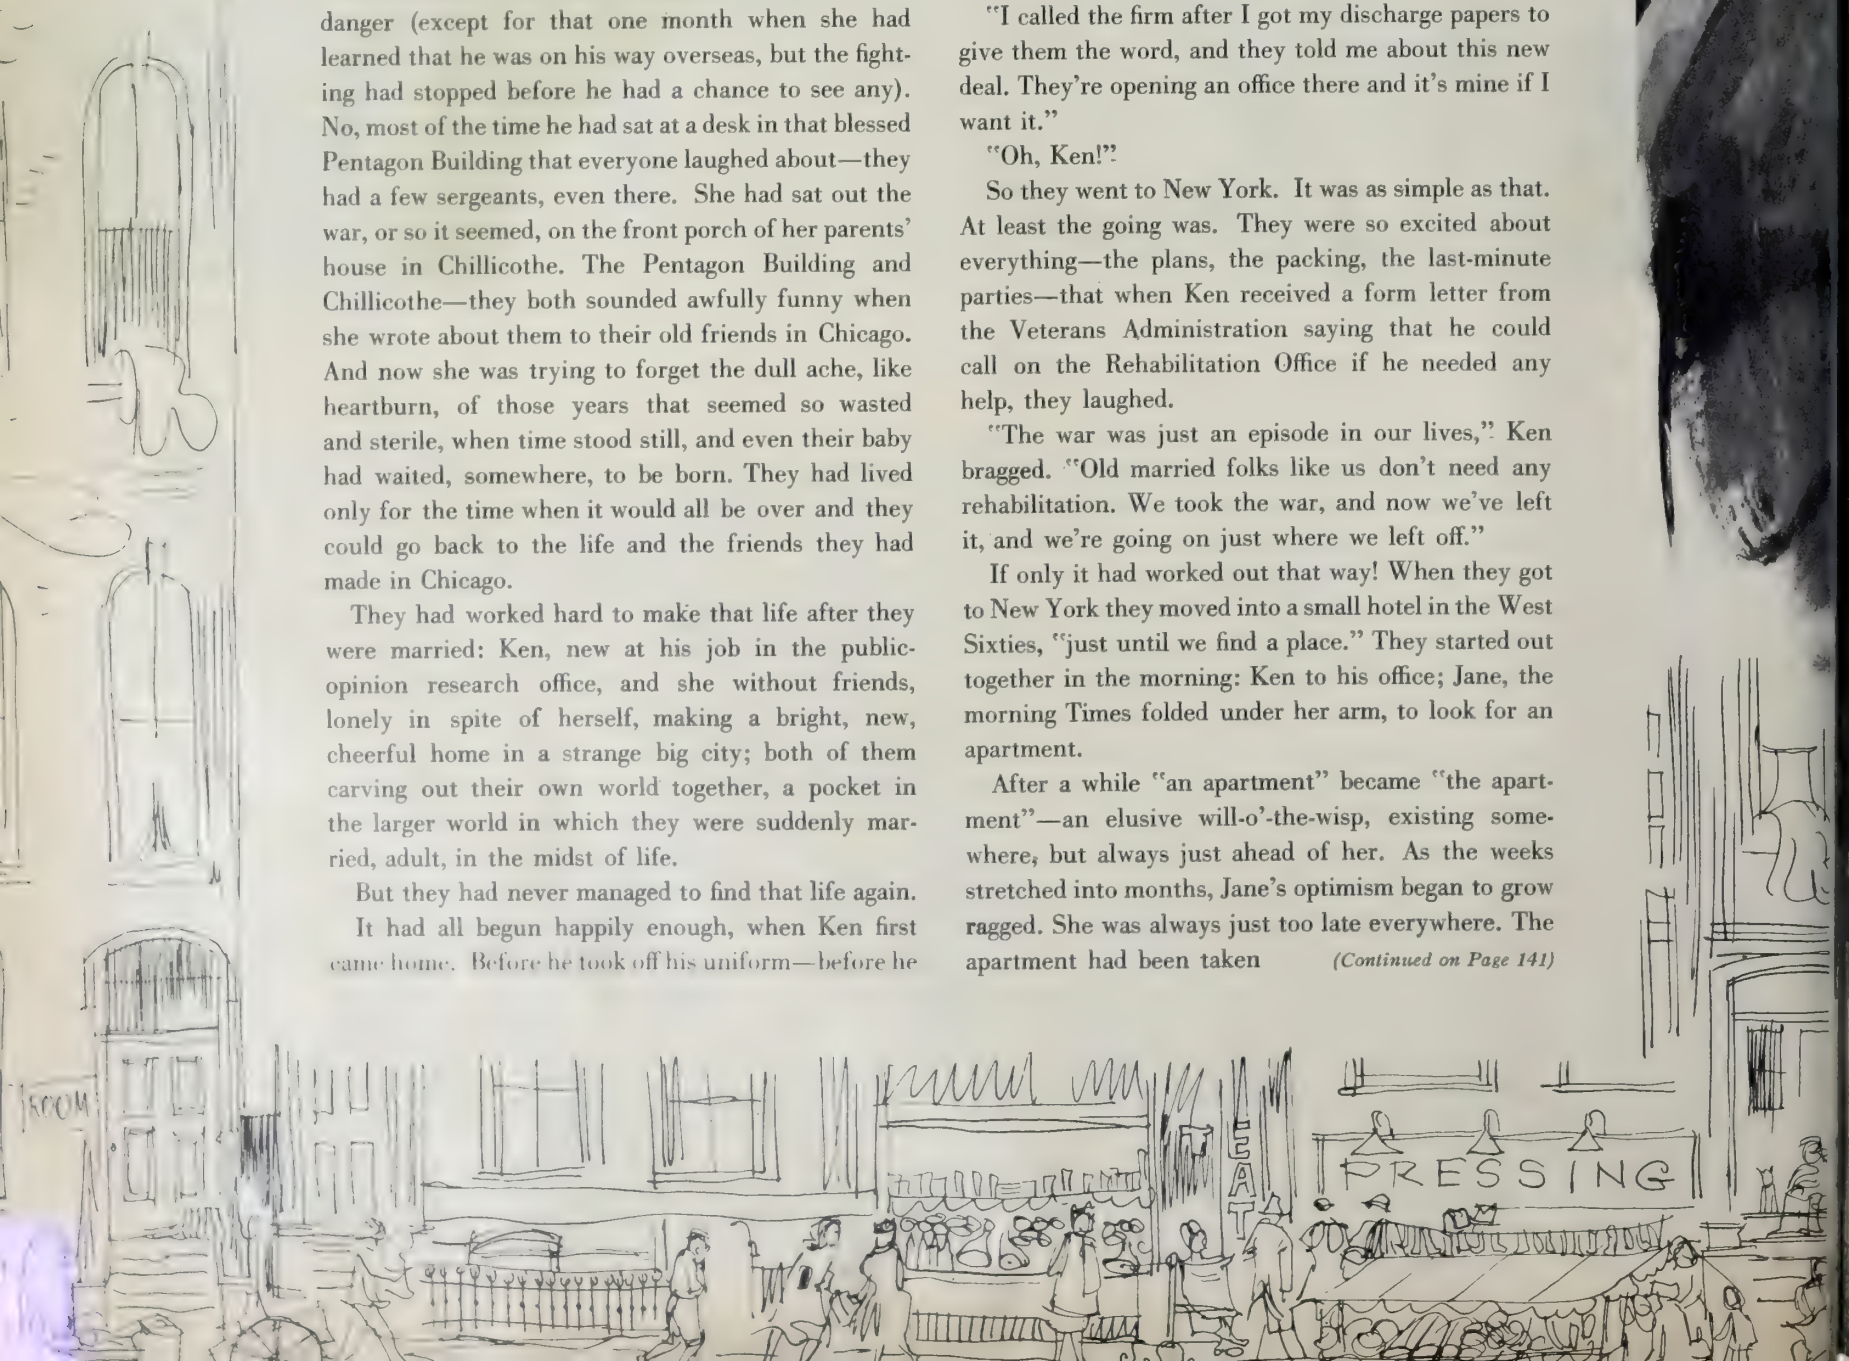
They had worked hard to make that life after they were married: Ken, new at his job in the public-opinion research office, and she without friends, lonely in spite of herself, making a bright, new, cheerful home in a strange big city; both of them carving out their own world together, a pocket in the larger world in which they were suddenly married, adult, in the midst of life.

But they had never managed to find that life again.

It had all begun happily enough, when Ken first came home. Before he took off his uniform—before he sat down, even, in one of the uncomfortable, overstuffed chairs in her mother's living room—he had sprung the big news. "How would you like to live in New York, babe?" he asked, trying to sound casual, repressing the eagerness in his voice. Jane liked it when he called her "babe." He made it sound rakish, as though they weren't even married, and she would looked at him wickedly and happily, as though she were a girl he had picked up somewhere.

She forgot this now. "New York!" she said. It was a whisper of awe, and she sat down quickly, waiting for all of it, remembering how everyone in Chicago dreamed jealously of going to New York.

"I called the firm after I got my discharge papers to give them the word, and they told me about this new deal. They're opening an office there and it's mine if I want it."



"Oh, Ken!"

So they went to New York. It was as simple as that. At least the going was. They were so excited about everything—the plans, the packing, the last-minute parties—that when Ken received a form letter from the Veterans Administration saying that he could call on the Rehabilitation Office if he needed any help, they laughed.

"The war was just an episode in our lives," Ken bragged. "Old married folks like us don't need any rehabilitation. We took the war, and now we've left it, and we're going on just where we left off."

If only it had worked out that way! When they got to New York they moved into a small hotel in the West Sixties, "just until we find a place." They started out together in the morning: Ken to his office; Jane, the morning Times folded under her arm, to look for an apartment.

After a while "an apartment" became "the apartment"—an elusive will-o'-the-wisp, existing somewhere, but always just ahead of her. As the weeks stretched into months, Jane's optimism began to grow ragged. She was always just too late everywhere. The apartment had been taken (Continued on Page 141)

"I hate you!" she cried. "I hate you!" And somewhere within her was shock at her behavior. A day like this can mean one of two things: the end or the beginning. • By Bentz Plagemann

ILLUSTRATED BY ARTHUR SARNOFF

you

MUSIC

CAREERS

SECRETARY

future

jobs and futures

EDITIN

A CAREER

news

DESIGNING

broadwa composers

FASHION

ART

AUT

Job

WRITERS

PLA

PAINTING

young

TALENT

Career girl's big fashion; the skirt in smoke-gray jersey, with a lighter gray top b
McCardell, jersey cummerbund by Phelps, silver muskrat coat ($350) by Esther I

PHOTOGRAPH BY WILHE

WHO'S THAT GIRL . . .

. . . the girl who always looks so well, who knows what to wear and how to wear it every day in the week? Nine times out of ten, she's the young woman with a job, earning her own good hard cash and learning how to spend it. If she adopts a fashion, that fashion often becomes a big thing. This fall she'll make the jersey skirt her own, wear it with a jersey shirt, wrap it with a cummerbund, change off with a challis or a tie-silk blouse. She raises a strict eyebrow at luxury-priced fur coats, takes a little silver muskrat, wears it with a velvet scarf, day and night. She's the first to wear the small velvet hat or puff-ball beret . . . is glad to discard flats for feminine covered-up shoes with heels. She adores a slim-pin suit, the knee-length coat with a yoke back . . . welcomes the pretty tie-stripe or tie-print dress, the practical fashion of black with brown, the jersey dress that saves pressing bills, the longer more important-looking glove, the somewhat smaller bag that doesn't weigh a ton. Her clothes have to make sense. They always make news. ★ By Wilhela Cushman

Fashion Editor of the Journal

PHOTOGRAPHS BY LEONBRUNO BODI

The back-of-the-head beret in black knitted wool from Paris, original by Lola Prusac, American copies in hand-crochet, under $10.

Between-season, between-length, yoke-back coat, in gray, brick-red, or hemlock-green, around $55; Sally Victor's beaver-felt visor calot.

WHO'S THAT GIRL? . . .

Worsted suit with velvet collar, pin-slim silhouette, around $65; visor beret; Van S canvas bag, edges bound with leather.

The tie-stripe dress goes to a straight-from-the-office date; fall-into-winter dark shades, around $39.95, by Mary Blaire.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELA CUSH

Slim-shouldered, small-collared chinchilla wool coat, by Clare Potter. Sally Victor's velvet-and-felt hat.

The career girl of '48 saw the "new cycle" come last year. This fall she sees that the newest silhouette is wind-swept to the rear, that the full-length coat is slimmer than last year's tent shapes, that pipestem lines are in but the full skirt is far from out—she loves it because it is young, easy and comfortable.

The black crepe dress for special days or after five, with new rising waistline, deeper neckline, soft fullness, by Adele Simpson.

Black knitted wool dress—call it basic, call it divine—with a tier cape in plaid wool, by Claire McCardell; velvet beret.

PHOTOGRAPHED AT THE MUSEUM OF MODERN ART

Before coat time: her two-piece jersey worn with its waist-length jacket. Beret by Harryson.

The girl of '48 is buying clothes in a year when many prices are high. Some are coming down. She has to learn to judge quality, shop around before she decides. The uncluttered look is the right one—fewer bracelets, no trailing veils, one or two strands of pearls, a medallion pin on a beret or cummerbund.

Ripple-brim hat, shaped to becomingness with corded edge, 2490, and matching bag and change purse, 2491; by John Frederics. Make it in tie-silk, striped wool, plain jersey.

Party sweater to knit in new pink-and-gold yarn to wear with velveteen or jersey skirts, 2492.

Velveteen cap beret with sequins.
Design by Arpad, pattern 2493.

Journal originals.

go to colleg

IT'S THE STOLE AROUND HER SHOULDERS, THE BRIGHT CUMMERBUND FOR HER SKIRTS, THE BIG POUCH OF COLORFUL WOOL, THE LITTLE BERET OF VELVETEEN, THE CABLE-KNIT PULL-OVER, THE TEA-DANCE SWEATER, THE SOCKS WITH MONOGRAMS, THAT MAKE A COLLEGE GIRL'S WARDROBE WHAT IT SHOULD BE THIS YEAR. THE CHEERFUL ANGLE IS THAT GIRLS OR THEIR MOTHERS CAN MAKE THESE BRIGHT ADDITIONS, QUICKLY AND EASILY, BEFORE REGISTRATION DAY. OTHER ACCESSORIES ARE ON PAGE 117. ★ BY WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

Instructions and patterns can be ordered by number from the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Phila. 5, Pa., for 15 cents each

Cable-knit cashmere-and-wool pull-overs, worn in or out, with belts and pins—gray and beige their best colors. One pattern, 2494.

Lady and a leopard stole—make of leopard-stenciled velveteen, line with red wool; by Carolyn Schnurer, 2495.

Velveteen beret, 2496; gloves, 2223, by John Frederics.

Pouch bags, one plain-and-plaid wool, one canvas, by Phelps, 2500.

HERS and HIS: the monogrammed, hand-knit socks. Anklets, 2497; men's straight socks, 2498. White sweater of nylon yarn, 2499.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILHELM CUSHMAN

EARLY BLACK

. . . first fall dress

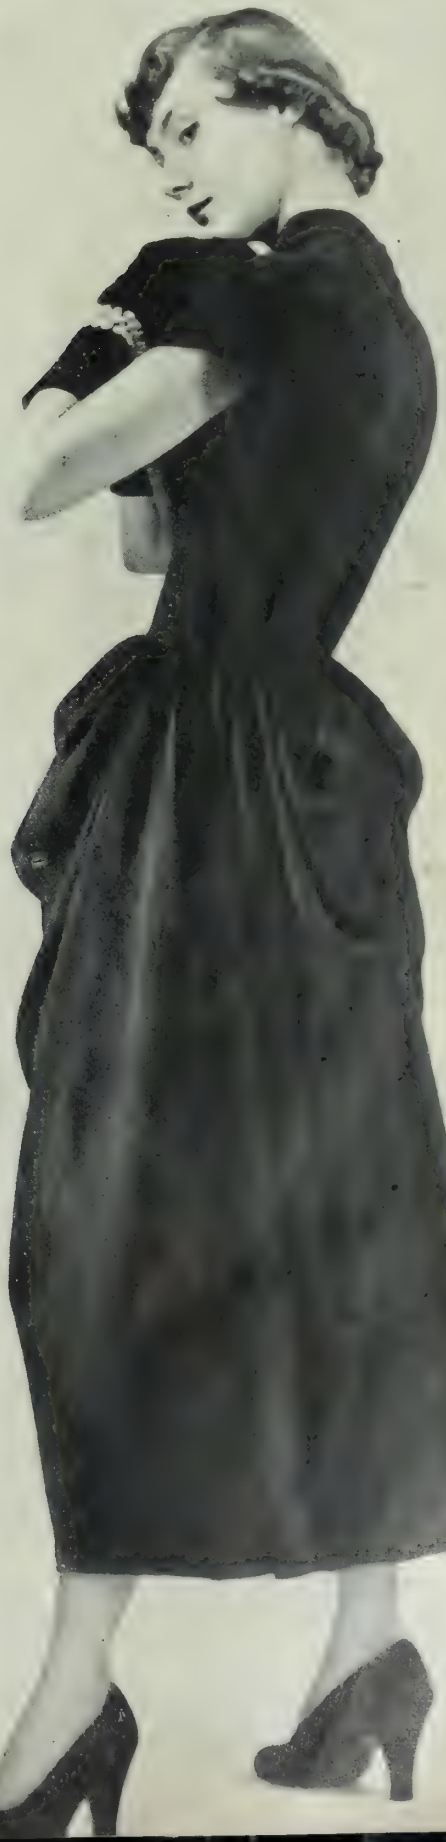
BY RUTH MARY PACKARD

Enter . . . the small black velvet hat, the use of velvet with taffeta, the rising waistline, Empire style. Continuing . . . slim, sloping shoulders, the swish of a skirt with easy fullness. The dress by Adele Simpson, the hat by Sally Victor.

Forecasting . . . the importance of black wool, touched with scarlet red in the tie and the cuff facing, the fashion of shiny black buttons, pockets, slim sleeves—and again the little velvet hat. A Ben Reig design.



The tissue faille that comes in August stays through the year, pointing up the paper-on-the-wall fit of a molded bodice, the gentle movement of the skirt to the back. Felt-and-velvet hat by Eve Tartar.

The dress that bares the arms for after five. Tissue faille with a swag-draped skirt, the new fashion that changes the summer silhouette, that goes places, now and later. By Ceil Chapman.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY LEOMBRUNO-BODI

Wing-back silhouette, the fashion of crepe with faille, dress with a future. Chanla hat.

The two-piece dress in black crepe, that gives you an important separate fan-pleated skirt.

PHOTOGRAPH BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO odern Victorian portrait. Mother's skirt, "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. l, 24 to 34 waist; jacket No. 6402, 12 to 20. Child's suit No. 2462, 4 to 12.

WHY NOT SEW FOR YOUR CHILDREN?

Join the millions of women all over the country who make their children's clothes, who take particular delight in being able to, who find doing so a major economy. We've divided children's year-round clothing needs into three groups—play, school and dress-up clothes. We've selected the best five patterns we could find in each group, which will adapt equally well to warm- or cool-weather requirements. Durable denims and corduroys that can take frequent tubbings are recommended for play clothes. Calico prints and lightweight flannels look as well coming home from school as they did going. Party clothes in crisp organdy and angelic dotted Swiss if it's warm . . . jewel-colored velveteens and taffetas for winter. Most children's patterns require little fitting, but the secret of a professional look lies in a few simple and inexpensive tricks: have buttonholes machine-made; take coats and boys' clothing to a tailor for a final press; hang the hems on girls' dresses as carefully as you would on your own. Let the youngsters help piek out fabrics; they have favorite colors too. Matching socks and hair ribbons are finishing touches not to be overlooked. Mother-and-daughter combinations are sure to bring compliments to both . . . many of the patterns shown have grown-up versions. ★ BY NORA O'LEARY

Buy Vogue Patterns at the store which sells them in your city. Or order them by mail, enclosing check or money order,* from Vogue Pattern Service, Putnam Avenue, Greenwich, Conn.; or in Canada from 21 Dundas Square, Toronto, Ontario. Connecticut residents please add sales tax.*

DRAWINGS BY MARGARET SOMMERFELD

Corduroy or denim overalls with matching jacket. Pattern also has a snow-suit version. Vogue Design No. 2163, 1 to 14.

Bright plaid slacks to wear with sweaters or polo shirts. Shoulder straps optional. Try corduroy. Vogue Design No. 2512, 3 to 14.

"Easy-to-Make" smock to wear over dresses, or as a dress. Perfect for playground or playroom. Vogue Design No. 2457, 3 to 10.

All-round coat to make in corduroy or bright wool. Ideal for school or play; hood optional. Vogue Design No. 2447, 4 to 12.

"Easy-to-Make" gray flannel skirt, Vogue Design No. 2500, 2 to 12, 35c. White broadcloth blouse, Vogue Design No. 2366, 2 to 12.

Boy's suit with cardigan neckline. Seersucker for summer, lightweight tweed or flannel for fall. Vogue Design No. 2310, 4 to 10.

"Alice in Wonderland" white organdy pinafore to wear over party dresses or for school. Vogue Design No. 2454, 2 to 10.

Party dress in long or short version. Puffed sleeve and yoke detail in eyelet batiste or matching fabric. Vogue Design No. 2517, 4 to 10.

Princess line with pretty scalloped detail in front. Puffed sleeves and pockets. Perfect for velveteen. Vogue Design No. 2450, 4 to 12.

Angelic dotted Swiss with pretty tiered skirt and contrasting sash. Make in taffeta for winter. Vogue Design No. 2524, 4 to 10.

Jumper dress with basque bodice worn over tucked white blouse. Pretty in wool with piqué blouse. Vogue Design No. 2519, 8 to 14.

The perfect school dress in gray-and-white polka-dot cotton. Tuck detail on bodice and skirt. Vogue Design No. 2526, 4 to 10.

Bolero suit in lightweight flannel. On small sizes, skirt buttons to blouse, keeping both in place. Vogue Design No. 2326, 4 to 12.

Coat-and-hat set for either boys or girls. (Leggings in pattern not illustrated.) Try in gray flannel. Vogue Design No. 2258, 1 to 6.

Elastic thread shirs the waistline and sleeves of wool jersey; white collar. "Easy-to-Make" Vogue Design No. 2455, 4 to 10.

Back views and prices of these

MENU 1 (Planned for 6) CURRIED-SHRIMP-AND-MELON SALAD WITH COCONUT, CHUTNEY, CHOPPED CASHEW NUTS, POTATO CHIPS, FRESH FRUIT, ICED TEA

NOW IS THE

Beautiful month of August

BY ANN BATCHELDER

LOOKING out from the upper terrace of my house, I can see practically the whole garden. If I walk from one end to the other and around the bend, I can watch quite a lot of visiting and I know that the ctivity of the early summer has slowed down. Joe, the gardener-by-the-day, is muttering to himself because he roses "ain't done so good." And it is he shoring ıp—I think they call it shoring; anyway, it's a good vord—the fence that supports the sweet peas. Those are n the lower garden, and only a young tempest can pre-ent one from picking a bushel (what a measure for such ı lovely flower, but I mean it) or more of perfect blossoms any and every day. We call this the Sweet Pea Garden, although other cutting beds are there.

AUGUST ARRIVES. Now August, the full-bosomed, blowzy, bewigged and bejeweled, has arrived with her finery and her paintboxes. Herself she'll make to bloom and bloom for many bloomings, but in the garden she must work without haste. We don't want to overtake September, so let's enjoy the dreamy, leisurely days of August. And while the heat simmers and the bees drone over the flowers, let us look into what can be had by way of terrace, patio, porch and even dining-room luncheons. Oh, yes, folks do use their dining rooms in August, and sometimes right through the summer. But it's the patio that gets a hand, for that's out-of-doors.

SALADS TAKE ALL. There are enough kinds of salads to load to the Plimsoll all the ships that sail the seven seas; and out of those, for your hot-weather luncheons, four are set forth here, with all the things that go with them, all the come-hither that makes you crazy to give a party. Let no one be late, for no one will wait, and you know how that is. Once cut into, a dish just sits there, sort of bedraggled, where before it was a royal thing and flawless. So be early, girls, and don't be lagging around the sweet peas. Scissors and a basket await you. There's something (Continued on Page 164)

MENU III
(Planned for 6)
MIXED SALAD, ROLLS,
PEACH PIE, COFFEE

MENU IV
(Planned for 6)
MADRILENE (HOT OR COLD),
ROQUEFORT-SALAD RING, FRUIT DRESSING,
NUT-BREAD SANDWICHES, ICED COFFEE

MENU II
(Planned for 6)
LOBSTER SALAD, CELERY HEARTS, CRUSTY ROLLS,
LIME SHERBET WITH MINT, ICED COFFEE

PHOTOS BY STUART POWELL

Line a Day

BY ANN BATCHELDER

1

FRUSTRATION

I bought a lovely bird's nest
And hung it in a tree
Right outside my window
Where a robin's nest should be.
The nest is unmolested,
The birds don't speak to me.

It's not a robin's home at all,.
But the home of a chickadee!
Imagine!

2 If I don't get this apple pie from Florence off my chest I shall scream. It's a dream. Served with cream. Well, line a rather deep pie plate with rich pastry. Chill it in the refrigerator.

3 Second cadenza: Peel and slice enough tart apples and cook them until transparent in a sirup of 1 cup hot water, 2 cups sugar and a little lemon juice. Be sure the slices don't break. Drain apples and fill the crust with them.

4 Third and last billing: Now boil down the sirup, add 1 teaspoon vanilla, or vanilla and almond together. Pour it over the apples (it should be quite thick). Orange marmalade and chopped candied fruit are arranged over the apples, a crisscross crust put on and the pie baked until the crust is done. Serve chilled with plain cream. It's perfect.

5 Here's a hearty sandwich that will keep the sandwich grill busy. Frizzle some very thin slices of cooked ham in butter or margarine. Have ready a pared, sliced avocado and a pile of hot thin toast, cut cornerwise. Cover the toast with the ham, then with slices of avocado, now a leaf of lettuce to hold the mayonnaise, another piece of toast; and don't forget lemon juice, salt and pepper.

6 One starter-outer for an August luncheon may well be a grapefruit-and-melon cup. Have the smallest and whitest lettuce cups fitted into sherbet glasses. Scoop balls from a melon—any melon, so long as it's ripe. Mix with small pieces of chilled grapefruit, add lemon juice to taste and powdered sugar to make a glad taste. Fill the cups. . . . Chill . . . chill. . . . Add a sprig of mint for that sophisticated look.

7 Another nice luncheon dish is a tomato aspic, highly spiced and done in a ring mold. To serve, turn it out on a bed of lettuce, fill the center with a diced celery, apple and chopped-nut salad combined with mayonnaise, to which you've added a little whipped cream. Cream cheese on toasted crackers and iced coffee go with it.

8 Clear mushroom bouillon is a pleasant thing to the palate, and this is the way it's made. (You'll need to double up on this for more than four.) Chop fine ½ pound firm white mushrooms, stems and all. Boil them in 3 pints rich chicken broth, for half an hour. The bouillon is then cleared, cooled and strained. The juice of ½ lemon goes in now, and it may be served hot or cold. It's a delicate and delicious broth—and very simple.

9 Fill the centers of canned apricot halves with cream cheese sprinkled with toasted slivered almonds. Place on slices of canned pineapple. Serve on salad greens with your favorite dressing.

10 For a rather elaborate dinner, a ring of wild rice is something to consider—at least. Eating it is even better. Season the cooked rice with salt, pepper and a teaspoon of lemon juice. Add a good piece of butter. Stir with a silver fork. Put in a greased ring mold and set in a shallow pan of hot water. Bake the ring about ten minutes. Unmold, fill the center with fresh sliced mushrooms in a cream sauce. Garnish your platter with sliced marinated tomatoes, water cress, orange slices and crisp bacon. Very elegant, very elegant indeed.

11 Green-apple pie has no equal, but try apple pancakes for a week-end breakfast. Sift together 1½ cups sifted flour, 1 teaspoon baking powder, ½ teaspoon salt and 1 tablespoon sugar. Beat 3 egg yolks until light and fluffy, add 1½ cups light cream and 2 tablespoons melted butter or margarine. Combine liquid and dry ingredients. Add 1 cup coarsely grated tart apple. Bake on griddle.

12 Now we're on the subject of week ends, or skating close to it, cut out some little rounds of bread, and toast and butter on one side. Pound 4 slices smoked salmon until they are soft, adding a little sweet cream and 3 tablespoons butter or margarine. Put this through a coarse sieve. Put a seasoned slice of hard-boiled egg on each toast round. Add a little mayonnaise. Then cover everything with the salmon mixture in shapes that the pastry tube carries around. These are super.

13 Looking for a wonderful supper dish? This is it. Pipe a border of duchesse or creamy mashed potatoes around a heated oven-glass platter. Brush the potato with beaten egg and brown in a hot oven. Fill the center with poached eggs, done in wildly boiling water so they look like confections. Then pour over them a rich creamed lobster—having the lobster diced and diced fine. Crusty hot French rolls and a fruit salad complete a perfect meal. Do the eggs on the well-done side.

14 Now for a whirl with fillet of sole. One way is this: Cover the bottom of a medium deep au gratin dish with a seasoned spinach purée. Cover this with fillets of sole, sprinkled with Parmesan cheese. Then a rich béchamel sauce made with cream is poured over the fish, and a layer of the grated cheese added, with small pieces of butter or margarine. Now bake the dish until it bubbles and is brown. Garnish with lemon and water cress.

15 From an old cookbook: "On the cook's day out let the mistress of the house take her place. She should find enough odds and ends of meats and fish left to be used up, and bread crusts enough for a wholesome pudding. Hash the fish and meat scraps into a thin brown gravy and serve with mashed potato. This is all cheap, easy and no trouble to prepare." Man of the house take his night out too?

16 Cold stuffed peppers are sort of interesting, since it's summer and all. Cut a slice from the stem ends of green peppers. Carefully get out all the seeds and membrane. Fill the shells with tomato jelly that is partly set and put in the refrigerator, to get cold and firm. They can be sliced thin when set and arranged on lettuce with a fine potato salad and served with cold ham.

SUMMER LASSITUDE

If I could be where I would be
This heavy summer day,
When every leaf is drooping
On every burdened tree,

If I could be where I would be
The world could make a truce with me.

If I could be where I would be,
Far from these sunburned flowers,
The world could make a truce with me
For my appointed hour.

I know that I shall never see
The lovely place where I would be.

17 One more thing: Now that you can get it, get a terrine of real pâté de foie gras and take it out whole. Be careful not to break it, so give it the North Pole treatment in the refrigerator first. Set the pâté in highly seasoned aspic—chicken, tomato or lemon. To serve it, slice in thin slices. Hot toast, well-buttered, chopped egg and cress may go along. But we ought to have a can of truffles.

18 A rich, thick raspberry sauce served on baked grapefruit is something. Well, I didn't believe it either. Had to be shown.

19 Nature gets a laugh a minute, I'll bet. Take Valencia oranges, for instance. When they begin to ripen, they are yellow. Along about now, they turn green again. Why, nobody knows, but with Valencias, green also means ripe and ripe means sweet. Don't let nature fool you.

20 I guess you're as tired as everybody else is of the same old deviled eggs. Chop lobster meat very fine. Mix with mayonnaise, a very little minced pimiento, and the egg yolks. There's your deviled-egg mixture. Season it as hot as you please.

21 Macaroni in a creole tomato sauce will get you an encore if you serve it with fried chicken instead of fried hominy or potatoes. See if I'm right.

22 You know how I am about omelets, and that means dessert ones too. Fill an omelet with finely chopped sautéed almonds, fold, and dust with almond-flavored powdered sugar. A lovely thing.

23 Creamed smoked turkey and little mushrooms make a delicious shortcake. Have your biscuit dough really short. Peas go with this—and olives. Nothing else.

24 For the chafing dish, prepare some slivers of cold baked ham. I mean slivers. Heat them in a sauce of red currant jelly and melted butter or margarine, thickened a little with cornstarch. Serve on crustless hot buttered toast. Nice on the porch.

25 Just a hint. Nothing more. Why not curried crab meat? Let it come on with perfectly cooked rice and black olives.

26 Should you come across some ripe figs—and you might sometime—stuff them with cream cheese blended with sour cream and serve with the salad. Toasted salted crackers are best here.

27 And that reminds me—as the minister said, unfolding last week's sermon—that that blend of cream cheese and sour cream with a little powdered sugar may be molded, chilled, served with fresh or frozen raspberries and is a beautiful dessert. Don't hide this. Come right out with it.

28 Sour cream has a thousand—I guess—uses. One is to add chopped chives, sliced cucumbers and a few rings of sweet or Spanish onions. This is absolute tops with fish. And some folks like it any time. Be sure it's really cold.

29 Now I have given you enough ways and means to last a spell. But here's one more very special one. Heat up some of those miniature artichoke hearts in hollandaise sauce and serve them with breast of chicken or guinea hen. Sort of go together, like Jiggs and Maggie.

30 And an August cooler. A scoop of ice cream in a tall glass. Fill it up with ginger ale.

31 August is the month to be lazy in. Even the moon looks askance at my activity down below. You can tell by the way it gets behind the clouds. Hope your house is running over with flowers, and wish I could pin a sweet pea for every one of you right on here at the end.

R. C. A.

A Summer Ballad

OF

SOUP 'N' SALAD

Hark to this tale of Summer days,
Of mealtime tips and kitchen ways:
To please your family noon and night
Remember how cold foods delight;
But nourishment and taste-appeal
Increase with One Hot Dish—each meal!

If you'd reduce your kitchen hours,
And spend more time in tending flowers;
If you would save on table dollars,
And stretch your money till it "hollers";
If you'd lift appetites that droop—
Then make your One Hot Dish—GOOD SOUP!

Tempting and satisfying at any time of year, this delightful chicken soup is particularly inviting in the summer. One taste tells you the broth is made with plenty of chicken; there's rice to add its substance, and tender pieces of chicken galore.

CAMPBELL'S CHICKEN SOUP (WITH RICE)

Campbell's Soups

LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL

When your meal is especially light and summery, here's a really hefty soup, to be your main dish. Remember, it's not a broth; no, ma'am! It's a soup—with a thick, nourishing meat stock, barley, vegetables, and tender pieces of mutton.

CAMPBELL'S SCOTCH BROTH

At summer lunch or supper, there's always a welcome for "the soup most folks like best." Luscious tomatoes, creamery butter and seasoning are blended according to a matchless recipe. Sometimes add milk instead of water for an extra-delicious cream of tomato.

CAMPBELL'S TOMATO SOUP

BRAND NEW!

this new baby oil protects, and actually benefits your baby's skin

Protects... like a smooth, invisible shield. New Mennen Baby Oil with Lanolin helps safeguard your baby from many skin irritations, helps prevent diaper rash, urine irritation, sore buttocks. This pure, crystal-clear oil goes on smoothly, leaving no breaks.

Benefits... helps keep skin soft and sweet as a lullaby! New Mennen Oil is blessed with lanolin, the miracle substance that's next of kin to the skin's own oils. Gives baby's skin healthful lubrication, helps prevent uncomfortable dryness, discourages chafing, chapping, and roughness.

New flower fresh fragrance—sweetest that ever breezed through a nursery! Chosen from over 50 other fragrances in tests conducted among thousands of mothers!

Don't put off baby's protection till tomorrow! Start using New Mennen Baby Oil with Lanolin—after every bath and diaper change—today!

new Mennen baby oil enriched with lanolin

IT IS NOTHING TO ME

(Continued from Page 35)

"I didn't ask you to. But there is something I must know, without asking."

"Yes?" she said stiffly, without apparent interest.

"I must know whether Phina has fallen in love with Arthur. . . . Now, please don't say I would know if it were true. I wouldn't. Phina has very firm principles of loyalty—and I am prejudiced when it comes to Arthur. I think it is true, but if it is not it must not be spoken of—speaking might make it true, if you know what I mean. At any rate, I would not be forgiven my lack of faith."

"And if it should be true, what do you expect me to do? Poison Arthur?"

"I just want to know," he said stubbornly. "I don't want you to do anything but come."

"No, I won't," the old woman said without equivocation. "Will you have tea, Charles?"

"Please," he said mechanically.

She rang a small bell on the table beside her and Donna, as old as her mistress, presented her withered but stiff-starched self in the doorway.

"Tea, Donna, if you please."

THERE fell a silence in the old room, a room very familiar and dear to the man in the deep chair. The paper had not been changed within his memory. It was ivory white, with stripes of faintly rose flowers of no known genus. The ceiling was high and the windows reached to the floor and had glass curtains of a fine silk net and draperies of heavy corded rose and pale gray silk. The carpet was an Aubusson, as bright as if new, but older in reality than Charles himself. There were an enormous but graceful gray sofa and a grand piano with yellowed keys. In one corner was a tall secretary desk whose upper shelves were filled with snuffboxes, exquisite, useless rarities collected by Uncle Bonner and eyed with envy by Charles and Arthur when they were boys. There had always been flowers in the room and there were flowers now, a wide-mouthed vase of lilies arranged in a stiff and formal manner. The whole room was formal, but it was Aunt Adeline's room, and it fitted her. In spite of its cool stiffness, it seemed alive and pleasant. Over the mantel hung a portrait of Aunt Adeline at eighteen, the year of her marriage to Uncle Bonner. She had had an elegance even then, but her eyes were young and eager and the roses in her lap gave a romantic touch one would have never believed the present Aunt Adeline capable of abetting. Charles coveted the portrait, and once when he'd been ten he'd put a note under the edge of the frame, saying, "Dear Aunt Adeline: When you die will you leave this to me? Your loving nephew, Charles Collinge." She had never mentioned the note and he wondered now whether it might not still be there. No, he supposed not. This house was cleaned, spring and fall, with a thoroughness that would include the dust behind pictures.

Donna came in with the tea on a tray.

"Will you help yourself, Charles?" Aunt Adeline said.

He pulled himself out of the chair. He passed a cup to Aunt Adeline. "To your passionless heart!" he said, not too lightly.

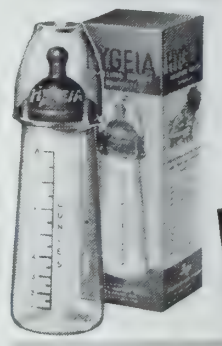
"Don't be childish, Charles, just because you can't have your own way. Do you realize you have asked me to spy on your own wife?"

"Yes, I suppose that is what it sounds like," he admitted.

"It's what it is like. You astonish me, Charles. From Arthur I might have expected it—from you, no. And may I ask why you brought your wife to the farm in the first place?"

"It's my home."

"Arthur's too. He's always been a philanderer. Unless you trusted your wife, you should have had more sense."



"I do trust her. She has great loyalty. I didn't bring her home; you know that. She's been at home since May. I should have sent her to you."

BABY COMING ?

Start right with this improved, easy-to-clean, Hygeia nursing unit. Fewer parts—just nipple, bottle, and cap. Prepare full day's formula at one time. Only necessary to remove cap when feeding. Cap keeps nipples germ-free. Handy for out-of-home feeding. Useful as container for baby's other foods. Famous breast-shaped nipple has patented airvent to reduce "windsucking." Sold at your druggist's complete as illustrated or parts separately.

Also Available in 4 oz. Size

Hygeia NURSING BOTTLES NIPPLES WITH CAPS

CONSULT YOUR DOCTOR REGULARLY

DIAPERS that are KNITTED TO FIT YOUR BABY

PANT-EASE diapers stay in place on the most active infant and the elasticity of this specially knitted cotton fabric keeps your baby comfortable at all times

No Folding—No Seams—No Loose Ends to slip, hang down or become bunched where they do not belong - - - -

EVEN DADDY CAN CHANGE Pant-Ease diapers

Highly absorbent—Easy to launder and the double thickness with open ends, permits hanging so the air can circulate through each garment and — DRY IN LESS TIME

Pant-ease PAT. U. S. PAT. OFF.

DIAPERS

are used and approved by Doctors, Nurses and thousands of modern Mothers

See Pant-ease at Department Stores and Shops or Send for FREE LITERATURE SAMPLE GARMENT 25¢

PANT-EASE INFANT WEAR CO. DEPT. 515 ARCADE, N.Y.

Earn Easy Cash

Everybody can sell these gorgeous Personal Christmas Folders! Customers amazed to buy 50 Cards for $1 with NAME on. You take quick orders . . . make big profit. Splendid earnings for full or spare time.

$1 Box Assortments

Add to your profits with stunning $1 Assortments of Christmas and Everyday Cards, Religious, Gift Wrappings, others. Sensational values sell fast. Start now to make easy spare time cash. Send for samples at once. Churches, clubs, lodges: write for special money-making plan.

Sell Christmas Cards WITH NAME 50 for $1

FREE SAMPLES

WETMORE & SUGDEN, INC., Dept. K-21, 749 Monroe Ave., Rochester 2, N. Y.

FREE STYLE BOOKLET

for Misses and Juniors—Sizes 10-20 and 9-17 only

You've never before been able to buy dresses like these by mail. Tagil offers the newest and very smartest styles from New York's top fashion designers at economical "direct-to-you" prices. Send your name and address today for free style bulletins.

(Illustrated) "Waist-whittler" tunic suit-dress, fine details. Black crepe; white lace.

16.95

Tagil NY 1186-B Broadway, New York 1, N. Y.

AT LAST! SOMETHING NEW AND SENSATIONAL IN CHRISTMAS CARDS

MAKE Extra MONEY FAST

Gorgeous Satin & Velour Designs Show Rich New Satin and Velour Cards never before offered. Amazing Value! Gets orders fast! Gorgeous Christmas Cards with name, 50 for $1 up. Pays up to 100% profit. Imprinted Stationery, 20 others, 60c to $1. Samples on Approval.

50 FOR $1 With Name

PURO CO., 2801 Locust, Dept. 813-K, St. Louis, Mo

f she's unfaithful as easily as all that, t better ship her back to Britain."

didn't say she was unfaithful. But if vants Arthur—and I think she does—I want her to have him."

have no patience with martyrdom, es."

for I. But I am sensible of my limita- Aunt Adeline. I know and you know I have no chance against Arthur. And has never said she loved me."

ever said she loved you? She surely t marry you for your money!"

o. She likes me. She was very lonely."

suppose she's beautiful," Aunt Adeline lryly, as if being beautiful or not was a r of importance only to the young.

ot at all." Charles said. "She's plain. o me—to others."

That a quixotic fool you are, boy! In ay men didn't give up their women so ."

m not giving her up easily. Not at all n help myself. But I don't think I can her with Arthur."

hat does your mother say?"

h, mother!" Charles said impatiently. n't discuss Phina with mother. She s some special virtue attaches to Phina se her father is in the House of Lords. 's a seventh daughter and poor. er thinks it very odd, naturally, that should have chosen me."

our mother is a sometimes silly, some- shrewd woman." Aunt Adeline said. ppose she would have thought it quite le had she chosen Arthur?"

dare say. She's never said."

lon't suppose you've ever read George rt," Aunt Adeline said with some ir- nce.

t recently," Charles said.

obably never. He said this—you commit it to memory:

"'He that forbears
To suit and serve his needs,
Deserves his load.'"

rles rose and walked to the long win- eyond the piano. There were chrysan- ms blooming in the small garden—else.

right, Aunt Adeline," he said without g. "You make it very clear. You're right, of course. It's nothing to do with you—and if I can't manage it, I deserve my load. I love her very much. I'm thirty-four, not twenty—but I love her very much. I pulled her out of a bombed nursery in London. She had a dirty little girl held so tight in her arms I could hardly separate them. I loved her at once. . . . I'm not a fool, Aunt Adeline. I didn't expect Arthur would be home before fall. Perhaps it's weak not to demand the impossible of life, but I long ago gave up demanding it. Perhaps it's weak, too, not to hate Arthur, but I don't, you know. I never have. He's not to blame for having been born with charm, and he can no more help exerting it than breathing. He charms me too—and I love him for it. But I cannot share Phina with him. That I can't do. I'm not jealous by temperament, but there are things the heart feels, without words or open acts of betrayal. . . . This morning I saw them start out for a ride and Phina called up to me, 'Coming, lazybones?' and it was suddenly intolerable. I got out the car and came to you. But I don't ask you to come—it is stupid and childish of me."

He paused, staring with misery at the chrysanthemums. He heard the little tinkle of the bell, heard Aunt Adeline say, "Donna, will you get out my fur cape? Put enough in the black bag for a week's stay. My purple dressing gown, please. There's never been a decent heating system at the farm."

"There won't be room in your bag for the padded dressing gown," Donna said. "And this is no time of the year for you to be going to the country, Mrs. Collinge."

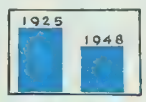
"It's no time of the year for you to be giving me advice, either. Use the brown bag, too, if you need to. And be quick about it—we have two hundred miles to drive yet tonight."

Charles came back unsteadily across the Aubusson carpet, picked up his teacup. The old woman saw that his hand was shaking. It's a pity people can't be inoculated against love, she thought dryly. Malaria would be easier to handle.

"If you will excuse me, Charles," she said aloud. "I have a few orders to give. I will be ready in twenty minutes."

She made her way stiffly out of the room and Charles sat down and waited. He felt is a natural and happy event, and today it is safer than ever before. This comes largely from better maternal care,  improved medical techniques, and the success of sulfa drugs and penicillin  in fighting infection.

(Continued on Page 71)



JENNIFER

"You're just fussin' for nuthin'—'cause I happen to know daddy already thinks you're cute!"

Babies, too,  have a better chance now. The mortality rate during the first month of life has dropped more than 25% since 1925  —and the rate for the first year of life is down nearly 50%!

The three cardinal principles of maternal care!

1. Go to the doctor or maternity clinic early in pregnancy.

To provide the right care for the mother, medical supervision should begin as early in pregnancy as possible. Continued supervision will help protect both mother and baby during and after delivery. So, follow-up visits to the doctor or clinic should be made at regular intervals.

2. Follow the doctor's or nurse's suggestions faithfully.

By following medical advice on diet, weight, exercise, and rest, and by avoiding mental strains, expectant mothers will help assure good health. Healthy mothers generally have healthy babies and recover more quickly.

3. When possible, take advantage of modern medical facilities.

From 1935 to 1945 the percentage of babies born in hospitals more than doubled, and maternal and infant deaths declined at a rapid rate. While generally all obstetrical care has improved, the best conditions and equipment are usually found in hospitals.

• Today, many public and private agencies, including your Public Health Nurses, stand ready to help expectant mothers. For further important information about maternal care, send for your free copy of Metropolitan's booklet, 808J, "Information for Expectant Mothers."

COPYRIGHT 1948—METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

TO VETERANS—IF YOU HAVE NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE—KEEP IT!

Rise and shine with... Brighter Breakfasts!

LOOK WHAT HAPPENS when you begin the day with America's favorite bacon (Swift's Premium, naturally!) Everybody's off to a flying start, from Dad on down to the smallest dynamo. Nutritionists say breakfast is the neglected meal . . . so you're using bacon wisely when you bring it on for breakfast. Swift's Premium's savory sweet smoke taste sets appetites racing . . . and every bite is rich in digestible food energy.

"COME AND GET IT!" There's no dawdling over dressing when Swift's Premium Bacon is on the stove. That fragrance brings the family running! Year in, year out its matchless quality has been so dependable, its famous sweet taste so delectable . . . that now America actually prefers Swift's Premium Bacon to the next 25 brands combined!

SAVE BACON by cooking it this failure-proof way: Place slices of Swift's Premium Bacon in cold frying pan. Don't overcrowd. Cook slowly, turning often to cook evenly. Drain on absorbent paper. For crisp bacon, pour off fat as it accumulates and save for future use. Good breakfast companions (equally welcome for lunch or supper)—fluffy scrambled eggs and tomato slices.

Swift's Premium Bacon with the sweet smoke taste

(Continued from Page 69)

amed and at the same time relieved beyond measure. He had been living in a nightmare for several weeks now. Sometimes he said to himself that the war had affected him more than he had known, but he did not think the war actually had anything to do with it. It was something which antedated the war by many years. Only, once having given his love, once knowing that Phina liked him well enough to marry him, he was shocked that he should have so little faith in the endurance of their relationship. Aunt Adeline was no more shocked than he himself. His coming to Aunt Adeline had been instinctive, involuntary, a confession of weakness. He had often quarreled with her, but she was the fount of wisdom from which he had imbibed through all his growing years. Uncle Bonner had been his blood relative, but Charles had only the dimmest memory of him, a thin, pedantic fussy man, to whom wealth had accorded in an oddly unjust manner. It was Aunt Adeline who had always seemed blood kin, and there was truly a kind of kinship between them. He liked and respected the way she lived, her brusque tongue, her erect carriage at seventy-seven, her intolerance of bad manners and stupidity and cheapness. He wanted to look at the world in just her skeptical fashion, wanted to grow into an old man built as tough and yet as resilient as this old woman. He was succeeding better than he knew, but these last weeks he had felt weak, helpless, caught into something at which he could not laugh.

His skepticism had carried him through the war without more than an extra sharpening. It had carried him through his relationships with his brother Arthur, leaving him lonely but with a certain security in his loneliness. It would let him tolerate his mother's worship of antiquity—which was not based on anything like so solid a structure as his aunt's upholding of traditions she respected—and also her preference for Arthur, which often made her cruel toward him, Charles. But now he had come to something that his self-sufficiency, his skepticism could not cope with. He had nearly given up all thought of marriage, of being loved. But he had been in love as completely as any schoolboy—and, he admitted, he was behaving like a schoolboy now—jealous, unreasonable.

WHEN, exactly twenty minutes later, Aunt Adeline came in, she wore a small fur toque and her fur cape. Donna set the cases in the hall, stood awaiting their departure with disapproving eyes. Charles did not make the mistake of showing gratitude or even of commenting on the reversal of decision.

"You mean to tell me the moths haven't got it yet!" he said. The cape was made of alternating stripes of brown and black fur and Charles had always pretended to abhor it. Indeed, on another, he would have, but Aunt Adeline it was right.

"It will last me my time," Aunt Adeline said coldly.

He helped her into the car, put the luggage and took his place behind the wheel.

They had driven out of the city and several miles into the country before she said, "The daughter of a peer, eh?"

"The seventh and last," he said. "Three sons—two lost in the war. A prolific and impoverished peer, my father-in-law."

"I suppose you told him you had expectations from me?"

"No. Have I?" He gave her a grin and went on before she could answer: "As a matter of fact, I think he was glad to get me even with such poor prospects as I possess. Seven daughters are a lot to marry off, and Phina didn't have looks—nor many chances, manpower being what it is in England now."

"You aren't presenting a very pretty picture of your wife, Charles."

"I told you before, Aunt Adeline—she seems very beautiful to me," Charles told her.

"I'm a little puzzled, however, as to what Arthur sees in her. Or is it only that she is one of your possessions?"

"I don't know," Charles said. "Perhaps nothing. Let's not talk about it just now. . . . Did you know that we were going to make money this year? Quite a lot of money?"

"I should hope so. You've sunk enough in the farm. It ought to pay sometime."

"We've never had a first-class man with the horses before. This man Howie is good. He even kept mother in line while we were gone, and that takes some doing."

Aunt Adeline clasped her gloved hands in her lap. She frowned faintly, but she said only, "He must be a remarkable man."

"Why don't you like the farm, Aunt Adeline?" he asked after a time.

"Because I am an urban person, I dare say. I do not hanker after simplicity—it bores me—and I do not care to gaze at hills and meadows like a stupid cow."

"Well, we don't do much gazing, you know. We keep very busy. I wish you liked it better—enough so that you'd come to live with us. . . . Or do I?" he amended. "I'd hate not going to One-ninety-nine Penn Street."

"The problem will never arise," she said.

"I suppose not."

"Charles, would you mind not trying to make conversation? I am aware that your mind is elsewhere. Let us be quiet."

He was abruptly quiet, not in anger, but relief. It was true that he did not want to talk, that he was finding it difficult to get words out. The autumn dusk began to gather and the lights came on in the little crossroads towns.

"Shall we wait for dinner till we get home? It will be late," Charles asked at last.

"No, certainly not," Aunt Adeline answered crisply. "I am accustomed to dinner at seven-thirty."

It was over dinner in a respectable little inn that Aunt Adeline said, "Yes, I remember the day and the hour, Charles. Your mother had been in labor thirty hours and the family was called to her deathbed. You came at six o'clock on the morning of November twenty-ninth in the midst of an unseasonable blizzard, and you were so puny the doctor paid no attention to you. Your

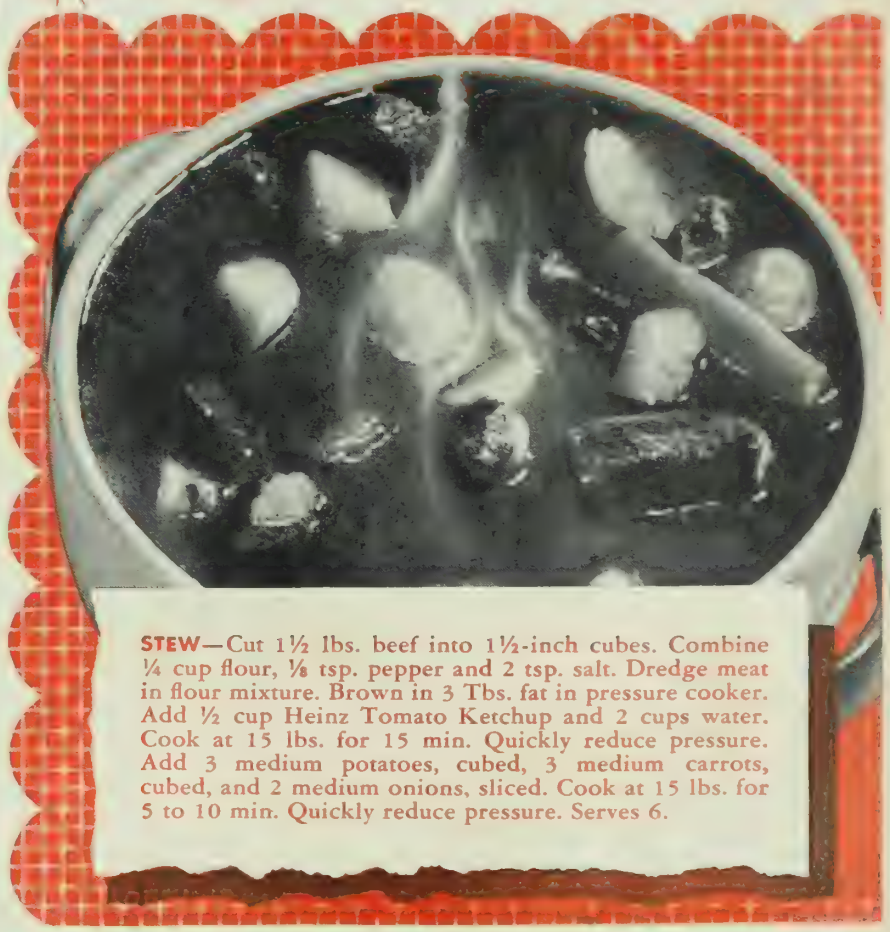
★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Garden

BY GEORGE BRADY

Fruit breaks on the summer mouth.
Between the frail leaf and the swaying light
Fair weather holds, and there is laughter in the grass—
Laughter and lovers' arms and eyes as bright
As the water glancing at the anchored sky.

But do not cross too soon
The doorway through the high green wall.
Once entered, it is impossible from there to see
The ships that sail out of the shallow bay
After the harvest, the fruit fall before the frost.



It is not clear immediately why
The birds that seemed content fly suddenly southward,
Darkening for an hour the easy air;
For in this enclosed season of the heart,
Beneath the boughs of summer and desire,
Who heeds or hears the bony wings of famine,
Or sees the eagles gathering, the farms afire?

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Cooking under PRESSURE

You can save time by using a Pressure Cooker—yet still have stews that look and taste just like the real old-fashioned slow-simmered kind—follow the recipe and hints on this page!

STEW—Cut 1½ lbs. beef into 1½-inch cubes. Combine ¼ cup flour, ⅛ tsp. pepper and 2 tsp. salt. Dredge meat in flour mixture. Brown in 3 Tbs. fat in pressure cooker. Add ½ cup Heinz Tomato Ketchup and 2 cups water. Cook at 15 lbs. for 15 min. Quickly reduce pressure. Add 3 medium potatoes, cubed, 3 medium carrots, cubed, and 2 medium onions, sliced. Cook at 15 lbs. for 5 to 10 min. Quickly reduce pressure. Serves 6.

Hint 1 First coat the pieces of chicken or meat with flour. This simple little trick will thicken the gravy just right.

Hint 2 Save extra work by browning the meat well—right in the pressure cooker.

Hint 3 Go easy on the water! Too much will drown the stew. In fact, two cups is the maximum you should use.

Hint 4 Give with the seasonings—especially Heinz Tomato Ketchup, the perfect condiment for lending a stew that spicy zip that makes it something super!

● Pedigreed tomatoes, raised to sturdy plumpness, sparkling vinegar, subtly blended spices—all these good things are combined to make Heinz Tomato Ketchup a masterpiece of flavor! That's why it does such dashing things for stews, steaks, leftovers and what-have-you. Remember—it's so rich a little goes a long way!

Heinz 57 Ketchup

4 NEW, INEXPENSIVE WAYS TO better living!

1

FOODS LOOK SO TEMPTING

served with pure, sparkling crushed ice. Use it plentifully to glamorize salads, seafoods, fruits, fruit juices and cocktails. Order some today from your local Ice Company.

2

CRYSTAL-CLEAR ICE CUBES

—the kind your Ice Company makes — add sparkle to any beverage. They are pure, taste-free and hard-frozen for s-l-o-w melting. Available by the bag or carton.

3

A HANDY LITTLE ICE CHEST

chills all bottled beverages quickly, relieves crowded refrigerators, holds an ample extra supply of ice cubes or crushed ice. Great for parties! Inexpensive, too!

4

THE NEW ICE REFRIGERATOR

is air-conditioned, gives foods complete, scientific protection. Economical to buy . . . and to use. Get all the facts about it from your local Ice Company today!

Use pure sparkling ICE for every cooling need teased her, but he did not tease her for anything. He liked her for herself, and she knew that that was a rarer gift than often came her way. It was the sudden realization that this was the first time in thirty-four years that he had ever asked her for something for himself which had made her decide that she must make this tiring trip. If the danger had not been real, he would not have been desperate.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF ICE INDUSTRIES, 1706 L Street, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

The scene of her arrival went through her mind. What had happened? Nothing. What had been said, beyond Arthur's impertinent remarks? Nothing. For all her fussy, warm welcome, Felicia was not pleased to see her. Well, that was to be understood. Something had dimmed in Charles as soon as he was in the house. But Arthur always had that effect on him. What kind of stubbornness was it that kept them together year after year?

A sharp, small picture came to her mind of the two boys coming on Bonner's last birthday to present him with gifts. Arthur, his curls very bright, his smile very winning, making a gay, insincere little speech, quite graceful and eloquent. Charles, standing back, silent, finally saying only "Happy birthday," thrusting his package at Bonner without ceremony. Bonner patting Arthur's curls, making a speech in return. But Charles had not sulked. He had given his present. I have been conscious of you, dear boy, even when you could not speak, she thought.

The girl. Charles' wife. Who let Arthur take her by the hand but who didn't kiss Charles. As interesting a girl as she had seen in twenty years—easily twenty. A girl with a face not exactly like thousands of others. A Spanish face. Ridiculous thought! Why Spanish? With that almost colorless hair and those gray eyes? . . . The hotel in Valencia—the Spanish woman coming across the dining room. "What a beauty!" Bonner said. Long white face, black hair straight back, no jewelry. Too long, all of her, body, face, hands. Mouth too wide, too red. Not a beauty at all, but beautiful in her imperfections. Beautiful in pride, in mystery, in arrogance or indifference. . . . She remembered it, she knew with a wry smile in the dark, because she had determined to make Bonner discriminating, and at this, almost the first moment of success, she found herself wishing she had left his taste alone. She wished it many times in the years after, but that was the beginning of her regret.

The English girl had that same quality—aloof pride, an unashamed ease with her long body, a mystery of difference, of covered passion.

I doubt she's such a fool, the old woman said to herself.

But she felt troubled. Under the commonplace moments downstairs, she had felt something, a tension, impending drama. W did it show? She did not know, but sh it. As if to put emphasis on this feeling dog out by the stables began again his m choly baying at the moon.

Up in Charles and Phina's room in west wing, Phina was brushing her long braiding it in two plaits. She had on blue silk pajamas, and on her feet plain leather bedroom slippers.

"Miss me?" Charles said.

"Some," she said, smiling into the m at his image over her shoulder.

"What did you do all day?"

"Oh, ordinary things. Rode—tw Helped Annie make pear butter. Wrote a le Walked to the corner to catch the post with it. Played chess with Arthur. Ta with your mother. A longish day."

"Mind my bringing Aunt Adeline do I took a sudden notion."

"It was sudden, wasn't it?" she slowly. "No, why should I mind? somewhat terrifying, but I liked her."

"Except for you, she's my only passi

"Oh?" She gave a small laugh.

"Did you beat Arthur at chess?"

"Rather. He's brilliant, but most sound."

"Oh. He didn't mind? He fancies game a bit."

"No, he was very sporting about it."

She got into bed, but he fussed abou several minutes. At last he turned the l out, came over to the bed.

"You did really miss me?" he said.

"Should I admit it if I did?" she "When you didn't even trouble to good-by? Deserted wife—that's been role all day." She didn't sound irrita only pleasantly mocking.

"You're so beautiful, darling," he gently. "If I'd said good-by, I wouldn't gone."

She laced her fingers in his. "Odd, Collinges," she said. "You must have ferent standards of beauty over here; that I mind—it's very satisfying, only I wanting to say, 'Lawk-a-mercy on me—is none of I!'"

The sound of the dog by the stables c to them then too.

"That's a lonely sound," she said. "I home."

He squeezed her fingers harshly tigh his to ward off the loneliness, but it see to him it stayed there in the room.

It was Felicia Collinge who brought A Adeline's tray in the morning. She dressed in gray flannel slacks and a br jacket bound in gray. She looked q young and pretty, but as if dressed for "Help! Help! Help! Whoever finds this message—pick up the groceries, straighten up the basement and clean up your room!".

(Continued on Page 76)

So often guests comment on one particular mayonnaise

"Jane said that was KRAFT Mayonnaise on her salad last night. Wasn't it superb?"

PURE LEMON JUICE gives this famous mayonnaise refreshing piquancy. With it, Kraft uses fragrant vinegar and spices smoothly blended with fine salad oil and eggs. Try Kraft Kitchen-Fresh Mayonnaise . . . soon.

Kraft

RIVIERA SALAD—On a round chop plate arrange 5 portions of leaf lettuce, and in each place half of a pineapple slice and a slice of peeled orange. Within this circle arrange 5 more small leaves of lettuce, with a peach half filled with red raspberries in each. Place Bing cherries and avocado slices between the portions of fruit. Serve with Kraft Mayonnaise.

Mayonnaise

that needs no protection!

Firestone Velon*

Firestone Velon keeps your furniture looking as if it has been cherished under glass, no matter how youngsters and pets romp over it!

Cleaning bills? Never have them. Velon wipes clean with mild soap and water. Slip covers? Never use them. Stains are no problem on long-wearing Velon.

For stunning furniture, table tops... in exciting colors and authentic grains, be sure it's upholstered with Firestone Velon.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

Listen to the Voice of Firestone Monday Evenings over NBC

Look for this tag on the product you buy

*TRADE MARK ©1948, FIRESTONE TIRE & RUBBER CO.

(Continued from Page 74)

part of a countrywoman, not the actual thing. Aunt Adeline had, herself, put a few sticks on the fire and lighted it. She sat beside it in her purple dressing gown and fur scuffs. Her blue-white hair was combed up in its usual stiff pompadour.

"Good morning, darling," Felicia said sweetly. "I've brought you enough breakfast for a stable hand! Annie kept putting things on—I couldn't stop her. It's wonderful that you're actually here; however did Charles persuade you? Goodness knows, I've begged you often enough."

Aunt Adeline took the plate of muffins off the tray and handed them to Felicia. "You might as well eat those. I can't," she said, quite ignoring Felicia's chatter.

"Well, I didn't eat much—it's such a madhouse here in the morning," Felicia said, sitting down on the fireside stool and taking a muffin. "How do you like our Phina? Isn't she enchanting?"

"I don't know her yet. I'm not given to snap judgments, Felicia."

"Oh, but she shows what she is so plainly."

"You mean the House of Lords shows in her face?" Aunt Adeline said dryly. "But of late I understand they have been meeting in the House of Commons."

"Oh, don't be so nasty, darling. You know perfectly well what I mean. She really is something special—we all adore her."

"Yes, you would—you would, Felicia. I dare say she is special, or Charles wouldn't have chosen her."

"You know, that's funny—your saying that, Adeline. I suppose he must care for her, but really he doesn't show it much. But he never shows anything much. I sometimes think feeling was just left out of Charles. But you'd think sometimes they were just acquaintances; if it wasn't for Arthur, I think she might be very homesick. It's all very strange for her here, of course, but we do try to make her feel she's at home. And I must say she fits in very well. Only Charles works from morning to night on the farm—he hardly ever sees her."

"I imagine he sees her, Felicia; Charles isn't demonstrative."

"No. Such a pity, I've always thought. It makes life so dull, when you don't show your feelings at all. I've always felt life should be gay—one might think Charles weren't my child at all. But Arthur more than makes up for him."

"Charles got off to a bad start," Aunt Adeline said.

"Yes, of course he was sickly—but he's strong enough now. Heaven knows I did everything for him. . . . I've got to run, Adeline. I always have a million things to do in the morning." She got up, picking up another muffin as she rose. When she was almost at the door, she turned as if something had just come to her mind. "Oh, Adeline—I hope you won't say anything to Charles about our little transaction last year. Let's keep it between us, shall we? Charles is so pleased that we've kept things going so well—I don't like to upset him, just back from the Army and everything." Her blue eyes were anxious, though she spoke lightly.

"Oh. You haven't told Charles you borrowed from me?"

"No, I haven't, Adeline. You know how Charles is—thinks he can carry everything himself. I'll get the money for you soon—things really are booming now—but I'd rather he didn't know just yet."

"I see," Aunt Adeline said, putting down her cup. "I see, Felicia. And what have you done with the money?"

"Done with it? Oh, the farm simply eats money, Adeline! The fences were all in a terrible state and there was that fire in the barn—oh, there's never any end to need for money on a farm. We simply would have had to give up without it. Thanks a million, Adeline—it's just our little secret, eh?"

"For the time being. I'll use my judgment on for how long."

Felicia had scarcely gone when Arthur stuck his head in.

"Hi, beautiful!" he called out, then came across the room and sat on the arm of a chair.

Lily white and daisy fresh

That's how your toilet bowls are after you've sprinkled in Sani-Flush. And that's how you feel about it, too, for there's no rub or scrub when Sani-Flush does the work. Sani-Flush removes all unsightly stains and invisible film—disinfects—and leaves perfect, odorless freshness.

Safe in all toilet systems—effective in hard or soft water. At your grocer's everywhere. Two sizes. The Hygienic Products Co., Canton 2, Ohio.

Sani-Flush

KEEP TWO CANS HANDY

LINED ENVELOPES SELL FAMOUS SUNSHINE CHRISTMAS CARDS NEW IDEAS GALORE

Take orders easily. Exclusive Creations! Smart! Distinctive! 21 Folders. Costs 50¢ Sells $1. "CHRISTMAS SPRUCES"—16 LINED ENVELOPES, Glitter, Deluxe Suede, Carolers, Religious, Gift Wraps, Informals. 4 Imprint Deals. $1.25 to $2.50. KromeKotes. Personal Line. 21 Ass't on approval. FREE SAMPLES imprint lines. No investment. Start today.

SUNSHINE ART STUDIOS, 115 Fulton, Dept. LE-8, New York 8, N. Y.

INSIST ON THE LONG LASTING EFFECT OF

FLIT

WITH 5% DDT

Think of it—one spraying lasts for weeks. You don't have to spray every few hours to kill the insects in your home. No bomb type spray or other sprays containing less than 5% DDT can equal this for lasting effect. Flit Surface Spray with 5% DDT is so powerful a single application kills insects today—tomorrow—even next month.

BUY LOW COST FLIT TODAY!

"...een of Sheba in her royal purple!" he ...d. "You only need to have somebody ...ing a feathered fan over you."

"Aren't you up very early?" she asked.

"Me? I've been up for hours. Have to get ...le in before the heavy chores of the day ...n."

"With Charles' wife, I presume?"

...e gave a boyish shout of laughter. One ...ld not dream, she thought, that he had ... three years in the war. "Why, you old ...tan!" he said. "Naturally, with Charles' ...."

"Naturally," she repeated grimly.

"Somebody has to make her welcome," he ..., chuckling as he spoke. "You know ...rles—a nose-to-the-grindstone boy if there was one. The farm ran all the time ...vere gone and will run, I dare say, after ...e dead."

"I don't suppose it ever occurred to you ...et up and do the chores while Charles ...t riding?"

"No, that just never occurred to me, Aunt ...ie. If Charles doesn't have these im... ...s himself, who am I to stir them up?"

"Who, indeed? . . . Now, if you'll run ...g, Arthur, I'll dress."

"Pushed out, eh?" He got up lazily, lit a ...ette. "You have to hand it to Charles, ...ng 'em, anyway, don't you?" he said, ...ing toward the door. "The trouble with ...les is, he doesn't know what to do with ...after he gets 'em!"

...e did not answer and he went out, ...ping down the stairs in his riding boots. ...venty minutes later Aunt Adeline came ...stairs. She had laid aside the purple ... and put on the black ... that was almost a ...orm with her. Se... ...y tailored, the black ... with a high neck... edged in white, the ... trimming a row of ...l buttons straight ... the front. She looked ...nt and somehow ...d with her sharp ... eyes and high pom... ...r. She wore one very large ring, an ...ld set with diamonds. She did not like ...ng, but she had inherited it from Bon... mother, who had not liked her, but ...ad succumbed enough to her strength ...aracter to will her this expensive but ...nate ring. It represented a victory and ...ore it like a banner, almost forgetting ...now, or whether the victory was over ...er's mother or over herself.

... met Annie in the hall, dustcloth in ...

"...ood morning, Mis' Collinge!" Annie ...heerfully.

"...ood morning. I suppose no one minds ...you don't do the chair rounds, Annie?"

...nie gave a giggle and said, "If I was to ...time for chair rounds more'n once a ... Mis' Collinge, there wouldn't be any ... in this house. A little dust don't do ...e harm—but an empty stomach's ...hing else again! I was hired for a cook, ...ay—not that I mind giving a hand here ...here."

"...mph!" Aunt Adeline said. "Where ... find Mrs. Charles Collinge, Annie?"

"...e's out taking up bulbs—or was."

"...hank you. Is my cape in the closet ...r'"

...nie tossed the dustcloth over her shoul... ... a manner that made Aunt Adeline ... opened the closet door and brought ...e fabulous, ancient cape. "It's cold out, ...Collinge," she warned.

... Aunt Adeline wrapped herself in the ...stepped around Bruno, who lay in the ...center of the hall, and went out the ... It was a bitter day, though the sun ...shining. But winter was in the offing, ...n the horizon were heavy clouds like ...clouds. Aunt Adeline walked around ...ambling house to the sweep of lawn ...n spring was bordered with masses of ...ils, tulips and irises. At the far edge ...Phina, trowel in gloved hands, a peas... ...rchief over her fair hair. She didn't ...round and Aunt Adeline drew near across the browned, leaf-strewn grass, was close to her before Phina turned.

"Couldn't the boys do that?" Aunt Adeline asked.

"I suppose so. I like to do it," Phina said. "You'll ruin your hands."

"Nonsense!" Phina said. "What good are hands if you don't do something with them? . . . Isn't this wind too nipping for you?"

"I can stand it if you can, child."

PHINA laughed, looking up at her with a swift appreciation. "I'm sure you can, at that," she said. "You look tough. But you don't have to and you don't look as if you liked wind. You should sit by the fire and hold court."

"I should prefer it," Aunt Adeline said equably. "But Annie is the only one about and that makes a small court."

Phina gave a low chuckle. "If you'll wait till I finish this row, I'll come join Annie," she said.

"Very well," Aunt Adeline said and began to walk up and down the stone path by the border. Presently she came back, stood beside Phina and said, "I suppose you find this very different from England?"

"Yes. I was always cold in England," Phina answered.

"If it were not for Charles, I should find it very cold here on the farm," Aunt Adeline said.

Phina put her trowel down, put the bulbs in her basket, drew off her gloves and stretched her fingers. "They are all warm here," she told Aunt Adeline quietly. "All of them."

"Indeed? . . . May I carry the basket for you?"

"Thanks, no. I can manage everything. I am to take these to the barn. Do you want to walk over with me?"

They walked across the yard to the barn road, the tall girl with the kerchief over her head and the old woman in the incongruous fur cape. The barn had no appeal for Aunt Adeline, but she had put her hand to the plow and she had persistence.

Inside the barn, Phina added her basketful of bulbs to a pile in a corner. Then she turned to the stalls, put a hand up to a horse's neck, laid her cheek for an instant along the satin face.

"Isn't she a love?" she said. "Arthur gave her to me for a wedding gift."

"That sounds like Arthur," Aunt Adeline said dryly. "He was always one for extravagant gestures. . . . Charles does the work and Arthur makes the gestures."

Phina gave her a sudden direct look. "They like it that way," she said shortly.

"Would you?" Aunt Adeline demanded. "Charles hasn't even had time to wish me good morning, but Arthur's had time to ride—I saw you leaving at dawn—and he's had time to come in and chat with me about nothings over my breakfast. Were I Charles I should resent that very much."

They had come out of the barn now and walked up the road toward the house.

"Ah, but you're not Charles!" Phina said. "Charles isn't the resenting kind."

"No, but I wouldn't be too sure he couldn't be, child."

Phina paused at the door, gave the old woman again that straight look. "Arthur said you were a troublemaker; you are, aren't you?" she said with some coolness. "I think I've changed my mind about joining your court."

"Nobody asked you, my child," Aunt Adeline said good-humoredly.

She went in and sat by the fire. She heard Felicia phoning some friend guardedly, breaking off some engagement. She smiled grimly, but made no protests. "I'll send Phina and Arthur, perhaps—Charles is just swamped with work. I don't think anyone would mind if they ran off for an hour or two. . . . Yes, desolated, darling—but you know how it is."

Presently Charles and Arthur came in for lunch. Charles, on the way to wash up,

It's an odd thing about this universe that, though we all disagree with each other, we are all of us always in the right.

—LOGAN PEARSALL SMITH: All Trivia (Harcourt, Brace and Company).

the LESTER Concert Grand

a beautiful piano with a magnificent tone

ONE name quality price

sold by America's foremost piano dealers

unmistakable quality

In appearance, performance and construction, the Lester Grand Piano is truly a quality instrument . . . backed by one family's 60 years experience in building nothing but fine pianos.

From the 4 foot, 7 inch model to the regal 8 foot, 11 inch Concert Grand pictured . . . each Lester Grand Piano is distinguished by glorious tone, responsive touch and full volume.

Your dealer will also be happy to show you the genuine Betsy Ross Spinet . . . made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company, Inc.

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET 2-P

Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home. (Enclose 10c for postage.)

Lester Piano Manufacturing Co., Inc., Lester 13, Pa.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____

Zone No ____ State_____ 2-P

Foreign Sales Representatives: H. A. ASTLETT & CO., 27 William Street, New York 5, N. Y.

HIDE that Dishpan

UNTIL YOU GET

4-WAY IMPROVED

DREFT!

1

MORE SUDS THAN ANY PRODUCT KNOWN!

Ounce for ounce in average water, Improved Dreft makes more suds than any dishwashing product known! Grease-cutting suds that get dishes really clean.

2

MILDEST EVER TO YOUR HANDS!

How clean your hands feel after using Improved Dreft! Dreft leaves hands as well as dishes greaseless. No slippery, greasy feeling. Doesn't contain hand-reddening alkali, either.

3

WONDERFULLY "SNEEZE-FREE"!

Improved Dreft contains less of that irritating "dust" that causes sneezing than any leading dish-washing product of its kind.

4

WASHES 1/4 MORE DISHES!

Now goes farther! Improved Dreft now weighs more, washes one-quarter more dishes. That's some saving, Lady!

NO WONDER MORE WOMEN USE DREFT FOR DISHES TODAY THAN ANY OTHER BRAND IN AMERICA!

Dreft was first:

... to cut dishwashing time in half!
... to give you greaseless dishwashing!
... to perform miracles no soap can match!
... and here's another "first"—

DREFT MAKES DISHES SHINE —EVEN WITHOUT WIPING!

® A Hymoso Product

PROCTER & GAMBLE'S PATENTED SUDS DISCOVERY

paused at the door long enough to say, "Behaving?"

"As well as usual," Aunt Adeline said.

At the table Felicia said, "Oh, Arthur, I told Madeleine that you and Phina would drop in at half past five or so. It's a rather special party, you know, and some of us ought to go. I wouldn't dream of going while Adeline is here, but I'm sure she won't mind if you young things run off for a while."

"You can all go, as far as I'm concerned," Aunt Adeline said. "I don't need entertainment, Felicia. In fact, I don't want it. I can manage very nicely by myself, and there's no need to give up any parties. Besides, I should think Charles would prefer to show off his bride himself."

"Oh, Charles loathes parties," Felicia said quickly.

"I've always thought you a reasonable social being, Charles," Aunt Adeline said calmly. "It will do you good to go."

"I didn't know there was a party. I'm not invited, so far as I know," Charles said.

"Oh, Charles, you've heard all about it. You know you have! But I told Madeleine you were bored by parties—she understands. I always try to protect you when I can."

Aunt Adeline saw a gleam of humor twinkle in Charles' pale blue eyes, then die.

"There's still a lot of work to be done in the burned stalls. I was going to give Howie a hand so we could get it finished up this week," he said. "But perhaps I will drop in late, if I may. You run along and I'll try to get there shortly after six. All right, Phina?"

"Quite," Phina murmured.

"What does Arthur do to earn an honest living? He's got hands, too, hasn't he?" Aunt Adeline demanded.

Arthur gave a clear young laugh. "I can't drive a nail straight," he said. "Don't try to make a drone out of me, Aunt Addie. It won't work. I love parties –and I love to show off Phina. It won't be any burden to me at all."

"An hour's extra work surely can't make too much difference," Aunt Adeline insisted.

After lunch Charles found Aunt Adeline alone for a moment. "I said, 'Stop it. Forget it.' Didn't you understand?" he said. "That kind of sledge-hammer tactics is no good, anyway. I thought you were subtle."

"Your wife is a very evasive creature, Charles. And I do think there is some point in your taking her to this party. Why don't you?"

"I never heard of it till this morning—the party. I'm going. That will have to suffice."

She changed the subject abruptly. "Wasn't the fire in the stalls last year?"

"Yes, but we're just getting to the repair job. Repairs cost money, you know, and there hasn't been much till this year. They've done awfully well to squeeze by."

"I see." And where is my six thousand dollars? she asked herself.

Felicia was very solicitous all afternoon. Phina went out and sorted the bulbs, laid them out on newspapers to dry. When she came in she made labels for pear butter, carried the jars downstairs. She paid no attention at all to Aunt Adeline, and Aunt Adeline was becoming very bored with Felicia's chatter. Several times she saw Felicia's eyes go to the big ring, and at last she said:

"You should have managed your moth in-law better, Felicia. Then it might h been yours."

Felicia flushed. "Managed her!" she s hotly. "No one could! She was a horri old woman. And most unfair—you know was, Adeline. Bonner had so much mo he didn't know what to do with it, and C ton had to earn every cent himself and awfully unlucky besides."

"You had this place, didn't you?"

"This place! It's always been a wh elephant, and Carlton wasn't cut out to a farmer. But he had to do something. It a roof over our heads, but you can't sa was much more. I hoped when the boys home they'd have sense enough to sell it a get into civilization again—but, no, Cha won't hear of it. But I've determined—y determined, Adeline—to see that Arthur a chance somewhere else. It isn't fair Arthur that he be stuck here."

"Oh, I think Arthur's very well satisfi Felicia. He likes the country-squire idea. long as he doesn't have to clean the stable

"Well, why should he have to clean stables? He's a g tleman."

"And Char isn't?" Aunt A line asked dryly.

"Oh, Charl Charles does mind what he d Or how hard drives all the of us, just so he hang onto this homestead. If wants it, no minds, but it i fair to tie all rest of us to ambitions."

"If you have ties in the neigh hood, you can't quite cut off f the amenitie Aunt Adeline s "Well, we h to make what we can. There ar few who ride play bridge and like—but we been so poor hard to keep up end. . . . Oh, th you are, Phina d ling. How lov you look! Isn't Arthur ready?"

Arthur came running down the stairs.

"Have a lovely time, children! And d worry if Charles doesn't manage to there."

Phina seemed to hesitate, as if, even n she wanted to wait for Charles, but Art said with a grin, "We won't worry!" drew her along.

"Everybody's been so wonderful Phina," Felicia said.

"I can imagine. I don't suppose you g peer's daughter here in the country too ofte

"No, of course we don't. But she's simple—and she insists on helping. being one of us, as if she weren't used t very different life."

"Simple? I wouldn't call her sim Felicia."

"Well, I mean in a nice way, of cours was afraid it would be terribly dull for but people have been kind, and Arthur's s that she got to know people and had a li fun. Charles seems to think she's willin just sit here and do nothing. I don't k what we'd have done without Arthur."

"I think I'll go up to my room till dinn ready," Aunt Adeline said.

Silly little fool! she said to herself w she got to her room. A new fire had b laid. By Charles, she presumed. She l and sat down beside it. Sledge-ham tactics, eh? Well, it took a sledge hamm make a dent in that girl. She had not tended she didn't know what Adeline linge was doing and she had all but sai

Next Month

When Otis Skinner first met her in the theater troupe of Madame Modjeska, he thought Maude Durbin a silly young thing (while she considered him stuck up). She eventually became his leading lady on and off the stage. Their daughter Cornelia was born "on the road" (in Chicago, to be geographically precise) and completed the trio cast of this famous theatrical family.

In her newest book, Miss Skinner tells the story of her parents, whose hearts remained young and gay throughout their lives; and of her own star-studded childhood. Read

FAMILY CIRCLE

By Cornelia Otis Skinner

Condensed from the book shortly to be published by Houghton-Mifflin. Complete in the September Journal.

3 Big New Advantages
IN THE MET-L-TOP
TRADE MARK REGISTERED
ADJUSTABLE-HEIGHT
IRONING TABLE

7 EASY ADJUSTMENTS FOR HEIGHT... ist right for tall, medium or short women.

REDUCES BACK STRAIN, ARM
TRAIN, IRONING FATIGUE

EASIER, FASTER IRONING... ecause you iron in a comfortable position.

e sure to see the new DJUSTABLE-HEIGHT
ET-L-TOP... and remember
ET-L-TOP is the original alletal ironing table... fireoof, warp-proof. Will not bble or creep... stays put.
rror-smooth, white-enamd, ventilated top, plus the eful ProtectoRest. Ask your aler for the ADJUSTABLE-EIGHT MET-L-TOP at 0.45, or the original Standard odel at $8.65.

best results use MET-L-TOP
d and cover set. Tailored to fit.

MET-L-TOP Division
EUDER, PAESCHKE & FREY CO.
Milwaukee 3, Wisconsin

makes EASY
QUICK ELASTIC
HOT STARCH IN 30 SECONDS
MAKES IRONING EASY
NO BOILING
NO STICKING
Starch in the buttercup yellow box

VOSS WASHERS
Time Tested Since 1876
VOSS BROS. MFG. CO.
DAVENPORT, IOWA, U. S. A.
Electric or Engine Models

MAKE MONEY FAST
Big-Value Christmas Cards
in test designs, newest decorations . . . greatest values. Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards—50 and 25 for $1. Show 22 different superb Assortments. "Supercraft" Third Christmas, Religious, Humorous, Everyday, Stationery. Also newest Address Date Books. Write now for 21-card assortment sent on approval and FREE samples.
Hyps Card Co., 987 Hunt St., Newton, Mass.
50 FOR $1 WITH NAME
CHRISTMAS & EVERYDAY Assortments

MONEY FOR YOU $25
PROFIT—SELLING FIFTY $1 BOXES FEATURE
Christmas Cards, Candlettes, 35 money-maker. Money needed to start. Gift offers, extra bonus for sample feature box on approval.
MORE CARD, 215 Fox St., Elmira, N. Y.
FREE SAMPLES 50 FOR $1 personal CHRISTMAS CARDS AND STATIONERY was none of her business. There seems to be more in this than meets the eye, she said. If she's as honest and forthright as she seems to be, how could she put up with a frivolous being like Arthur, charm or no charm? I dare say times change, but no matter what went on behind the scenes, when it was time for a public appearance, I appeared with Bonner. Felicia is pushing the girl at Arthur. She is a wicked woman, a small, devious, cheating little woman. And what has she done with my money? Coming sniveling about how sad Charles was going to be if she didn't get things in some sort of shape! Making me believe they were down to their last potato! Fool! . . . But I won't have her take me for a fool as well.

At six Charles came in, came quickly up the back stairs. Aunt Adeline heard the rush of the shower. In a quarter of an hour he called out a hurried "Good-by!" as he passed her door, and then she heard Felicia saying:

"You don't really need to go, Charles."

"Oh, I'll look in," Charles said, and then Adeline heard the rush of the little car they kept for errands.

When they came in, late for dinner, Aunt Adeline saw that Phina was gay, as if lighted up from within. She and Arthur were laughing and trying a song someone had sung at the party.

"No, no, darling—you have to give a sinister trill to the l," Arthur was saying to Phina. "Like this: 'There's b-l-l-lood on the saddle and b-l-l-lood on the ground!' She's good, isn't she? . . . All right—all right, Annie—we're coming!"

But Aunt Adeline saw that Charles was not gay. He made a light remark now and again, but his eyes had a strange, hurt, still look, as if something about the party had been bad.

After dinner Arthur got out the chessmen and said, "Beat me again, Phina?"

"I will have a game with Phina, if she doesn't object," Aunt Adeline said in a voice that would not brook a refusal.

"Why, you mean one!" Arthur said. "Well, I'll watch you."

Phina sat down across the board from Aunt Adeline, drew the white, and they began to play.

ADELINE COLLINGE had little to be grateful to Bonner Collinge for, beyond his money, but she was grateful to him for teaching her chess. It had been a great satisfaction to her, and she still played a weekly round with the rector of Trinity and nearly always won. She liked matching her wits against something so impersonal and mathematic. She liked the feel of the pieces and she liked to see hands moving on the pieces. She saw at once that Phina was worthy of her utmost skill, and her dark eyes sharpened with delight at battle.

"She's ruthless, Aunt Addie. Don't take her too lightly," Arthur said.

"I'm ruthless too," Aunt Adeline said. "Your move, Phina."

Phina's hands were very beautiful as they hesitated over the moves. Brown, long, strong, patrician in the extreme. Adeline Collinge was not ashamed of her own hands. They were small, but they were strong, too, and they did not shake with age or fear. They were very quick and they set the pieces down firmly, without reluctance. The great ring winked in the light. Charles had drawn up a stool, and sat across from Arthur. Felicia was telephoning again, her artificial laughter coming now and again into the room, but not distracting the players or the watchers.

It was a long and an exciting game. Once Aunt Adeline thought, I am too old for this sort of thing, but she went on playing, determined to win, using all her wits to win. It was plain to her that Phina was also determined to win. That she, too, recognized the game as, somehow, a symbol of their relationship. But Aunt Adeline was old and wily at the game, and she it was who said the final, inescapable "Mate!"

"Ruthless?" Phina said with a small, rueful laugh. "You put it mildly, Mrs. Collinge. But I'll take you on again tomorrow, if you like."

(Continued on Page 81)

"Imagine paper towels that wash dishes!"

"Onliwon Towels do twice the work of ordinary towels!"

Here are amazing new paper towels that do more than you've ever dreamed paper towels could do. Wonderful for all the usual mop-up chores, and for many other household tasks too! Onliwon Towels are tough; they do the dishcloth's job of washing dishes, scrubbing sinks, scouring pans . . . so strong they won't fall apart even when soaking wet! Onliwons are ideal for cleaning windows; quickly soak up moisture, leave no lint. Onliwons give you a real handful to work with; they're so big — about twice the size of ordinary paper towels! And perhaps best of all, they're pre-cut, so easy to take from the smart plastic holder; you use only one hand, no tearing or fumbling.

Beauty spot for kitchen or bathroom, the gleaming plastic Onliwon Holder is available in red, green or ivory; keep it handy on wall or table, refill before it's empty, have towels ready when you need them.

Buy Onliwon Holders
Handsome plastic; red, green, or ivory. Small and neat: 10 in. long, 3 in. wide, 5 in. high.

Buy Onliwon Towels
Compact double package; equals two rolls of ordinary paper towels.

Try Onliwon Towels on this special introductory offer

If not yet available at your grocer's, send 50c in coin for a gleaming Onliwon Holder and a package of Onliwon Household Towels. Or send only 25c for holder alone. A.P.W. Products Company, Inc., Albany 1, N. Y.

A. P. W. Products Company, Inc.
8 Bridge Street, Albany 1, N. Y.
A.P.W.

☐ Send postpaid, an Onliwon Holder and a package of Onliwon Household Towels. I enclose 50c.

☐ Send an Onliwon Holder. I enclose 25c.

Make my Holder ☐ red ☐ green ☐ ivory. Offers good in continental U. S. only; expire December 31, 1948.

Name.....

Address.....

City..... State.....

Bring summer indoors!

Look where your garden grows!

Right here in this Daystrom room that blooms with color and charm. The carefree plastic table top makes a cheerful background for your best china and glassware. Convenient side extensions zip smoothly out for extra elbow room. The comfort-curved chairs, with spring seats, are richly upholstered in washable Duran—handsome as leather, and so durable!

For light-hearted lounging

Relax and take life easy in these lazy lounge chairs. They're comfortably at home in den, rumpus room, or study. Perfect for a boy's room, too, because they invite hard wear, and they're covered with washable pla All Daystrom furniture is designed for beauty and durability. Priced for the budget-wise—at furniture and department stores everywhere.

So easy to preserve!

We're talking about the beauty of that Daystrom table top, of course! It's made for kitchen tasks. Steaming jars can't mar the satin-smooth surface that shrugs off stains, resists scratches and scars. And it cleans like a dream—with the swish of a damp cloth! When you buy chrome furniture, be sure it's Daystrom.

DAYSTROM

AN ASSOCIATE

-it's DAYSTROM furniture!

Chrome furniture for casual living—featured by stores from coast to coast

Daystrom Corporation, Olean, N. Y.; Daystrom Pacific Division, Pasadena, Calif.

DON'T WORRY! All Dayst table tops are laminated pla resist heat, scratches, s They're even cigarette-proof

(Continued from Page 79)

"Any time," Aunt Adeline said with mild satisfaction.

"Wonderful!" Arthur said. "I backed the wrong horse, though. I was willing you to win, Phina."

"Heavens knows, I tried," Phina said.

"You play a fine game," Aunt Adeline said.

"I thought I did," Phina agreed. "I don't feel so sure this minute."

"It'll teach you to stick to your own class, my girl," Arthur said. "I'm always an easy victim."

"It's no pleasure for a chess player to have easy victims," Aunt Adeline said sharply. "I believe I'll bid you all good night now."

SHE felt inordinately pleased to have beaten Phina. She knew she had never worked so hard at a game.

But in the morning she saw Arthur and Phina riding down the road together, the horses making a great crunching in the gravel drive, and she thought, I don't know whether you can win against that girl or not—in the long run. And why should I care? What is it to me? And how do I know she isn't completely loyal to Charles? There's nothing to show she isn't. Nothing but a feeling in my bones. She puts me in my place and I don't like it.

It was after lunch when Phina said, "Have we time for a game now, Mrs. Collinge?"

"If you like. Shall we go to my room?"

Phina brought a table and the chessmen and board. They sat down before the fire.

"Would you mind awfully taking your ring off?" Phina asked. "It's extraordinarily beautiful and I can't keep my eyes from it. I don't want to be distracted."

She took the ring off, dropped it into the box where the chessmen had been. Her hand felt light and unfamiliar without it. Again they played intently, silently, fiercely. The early autumn dusk was falling before they finished. Again Aunt Adeline won.

She moved back from the table, said, "You are a formidable opponent, my dear. I am very tired."

"I'm tired, too," Phina said. "I'll run along and let you rest."

"No, sit still. . . . Would you put another log on the fire? I am a cold old woman."

Phina put the log on, sat down in a deep chair, leaned back with hands clasped under her head. Aunt Adeline rescued her ring, put it on her finger.

"I'll tell you the story of this ring if you like," she said. "It is amusing—or it once seemed so. It belonged to my husband's mother, who was a very rich and unreasonable woman. She disliked me very much and I disliked her. But more than she disliked me, she disliked scandal. She was not a moral woman, but she liked the surface of life to be smooth and seemly. Her husbands—she had three of them—all died, so she was not called upon to enter the divorce courts, and she professed a great horror of infidelity.

"My husband and Charles' father were at the beginning and end of the first marriage there was close to twenty years of it. Bonner, my husband, was not what one might call a model husband. I accepted that early in my marriage, though I didn't like it any more than you would. But I, too, disliked change and scandal. However, there came a time when I could countenance it no longer; it was too flagrant. I had been married thirty years at the time and felt it was long enough. A young philanderer can be endured, but an old roué is not pleasant to live with. Your taste is offended. But I stayed with him. My mother-in-law left us all her money and she left me this ring, her favorite possession. It is a thank-you for winking at my husband's infidelity. She professed great fondness for me from that time on. As a matter of fact, I found that my husband was very ill and it would be cruel to leave him; I reaped a fortune for my sense of duty. . . . In my husband's last years, when he was too ill to be a man about town, we played chess every night."

"That is a rather horrible story," Phina said. "Why did you tell it to me?"

"It just came to my mind when you spoke of the ring. It is a long time ago and unimportant now, like a story in a book. I am not complaining of my marriage. It did me very well and was no doubt as good as I deserved. I was not a patient woman. And my husband was a man of great charm, when he cared to exert it. Arthur, though not so scholarly, is very like him."

Phina rose. "I must clean up for dinner," she said. "Thanks for the game. And I will beat you yet!" But she spoke almost curtly, as if she were offended at being Aunt Adeline's confidante. She moved quickly out of the room and at dinner she was quiet and aloof.

In the late evening the woman called Madeleine came with a man that no one took the trouble to explain. His name, it seemed, was "Herbie."

"A drink! A drink, darling!" Madeleine begged. She was a big, handsome, noisy woman. "We've just escaped the most ghastly dinner. Get us a drink, Arthur darling!"

"All right. Keep calm," Arthur said. "This is Madeleine, Aunt Addie—and Herbie."

Aunt Adeline bowed coldly. She thought them an appalling pair.

"OH, Felicia!" Madeleine said loudly, sitting down and crossing her legs. "You shouldn't have ditched my party! It was fun for once in a way, wasn't it, children? I'll never forget Tim Hardwicke's face! Did they tell you?"

"No. What?" Felicia demanded.

"They didn't tell you? Oh, it really was very funny! Tim came in with this crowd from town—Phina just bowled him over. Bit of the British Isles and all that, I suppose. 'What a stunning wife you have, Collinge!' he said. That was before Charlie, here, hove in sight. Did Arthur deny it like a gentleman? No, he did not. In fact, he led him on. It was after Charlie got there that it got really riotous. I don't think Tim knows yet who Phina belongs to. Tim's not

(Continued on Page 85)

* * * * * * * * *

Shore Graveyards

By Robert P. Tristram Coffin

Summer people wonder why the best Hilltops looking out here on the sea
Are taken up by people gone to rest;
The graveyards spoil the sightliest property,
And that, they hold, is poor economy.

Yet there is something, maybe, in this giving
Those who are gone as good things as you can;
And hilltops in high wind are not for living,
Low houses are the best for the fishing man;
It's summer folks, not natives, want to tan.

In far old times all sailing men took care
To paint sharp eyes upon their ship's sharp prow.
Might happen, in those old graveyards up there
Good eyes are watching over sailing people now.
Graves look well on the headlands, anyhow.

* * * * * * * * *

DEXTER

DOES YOUR WEEKLY WASHING IN ONE HOUR OR LESS

TWIN TUB

Double Sudsing

Convenient only with a Dexter Twin. Clothes are double washed — first in lukewarm suds of First Tub, second in hot, cleansing suds of Second Tub.

There's no secret why a Dexter Twin Tub washes your clothes quicker—cleaner—easier. It's the only washer with two washing tubs. It washes, rinses, wrings all at the same time—eliminates soaking, hand-rubbing, and pre-treating. Yes! Double Sudsing with the Dexter Twin turns out a tubful of super-clean clothes—ready for the line—every four minutes. It's TODAY'S BIGGEST WASHER VALUE.

Free Before you buy any washer send for this interesting booklet, "Two Instead of One." It tells why Double Sudsing washes best. It illustrates the 4 simple steps to a quicker, cleaner, easier wash, and shows how to have a lifetime of carefree washing machine satisfaction.

Write for your copy today to Dept. L88

THE DEXTER COMPANY · Fairfield, Iowa

Also Manufacturers of America's Finest Single Tub Washer

DEXTER'S LARGE MODERN FACTORY. Better washers since 1894.

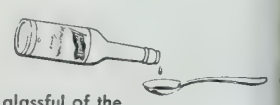
Topnotch quality
...costs less!

IT'S A Wow!

...this better
TOMATO JUICE COCKTAIL
you make with
French's Worcestershire Sauce

Taste a tomato juice cocktail made with French's—and you'll say it's a WOW! Made from a fine old English recipe, this choice Worcestershire is a blend of rare spices, soy, garlic, anchovies, tamarinds, distilled vinegar, and other savory ingredients—aged and mellowed to give the rich, distinctive flavor no other Worcestershire has. Use French's for meats and fish—pour it over hamburgers before cooking.

French's Worcestershire Sauce costs less, yet there's no finer Worcestershire at any price!



How to make a WOW!

It's so easy—takes just a moment. Use as much tomato juice as you want to serve.

Add a pinch of pepper and salt for each glassful.

Then for each glassful of the tomato juice add a teaspoonful of French's Worcestershire. Mix well—serve very cold.

MADE BY THE MAKERS OF FRENCH'S MUSTARD—THE LARGEST SELLING MUSTARD IN THE U. S. A.

(Continued from Page 81)

ery quick on the uptake, anyway, but I ish you could have seen his face! He didn't now whether he was coming or going! We ughed till we cried."

Arthur grinned and said, "Nice role while lasted. Quite easy, in fact."

"Phina was there to disillusion him, wasn't e?" Aunt Adeline put in tartly.

"Of course," Phina said. She had taken nitting from a brown bag and begun to nit, very fast. She flicked a glance upward om her needles. Her eyes seemed to say mething, but Aunt Adeline, accustomed reading accurately the language of the ves, found her message for once in some reign tongue. This, then, was what had appened to Charles at the party. This was hat had hurt him and brought that deeper redness to his eyes.

"Oh, not very definitely!" Madeleine said ith a crow of laughter. "Arthur, you ought get married and stop your naughty ways nce and for all. You're not safe. I've been nding you pretty girls for ten years. ove 'em and leave 'em—that's Arthur. Not at you aren't more amusing single, my ar!"

"Pretty girls aren't to marry, pet," rthur said.

Herbie gave an offensive "Haw! Haw!" d Aunt Adeline stood up.

"If you'll excuse me," she said stiffly, and nt out and up the stairs.

She heard Herbie say loudly, "You got e old girl's back up, Mad! Haw! Haw!" d Madeleine say good-humoredly, "Hush, sh, Herbie. Don't be advertising the fact at you don't know a Lady of the Old hool when you see e!"

This, Aunt Adeline ought with anger, was at Felicia called so- ty? This was what she nted to "keep her end " with? This was what sent Phina out to representative of Amer- n life? It might be suitable enough for thur, but Phina?

She sat down with a book, but turned no ges. A girl who could play chess like that enjoy playing with such riffraff! It was affront to her judgment of people. There s surely nothing cheap about the tall, rved English girl. She might enjoy rid- over the countryside with a sporting wd, if that had been her life in England, a party with a red-faced man who said aw! Haw!" like an obscenity and a zenly handsome woman who crossed her s till you saw her knees—no.

CHARLES came in quietly, picked up the ok from her hands, laid it aside. "You can devastatingly rude," he said.

"Yes," she admitted.

"They're really quite decent people, you w," he said. "Noisy, a little vulgar, may- but decent. They have a zest for life."

"You're welcome to what friends you ," she said, "but, as Herbie said, they t my back up.' You can have a zest for without vulgarity."

"Perhaps you can't, without a little," arles said. "I notice they often go hand in nd."

Charles, I wish I hadn't come. I wish 'd take me home."

I will, if you really want me to. It's aw- y good to have you here, though. It's a ef to have someone about who says what thinks. Besides, I just like to have you e. You always give meaning to life."

Do I, Charles? I don't think I know at the meaning is—less than ever as I get r the end of it."

You give it meaning, all the same," he sted. "Stay till Sunday, anyway."

Very well. . . . Your wife doesn't like Charles. You may rest assured that if I ed here a hundred years, she would never eal herself to me."

I told you not to think of that. . . . she does like you."

No," Aunt Adeline said firmly, "she s not. But she is a remarkable young woman, and an enigmatic one. She interests me very much."

"Yes—me, too," Charles said. He bent and kissed her. "Good night, Aunt Adeline."

"Good night, Charles."

As she lay awake that night the past came to her again. . . . That Ruhrig woman, who painted after the manner of Picasso. When Bonner was in the room with her—well, it was like when you rubbed a cat's fur till it gave off sparks. You felt the electricity in the room. You felt it with Bonner and the Ruhrig woman together, always. Bonner became inordinately polite, fetching her things, saying "my wife" often. . . . With Sadie Oliver it had been different, but just as definite. He became silly when Sadie was about, pretending to a youthfulness he had long left behind, making a mock of his real scholarliness. A boyish charm, that was the pattern then.

AND when Phina and Arthur were in the room together, there came always that old pricking, knowledgeable warning. Nothing to put a finger on, say, "This is the proof," but she had lived with unfaithfulness too long to doubt her premonitions. There was something there. But could she say to Charles, "It's true"? How could she, with only a feeling for proof? But Charles himself had had the feeling, also, and trusted it. It would break Charles' heart. He had a heart to break and this would do it. She, an old woman, did not give meaning to his life—no, Phina did that. She only knew where his meaning lay and put emphasis on it, loving him, being pained for him. And if she had the proof and gave it to him? What then?

Taste is the tact of the mind.

—BOUMERS: Treasury of World's Wit and Wisdom. Edited by Norman Lockridge (Black Hawk Press).

In the morning when she woke and put on her purple dressing gown, waited for her breakfast, she walked to the window and saw down below Phina raking leaves. She still wore riding clothes, but she had the peasant scarf over her hair. She was working steadily, and the motions of her long arms with the rake were pleasant to watch. But she was not alone. Arthur stood there, smoking a cigarette, watching her, now and then saying something with a mocking smile. Once Phina paused, put her arm up against her forehead in a weary sort of gesture.

Aunt Adeline was not given to eavesdropping. She never read other people's letters and she always made her presence known wherever she was. But now she carefully and silently raised her window and sat down close to it. They were now almost beneath her window and could not see her without craning their necks. The wind was very cold, and even the padded dressing gown could not keep her from shivering.

And the first and only thing she heard shocked her so that she listened no more.

"All right, Phina, but if you think you are fooling anybody or protecting anybody, you're quite mistaken, you know. You love me and a blind man would know it, darling. Being a reserved and honorable Britisher doesn't help you at all. And I won't help you either."

Almost at once, before Phina had made any reply, Arthur walked away whistling, but even had he spoken again, Aunt Adeline would not have heard. She closed the window, scarcely knowing whether she was being quiet about it or not. She huddled near the fire, shaken and old.

Annie brought her breakfast. "Don't you feel good this morning, Mis' Collinge?" Annie asked with a mixture of sympathy and cheer.

"No, I don't," Aunt Adeline said. "I don't want any breakfast."

"Oh, you just eat a little, Mis' Collinge. That raspberry jam is special—I opened it just for you. It goes real good with toast. You take a little coffee anyway. Nobody can feel good without his coffee!"

"All right, Annie. Thank you," Aunt Adeline said. "And don't send anybody up to see how I am, please. I'm not sick."

HANDY and dandy for a tasty MEAL!

KINGAN'S
VIENNA SAUSAGES

Every bite's a delight! Tasty, tender, little open-end sausages, made of beef and pork. Temptingly seasoned and slowly smoked for delicious flavor. KINGAN'S Vienna Sausages are a lot of good eating at little cost. Serve them cold in salads, sandwiches and as appetizers. Or serve them hot as a main meat course that's fine for entertaining. Keep several cans of KINGAN'S Vienna Sausages on your shelf for quick, thrifty meals!

15 VARIETIES of DELICIOUSLY PREPARED CANNED MEATS

Corned Beef Hash
K-P Luncheon Meat
Spaghetti and Meat
Beef Stew
Vienna Sausages
Liver Spread
Potted Meats
Chili Con Carne
Hamburger Patties
Beef and Gravy
Pork and Gravy
Pork Sausages
Picnic Spread
Cooked Pork Brains
Lunch Tongue

Backed by over 100 years of Reliable Meat Processing
KINGAN & CO., Indianapolis, Indiana

SCORE SPAM, by cutting the top lightly with a knife to make a pattern • MIX together ⅓ cup brown sugar and 1 tsp. each prepared mustard, vinegar and water • SPREAD over SPAM • Stud with whole cloves • BAKE in moderate oven (375°) 20 minutes, basting twice • SERVE generous slices with sauce poured over... buttered green beans and carrots from your garden for good companions.

WHY GO WEST? Stay home and make this western salad: chunks of lettuce, quartered tomatoes, green peppers, slices and slivers of tender-mild SPAM. Touch of garlic, liberal splashes of French dressing.

MIDDAY MAGIC. Cut generous slices of chilled SPAM to go with an old fashioned tomato-cucumber-green pepper-lettuce salad. French dressing or mayonnaise. Pickled crab apples or relish.

HUSBAND HOME for lunch? Please him with a baked bean SPAMwich—juicy slices of SPAM and hot baked beans on a buttered bun. Peach and cottage cheese salad. A he-man's meal in 5 minutes.

COLD OR HOT SPAM HITS THE SPOT!

HORMEL
GOOD FOOD

SPAM is a registered trademark for a pure pork product, packed only in 12 oz. cans by Geo. A. Hormel & Co., Austin, Minn.

made for the big scene, the attack with grandeur, the hammer blow on the emotions when it was needed. But she knew with her reasoning mind that Phina and Charles were of different stuff. Arthur she might impress by melodrama, not Phina and Charles. And yet it was Arthur who had moved Phina's untouched heart. It could have been Charles had he been bolder, had he put forward his bishop's pawn confidently enough, but he had not. But could he even yet be made to?

She leaned back in her chair, closed her eyes against the dinner, now cold and unappetizing. She saw only a chessboard with the pieces very tall, Phina across the board from her and all the family watching with an avid intentness. She boldly captured an enormous knight with an enormous bishop and waited for Phina to do the obvious thing, take the bishop with her queen, but then her breath grew tight in her chest as she saw that long brown hand move her rook all the way across the board, that devious move that would in the end defeat her opponent. She opened her eyes and there was no Phina, no anyone, no chessmen.

All the same, she said to herself with a remnant of stubbornness, it is attack that has beaten her this far.

But she could not think out her attack. She could not find the flaw in Phina's armor. What did she have to offer Phina but wisdom? And what comfort wisdom which said that fifty years from now none of this would matter an iota? Perhaps Phina should take Arthur and learn her lesson in bitterness as she, Adeline, had done with Bonner Collinge.

I am old, she said. Old.

She gave a wry grin at her own duplicity, practiced even in privacy. She knew that she was still searching past weariness, past indifference, past self-pity, for the great attack, the shock that would make Charles demand what was his, fight for his love with no holds barred.

When Arthur came in and said, "I was supposed to get your tray and Annie's cross at me. . . . What's the matter? You haven't eaten anything!" she said, "Sit down, Arthur."

He grinned, sat down and lit a cigarette. "I feel a lecture coming," he said. "We sold Black Cloud today. You can't touch me, darling. Of course, we haven't got the money yet, but Finley's got some Australian wools in at long last and I'm going to town tomorrow and get myself decked out like a lily of the field."

"A very apt comparison," Aunt Adeline said. "'They toil not, neither do they spin.'"

"Oh, I made the deal," Arthur said. "You wouldn't want my morale lowered by the lack of a few rags, would you, Aunt Addie?"

"There's nothing wrong with your morale that I can see. . . . Arthur, how would you like your half of you boys' inheritance from me now?"

He gave her a flick of a glance, mocking, suspicious. "Oh, very much. Who wouldn't?" he said. "What are you up to? Strings attached, I suppose?"

"One string only. You're to leave the farm, where you are only an ornament anyway, and take your mother with you. That's all."

He laughed. "That's a rope, darling, not a string. I like the farm."

"You like the farm!" she repeated with some anger.

"Oh, with an occasional jaunt to town. No. I'll wait, Aunt Addie."

"We're a long-lived family," Aunt Adeline said with some acidity. "My grandmother lived to ninety. My mother to eighty-seven."

"You tempt me. You frighten me," Arthur said, his eyes very bright and mocking. "Still, I'm not biting."

She sat quite still, feeling failure creeping through her. She hadn't taken this for the ultimate answer, but she had taken it for one answer.

"Please take that awful tray down," she said at last. "Just don't say anything about being indispensable here, that's all."

He picked up the tray. "You're not being very subtle," he said from the doorway.

"Subtlety is overdor said.

Later there were r
stairs. Aunt Adeli not go down. S heart fluttered pillows behind her a...
that mistake. It had been a .
admitted. She should have attacked .
Felicia would have agreed, she knew, .
wangled the departure somehow. It was much a part of Arthur, this getting ahead Charles on every count. She had made mistake and Charles would hold it again her.

She could see from the window across fields that Charles loved so much. The moo light lay like milk upon the meadows. F the first time in her long life she had a bi knowledge of what Charles' kinship with land meant. This patient waiting throu the winter, this looking for the crop summ upon summer—this was the rhythm Charles' life. He did not force life to will; he let life move through him as it wou
This pain over Phina, this harvest that h seemed so beautiful and had turned out meager—this was just another winter
Charles. He would not die of it. He wo go on living. He would not let his fields gr up to weeds and scrub because they h failed him once, but he was already asham of his cry and needed her no more. A yet—and yet if disaster threatened his fa would he not fight against it? If disas threatened his love, would he lift no ha
But what disaster? What could stir him i a cry that could be heard by that tall, c trolled girl who was about to throw his l away?

Charles came and bade her a quiet, gra good night. They did not talk. He kn knew. He wasn't going to hash i music still went on below. When .
and Phina and Arthur came up the was quite late.

"Six too early?" Arthur said.

"No, I'll be ready," Phina answered. " leave a note for Charles." Her voice was lowered. It was casual, meant no more t it said.

So Phina was going to town with Arth
Clear to the city, it seemed, if they w starting so early. Something stirred in A Adeline's mind, some quickening, as if s plan were being handed to her. But it not come clear, not that night.

In the morning the plan was there, formed by fate, not really her plan at all, given her by chance. She came downst and found Felicia crying over her co tears that were mostly excitement, as A line could plainly see.

"Well, what's the matter now, Feli
she asked tartly.

Felicia wiped her eyes, but the small satisfied curl to her thin lips. Con gone off with Arthur," she said line, I don't know what to do!"

"No one's asked you to do
he? How do you know th
They ride every morning, d
she felt no longer tired.
through her and made
Charles hadn't got her attack.

"This is differe
Phina took a h
I've been so s happened th

"Stop your sniveli cover up your cat-and-can Where's Charles?"

"Out in the barn. Oh, it's all so setting—I just don't know what to do!

Aunt Adeline wanted her coffee, but went up the stairs with surprising quick walked down the hall to Phina and Cha room. The note—she must get the no there was one. The beds were turned neatly, one window was open. Her glance darted here and there, to the che drawers, to the desk in the corner, st with account books, to the dressing t unlittered with bottles or feminine gad
She walked over to the desk, lifted pa oing to be thrown but could not now rein her horse, or would not.

"No," Charles said abruptly. "Not here. ot now."

"Yes. Here. Now," Phina persisted. "I ill go back to England if that is what you ant, but say it."

"Not here," Charles said again.

"It has to be here. They're making it be ere. Don't you see that? They are not oing to give us time. In time I could have own you that I loved you, but I have not ad and I am not going to have time enough. hey will not let me have it. I know you now I have loved Arthur. How could you elp know it? It happened suddenly—it was ver as suddenly. But it happened. I don't ink of any excuse for it, none at all. It appened, before you came home. But I do e you can't want me after—after ——" or the first time her voice faltered, then it ew strong again. She turned to Aunt Adeine. "Why did you come here?" she demanded. "Why have you made me do this? on't you see how cruel and merciless it is? on't you see that you are forcing me into omething wicked and preposterously wrong? rying to make me choose? All you can see love and duty. Can't you see that I can't ve with Charles like this? Knowing he nows, not having time to show him I love m? You told me ourself he'd always d nothing, Arthur erything. That he uldn't take beayal. And I have trayed him. How n he take it? But am not choosing rthur because of at—I will go back England where belong. I don't ant it this way, t this is the way is. If I'd had ne—if I'd had ne —— But I ll not be one of our pawns!" Phina ished.

"Pawns? If I dn't seen you as queen, I wouldn't ve bothered with u," Aunt Adee said. She felt r heart thumping. ould he take it? Even this? Could he? as it humanly possible?

"Phina, come here," Charles said.

She turned from Aunt Adeline, walked ward him, blindly, but with her head still gh. "I'm sorry," she said. "But you edn't pity me."

"Pity you? How could I pity you when ove you so much?"

"Dinner's ready—it's spoilt!" Annie said a comical upward squeak of excitement.

"Well, let's eat it. We're all home—let's t it," Charles said. He had pulled Phina's at from her shoulders, taken her hand and ined his fingers in hers.

Aunt Adeline thought of the picture upirs. They ought to take another and put ina in the front line, she thought. Miracles ake your knees shake.

"These reserved Britishers!" Arthur murred in her ear. His voice didn't sound ter, only amused and ironic.

ND all through dinner he kept up a light atter: about his new clothes, about cravats d Australian tweeds versus Scotch; about nie's strange dessert which she must have ncocted out of excitement and anything at came to hand during that strange day. d Aunt Adeline found herself helping him, king caustic, humorous remarks to comment his lightness. Perhaps only his de was hurt, but surely that had received blow. She found herself admiring his ility to cover his hurt. He was a philander, she knew, something of a parasite, fish, but he had something.

But up in her room later she began to put things in her bag, abruptly very tired, wishing for home, wishing for Donna. There was a light tap and she said "Yes?" without welcome.

Phina opened the door and stood there. "Could I help you?" she asked. There was a difference in her. She had at the same time more power, more gentleness. She looked like the mistress of this place.

"No, thanks. I've been a bird of passage from childhood on. I know how to pack."

"Wouldn't we have time for one last game?" Phina said.

AUNT ADELINE withdrew her hands from silken folds, stood erect in her purple robe, facing Phina. Though she was a small woman and Phina tall, she contrived to look tall.

"No, it would be useless," she said. "You would beat me. I concede it."

"I never have," Phina said slowly.

"I am a proud old woman," Aunt Adeline said, "but I must admit you have beaten me from the beginning, Phina. Even your attack tonight, though it gave me considerable satisfaction to watch, was unnecessary. I feel compelled to confess that, child. Charles would have waited for you till doomsday, if necessary. I wanted him to do something—so did you, I fancy. But Charles had done all he could do. He loved you, he left you free to find your own way and you were finding it, with some pain for all concerned. That's all there was to it and I had nothing to do with it, except to drive you against your deepest instincts, which were right. That it has come out happily did not depend on me—quite the contrary. I did not even see what the main issue was. You are correct when you say the king's gambit is not a sure win."

"Still—I am glad I played it, once," Phina said.

"I too. I like things settled. I planned the scene. It came off. One always likes the feeling of power that gives." She reached to the pocket of her bag, drew out the note, twisted it into a small spill. Then she drew off the great ring, shoved the note through it. "Charles never saw this," she said. "I wanted him to be moved to anger, to go after you, anything. I put him through a good deal of unnecessary agony today, but he did not move. It was, I suppose, the greatest gift a man could give a woman, her freedom; but freedom is a terrible responsibility, is it not? Not many of us are big enough to use it when it is ours. . . . Would you like to wear this? It belongs in the family and I should not like to see it on Felicia's hand."

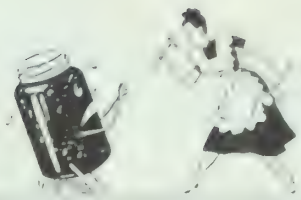
Phina took the ring slowly, drew out the note, held it crumpled in her palm, then she put the ring on her finger, where it made a great glow of proud light. Then she stood looking at Aunt Adeline, while something of woman knowledge seemed to pass from one to the other, some mantle of power transferred, some worldly wisdom that indicated peace hard come by. She moved suddenly, bent and kissed Aunt Adeline, with warmth, even great tenderness, she who abhorred the demonstrative, the easy, the sentimental approach.

"Phina, are you up here?" Charles called from the hall.

Phila moved toward the voice without a word, was gone.

Aunt Adeline turned to her task of packing. "Well, that's that," she said aloud in almost her usual voice of irony. But then she paused and put up her thin, ringless hand to her cheek, stood quietly a long time looking out at the moonlit meadows. THE END

NEXT MONTH



THERE was a wall up between them. Pete didn't know what it was made of; he only knew he couldn't breach it.

Willie, his wife, wouldn't breach it, and Willie was ready to call it quits. But fate wields an inalienable veto power, even when it comes to reservations for Reno. What does a rich woman do when she suddenly cannot afford a divorce? Read

The Pumpkin Shell

By Charlotte Armstrong

Complete in the September Journal

No more tug-of-war methods for opening jars! No need to go at it hammer-and-tongs . . . when you use easy-opening Good Luck Jar Rubbers!

NEW! EXCLUSIVE!

SPLIT-TAB

GOOD LUCK JAR RUBBERS

FOR SPLIT-SECOND OPENING

From the time you home-can the first spring fruits till the last pickling is done, keep using SPLIT-TAB Good Luck Jar Rubbers!

They seal tight, they open like magic. Just give that little tab a quick rip . . . and z-z-zip! Off comes the rubber, and the most stubborn jar is easy to open.

Good Luck Jar Rubbers have a wide sealing surface, too. That means extra protection. Made of high-quality rubber, they fit all standard jars.

Ask for the new SPLIT-TAB Good Luck Jar Rubbers at grocery, hardware and department stores, or write direct.

BOSTON WOVEN HOSE & RUBBER CO., Cambridge, Mass.

Look For This Package!
10¢ a Dozen
3 For 25¢

NO TUGGING!
NO WASTED FOOD!
NO BROKEN GLASS!
NO FRAZZLED TEMPERS!

a NEW and BETTER
Grated TUNA

● Packed in larger "bite-size" pieces . . . far superior in texture, flavor and appearance . . . here is the ideal tuna for every tuna recipe . . . hot or cold!

This new Grated style has been acclaimed by food experts from coast to coast as "the perfect pack" . . . ready for instant use in hors d'oeuvres, salads, sandwiches or hot entrees without the bother of flaking. Simply open the can and use!

Rich in protein, containing Vitamin "D," minerals and other vital food elements, these quality brands of tuna give you a maximum of food value. Because the dark meat of tuna is never used and only the tender light meat is packed, every dish you prepare is a coup de maitre!

This new quality is the result of years of research and is exclusive with these two famous brands. Try it . . . today!

VAN CAMP SEA FOOD CO., INC. ★ Terminal Island, California

THERE IS NO SUBSTITUTE FOR TUNA, WHEN YOU USE

BUY EITHER BRAND . . . THE QUALITY IS THE SAME

QUICK and EASYS for Two

By LOUELLA G. SHOUER

ANY forecast for August is likely to predict not warm, but hot weather. You can't live on cold food, though, so don't go off the deep end with salad meals every night. Mix them up, hot and cold, according to your mood and the thermometer. Keep your meal service casual, but not careless. Before you go into your kitchen routine at night, get into something comfortable. After dinner, relax and enjoy the luxury of leisure.

Cool Comfort

*Patio Tomato Soup
*California Crab Salad
Potato Chips
Cut Fruit with Mint
Coffee

You just think it is too hot to eat. What you probably mean is that it's too hot to prepare a hot dinner and heat up the kitchen. You won't need to with this meal. It's fun to prepare—cooling to look at and to eat—truly refreshing.

PATIO TOMATO SOUP

This is a cold tomato and tomato soup. Chill 1 can condensed tomato soup. Thin with ½ cup thin cream or top milk. Peel 1 ripe tomato. Cut into pieces. Fold into soup with a little chopped parsley. Season with salt, garlic salt, pepper and a small pinch of basil.

CALIFORNIA CRAB SALAD

You may know this one. As a choice during a heat wave, it's just the thing for supper, as it's filling but not heavy. Peel 1 chilled ripe avocado. Cut in half lengthwise and remove the pit. Brush with lemon juice and sprinkle lightly with salt. Fill with the following fish salad: Pick over ½ pound fresh or canned crab meat, removing any bits of shell. Soak in vinegar 10 minutes. Squeeze out the vinegar. Season with salt, pepper and paprika. Add ½ cup mayonnaise, 2 tablespoons chili sauce, 2 teaspoons minced sour pickles, 1 teaspoon minced onion and ½ teaspoon chopped parsley. Mix well. Serve on a bed of salad greens. Garnish with water cress accompanied by crisped potato chips.

It's the Life

*Texas Roundups
*Pickled Tomatoes and Cucumbers
Watermelon Iced Coffee

Why not eat this one out tonight? Really use your outdoor fireplace, if you have one. It isn't just for occasions and gang gatherings, and anyway, nice weather doesn't always fall on week ends. While your husband is preparing the fire, you can get the tomatoes and cucumbers sliced, watermelon cut, and so on. This meal is a cinch to prepare. No fireplace? It's good indoors too. Pick a cool spot!

TEXAS ROUNDUPS

Heat in a skillet or saucepan 1 can chile con carne or 1 can kidney beans to which you've added chili powder to taste. Grill seasoned hamburgers as you like them. Split and toast round buns. Spread with butter or margarine. Put a hamburger and thin slice of onion on half of each bun. Cover with a spoonful of chili. Put the other half bun on top.

PICKLED TOMATOES AND CUCUMBERS

Slice tomatoes and cucumbers. Sprinkle with salt, pepper and sugar. Add vinegar to cover and let stand while you're fixing the roundups.

Unruffled Sunday Dinner

*Melon Prosciutto
*Chicken-and-Squash Casserole Parmesan
Parsley Potatoes—Tossed Salad
Spongecake with *Fruit Sauce
Coffee

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Sunday is your lazy day. After breakfast you don't mind spending forty-five minutes or so in the kitchen, but after that you don't want to have to think about your dinner until the cool of the evening, and then just to eat and enjoy it. This is the kind of meal for just such a program. Prepare your casserole, first course and dessert in the A.M. You could even fix the greens for the salad. They wait well in the refrigerator if wrapped in a towel.

MELON PROSCIUTTO

If you can buy this thin sliced Italian ham, fine. If you can't, use sliced boiled or baked ham bought in any delicatessen; ¼ pound is enough to buy. Remove fat from slices. Cut rind off ¼ ripe honeydew melon. Remove seeds and cut into thin crescent-shaped strips. Chill until ready to serve. Alternate slices of melon and ham on serving plates. Sprinkle with black pepper—no salt—before serving.

CHICKEN-AND-SQUASH CASSEROLE PARMESAN

Cut a split broiler into 4 pieces. Remove tail. Wash. Season well with salt and pepper. Dip pieces of chicken in a half-and-half mixture of flour and freshly grated Parmesan cheese. Brown the chicken in just enough hot shortening to keep chicken from sticking. Cut 1 small yellow crookneck squash or 2 small zucchini squashes into rather thick chunks. Lay chicken and squash in casserole, tucking squash in and around chicken. Grate a little garlic over all, or sprinkle with garlic salt. Sprinkle squash with salt and pepper. Chicken has already been seasoned. Add ½ cup heavy cream to pan in which you browned chicken, after fat, if any, has been drained off. Heat cream in pan to get all the good brown bits. Pour it over squash and chicken. Sprinkle with a little more grated Parmesan cheese. Cover and bake in moderate oven, 350° F., until chicken is tender—about 30 minutes. If you make this dish in A.M., cool and refrigerate after pouring cream on squash. Take out in time to get the chill out of casserole. Bake as directed—but it will take a little longer to bake, as mixture has been chilled.

FRUIT SAUCE FOR CAKE

Beat 1 egg white stiff. Add 3 tablespoons sugar, a tablespoonful at a time, beating after each addition. Add ½ cup black or red raspberries, drained. Beat up with rotary beater to incorporate the berries. Chill and serve on slices of unfrosted, plain pound or spongecake. Spongecake is best if your bakery has it.

Home Plate

Spinach—Hot French Dressing
Corn on the Cob
Sliced Tomatoes
Celery and Cottage Chee
Sliced Peaches
Coffee

Gardens are going great guns this month. Hope you have a friend who has one and come in for occasional handouts of produce. Even if you don't, sweet corn and sun-ripe tomatoes can't be beat. Vegetable plates always taste better at home. Here's one that looks good, tastes good and is easy to prepare.

SPINACH WITH HOT FRENCH DRESSING

Heat ⅓ cup French dressing to boil. Add 2 tablespoons chopped parsley, 1 hard-cooked egg, chopped, and ½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce. Pour over drained cooked or canned spinach and mix well.

CELERY AND COTTAGE CHEESE

Season ¼ pound cottage cheese with salt, pepper and grated onion. Stuff meaty stalks of Pascal celery with it. Sprinkle surface with poppy seeds. If you haven't any poppy seeds, sprinkle with paprika.

Borrowed From Abroad

Eggs Fooyoung—Rice
South American Salad
Swedish Cookies
Spiced Iced Tea

Eggs Fooyoung is a Chinese version of the popular American Western omelet, and a quick and easy if there ever was one. Meatless, it helps out on the budget. Your salad may be your first course, if you wish. Of Spanish origin, it is served in many Latin-American countries. There are many variations—all good. . . . For dessert, buy the little Swedish sugar cookies in the bakery. Any sugar cooky will do if your bakery doesn't have the Swedish type. Serve with spiced iced tea.

EGGS FOOYOUNG

Beat 3 eggs. Add ½ of a No. 2 can of bean sprouts—the kind you use for chop suey and chow mein. Also add 1 tablespoon chopped green pepper and ¼ cup finely chopped onion. Season with ½ teaspoon salt and a good dash of pepper. Mix well. Melt 1 tablespoon shortening in large hot skillet. Spoon mixture into skillet as if you were making pancakes. Spread out vegetables evenly. Brown quickly on one side. Turn with pancake turner and fry on the other side. Makes 2 large pancakes. Serve with rice and soy sauce.

SOUTH AMERICAN SALAD

Rub your individual salad bowls with garlic. Remove crusts from 3 slices bread. Crumble 1 slice bread in each bowl. Chop coarsely 1 large onion, 2 tomatoes, 1 pickled chili pepper, ½ green pepper and the firm portion of 1 cucumber. Break up 4 sardines and add. Season well with salt and pepper and mix with French dressing. Pour part of vegetable mixture over bread. Divide the remaining piece of bread, crumbled, between the two bowls. Cover with rest of vegetable salad mixture. Chill 15 minutes before serving. This will give you time to cook the rice and make the Fooyoung.

SPICED ICED TEA

When you brew the tea, make it strong. Put in ⅛ teaspoon nutmeg, ½ cinnamon stick and 3 sprigs mint. When you remove tea bags, add juice of ½ lemon and 3 tablespoons sugar. Strain and pour over ice. Serve with additional lemon slices and extra sugar, if desired.

From real

"CENTERPIECE" FRUITS

comes Libby's Fruit Cocktail

The same quality of fruit you'd choose for a table centerpiece

CRYSTAL CAVALIER AND LADY banked with glorious, sun-blushed fruits! Don't you get a thrill out of arranging a centerpiece such as this? It's fun to choose the finest beauties—fruits that not only look lovely but taste extra luscious, too.

JUST AS LUSCIOUS as your centerpiece fruits are the ones Libby carefully selects for fruit cocktail. Fresh, whole, hand-picked peaches, pears, seedless grapes and cherries from sun-drenched orchards and vineyards near Sunnyvale, California—plus Libby's peak-flavor pineapple from Hawaii! In the world's largest and finest Fruit Cocktail Kitchen, Libby uses only fruits of true centerpiece quality. That's why this cocktail combination is so extra good—why smart shoppers insist on Libby's. Taste it and you'll serve Libby's Fruit Cocktail often.

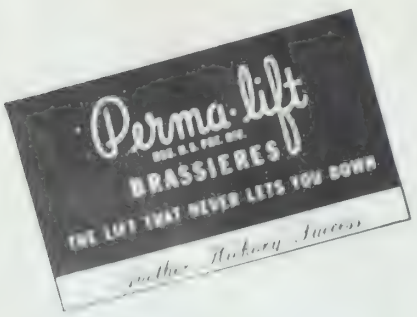
Libby, McNeill & Libby, Chicago 9, Ill.

HEAR! "MY TRUE STORY"
Mornings—Mon. thru Fri.
ABC Network



IN ALL FRUITS
LOOK TO Libby's
FOR PERFECTION

For lovely young curves

THE LIFT THAT NEVER LETS YOU DOWN

Your dainty "Perma-lift" bra is specially constructed to add allure to your youthful figure. The exclusive cushion insets at the base of the bra cups gently and healthfully support your bust from below, never lose that support through countless washings and wear. Lovely new styles at your favorite corsetiere. $1.50 to $3.50. Buy America's Favorite bra today.

ISN'T EMILY MARVELOUS?

(Continued from Page 45)

"Oh, yes. I" she hesitated "I used to go round with Van—Mr. Vandyke, the president. We were in Europe at the end of the war. And Japan last year. Government missions, of course."

"Oh," I said again. Thoughtfully.

And then I kissed her, and she went into the apartment house. I was halfway down the street when I realized that I was still holding the little case I had been carrying for her. I went back, gave it to the doorman, and then stood on the sidewalk for a moment, looking up at the windows, wondering which belonged to Emily's apartment. I wondered what she was thinking. I wondered if she was thinking about me.

I called her at the office next morning. "Emily?" I said.

"This is Miss Maynard's secretary," said the voice. "May I say who is calling?"

I gulped, and gave my name.

Presently Emily spoke. "I was just going to call you," she said. "Mark, Mr. Vandyke is giving a reception tonight, and he wants you to come."

"You mean you've told him?" I asked.

"Why, certainly," said Emily. "He wants to know what we'd like for a wedding present. Can you meet me—Fifth Avenue entrance of the Plaza at six? Don't dress."

"Er—no, all right," I said, remembering the moth-eaten state of my dress clothes.

Emily was looking perfectly beautiful in a black suit and a small flowery hat. She also looked as if she had never done a day's work in her life, and I felt better.

The president of Consolidated Plastics was receiving all the guests with the usual handshake—all the guests, that is, except Emily, who got her cheek patted.

"So this," he said, "is the lucky man. Well, my boy, you've certainly got a treasure. I hope you're not going to take her away from me?"

I should have said, "I certainly am." But before I got around to "That's for Emily to decide," she was waving to someone at the other end of the room. She took my hand, and I followed meekly.

"Steve—may I introduce my fiancé, Mark Patterson?"

Steve Laughton, the ace news commentator, grabbed both Emily's hands in his enormous paws and kissed her soundly but, fortunately for him, platonically.

"Emily, darling! This is wonderful! When did it happen? . . . Very glad to know you, Patterson," he said warmly. "You certainly are a lucky fellow. Isn't Emily marvelous?"

Emily dimpled prettily. "Nonsense, Steve," she said. "Mark, Steve's going to do the commentaries for Consolidated's new radio program. Isn't that marvelous? We're all so pleased."

STEVE did the masculine equivalent of dimpling prettily, and even when Emily deserted him abruptly in, as it were, middimple, he didn't seem to mind. I turned back and he was still smiling fatuously after her. I wished I had obeyed my impulse and had dragged her out of the room. By the hair, if necessary.

The rest of the evening was like a bad dream. The most famous faces in America kept smiling at me—in intervals of smiling at Emily; the most famous voices said, "Glad to know you, Mark"; and then, "Isn't Emily marvelous?"

At eleven-thirty, I found myself having supper at the Stork Club with a steel magnate, a sports writer, the sports writer's cover-girl fiancée, and a movie star. I never found out their connection with Consolidated; just as I began to figure it out, I leaped to my feet with a yell.

"Where," I demanded, "is Emily?"

The steel magnate gave me a friendly push that sent me reeling back into my chair. "Relax, relax," he said expansively. "Don't you know that Emily always goes to bed at ten-thirty during the week?"

I began to splutter with rage, and the movie star looked out from under one cinnamon bang.

"It's all right," she said soothingly. "Everybody in New York knows what time Emily goes to bed. Ten-thirty and she goes home."

"She didn't want to break up the party, but she said to tell you have a good time," said the sports writer. "Marvelous girl," he added, staring pointedly at his fiancée, who didn't notice, being much too preoccupied with her turkey sandwich.

The next day I arrived at Consolidated to take Emily to lunch.

"Miss Maynard's office?" I asked the receptionist.

"Twenty-seventh floor," she said automatically; and then, "Oh, excuse me. Are you Miss Maynard's fiancé? We're all so thrilled, Mr. . . . Patterson, isn't it? Miss Maynard is a marvelous person, isn't she?"

"Sensational," I agreed grimly, and made for the elevator.

Miss Maynard's—darn it, Emily's—secretary was a small, pretty blonde who gave me an easy chair, a magazine and a warm welcome.

"I'm so glad to know you, Mr. Patterson," she breathed. "I think it's wonderful, really I do. Just like the movies. Miss Maynard is just the nicest person, she really is. Of course, some girls don't like to work for other women but—well, I guess Miss Maynard is different. So friendly."

"Really?" I said. "Confidentially, can't you give me the name of just one person who can't stand the sight of her?"

Two small blue eyes widened at me. "Oh, no, Mr. Patterson. She's the most popular person ——"

And at that moment Emily herself sw through, pursued by a pack of newsmen.

"The press," explained my fiancée's retary knowingly. "It's always like this a a news conference."

Emily, I said to myself, Emily, what's h pening to us? Where have you gone? T isn't my world—and I didn't dream it yours either. Up in Connecticut, you were ferent there. Human. A pretty girl fallin love. And what are you here? The perso assistant to the president of Consolidated P tics. A success. And what am I? A strugg engineer. With plenty of ambition, but much else. Why did you fall in love with my darling? How can you possibly stay love with me? What have I got to offer when you've already got so much? Oh, Emil wish you'd been the illegal immigrant.

SHE came out of her office in a rush. "I ling, I'm sorry to have kept you waitin

I took her to lunch at a restaurant wh I'd eaten once before—when I had an pense account to entertain a client. Emily had to have the best.

"I like this place," she said innocen and that decided it. I knew what I had to Over coffee, I suggested breaking our gagement. "You can't really want to m me," I said. "It must be an infatuat What can I give you, when you've alre got everything?"

She corrected me. "I've got everyth now I've got you. Oh, darling, don't realize that nothing else means anythin me any more? I love you. I'm twenty-e I know my own mind and I do wan marry you. Besides, I'm giving up my j

"That's nonsense. You can't throw a a career like yours."

(Continued on Page 94)

Duet in Cotton Yarn

FOR about $1.16 and very little time, you can make this chic beret and matching shopping bag. The secret: inexpensive cotton yarn and a large crochet hook. The bag will carry a surprising quantity and may be slung from the shoulder for easy carrying.

By Nora O'Leary

Wear beret perched jauntily to one side or pulled squarely over crown of head.

Send 5¢ for instructions, No. 2385, to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

NEW! tiny diamonds of Lux!

They give you faster, richer suds

... keep undies lovely 3 times as long!

Here they are! Wonderful new diamonds of Lux! They're the result of wartime research but they couldn't be brought to you until new machinery was designed and built. Now they're ready!

There's nothing in the world just like these new diamonds. Look at them . . . so shimmering white, so sheer, so tiny! They look different from any other soap . . . they act different . . . they are different.

They're so much faster! See the little diamonds burst into suds at the touch of water.

What rich suds, too! Thick, abundant suds that last and last. Compare them with any other suds you've ever used. They're richer!

These new diamonds of Lux do more for you. They actually remove soil other types of suds can't. Leave things cleaner, fresher.

And they keep washables lovely so much longer! Your undies stay lovely 3 times as long. Many tests prove this. That's like getting 3 pretty slips for the price of one. So avoid harsh washing methods. Get your new Lux diamonds today. You can be sure that anything safe in water is safe in this new Lux.

These new diamonds of Lux are another triumph of the world-famous Lever Laboratories

It Whispers Lovely Things About You

Evening in Paris

Perfume 75c to $12.50
Eau de Cologne
65c to $1.50
Bath Powder $1.25

More swiftly than the eye, more clearly than the spoken word, this sweet and gentle fragrance tells the story of your charm. None can forget its haunting perfume . . . nor resist the appeal of the one who wears it.

BOURJOIS

(Continued from Page 92)

She smiled. "I can if you'll support me."

I was telling her that I couldn't support her on blue points and caviar, and she was telling me that she hated sea food anyway, when a shadow loomed over our table—a shadow belonging to a big, handsome man. So big and handsome that I winced slightly.

"Darling, do you feel all right?" asked Emily.

"No," I said.

"Do you want a drink of water? An aspirin?"

"No," I said. "Just introduce me to the gentleman."

She did, and he was George Cunningham, and the name meant something, but I couldn't place him immediately. What I could place was the fact that he was in love with Emily.

He sat down and they talked about people they knew and places they knew and every few minutes Emily looked across at me anxiously and said, "You know the Haskells (or the Chalmers, or the Westlakes), don't you, darling?" and I said, "No."

As I was taking her back to her office, Emily said, out of a cool silence, "You weren't very nice to George, darling."

"I hope I was obnoxiously rude," I said.

"Didn't you like him?"

"No, Emily, I did not. He's in love with you. He's obviously very wealthy. He's too darn sure of himself. What's more, he's the man people will say you ought to have married."

I didn't hear from Emily for three days after that, and I suffered all the tortures of jealousy, misery and rage, not helped by the fact that I discovered George was executive vice-president of Associated Newsprint.

When she called me, her voice was as calm and unruffled as if we had parted on the best of terms half an hour previously.

"Mark," she asked, "could we be married on April twenty-fourth?"

"We could," I said. "Only . . . a month? Is that long enough?"

"Quite long enough," she said. "I ordered the invitations this morning and they'll be ready next week. Did you know invitations have to be sent out three weeks before the wedding? I had no idea until George told me. George," she went on, "is being very helpful. In your absence," she ended pointedly.

Emily went into the business of organizing the wedding with the same drive, enthusiasm and ability she had used in organizing Consolidated Plastics. She drew up beautiful, readable lists of things she had to do and things I had to do. After dinner in her apartment, I would spur myself to action. "Tomorrow I must call the people about the cars for the wedding party," I would say; or, "On Saturday, we'd better go and see about the flowers for the church." And she would smile at me and say, "That's all right, I did it this morning."

And then, three weeks before the wedding, the boss sent for me. The company had to build a bridge in Mexico. In the wilds of Mexico. I was to help the company build it. Just like that. Oh . . . and I was to leave in three weeks. That was all. Thank you, Patterson.

"A minute, sir," I said. "I'm being married in three weeks."

"Well?" Gray eyebrows beetled at me.

"Well—my wife ——"

"Take her along," said the boss amiably. "It's pretty rough territory, but wives are allowed and the company will pay her fare. Make it a honeymoon."

"But ——" I said.

"Don't you want to go?" he asked me.

"It's not that I don't want to go, but ——" I said. Two months earlier, I should have been crazy to go.

"Now listen, Patterson," he said. "This is a ticklish job. It shows our confidence in you that we have chosen you. If you don't want to go you can stay here, but you will, I tell you frankly, be passing up your big break."

I got up. "All right," I said, "I'll go."

Your Shoes are Showing

Embarrassing, isn't it

YOU NEED SHINOL

● In SUMMER, Shinola White will keep your shoes really white and new-looking. This scientific white shoe cleaner is made of the whitest white pigment available

And all YEAR ROUND, there's a Shinola product for every type and color sho You'll find it pays to KEEP 'EM SHININ WITH SHINOLA.

In Canada it's 2-i

CORN

also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars, 30¢, 50¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.

removes MOSQ

FOREVER FIRST WITH FIRST QUAL

would go, but Emily should not. I ld simply refuse to take her with me. I ld not take her to the wilds of Mexico.
d an afterthought. Emily, of course,
d not want to go.

told her about the job. "My whole er's at stake," I ended. "I can't refuse to But I won't take you into the jungle. I not."

But, darling," said Emily, "it's a won-l opportunity. I always did want to go lexico."

Emily," I warned, "you won't like it.
be hot and uncomfortable and there'll osquitoes and ——"

wonder what clothes I should take,"
d Emily. "You'd better ask your boss clothes women wear in the jungle."

d so, when he was telling me what I ld need, I did.

Your fiancée ask you that?" he said.

Yes."

gave me the sort of look that told me plainly that he was ashamed of himself utting the Mexico project ahead of my nal interests.

What else did she say?" he asked.

Nothing."

Nothing?"

Nothing."

H'm-m-m," he said. "Remarkable girl."

ople began to give parties for us, parties h were all much the same, with mobs of le screaming, "Isn't Emily marvelous?" orge's grandmother, with whom he had as a boy, gave a party for us at her on Park Avenue. House on Park
ue. H'm-m-m. I was reassured when ent inside to a gloomy room, liberally kled with bric-a-brac. Even the res on the walls were dull and midrian looking.

er two minutes, I lost Emily. That was table. It always happened. Hoping to unobtrusive, I went up to one of the st-looking pictures and had just dis-ed that the signature was Whistler a hand tapped me on the shoulder.

"Aren't you Emily's young man?" asked George's grandmother.

"I'm her fiancé," I said.

George's grandmother scowled. She had stepped straight out of 1899, complete with silver-topped cane and black-velvet choker. "That's nonsense," she said. "Emily should be marrying my grandson."

"Your grandson may want to marry Emily, but Emily wants to marry me," I said.

"Can you support her? Do you think you can make her happy?" she demanded.

I said, "I'm very doubtful."

"I understand you're going to drag her off to Mexico. Do you think it's fair to her? She'll be lonely; she'll be bored. She may catch some jungle disease. Her brain—I understand she has a brain—will rot away. Do you really think it's fair?"

"No, I don't," I said. "But Emily wants to go, and I'm going to take her."

George's grandmother cackled. "Young man, I like you. You've got spirit. I shall congratulate Emily." She turned.

"Just a minute," I said. "Do you think Emily is marvelous?"

She smiled at me, and for half a second she was the most fascinating woman in the world. "I think she's a very nice little girl," she said.

I charged across the room. "Emily," I said, "we're leaving. I feel like talking to you. Alone."

Emily's eyes widened. Then she smiled. "Oh, good," she said.

We had our blood tests. We got the license. Everything was ready. Pamela Thompson was to be matron of honor, Jim Thompson best man. The president of Consolidated Plastics was to give Emily away.

And then, the afternoon before the wedding, I called her up.

"Emily," I said, "have you seen the evening papers?"

"No. Why? What's happened?"

"They've had an earthquake in Mexico. We can't be married."

★ ★

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

VICE falling on a child divides into hree parts: some evaporates, some quickly away from the surface, some down to the "advice level."

e eternal triangle: mother, son, dog.

ening a child's mail or his diary may his heart.

ere's no such thing in marriage as sob ology.

y is it that when anything goes without g, it never does?

e more imperfect a parent's education een, the more determined he is to make ligy out of his child.

oman should dress with a full amount de, then, just before leaving home, do French woman does with jewelry: resome of it.

e to brides: Always come to the breakable looking your best, because on the ou fail to do so the boy may be late he morning paper.

often in ironing out trouble someone corched.

siders must never be introduced to the ng of the wheels of the household may.

woman wants a man to appreciate housework is like, let her turn him loose on washing the pan in which mush has been cooked.

Hanging a bridge across the Grand Canyon would not seem any more difficult to an engineer than hanging his pants across a hanger does to our son.

Whenever anyone praised my grandmother's cooking, she always said, "I'm glad you enjoyed it. I didn't think it was as good as common."

My husband's idea of trimming the yard is to cut down a tree.

After having G. I.'s for students, one professor wishes marriage might be made an entrance requirement for college.

In disciplining a child, just as in cooking greens, the shorter the boiling period, the better.

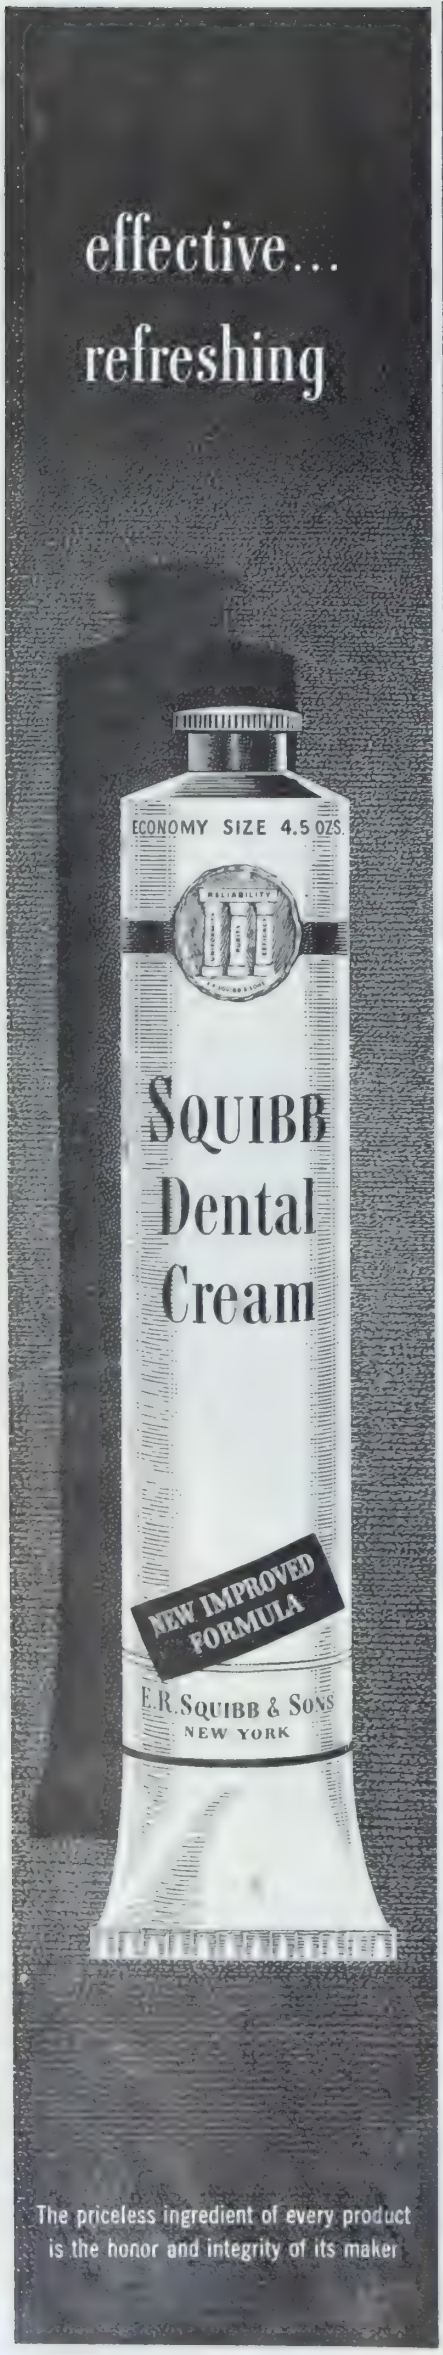
Success: The ability to hitch your wagon to a star while keeping your feet on the ground.

Telling a child only what is agreeable for him to hear makes him far more difficult to rear.

A good friend is one who dares to take dog hairs off your coat.

"The Lord has been good to us," said an elderly woman, counting her blessings. "He has never let both of us get down sick at the same time."

Nelly Dons



can go anywhere

Basic good lines, like good manners, adapt themselves to any setting. Here—photo'd by Rawlings—the new soft-shoulder Nelly Don in Evertru worsted jersey.

Winter violet, blue, rust, black. 12 to 20, under $18.

For nearest store and color brochure, write

Nelly Don, Kansas City, Mo.

"That," said Emily icily, "is what we of Smith would call a non sequitur."

"Emily," I begged, "be reasonable. I can't take you to a place where they have earthquakes."

The telephone exploded. After announcing that she wouldn't marry me if I were the only man on earth, she hung up. I hurled myself out of the apartment and into a taxi.

The door of Emily's apartment was ajar, so I walked in. And there on the couch sat George, with Emily's head buried in his shoulder. She was crying.

I ignored George. I said, "Emily, don't cry. You don't have to marry me. I'm glad you found it out in time. Darling, lots of people call it off at the last minute."

Emily looked at me, looked at George, and began to cry again. "There," she wailed, "you see."

George leaped up with a howl of rage.

I was patient. I said, "I can't let Emily make such a terrible mistake."

George said, "Listen, you punk. Emily wants to marry you. I like to see that Emily gets what she wants. And I personally will see that she does marry you. Or I'll blacken your name in every newspaper in the country. I'll fix it so you can't hold up your head in decent society."

I said, "Oh, you will, will you? And in six months I suppose you'll see that Emily gets a divorce nicely and quietly, without any publicity?"

"If necessary, I'll see to that too," said George. "In fact, I'd be glad to. . . . Emily, if you have any more trouble, let me know." He glared at me. "You be at the church by ten to four," he growled.

"You be there!" And then he left.

Emily got up from the couch and came over to me. "I love you," she said. "I won't lose you. I won't let you lose me."

"George won't let you lose me," I said, putting my arms around her.

"Oh, George." She snuggled her head into my shoulder. "He's just impulsive. Sit down, darling, I'll fix you some coffee."

She went into the kitchen and I began to pace around the room. It had a bare, empty look because all her belongings were packed—packed in the neat, air-weight cases that stood stacked against the wall.

Emily came back into the room. Her eyes followed mine.

"Yes," she said, "those contain all my belongings. Doesn't look much, does it?" She smiled.

"What's in the little one?" I asked, pointing at a small crocodile case, perched on top of the bigger bags.

"That's my make-up case." She opened it, and showed me the small pink jars inside.

I began to laugh. Somehow it was so unlike Emily. "Do you really use all those things?" I asked her.

"Yes." She showed me, one by one. "This is cleansing cream and this is foundation cream and this is some sort of stuff for stopping your neck getting wrinkled. I don't use that yet."

"They smell kind of nice," I said, feeling acutely masculine and inadequate. "And I suppose it's useful for traveling?"

"Oh, yes. I keep all my make-up in it, and then there isn't any risk of the jars' being broken. It goes everywhere with me."

"On your honeymoon, for instance?"

"But certainly."

"DIDN'T you have it that week end in Connecticut?" I asked, suddenly remembering the little case she had forgotten to take from me; remembering how I had taken it back to the doorman and had stood out on the sidewalk, wondering if she were thinking about me.

She nodded. "Yes. This is the one I forgot to take from you because I was thinking how much I loved you."

"Oh, Emily," I said. "Emily. Darling."

And then the doorbell rang, and Jim and Pamela arrived, and then Vandyke, and all of a sudden the evening turned into a party.

And at four o'clock the next afternoon, I saw Emily. Emily, a misty whiteness. Emily looking . . . well, Emily. My love. My darling. My bride. Her bouquet was trembling. I took her hand and it was cold and damp like the hand of a little girl who is scared. The minister began to speak. . . .

And then the reception, with Emily at my side. . . . "Isn't she marvelous?" said corporation presidents, kissing the bride rather more energetically than I felt necessary. "Isn't she marvelous?" said George, shaking my hand like an old friend, darn him. "What a lovely bride," cooed the presidents' wives, wearing the mink and jewels that, as my wife, Emily would probably never wear. Oh, Emily, I thought, and you should always have the best, the best of everything.

WE got away at last, and out to the airport. It was my first flight, and I wished that it was Emily's too. She sat there looking calm and serene and I knew that I was much too excited—yes, and scared too. Just before we took off, she grabbed my hand. "I always hate this bit," she said, but she didn't fool me. She was holding my hand in case I was scared.

We were over New Jersey, I should think, and the stewardess had just handed round little packs of chewing gum, when Emily said, "Oh, my goodness! Oh, Mark!"

"What is it, darling?"

"I've forgotten my make-up case. I had it ready to pick up after I changed, and I forgot all about it. Oh, Mark," she wailed, "what shall I do?"

I said, "Really, Emily, a little thing like that. You can get more, can't you?"

She looked at me as if I were a weevil. "In Mexico? In the jungle? Don't be crazy. It would take weeks. Mark, I can't come. I've got to get off this plane. I cannot go to Mexico without any make-up."

"But, darling ——"

"Don't 'But, darling' me," said my bride. "You don't understand. You don't understand anything about women. You don't know what a difference lipstick makes. I'd be lost without it; I wouldn't have any self-confidence; I'd feel just as badly as if I didn't have a skirt on."

"You would?" I said weakly.

"I certainly would. Oh, it's the most awful thing."

"But, darling ——"

"Stop saying that!" snapped Emily. "Can't you see how upset I am?"

"Well, don't blame me," I snapped back. "It's not my fault."

I looked at her. Her face was pink and she looked small and tearful and—well, defenseless. And all of a sudden, I knew. I knew that I had no business to be keeping her way out of reach on a pedestal. She wasn't unassailable and untouchable. She was just a girl, after all. Smarter and prettier and sweeter than any other girl, but still just a girl who made mistakes and was lost without her lipstick. And she loved me.

"I can't," she said pathetically, "I just can't go to Mexico without any make-up."

"Oh, yes you can," I said. "And to Tibet, too, if necessary. You're my wife and wives are supposed to go wherever their husbands have to go. Remember?"

She looked up at me and she smiled. "Yes, Mark," was all she said. "Yes, Mark." Just like that. Meekly.

In a minute I would finish what I began to say with "But, darling." In a minute I would say, "But, darling, we can stop over in New Orleans and you can get some more make-up." But first, I was going to enjoy the way I felt. Masterful, that was it, masterful and protective and possessive all at once, and it was a pretty good way to feel.

And from Emily's shining eyes and her smile, I think she thought it was a pretty good way for me to feel too. Marvelous woman, my wife. THE END Really good manners spring from the heart. Thus a selfish person never has good manners. If you always have consideration for others, you always have good manners.

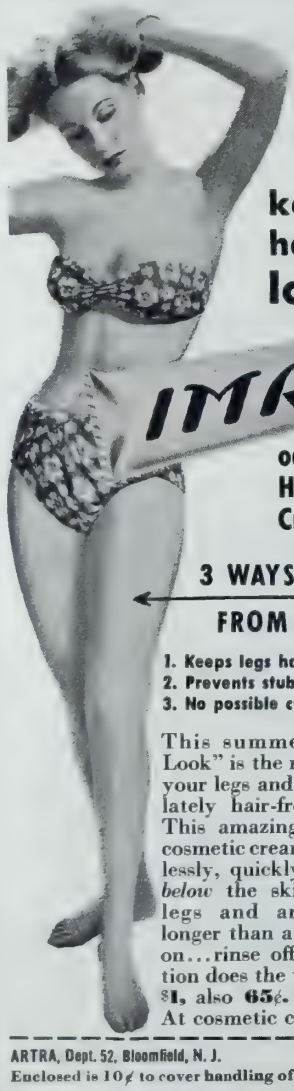
—OSCAR WILDE.

CORN GRIEF?
Get Relief!
BLUE-JAY
Corn Plasters with NUPERCAINE*
GIVE YOU GREATER RELIEF!

Have carefree f again. Blue-Jay's Dura-felt pad insta stops shoe press pain. Then wonde Nupercaine, exclu with Blue-Jay, c irritating surface p Gentle medicat loosens hard "core you just lift it out few days! And B Jays are streamli flesh-colored, non- Ask today for B Jay . . .

"America's Large Selling Corn Plaste



FREE—One comp treatment. Write L C-5.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Ci Brand of Dibucaine

BLUE JAY Corn Plasters

NOW IN 2 SIZES: STANDARD and LITTLE TC Also Blue-Jay Soft Corn P

BAUER & BLACK
Division of The Kendall Comp Chicago 16

keep le hair-fre longe

IMRA

odorless Hair Remo Cream

3 WAYS DIFFERE FROM A RAZO

1. Keeps legs hair-free long
2. Prevents stubby regrowth
3. No possible cuts or nicks.

This summer the "N Look" is the new look. H your legs and arms imm lately hair-free with I This amazing, snowy-w cosmetic cream, gently, l lessly, quickly removes below the skin line. K legs and arms hair- longer than a razor. Sm on...rinse off. One app tion does the trick. In t $1, also 65¢. (PLUS TAX) At cosmetic counters.

ARTRA, Dept. 52, Bloomfield, N. J.
Enclosed is 10¢ to cover handling of trial tube of

Name_____

Address_____

The water of the trout stream is colored with amber and gold, and the little meadows beyond are filled with birds.

Diary of Domesticity

By Gladys Taber

ITH an Irish setter named Maeve, lightning never strikes twice in the same place. She looks so big we forget she is just a puppy still, but we remember it when she lopes by with a piece of slip cover in her smiling mouth. Last we we had guests for dinner and it was one of those lovely, peaceful summer evenings. Ruth and Henry had come up from Long Island on their way to Boston. This explained their very dress-up clothes.

Ruth was doing flower arrangements in the back kitchen and Henry was getting something from the car when Jill came over to me and hissed under her breath, "I must see you a minute." I couldn't understand the look on her face, a cross between grimness and despair. We went out the back door and she whispered loudly, "Do you know whether any of the people here have a Fox hat?"

"Why, I don't know," I said, "unless it is Henry."

"Well," she said, "I don't know what we can or do. Maeve has been eating it!"

"She can't. She was only in the house a minute!"

"A minute was long enough. Here it is," said Jill, fishing a gray lump of felt from the grass.

"Well," I said, "you can't conceal that kind of thing."

We went back in. Henry was innocently munching salted nuts.

"Henry," I said, "did you have a felt hat?"

He smiled. "Yes," he said, "I got it last week."

This was a terrible moment. Maeve merry and relaxed, eyes bland, the hat a chewed, sodden morsel, Henry all unknowing.

"Henry, how much was that hat?"

He looked surprised, as well he might. Men aren't used to being quizzed about the prices of their outfits. "Ten dollars," he said. Ruth made me get it."

"It's gone," I said. "Maeve has eaten it. Wholly."

Ruth went into hysterics. It didn't seem funny to me. Henry looked stunned.

"Ruth made him get it," said Ruth finally, wiping her eyes. "I told him I wouldn't go to Boston with him unless he had a new hat!"

"Oh, dear," said Jill, "oh, dear me." She vanished to the kennel with Maeve.

"He loved his old hat," said Ruth, going into another peal of mirth. "It took me months to get him to get that new one! I made him have his initials put in it," she added, "so he wouldn't lose it in the hotel."

Henry had the relic in his hands now, turning it around and around. "The lining could be put back," he said doubtfully, "but I guess with the brim chewed off it couldn't be fixed. Not really."

"No. It couldn't," I said.

So Henry went hatless to Boston. But he said, comfortingly, he hardly ever wore a hat anyway. It was just Ruth getting at him so over it. And she had thrown away the old one.

"Now, Jill," I said, "when Maeve gets up in the morning, she is not to have Henry's hat!"

"Discipline," said Jill, "is a wonderful thing."

One thing we do know: with puppies around, there is never a dull moment. It isn't that Maeve is bad; far from it. Her conscience is as clear as a crystal ball. She never does what she has been forbidden to do. It was just our mistake not telling her about Henry's hat.

We have slip covers that are very tough and will wash on all the sofas and chairs at Stillmeadow. And then we have a way of laying an extra layer of India print over the seats for muddy paw marks. Then for company we can take them off. We were getting ready for a party one day when Johannes was around to help. I heard him talking to himself. "Why," he said in surprise, "this is a very fine sofa when you get to know it!" He had worked down two layers and was uncovering the French tapestry on the big sofa by the fire.

We did have the house on parade when there was one of those tours of old houses and Stillmeadow was "toured." After we had polished and waxed and washed and cleaned and uncovered, the house looked strange and prim. All the dogs and cats were shut up in the kennels. I walked through, admiring the lovely effect. Not a

Only one soap gives your skin this exciting Bouquet

Now so easily yours ... this lingering fragrance that beckons romance!

So wonderfully easy . . . to weave a romantic mood! Bathe every day with Cashmere Bouquet Soap. Adorn your skin with this exciting fragrance men love—a fragrance that comes from a secret wedding of rare perfumes far more costly than you would expect to find in any soap. Yes, join the parade of popular girls who have shared in this enchanting secret for 79 years. Use Cashmere Bouquet Soap in your daily bath—and for your complexion, too!

Cashmere Bouquet

Adorns your skin with the fragrance men love stray slipper, nor a dumbbell nor a magazine anywhere. Clean ash trays. Flawless flowers. Yes, it looked better than I had ever seen it, I thought. I sat down very gingerly, being very careful not to lean against a plumped pillow.

"Some people," I thought, "keep things this way all the time."

In a few minutes, I began to feel restless. Depressed. There was a kind of empty feeling. Maybe I had eaten too much creamed chipped beef for lunch. Jill makes our own dried beef and I love it too well. The only sound was the breathing of the freezer in the cellar, a cold and lonely breathing. I went to the window and parted the crisp, spotless curtains and looked through plainly, for the nose marks were all off the pane.

Then I saw a row of cocker faces and one eager setter nose sticking through the fence of the long run.

"Well," I said, "I'll certainly be glad when this thing is over and the dogs can come back in the house. It's too darned lonesome in here."

And after the last of the tour people drove away it wasn't five minutes before the French tapestry went back into the silence under the slip cover and Little Sister was bouncing up and down on the sofa, Honey was climbing to the love seat and Maeve was standing on the window sill, pressing a moist nose on the clean glass and looking down the road for George.

We had eggplant pancakes for supper, after Mrs. Wallis' wonderful recipe. To make them. I pare and cube and parboil until tender enough eggplant to make 3 cups of cubes when well drained. Then I mash the eggplant, add 2 beaten eggs, 1 teaspoon sugar, 1 teaspoon salt, dash of pepper and ½ cup flour. Mrs. Wallis adds ¼ teaspoon nutmeg to hers, but Jill is allergic to nutmeg, so we leave that out. The cakes are fried in butter or margarine, and they cook very fast and are lacy and crisp at the edges. Delicious with cold sliced ham or a roast, for those who like eggplant.

Another good recipe from Mrs. Wallis is her whipped-cream cake.

Beat 3 eggs very light and add gradually 1½ cups sugar. Continue to beat until sugar is well blended with the eggs. Whip 1½ cups heavy cream. Fold in egg-and-sugar mixture and 1½ teaspoons vanilla. Sift together 3 times 2¼ cups flour, 3 teaspoons baking powder and ½ teaspoon salt. Sift small amounts of flour over cream mixture and fold in until all the flour has been used. Pour into two 9-inch layer-cake pans which have been greased, lined with wax paper and greased again. Bake 20 to 25 minutes in a moderate oven, 375°F.

Cooking is a wonderful adventure because there is always something new around the corner. Like this week when we glazed a ham with a pint of last year's peach preserve, because the new peach season is at hand. This ham was the best we ever ate, the peach segments candied on the surface and the juice was sweet and spicy.

THIS is the heart of vacation time, and last year when we went to the Cape we sorted and packed and unpacked and re-sorted interminably. I always wonder why some firm doesn't put up a vacation special of staple foods for campers, cottagers or travelers on the road. And a set of cosmetics and medicines. The regular cosmetic kits don't do much good for me, because all that wrinkle cream and conditioner stuff I never use at any time.

One firm, I am glad to say, puts out a Cape Cod broom closet which has all you need taking care of your summer cottage: brush wax, window clean, mops, polish. You everything in a couple of cartons and y can start for the cottage with a mind ease.

August is a lovely time of the year in N England. It can be horribly hot and stea and enervating in the daytime. As a rewa for this discomfort comes a night that is pu enchantment, flooded with cool, silver moo light, sweet with flower scent, quiet deep-running rivers. In fact, I sometim think that you never get a perfect summ night without having a hot day first. F the heat mellows the land.

WE PACK our supper and go to Roxbu just before sunset. The water of the tro stream there is colored with amber and gol and the little meadows across are filled wi birds. A very cool, special odor comes fro the pine woods on the hill.

Bacon and eggs cooked over a low fire apple-wood sticks are about perfect, wi rolls toasting on the hot stones at the si of the fire.

We pack a bowl of fresh garden lettuce a put whole ripe tomatoes, crisp onion slic and carrot slivers in it, and dressing is in smaller bowl. We c it a finger salad; y dip your tomato in t garlic dressing or ju salt it and eat it o of hand.

For dessert we c have ice cream wi fresh peaches carri in the insulated ba or just a bowl of bl berries and cream. a plate of mixed che and crisp wafers a early sweet grapes.

Vacuum-bottle co fee is fine when don't want to cook over the fire. Mamm used to boil hers a blue enamel p over the picnic fi dropping an eggsh in at the end. Th was coffee!

The new plast cups are good for pa nics and the little plastic bowls are perfect delightful. They weigh nothing and will pra tically fold up if you want them to. And th are in such delicate pale blues and pinks an greens that the picnic looks pretty when yo use them.

Expensive picnic kits always look fascina ing in the magazines, but we just use an o basket and pop everything in; no sticking each spoon in a slot or arranging plates compartments. I use a separate basket t pots and pans, with an old newspaper on t bottom.

Fancy food is not necessary at any picn because simple dishes taste better anyway the open air, and if you season your foo with sunset you have a meal to dream abo anyway.

Coming home, the villages are dreamin under the moon, and the old white hous look as serene as if time never set his mail boot on the flagstone paths. The maple above Stillmeadow are heavy with summe the pointed leaves of the lilacs quiver with wind blowing.

Honey barks absently as she comes acro the terrace. Barking is just a habit with h when she has nothing special to do. Th youngest puppy in the kennel answers wi a soft, excited yip, and every dog on the pla lifts a noisy muzzle. When the barking di away, they all settle down again and t summer night is still.

Honey looks smug with that very spec smugness a cocker can have. "Now ever thing is taken care of for the night," she te me.

And the sapphire eyes of a Siamese nam Esmé are shining, shining blue in the silv night as we go in, with another day fold away into yesterday. THE E

À Minuit

By Rhina P. Espaillat

Something brought me back from slumber:
Subtle touch of finger tips,
Hands, familiar, dear, insistent—
Sudden warmth upon my lips.

Darkness could not hide your presence,
Straight to me your love came winging,
And over all the bitter ocean,
I heard you singing.

Long and lovely and 3 inches deep in Alençon type lace at top and hem. About $6

Sweet as flowers... smooth as glass

Lacy as a Victorian bridal bouquet—Textron's newest dress-sized slip of finest rayon satin.

Textron-tailored with tiniest stitches, generous seams... Textron-cut to fit just like your dresses—at the bust, waist and hips. Longer, fuller, like your dresses, too! Purest White, Heaven Blue, Pink Angel in misses' sizes 12 to 20. Just one of many Textron dress-sized slips from $4 to $6 at leading stores throughout the country.

TEXTRON, INC., Textron Building, 401 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

TEXTRON

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

HOSTESS COATS • BLOUSES • MENSWEAR • TRICOT & WOVEN LINGERIE

Even a bathing beauty may be sunk...

Be a safety-first girl with Mum

Tonight you'll get along swimmingly—if you keep that bathed and beautiful air about you. If you guard your bath-freshness against the fault that's so hard to forgive.

After every bath—before every date—use safe, sure Mum. Your bath washes away past perspiration, yes—but Mum protects underarms against risk of odor to come.

Product of Bristol-Myers

Mum safer for charm — Mum checks perspiration odor, protects your daintiness all day or all evening.

Mum safer for skin — Because Mum contains no harsh or irritating ingredients. Snow-white Mum is gentle—harmless to skin.

Mum safer for clothes — No damaging ingredients in Mum to rot or discolor fine fabrics. Economical Mum doesn't dry out in the jar. Quick; easy to use, even after you're dressed.

LOOK THE MONEYLENDERS OVER!

(Continued from Page 45)

of the Pennsylvania Company, says it is easier to collect loans for which there is no collateral, for the people then feel morally obligated to repay.

Because they are long-established and generally respected and their overhead is absorbed in many other sources of income, the banks are in a favorable position to do a thriving business in small loans. Their rise in the field has been spectacular. In dollar volume they now do twice the amount of business done by small-loan companies.

For several decades the small-loan or personal-finance companies, operating under uniform small-loan laws, have made loans at the rate of 2½ to 3½ per cent per month on the unpaid balance. There are now some 5400 such organizations operating under state laws.

It is commonly stated that these businesses charge 30 to 42 per cent interest per annum. This is misleading. By the system of installment repayments and charges on unpaid balances, without other fees of any kind, the customer does not pay $42 for an original $100 loan even though the rate, in places where 3½ per cent per month is permitted, is 42 per cent per year. The interest charge applies only to the unpaid balance, which diminishes with each monthly payment. The actual cost of a $100 loan is $22.75 when the rate is 3½ per cent per month and the loan is repaid in 12 equal monthly payments. This makes the cost of money borrowed from a finance company still considerably more than the cost of a similar amount when the borrower can get it from a bank.

Most licensed lenders insist that both husband and wife sign for a loan, or at least they write the other partner a tactfully worded letter. It is almost impossible to borrow from an honest, responsible finance company or a bank without your mate's knowing about it. Agreement of husband and wife on the need for the loan is double guaranty of its repayment, and there is greater probability that the loan will be used for the constructive improvement of the family situation.

Children are love made visible. —NOVALIS.

Dr. M. R. Neifeld, vice-president of the Beneficial Management Corporation, which operates personal-finance companies in hundreds of cities, reports that about 85 per cent of their loans are made to married people, the wife initiating the loan in nearly half the cases. Regardless of which partner seeks the loan, both are usually committed to its repayment.

THE method of borrowing money is simple but not foolproof. An applicant expresses his need, usually in person; trained interviewers and investigators decide whether they think he can carry the loan. (The less scrupulous do not care whether he can or not.) He receives a sum of money and pays back a larger amount in small installments over a period of time.

Generally, qualification for a loan, from either a bank or a finance company, depends upon each individual interview and application. Certain obvious qualifications are necessary. The applicant must have steady employment and be in good standing with his company, or have other reliable sources of income. Some consideration is given to his health, age, physical ability and number of dependents. It helps if he already has a good credit rating. He must be personally reputable.

But no hard-and-fast lines are drawn. An applicant is not granted a loan which the lenders think he is unable to handle; but one person can manage repayment of a $300 loan with a $3000 yearly income more reliably than another with a $6000 yearly income, depending on his habits, standard of living and previous commitments. Banks are more conservative than loan companies and sometimes ask a wider margin of assurance that the principal and interest will be paid on schedule.

Wise moneylenders like to deal with responsible parents of happy families. The officials of lending institutions often serve as ex-officio family advisers about affairs seemingly unrelated to money (but what is not?). The best of them give wise counsel to the advantage of their clients. Handling people courteously and kindly is no mere technique with them—it is a definite financial asset. Apparently many people feel it is well worth the charges to be able to unload their tales of woe. "You think you have troubles?" one interviewer said. "We hear some beauts!" It is a part of their business, also, to be impeccably discreet, and their knowledge of a client's affairs is held in the strictest confidence.

LOAN sharks most often tell relatives, neighbors or employers, blackmail, use other strong-arm methods, or even sue when borrowers are slow to pay, and they are masters of legal technicalities. Such is the law and the commitments of the borrower that they are able to win cases. The legal, stringently regulated personal-finance companies now lending money in thirty-one states at a maximum permissible rate of 30 to 42 per cent, and an actual rate much lower in most cases, are deadly enemies of the illegal, unregulated 240 per cent loan sharks.

The Russell Sage Foundation, an independent philanthropy specializing in social research, was the first to do something about the exorbitant rates of unregulated moneylenders. This organization recognized the people's need for a way to get small loans. In 1916 the Foundation drafted a model uniform small-loan law, since amended six times, which applies to lenders of $300 or less, except banks, credit unions and institutions regulated by other laws. The uniform small-loan law requires lenders to be licensed, bonded, and supervised by the state; imposes careful tests of character, fitness and resources; and stipulates the maximum rate of interest and provides criminal and civil penalties for infractions. All except five states—Kansas, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota and South Carolina—have adopted some kind of small-loan legislation. In twelve of the remaining states the small-loan laws are wholly or partly inoperative; thirty-one states have effective small-loan laws. The application and enforcement of the law varies greatly from state to state, and the mere presence of legislation does not eliminate the loan shark.

Because of the high costs involved, only a legal rate sufficiently high to provide a profit will attract honest lenders. The best protection the people have against irresponsible moneylenders is to encourage the legislation and enforcement in their state of a uniform small-loan law which provides for reasonable but necessarily high rates. In unregulated states, and in some which have inadequate legislation, loan sharks still carry on their underhanded lending at enormous rates.

One victim in Dallas, Texas (still a profitable state for sharks), borrowed $20, to meet the costs of hospital care, from an illegal lender who charged him $2.25 a week. That was in 1929. By 1938, having renewed his note every month, the borrower had paid $1053 for the use of $20, and he still owed more than he had borrowed. He had paid interest at the rate of 585 per cent a year!

In several states, the loan sharks escape regulation by means of the salary-buying dodge. Actually, they lend money; technically, they merely buy the right to part of the victim's wages. This is not possible in states which have a complete small-loan law, for Section 16 states that a salary purchase is a loan and subject to all provisions of the law. Wherever the loan sharks succeed in having Section 16 omitted, they are free to manipu

(Continued on Page 102)

Independent Tobacco Experts Again Name

LUCKY STRIKE FIRST CHOICE

*over any other brand!

*An impartial Crossley poll covering all the Southern tobacco markets shows that more independent tobacco auctioneers, buyers and warehousemen smoke Lucky Strike than any other brand.
Certified by Crossley, Incorporated
Archibald M. Crossley, President

So, for your own real deep down smoking enjoyment remember—

L.S./M.F.T.

COPR., THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY

LUCKY STRIKE MEANS FINE TOBACCO

So round, so firm, so fully packed — so free and easy on the draw

Hillside view decorates the living room in the Pittsburgh home designed by Michael Parish for his family. For year-round comfort, window is glazed with Thermopane

Brighten your home with daylight

Open your walls with glass. Daylight streams in, highlighting your interior decoration. Indoors merges with outdoors . . . making your room seem much more spacious.

Large glass areas are more practical with *Thermopane, the insulating windowpane that keeps rooms more comfortable all year. In summer, Thermopane protects you from the hot outside—increases the efficiency of air conditioning. In cold weather, Thermopane cuts heat loss through glass, reduces downdrafts at windows and minimizes frost and condensation.

Thermopane is made of two or more panes of glass with dry air between. L·O·F's *Bondermetic Seal around the edges keeps dirt and moisture from entering the air space.

Before you build or remodel, ask your architect about Thermopane. It can be installed in fixed or opening sash throughout your home . . . never needs to be removed . . . is readily available in over 60 standard sizes, as well as special sizes, through L·O·F Glass Distributors. For more information, write for our Thermopane book. Libbey·Owens·Ford Glass Company, 688 Nicholas Building, Toledo 3, Ohio.

*®

ONLY LIBBEY·OWENS·FORD MAKES Thermopane

LIBBEY·OWENS·FORD
a Great Name in GLASS

IN CANADA, THERMOPANE IS SOLD BY PILKINGTON GLASS, LTD.

(Continued from Page 100)

late the salary-buying dodge and charge whatever they please. Here is an actual case uncovered by the Kansas City Bar Association:

Mr. Jones, 34 years old, earns $190 a month as a railroad mail clerk. He is married and has a seven-year-old son. He has gone over his head in debt in the last few years. He borrowed $25 from a salary buyer. The immediate need was to help with expenses at his mother-in-law's death. He later increased the loan to $35, and paid interest totaling $80 before he came to the bar committee for advice. Jones belongs to the post-office credit union. He knew he was borrowing from a bootleg company, and said that he was willing to pay for the lender's "accommodation," but he has been unable to pay off the debt in one lump sum. After borrowing from the salary buyer, he made a $200 loan from a bank to consolidate some other delinquent accounts. Jones had other sources of credit when he borrowed from the salary buyer, but he was in debt and chose to get the money the easier way rather than to go to a licensed lender for the small amount which he needed immediately.

He threatens who is afraid.
—FRENCH PROVERB.

Public opinion and alert legal action have since improved the situation in Missouri.

As things stand, you, the consumer, are faced with the age-old but brutal injunction, "Let the buyer beware." How can you tell a loan shark? That is a question that honest lenders would like to answer concisely for everyone. Obviously a loan shark is most successful when he looks honest.

If you live in a state where moneylenders are well regulated by law, you can ask to see the license of the lender—but, unfortunately, crooks can easily come by pretty bits of paper covered with suitable script. Generally a large organization with many branches comes easily under the surveillance of law enforcers. In many cities there are legal-aid societies to advise or assist, and in about seventy cities there are Better Business Bureaus which will answer inquiries. When borrowing money, the best advice is to be calm, and shop around openly for the best value. A commercial moneylender should be selected with the same care and in the same manner one chooses a doctor or a dentist in a strange town. Only a false sense of pride can prevent the person in need of cash from asking several informed citizens where to go to get it. The borrower is most vulnerable when he is in need of a very small loan, which he likely cannot get from a bank. Of 300 people victimized by loan sharks in a study made by a lawyers' association in Kansas City, 79 were employed by companies having credit unions, and several were employed by banks. The average loan was $19.50.

Certainly if you are a member of a credit union you should take advantage of its low rates. If you can qualify for a bank loan, and have no special reason for going elsewhere, the small-loan department of a commercial bank is a good place to apply. Licensed personal-finance companies give personal attention and consideration to loans of almost any size. Of course, if your income is insufficient to cover adequate payments, or if you are destitute and really need money, you will not get it from anyone who lends commercially for an honest profit. It is perhaps wiser to seek help from welfare agencies supported by the community.

Occasionally it is uneconomical not to borrow, and certainly crises, medical care and educational plans cannot be postponed. But when it comes to unnecessary borrowing or the indiscriminate purchase of goods "on time" it is usually better to count your riches among the things you can do without.

HOMES . . . MILLINOCKET BUILDS

(Continued from Page 23)

tradition. There is about the town none of the dispirited sameness of row upon row of identical dwellings, so typical of industrial towns and cities.

The paper mill is the town's largest industry and chief source of employment. Before the war it was not hard to find a place to live in Millinocket. There were homes to spare, for rent or purchase. "But when we vets got back," explains one of the residents in the new settlement, "things were different. There were so many new employees at the mill, so many new families, the town fairly bulged. Lots of people had to go to Mattawamkeag for houses, or get rooms at the local hotel."

The townspeople met the usual difficulties in seeking a solution to the housing problem. A housing committee appointed by the town selectmen brought in contractors from near-by Bangor. They submitted plans for five different kinds of houses. Everything looked fine until the committee discovered the big gap between what contractors wanted for building such houses, and what prospective owners could pay. The contractors' price was between $8000 and $9000. The people who needed homes could raise an average of $4000 to $6000. And the insurance companies approached to finance the project decided against accepting quitclaim deeds, the only type available.

All over the country, other towns have similar housing problems. But in Millinocket, the Great Northern Paper Company owned land which could be used for residential development. The company was willing to sell lots to anyone interested in building without relation to employment at the mill. It was even ready to build houses to rent or sell. But the majority of the Millinocket citizens who needed homes wanted neither to pay the contractors' price nor meet the company's profitless rent figure.

According to John Tracey, who was interested in the proposed new housing section from its first suggestion, "It didn't take much investigation to discover that if a man could cut out the cost of labor, he could shave down the building price two or three thousand dollars." There was an obvious answer. The people of Millinocket who wanted homes badly enough must do their own work. And that is what they are doing.

Early in 1947, the Great Northern Paper Company made 51 lots in this new section available to anyone who wished to buy, and also released seven other lots scattered through the town. The company helped build 57 cellars. Ground for the first house was broken in April, 1947, and construction has now started on all but six lots in the development.

When the company laid out this section, it planned streets with sewer and water facilities. The streets and sewers were built by the municipality at a cost of $10,000. Water mains and hydrants were installed by the Millinocket Water Company without any assessment on individual house lots. The company made a very reasonable price of $240 per lot (this worked out at four cents per square foot), with corner lots priced at $25 more. The local bank joined forces with the company, offering loans for building at 5 per cent interest, mostly "on character."

A minimum of skilled assistance has gone into the Millinocket building. Local contractors were secured to give absolutely necessary advice and supply the more difficult labor for plumbing, heating and electrical installation. When needed materials could not be secured individually, the company put its purchasing department at the disposal of local merchants.

"Sometimes I doubt whether we could have gone ahead without the company's help," one new home owner says. "For instance, the company furnished a bulldozer and operator to clear the ground, excavate and fill in. We owners had only to pay the operator's overtime. All the engineering services of the mill, including the drafting depart

(Continued on Page 105)

E&W Quadriga CLOTH
by-the-yard or ready-made

Heirloom-ed

for lasting beauty . . . for carefree living

At the Memphis Cotton Carnival . . . this dressed-in-Quadriga Room featured heirloom pieces from some of Memphis' finest homes.

Decorator's Quiz: What is the cotton you can live with without a Qualm? That fits all your schemes, from Quaint-to-Contemporary? That you can flounce, or ruffle, or tailor, or Quilt? That you can mix and match, in prints and plain colors from Quiet-to-Bold? That sun won't fade, and water won't Quench? And that costs so little you can buy Quantities . . . without exceeding your Quota? Right! It's

Quadriga Cloth

LOOK FOR THE LABEL THAT SAYS

E&W Quadriga CLOTH

Tub-Fast ☆ Sun-Fast ☆ Needleized Finish

E&W Quadriga Shirts for Men and Boys
E&W Quadriga Jane Clay Dresses
E&W Quadriga Pajamas
E&W Quadriga Dorna Gordon Dresses
E&W Quadriga Spring-Bak Shorts

COPYRIGHT 1948, FLY & WALKER DRY GOODS CO.

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF LAUNDERING CERTIFIED

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THERE IN

& WALKER, St. Louis • World's Largest Dry Goods Manufacturers, Converters and Distributors

This new world of Beautyrest "luxury comfort" could be yours tonight!

HOW TO MAKE THE NEXT TEN YEARS THE MOST RESTFUL OF YOUR LIFE!

1. Did you ever stop to think that when you buy a new Beautyrest you get at least ten years—that's 3,650 nights—of luxury sleeping comfort?

Comfort that relaxes every weary bone in your body . . . soothes away fatigue . . . lulls you gently into deep, refreshing sleep! That's Beautyrest "luxury comfort"—something no other mattress can give you!

And all that wonderful comfort costs only 1½¢ a night! No wonder the whole world sleeps on a Beautyrest—or wants to!

2. Compare the construction: Left, notice how springs which are wired together in ordinary mattress go down together under pressure—forming a hollow. But, see how Beautyrest's individually pocketed springs act on their own, do NOT sag together!

3. Compare the comfort: Above, see how wired-together springs in ordinary mattress can sag deeply beneath you. But, below, see how Beautyrest's 837 individually pocketed springs "give" only in the right places—offer you firmer, more natural support.

First in quality, too. In rigid "torture" tests constantly being made in United States Testing Co., Inc., laboratories, Beautyrest has taken over half a million more poundings than the next best mattress tested!

Guaranteed 10 years! Beautyrest is guaranteed against structural defects for at least ten years. 859.50. (About 1½¢ a night.) Suggestion: Put your new Beautyrest on a Beautyrest box spring—the right bedspring for it! See your Simmons dealer today.

Only SIMMONS makes BEAUTYREST*

Other famous Simmons quality products: Electronic Blanket, Deep-sleep Mattress, Ace Spring, Babybeauty Crib Mattress, Hide-A-Bed Sofa

* MARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
SIMMONS CO. MERCHANDISE MART, CHICAGO, ILL.

(Continued from Page 102)

ıent which helped us with blueprints, were urs for the asking. They also supplied us ith several sets of wooden form panels for ıe concrete cellar walls, and a cement mixer. hey sent an operator to supervise the mixıg and pouring. Those of us who went into ıe forest to cut our own logs could use the ompany's horses and trucks at a special rate. rank Rush set up a portable sawmill on the evelopment where we could take our lumber ıd have it cut to specifications. He made us good price too."

Charles Carrier, now superintendent at the ast Millinocket mill, organized the comany's participation in the project. He says, The boys gained experience and learned ills from one another. They developed a irit of comradeship which was fine to see. ow they have their own homes."

Some owners readily admit that the going as not all smooth. "We dug holes, shoveled rt, sawed planks and pushed wheelbarrows. didn't matter whether the work was for our vn homes or for a neighbor. Many of the eople of the town came out to watch and ayed to help. We sawed pieces out of our ıgers and squashed a few. But no landlord ın tell us what to do now, and we can kick a ole in our walls if we feel like it."

Pouring concrete for the basements proved hold more interest for volunteer workers an any other phase of the construction. eams of six or eight men were originally anned to work on one basement. But when ord was passed around Millinocket that a llar was to be poured next day, there were ways more workers on hand than were eded. One day, forty-two men gathered for asement "pouring." Even the kids wanted help. One mother prosted, "The children were o everything including e cement mixer."

Today twenty-two fames are living in their own uses. The variety in size d plan is pleasant to see. The houses are not e identical shell after another. They have aracter and individuality. Some have one ory, others two. Some are Colonial, others nd toward more modern types of architecre. They are as different and as varied as e work which went into them.

Improvements for the grounds will come xt. The company is planning to send out a dscape gardener to help plan a park enance, and will supply two trees for each lot. e local garden club, recently organized, is aking plans to guide the homeowners in nting flowers and vegetables best suited to llinocket's sandy soil.

The people who live in these houses today, d those who will move in as soon as their mes are completed, are like those you see in ur town every day. They are the veterans o came back with wives, and had to eeze in with the in-laws. They are the fam- s who could find nothing but one room in a el, and put the baby in the bathtub beıse there was no floor space for a crib. They the young couples who paid exorbitant ces for the hastily "furnished" rooms, and ared a bath with others. No wonder homes an so much to them.

THERE were many families like the Carl V. ockwell, Jr.'s, who, with two active little ys and a third baby on the way, found livıı longer with his parents impossible. The ockwells were one of the first families to ve into the new section. They bought a tially completed house when Mrs. Stockwl came home from the hospital with a v baby daughter. They have completed interior of their home themselves.

"We didn't have a chance to get lonely out e," pretty Mrs. Stockwell recalls. "Many our future neighbors were beginning to ld. Our house was the only source of electity in the area, so we rigged up outside ts for the nightwork. You should have n the thick black cords hanging out of all windows. Our bill was so big that the al electric company investigated. When y discovered the reason for our using so ch electricity, they reduced our bill to the ular monthly rate."

Bryan Seelye, company auditor, explains that people desiring to build immediately are given first choice at the lots. No interest is charged for time payments unless they stop for an insufficient reason. "For instance," he points out, "if sickness or some other emergency comes up, we charge no interest and give a man all the time he needs. But if we find out that payments have been discontinued because a man buys a new car, then we add five per cent interest."

If prospective builders change their minds about investing in a lot, they can get their money back, even though the foundation is already laid. "In such a case, we buy back the lot and pay the man what he has put into the foundation—minus the value of supplies, time and man-hours which our company made available to him," the company official added. There have been few instances of this, however.

THE John Traceys are a typical housing-project family. They started gathering materials for their home back in March of 1947, and bought a corner lot the following August. They worked as fast as possible from August to November, when Maine's bitter weather set in. For nightwork they strung lights from the roof of a near-by house to make time count. John had his father to help him.

Although there is some work still to be done on the Tracey home, the family—consisting of the young Traceys, their fifteen-month-old son and John's parents—has moved in. "The floors don't look pretty," John laughs, "but we've got our own roof over our heads."

John Tracey is a finisher for the paper company. Not long ago he wore the uniform of an Army sergeant and served in Germany and Czechoslovakia.

"I'd never built anything before, but I can drive a nail straight," he tells you. "Dad had to take over the sawing, though. Mine wasn't straight. Figured labor represented about half the cost of a house. We believe we have saved at least $1000 already. We have spent $4000 on supplies, including lumber for inside and outside. The only further expense will be about $500 for flooring."

The Tracey house contains four rooms downstairs: living room, bedroom, kitchen and bath; upstairs there are two more bedrooms. They expect to have their home completely finished in another three months. "Those months will seem like years," they prophesy.

A few families in the new section paid for the construction work. Where money was available, some of the owners hired contractors and let them do the building. The Joseph Tuckers did this. Tucker edits the weekly local paper. "We've spent $6000 and will spend about $1500 more. We're going to have our newspaper plant in the basement," he explains. Their house plan includes a downstairs living room, bedroom, kitchen, sun porch and bath. Upstairs are two bedrooms.

The paper mill built five houses at a cost of $8500 each, and offered them for rent at $45 per month. The newly married C. H. Ferris, Jr.'s, consider themselves lucky to have secured one of these. They were among those given first choice because Ferris is a veteran. "Our little home looks mighty good to us after the hotel room we had for five months," Mrs. Ferris says.

Even this ambitious building program has not quite satisfied the total demand for new houses in Millinocket. There are 15 applications for lots still on file at present. The company plans to release 12 more lots for sale within a few months. There are no new requests for "rents" at the Veterans' Information Center, however. "After being deluged by people who wanted to rent houses," says Frederick McInis, a worker at the Center, "we haven't had one this year."

What price your own hearthside? The people of Millinocket found that individual initiative plus industry's co-operation paid worthwhile dividends. They think the price of hard work, sacrifice and a great deal of pulling together is not too much to pay. THE END

The worse the carpenter, the more the chips.

"RUG MAGIC" by OLSON

How Your OLD RUGS AND CLOTHING Save You up to ½

It's All So Easy! Free catalog tells how your materials are picked up at your door and sent at our expense to the Olson FACTORY, where . . .

By the Olson Process we sterilize, shred, merge materials of all kinds—reclaim the valuable wools etc., then bleach, card, spin, re-dye and weave into lovely, new, deep-textured—

REVERSIBLE BROADLOOM RUGS

—double luxury rugs made in seamless sizes for every need up to 16 feet by any length.

Choice of Solid Colors Tweed Blends Floral & Leaf 18th Century Early American and Oriental Patterns FACTORY-TO-YOU. Satisfaction guaranteed. Over two million customers. We do not have agents or sell thru stores. Our 74th Year.

Chicago New York San Francisco

FREE CATALOG in Full Color

MAIL COUPON OR 1¢ POST CARD TO-DAY

OLSON RUG CO., B-27, Chicago 41, Ill.

Please mail the Olson Catalog FREE to:

NAME_____

ADDRESS_____

TOWN_____ STATE_____

© ORC,1948

AMAZING OFFER—$40 IS YOURS FOR SELLING ONLY 50 BOXES CHRISTMAS CARDS

Each box contains 25 brand new, entirely different Deluxe Christmas cards with or without name imprinted. Also 50 for $1.00. Free samples. Other boxes on approval. Write to-day. It costs nothing to try.

Cheerful Card Co., Dept. G-13, White Plains, N.Y.

FREE SAMPLES

Doctors and Dermatologists Agree:

Beauty begins with a perfectly clean skin!

AMBROSIA

The Liquid Facial Cleanser Frees Pores of Dirt and Grime. At Dept., Drug and Ten Cent Stores.

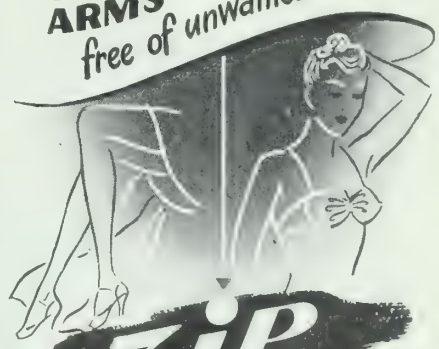
Coets

FOR MAKE-UP AND OTHER COSMETIC USES



HANDY COTTON SQUARES

LARGE PACKAGE 29¢

Smooth and Lovely ARMS · LEGS · FACE free of unwanted hair

ZiP ALL-PURPOSE

A NEW HAIR REMOVER

- An entirely new and delightfully fragrant cream.
- Gives amazing results—quickly!
- So pure and bland it can be used freely on the face as well as on the arms and legs.
- Does more than merely remove the surface hair.
- Lasts longer. Works faster. Jar $1.00.

With ZiP ALL-PURPOSE HAIR REMOVER IT'S OFF because IT'S OUT

Also makers of

ZiP CREAM HAIR REMOVER 10c-28c-55c-$1.10

ZiP EPILATOR $1.10

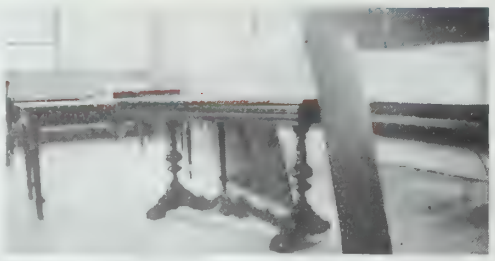
ZiP CREAM DEODORANT . . . 10c-25c-50c

JORDEAU INC., 608 FIFTH AV., NEW YORK 20

PHOTOS BY HAROLD FOWLER

This attractive room for young marrieds and others is furnished with low-cost auction bargains repaired or done over by amateurs. The color scheme of almond-green and bittersweet is taken from the Modern Museum's twelve-dollar print, Derby View, by Fausett, which hangs above the fireplace.

This Room for $395.14 at Auction



BY HENRIETTA MURDOCK

Interior Decoration Editor of the Journal

AUCTION shopping is the most fascinating pastime we know. Can you think of anything more delightful than coming face to face with the sofa of your dreams, the wanted club chair or a charming table, at a price you can afford? Such treasures can be yours for a fraction of their original cost if you learn how to shop at auctions. If you are not auction-wise, here's how to go about finding such usable, resold merchandise in both towns and cities.

Auction houses in larger centers have regular scheduled sales, and nowadays a considerable quantity of auction merchandise is being taken by trucks to smaller towns and even country crossroads, where sales are held from the trucks. Articles go for less at these auctions, and you can get exciting bargains.

There are several price levels and grades of auction merchandise. Out-of-town antique dealers make regular trips to big cities to buy for their particular clientele, and to them and the local antiquarians go the rarities, the fabulous things you see in museums. The real bargains are not antiques, but date from the late Victorian era to the early '30's. They are pieces with good lines, structurally sound and needing only such repairs as you can make yourself. If you have in your town one of those good, old-time furniture finishers who do work reasonably, then you can venture a bit further and buy interesting pieces needing professional skill to repair.

Secondhands with good possibilities.

Auction furniture before remodeling.

FURNITURE. In the room pictured, we bought furniture for which there was not much competitive bidding, as we expected to do the remodeling ourselves and wanted good values for a really low-cost room. There was nothing wrong with the upholstered furniture except its shabbiness. This is an important point, for a chair or sofa isn't a bargain if it requires major repairs. Look at the (Continued on Page 115)

"I was all at sea - but not for long!"

To a couple of Easterners like Bill and me (I love saying it together—we're on our honeymoon), California is sort of overpowering at first. Big trees, big open spaces, big waves at Catalina. But the people are so helpful and hospitable you don't feel at sea very long!

Our get-acquainted call on Bill's second cousin Helen in L.A. ended up with us enthroned in her dream of a guest bedroom. With—I notice these things now that I'm going to keep house myself—luscious percale sheets on the beds. "Cousin Helen," I sighed, "I love being a guest. Real percale! Wish we could afford 'em!"

"But, honey! Don't you know?" Cousin Helen laughed. "These sheets that you're admiring so are Cannon Percales! They cost only a little more than heavy-duty muslins! Just everybody is buying them—for every bed in the house!" My eyebrows went up to my topknot. "You mean these Cannon dream-sheets are practical too?" I asked.

Cousin Helen led me to her linen closet. "I've had these Cannon Percale Sheets since I was married," she told me. "Wonders for wear! And see how fine-woven—with 25% more threads than best-grade muslins! So light that bedmaking and laundering are easier!" I learn fast. "Come visit us," I invited—"by then, I'll have 'em too!"

COPR. 1952, CANNON M...

TRADE MARK REG. U.S.A. CANNON

Cannon Percale Sheets

Cannon Towels • Stockings • Blankets
Cannon Mills, Inc., New York 13, N.Y.

helena rubinstein says:

"over 30? you can look younger!

ESTROGENIC HORMONE CREAM"

"If you are over-30, there is one cream you should never be without—my ESTROGENIC HORMONE CREAM. Why?

"Because estrogenic hormones are one of the best substances yet known to science that can make your skin look younger...

"Because I experimented until I found the right formula that would bring you the fullest benefits of these amazing substances...

"Because thousands of women in their 30's, 40's, 50's, 60's already have found that daily use of this remarkable cream can truly smooth out fine lines and wrinkles.

"Use ESTROGENIC HORMONE CREAM faithfully for 30 consecutive days and see how quickly your skin responds to its dynamic action. See how much younger your skin can look!" 3.50

"PASTEURIZED" FACE CREAM SPECIAL—massage daily to texturize as you cleanse. Cream away flaky dryness. Soothe! Soften! Refresh! 1.00 plus tax

helena rubinstein

655 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 22

PARTY DRESS

(Continued from Page 39)

"What's all this about?" asked Steve, gingerly lifting the patterns. "Somebody fill me in."

"Class prom Saturday," said Pamela. "Big night. Marybeth has a date with a senior. Don't you remember your first date? Your child is growing up."

"Date?" said Steve. He stood up and looked wonderingly at Marybeth, who had stepped on the footstool while crossing the room and was apparently stuck there. "Is all that ours?" he asked. "All that long, tall kid?"

"It isn't sectional," said his wife. "As a matter of economy, I'm trying to make something out of that old velvet job of mine."

"That old beanbag," he said. "Why fool with that?"

"It's a perfectly marvelous piece of transparent velvet. The first time I wore it you were goggle-eyed. The second time you proposed. It's been in retirement since then. It will make a lovely formal."

"Who's supposed to propose to Marybeth? Why don't you buy her a dress?"

"Oh, dad-dy!" Marybeth whirled through the patterns. A chair fell over and the chandelier tinkled. "Could I really have a new dress?"

Trapped, Steve tried to think, but it was too late. "I don't see why not," he said weakly.

Marybeth and her mother exchanged long, shining glances.

"She can wear it next year," Pamela said quickly. "I'll fix it so it can be let out in every direction." She made a sweep at the table and the scattered patterns seemed to dissolve.

Marybeth made another motion and the table appeared. She did a brief pirouette at the sideboard and came up with a handful of silver. "Knife, fork, spoon," she said. "Knife, fork, spoon."

Pamela faded through the swinging door.

In a slight daze Steve wandered into the living room, picked up the paper and sank into a chair. Almost instantly Marybeth materialized at his elbow.

"Where are the twins?"

"Skating," said Marybeth. "Mother baked a gorgeous lemon pie and you're having steak. We're eating meat loaf."

"This is a democracy," said Steve. "Why do I get steak while the rest of you eat meat loaf?"

"You're our father," said Marybeth. "It says in the Bible 'Honor thy father and thy ——'"

"I don't get this," said Steve. "One minute the kitchen is cold and the next it's producing lemon pies and steaks. Sounds like some sort of a conspiracy to me."

"Dad-dy!" Marybeth slid from the arm of his chair and pivoted into the center of the room, her pleated skirt whirling about her long, shapely legs. "Of course there's no conspiracy. Anyhow, I really get a new dress, don't I? You won't renege?"

Steve heard the broiler door open in the kitchen and the first delicious sizzle of a steak. "Nope, honey," he said. "I won't renege. Rather cut my throat first."

At ten o'clock the next morning the buzzer in Steve's office rang imperiously. A split second later the telephone whirred into action. At the other end of the buzzer lay the heavy thumb of J. C. Kingery, president, Kingery, Carr & Conner, Inc., Builders. At the other end of the telephone lay—what? Romance, perhaps. Steve answered the telephone.

"Sweetheart," said Pamela in her best Sunday voice, "I wouldn't bother you except the darnedest thing happened. I was supposed ——"

"Can I call you back?" asked Steve quickly. "J. C. is sitting on the buzzer in his office. He's probably discovered the world will end at noon. I won't be more than ten minutes."

He hung up, lifted a sheet of tracing paper from the drawing board, and went down the hall. "Go on in," said Miss Patton, fluttering her hands helplessly in the outer office.

"I'm in," said Steve as he pushed through the door. "Hi, chief," he said to the big man behind the desk.

The big man clattered a phone into its cradle. "Stop calling me chief," he said. "After all, you're practically a member of the firm."

"Thanks," said Steve. "More money?"

J. C. Kingery stood up and banged down a near-by sash. "Can't hear a thing with that confounded window open. What did you say?"

"Nothing," replied Steve. He spread the tracing paper on the desk. "If this is what you want, I'm not quite finished."

"Put that thing away. What's the use of talking about it if we can't get lumber? That's what I want to talk to you about—lumber. Ever hear of Pudge Harkness?"

"R. J. Harkness? We burn joss sticks to his image every day. He's a lumber king. Why, chief?"

"He's coming to town," said J. C. softly. "I happen to know he's got a hundred thousand board feet of lumber that isn't earmarked." The chief leaned back with a small, grim smile. "Funny thing. I once dunked his head in a bucket of library paste. Fraternity initiation." He leaned forward again, and the smile disappeared. "How did I know the oaf would inherit a lumber mill?"

"Tough luck, chief. He's probably never forgotten."

The grim smile came back. "I don't know. As a matter of fact, he sounded pretty friendly over the phone. He's coming up from this little town in Arkansas with his wife. Called long distance and wanted to know if I could arrange some night life for them."

"Can do," said Steve. "That should be no great problem."

"It isn't that simple." J. C. drummed on the desk top. "Steve," he said, lowering his voice and looking around nervously, "do you happen to know any nice-looking young girls? Something around eighteen or nineteen?"

Steve's eyebrow slid upward sharply. "So that's it," he said. "The old boy's a bit of a wolf."

"No, no, no," yelled J. C. "It's not that at all. He's married to a battle-ax who won't let him out of her sight. Trouble is they've h issue. A son. And I'd bet my bottom dol he's just as much of an oaf as his fath He's coming along and Pudge particula asked if I could fix up a date for him."

"I'm married," said Steve. "I don't kn any young girls. Pam absolutely refuses let me run around with them. I've begg and begged."

"All right, all right," said the chief. "Le not horse it up too much. I'm serious. You the youngest member of the firm. Could Pamela dig up somebody? Surely y people ——" He waved his hand in the vaguely.

"I'll try," said Steve sincerely. "That's I can say, boss."

"Stop calling me boss. Go try. Let know before five."

"Okay, chief."

Steve bowed out, flicked a smile at M Patton, and went into his office holding head.

"Pamela, doll," he said over the pho "do you think you could line up a beauti girl of eighteen who likes to go dancing? hope you understand. This is important.'

Pamela choked slightly. "I've tried understand everything, dear," she said. "I you'll have to admit this is a little odd af fifteen years."

"Wait a minute," he said, and explair the situation.

"Oh," she replied. "Let me work on it. the meantime, this is the important thi Marybeth is downtown going berserk. I w supposed to go with her to the beauty par and then to buy the dress, but I'd forgot our club meeting. Are you listening?"

"Go ahead," said Steve. He picked u pad and began figuring what a handso thing the firm could make out of one hund thousand feet of lumber.

"She's at the beauty parlor now. She'll at Mason's around three o'clock. Is th any way you could meet her and help pick the dress?"

"I'd rather have a major operatio groaned Steve.

"I know, darling," said Pamela. voice took on a secret inflection known only themselves. "You'll do it, won't you, dear

"Uh—yes," said Steve. "The beau parlor at three. What beauty parlor?"

"No, dear. Mason's department store three. West entrance. You can't miss h She slipped out wearing my red coat and new snakeskin shoes. I could brain her. knows where to go. Fourth floor." There a small kissing sound and the line went de

At ten minutes after three Steve stood the west entrance of Mason's departm store, whistling tuneless Thousands of 'em, he said himself as he watched crowds surging up and down street. And I don't know o You couldn't just walk out, your hat and introduce yo self. All kinds. Brunettes, r heads. Take that beauti blonde with the upswept h do. The one looking in the w dow. If he could just go up say ——

The blonde turned sudde and came toward him. She wearing a bright red coat snakeskin shoes. With a li chirp she bowled through crowd and grabbed his a "Dad-dy! What are you do here?"

"Holy leaping grasshopp Marybeth," he said. "W in the world has happened your hair?"

"It's the new Manhattan sweep," said Marybeth, pro ling him through the entra "Like it?"

(Continued on Page 110)

"Don't touch me, mom! I've been sunk by an atom bomb an' I'm still radioactive."

Girls will talk... about these

"But, Alice, it's not only lovelier . . . Holmes & Edwards silverplate stays lovelier longer. Certainly I know how, listen: the backs of bowls and handles of most used spoons and forks are invisibly inlaid with two blocks of Sterling Silver."

"... and I said, 'Jane, that just isn't so ... all silverplate is not alike. Holmes & Edwards is far different from those extra plated kinds. It's Sterling Inlaid with these."

"Did you hear what I said— 'Holmes & Edwards prices haven't gone up!' Remarkable, particularly when you realize that you can't buy finer silverplate at any price."

HOLMES & EDWARDS
STERLING INLAID° SILVERPLATE

HERE AND HERE
It's Sterling Inlaid

WHICH PATTERN? Three to choose from. Lovely Lady, Danish Princess and Youth, all made in the U. S. A. by The International Silver Company.

HOW MUCH? Surprise! Unlike so many other things price of Holmes & Edwards has not gone up! Still only $68.50 for 52 pieces, service for eight with chest. (No Federal Tax.)

WHERE TO BUY? At jewelry and department store silverware counters.

right 1948, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Div., en, Conn. Sold in Canada by: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd. °Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

"Krene" drapes made of "Vinylite" Plastic

NOW! Vinylite Brand Plastics BRING YOU

Drapery Beauties

THAT WASH LIKE WINDOWS!

Imagine a drapery material that remains window-bright, through sunshine, storms and countless split-second washings . . . all because it's made of scientifically balanced VINYLITE Brand Plastic. Look to this dramatic new drapery material for the efficient wear you've come to expect of VINYLITE Plastics in handbags, shower curtains and a host of other useful products. Pronounce it "Vine-na-lite."

YOU KNOW IT'S RIGHT IF IT'S

Vinylite PLASTICS

For day-in, day-out efficiency, choose products made of VINYLITE Brand Plastics. Scientifically tailored for each specific end use, their performance is always beyond question. Look for the "Made of VINYLITE Brand Plastics" signature on things you buy.

BAKELITE CORPORATION
Unit of Union Carbide and Carbon Corporation
UCC
30 East 42nd Street, New York 17, N. Y.

★ Wash and wipe dry in seconds!
★ Easy to drape!
★ Fade-, streak-, crack-, weather-resistant!
★ Available in luxurious decorator colors and patterns!
★ Amazingly economical because they're longer wearing!

(Continued from Page 108)

"No kid of fourteen ought to be wearing that bunch of spinach on her head. Does your mother know about this?"

"Do you think she'll be purple?" asked Marybeth, tugging him skillfully toward the elevators.

"Either purple or some other primary color," said Steve. "And another thing, baby, you'd better rub that make-up off before you go home."

"But that was accidental, daddy. After Mr. Nick fixed my hair he asked if I'd mind posing for a picture. So he fixed my face and took my picture. I didn't have time —— Here we are, daddy. Fourth floor."

Steve stepped cautiously into the cathedrallike hush of the dress department. He stood for a moment uncertainly and then headed for an annex labeled "Junior Miss." A beautifully coifed clerk, who looked as if she lived under glass, came gliding up. "Yes?" she said, with a minimum of curiosity.

"I—uh—wanted something for my daughter," said Steve, looking off over her left shoulder. "Some kind of a party frock, I believe you call them." He waved vaguely toward Marybeth, standing thirty feet away admiring a silver-garbed wax manikin.

The clerk took a look at Marybeth and made a quick estimate. "Yes, sir," she said. "Step over here. This department is for youngsters around fourteen. I'm afraid it would be a little juvenile for your daughter."

Steve started a protest and then swallowed it. Meekly he followed along, dropped into a deep chair and closed his eyes. Minutes later he opened them, stared briefly, and then sat bolt upright.

In front of him Marybeth turned slowly, her arms extended. The dress, a shimmering lime green, started at a breath-taking distance below her bare shoulders. It gathered speed, raced smoothly over her hips and exploded in a burst of sequined glory. In spite of himself, Steve whistled softly. It was Pamela all over again. Pamela at eighteen. He had a peculiar feeling in his chest.

THE clerk was speaking. "It's positively the only model of its kind in the store," she said. "Very few college girls can wear anything quite as extreme as this." She smiled engagingly. "Your daughter happens to be the type."

"College girls?" said Steve. "But she's only ——"

Marybeth quietly maneuvered closer and managed to plant one snakeskin heel firmly on his toe. "Isn't it gorgeous, daddy?"

"Yes," said Steve definitely, "it certainly is. Get off my toe." He stood up and circled around her. A small plan formed in his head, went away and then came back again. "We'll take it," he said abruptly.

The clerk controlled herself admirably. Marybeth began to shake. "Mother'll kill both of us," she whispered.

"I'll handle mother," said Steve calmly. "I've had fifteen years' experience."

Somewhere around seven-twenty that evening Steve looked at his reflection in the bathroom mirror and wondered if, after all, fifteen years is quite enough time to study women. He adjusted his tie for the tenth time and cautiously stepped into the bedroom. "I can't find my studs," he said hollowly.

Pamela didn't look up from the dressing table. "Left-hand corner of the bureau drawer," she said in a monotone.

"Br-r," said Steve, and opened the drawer. "Look, Pam, after all, this is just like a little family party. We'll be with Marybeth all evening. J. C. and his wife will be there. What can happen?"

PAMELA turned from the mirror. "She's just a baby, Steve. Only after searching my soul have I allowed her to have a date with some boy she's known all her life. On top of that, anyone who would permit a child to buy a dress like that must have rocks in his head."

"Okay," said Steve miserably. "I rattle when I walk. But there isn't anything we can do about it now. We're due at the Empire Club in thirty-five minutes. Marybeth ready?"

"She's been ready for an hour. She's downstairs propped against the ironing board reading the funnies."

J. C. Kingery, president, Kingery Carr & Conner, Inc., had prepared well. They were handed smoothly through the foyer of the exclusive Empire Club, across an inland sea of heads and shoulders to a large floor-side table. Their hosts were, at the moment, seated alone.

Helen Kingery looked up and smiled gaily, tugging Pamela into the chair next to hers. "Pam, you look gorgeous as usual. And Marybeth—good heavens! It can't be, but it is."

Across the table Steve picked up J. C.'s hand-tooled cigar case and removed an imported Havana. "Thanks, chief. . . . It was my idea, Helen," he said solemnly. "Pam's suing in the morning. Charging reckless abandon and conduct unbecoming a father."

"Steve, that's not —— Helen, these two got loose downtown and went absolutely mad. Imagine a fourteen-year-old in a dress like that."

"It's luscious," finished Helen. "She looks like a slice of summer moonlight. But," she added wistfully, "it makes me feel like I should be home with a shawl and a hot-water bottle."

"Woman's place is in the home," said J. C. in a monotone.

"Home, my eye!" said his wife. "Pam this is the third time this week. Last night it was a plumbing person, and the night before a dinner for somebody who has loads of door knobs."

"Finish hardware, dear," said J. C. "Not just doorknobs."

"Well, whatever they were. I thought you wanted doorknobs you just called and they sent them along—but no."

"These are strange times," said J. C. leaned toward Steve. "It's worse than I thought, Steve. I had Barret and Lyn check that clause on the completion da Charley Barret says it's as rigid as the de of the South Dakota. We're definitely co mitted. If we don't get this lumb well ——"

(Continued on Page 112)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Notations for Midsummer

By Gladys McKee

Little boys of three or four
Never ask a day for more

Than hammer and nails and bread and butter
And all the praises you can utter.

They start to dig, then tire of this
And want an apple and a kiss.

They take their treasures all apart
And end up with your time and heart.

Their appetites present a riddle,
Always hungry in the middle

Of an afternoon or night
And at mealtime, eating light.

They wrangle endlessly with bath,
And all the patience woman hath

Is tried in waiting, wafer thin;
First, she tries to get them in,

Then at last she starts to doubt
She will ever get them out. . . .

And all of the above notations
Apply to fathers on vacations.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

JANE WYMAN STARRING IN "JOHNNY BELINDA" A WARNER BROS. PRODUCTION

Look . . . . YOUR NEW BEDROOM IS SHOWING!

Compliments will come your way when your friends eye this "FUNCTIONAL BEAUTY"

AT LAST you can have it . . . a new maple bedroom that suits your personal tastes to a "T".

You're not limited to the usual choice from only a few pieces. Instead, there are more than a dozen functional units. Many of them combine. Take several, and make just the piece you need. A roomy vanity. A smart buffet. A convenient, practical bookcase. Every one of them a personal creation all your own.

You can have as much or as little drawer space as you need. You can combine these adaptable units to fit any wall space, large or small.

And what style! Here's all the quaint charm of colonial maple . . . combined with functional efficiency and straightline design to meet today's streamlined living.

You get *Permanized construction, too. That's Mengel's name for their exclusive method of building fine furniture. Joints and veneers in your Mengel Permanized Furniture will never come apart in any climate . . . damp or dry, hot or cold.

See this lovely furniture. You'll love the mellow finish of the solid maple. You'll praise the functional versatility. You'll be grateful for the Permanized construction that keeps each piece sound and beautiful.

And, when you see the price tag, you'll know you've found a bargain.

For help in planning your personal bedroom, send 10¢ with the coupon for your copy of Mary Adam's new booklet, "Let's Plan a Bedroom Around You."

Permanized MENGEL Furniture

MARY ADAM
The Mengel Company, Dept. 177
Louisville 1, Kentucky

Enclosed is 10¢. Please send me your new booklet, "Let's Plan a Bedroom Around You." (If you live outside Continental U. S., send 25¢.)

NAME _____

STREET _____

CITY _____

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Copyright 1948, The Mengel Company

Corduroy stays picture-pretty
...when it's Zephyroy
REG U S PAT OFF

A Youth-Guild design in Juilliard Zephyroy. For list of stores featuring it, write to A. D. Juilliard & Co., Inc., 40 West 40th St., New York 18, N. Y.

Juilliard ZEPHYROY, the wonderful combed yarn corduroy, stays smart and pretty throughout busy days and gala evenings!

Kitten-soft Zephyroy is *Sanforized for permanent fit. Its luscious colors are vat-dyed to retain their freshness in the sun and at the cleaners.

Look for the Juilliard Zephyroy label whenever you shop for corduroy fashions. Available by-the-yard, too, in 22 shades.

Juilliard Zephyroy REG U S PAT OFF VAT-DYED SANFORIZED

*Residual shrinkage less than 1%

"Fine fabrics are the foundation of fashion"

For her majesty
THE AMERICAN HOUSEWIFE

ELECTRIC SEWING MACHINE

You'll be "sew-happy" with the royal performance of your Sew-Gem. Beginners and accomplished dressmakers alike enjoy easier sewing and professional-like results with this MODERNIZED sewing machine. Sew-Gem brings you the finest in sewing machine tradition . . . plus features of advanced mechanical design. New convenient right hand bobbin and lifetime silent chain drive are exclusive with Sew-Gem.

Stitch for stitch . . . whether mending or creating a chic new frock, you will find Sew-Gem your faithful servant.

Four double duty models . . . handsome walnut veneer cabinets. Secretary desk writing desk . . . occasional table electric portable. See the Sew-Gem at your dealer or write direct.

MANUFACTURED EXCLUSIVELY BY SEW-GEM MANUFACTURING CO.
ROCK ISLAND, ILLINOIS

York Process NAME TAPES — Your Name
AT NOTION COUNTERS EVERYWHERE

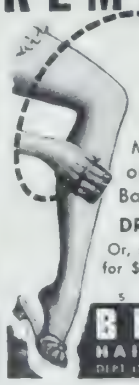
MAKE MONEY EASILY!

50 NEW BOXES
CHRISTMAS - EVERYDAY
CARDS AND STATIONERY

Fast-selling line. Many unusual assortments. Christmas Carol, Americana, Etching, "Flocked" Initial Stationery, others. Profits to 100%. Bonus. Special money-saving offers. Experience unnecessary. Write today for Christmas Leader assortment on approval and FREE SAMPLES 5 different Name Imprinted Christmas Card lines, Personal, Floral Stationery.

7 NAME IMPRINTED assortments

ELMIRA GREETING CARD CO.
Dept. M-45, Elmira, New York



POISON IVY OAK or SUMAC

Science has discovered an excellent new treatment for ivy, oak and sumac poisoning. It's gentle and safe, dries up the blisters in a surprisingly short time, often within 24 hours. At druggists, 59¢

Ask for IVY-DRY

Mfd. by IVY Corp., Montclair, N. J.

REMOVE HAIR

No Razor
No Chemicals
25¢

Remove leg hair, arm hair, face hair. Stop stubby regrowth. Money-back guaranteed results. No odor. End unsightly hair now. Get Baby Touch Hair Remover today at

DRUG OR DEPARTMENT STORES

Or, send 25¢ for one Baby Touch Pad (Five for $1.00). Mittens with two sides only 35¢ or Three for $1.00.

BABY TOUCH HAIR REMOVER COMPANY
DEPT. 17 · 3750 TINDELL BLVD. · ST. LOUIS 7, MO.

(Continued from Page 110)

"Let's talk about something pleasant," said Steve. "Like train wrecks. . . . Oh-oh, is this the source of supply?"

"Yes," said J. C., looking around. "And it's going to be as bad as I thought."

Steve and J. C. stood up abruptly and turned toward the headwaiter, who was leading a large man and a small, but energetic, woman toward the table. In a moment of doubt Marybeth started to push back her chair.

"No, no, moon child," said Pamela, placing a toe firmly on her foot. "Ladies don't stand. Tomorrow," she murmured, "pigtails again."

"No-o!" quavered Marybeth, raising her hand protectively toward the upswept hair-do.

The introductions were completed with just the right touch of confusion. The Harkness family was obviously out for the evening and determined to let nothing interfere with their having a good time.

"Chip will be along in a minute," said Mrs. Harkness. She raised her eyes heavenward. "That boy! He's decided he wants a plane, and salesmen have been tearing through our suite all day."

"A plane?" said Helen Kingery. "Isn't he a little young?"

"Hah!" boomed Harkness senior. "Down where we come from, Mrs. Kingery, they start young. Chip's been driving a car for the last six years—ever since he was twelve. Smashes 'em up as fast as I buy 'em. Kid's crazy about anything mechanical. Quite a boy."

"Yes," said Helen and Pam simultaneously. "He must be."

"We couldn't keep him in school," sai Mrs. Harkness. "He's very impulsive, an every time something went wrong the blamed Chip. We simply decided he'd be f better off not going to college."

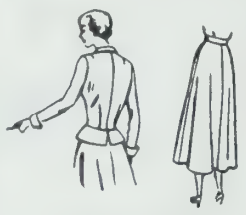
"Can't say college did a lot for me, roared Harkness senior. "Made my pi without worrying about who signed th Treaty of Ghent. Here's the boy now, by th way."

Thrusting through the crowd came a ta thin youth in white mess jacket, maroon ti wine-colored sash and knife-edged trouser He nodded absently at the introductions an waited until the waiter had adjusted h chair. Flipping open a wallet, he casuall passed a bill over his shoulder. "Buy house," he said wearily.

"Chip, dear," his mother called across th table, "you haven't excused yourself to M Kingery for being late."

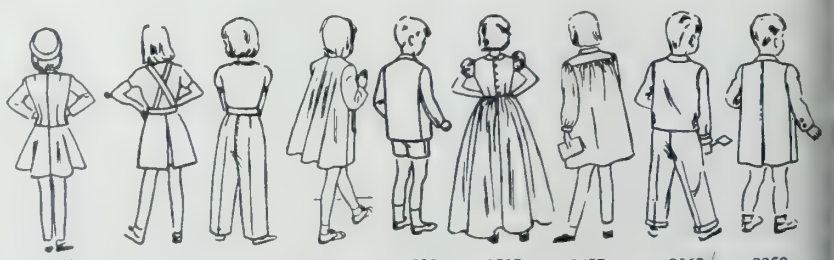
Chip, dear, mumbled an indifferer apology. His eyes roamed the room res lessly, came back to the table, and fixe suddenly on Marybeth. Without changin expression, he managed a long, low whist and stood up.

Walking carefully around the table, h tapped Steve on the shoulder.



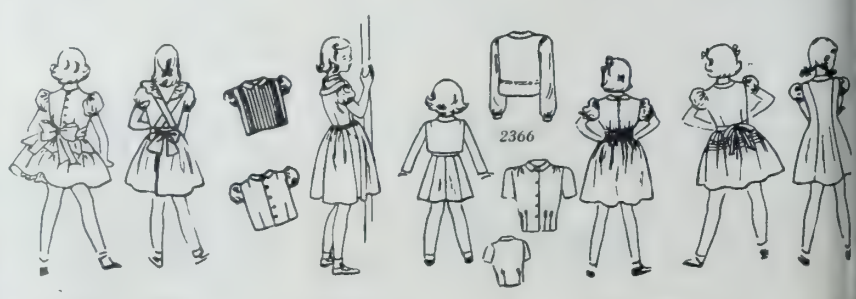
"Pardon me, sir," he said, "but the seems to have been a mistake in the seatin arrangements. Could you be persuaded t change places?" He looked at Marybet from another angle. "I don't think you' the type," he added.

"I'm not," said Steve tonelessly. "I'm h father."



"Good enough," said Chip. He slid in the chair and leaned toward Marybeth. "A I had this figured for a dull evening." Cas

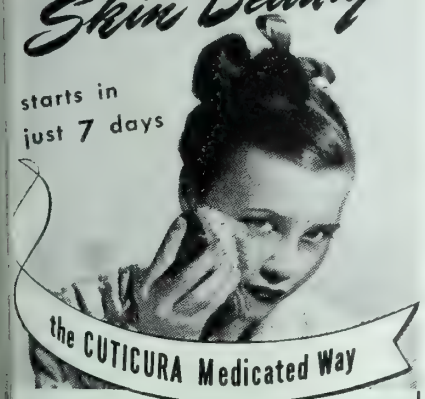
Back Views and Prices of Vogue Patterns on Pages 62 and 63



Vogue Design No. 6402. Jacket, 12 to 20, 30 to 38; 50c.
Vogue Design No. 6521. "Easy-to-Make" skirt, 24 to 34; 40c.
Vogue Design No. 2462. Suit, 4 to 12; 40c.
Vogue Design No. 2500. "Easy-to-Make" skirt, 2 to 12; 35c.
Vogue Design No. 2512. Girl's slacks, 3 to 14; 35c.
Vogue Design No. 2447. Coat, 4 to 12; 40c.
Vogue Design No. 2310. Boy's suit, 4 to 10; 35c.
Vogue Design No. 2517. One-piece dress, 4 to 10; 40c.
Vogue Design No. 2457. "Easy-to-Make" smock, 3 to 10; 35c.
Vogue Design No. 2163. Child's overalls and jacket, 1 to 14; 40c.
Vogue Design No. 2258. Boy's or girl's coat and hat (leggings included in patter but not illustrated), 1 to 6; 50c.
Vogue Design No. 2524. One-piece dress, 4 to 10; 35c.
Vogue Design No. 2454. Pinafore, 2 to 10; 35c.
Vogue Design No. 2519. Jumper-dress and blouse, 8 to 14; 35c.
Vogue Design No. 2366. Blouse, 2 to 12; 35c.
Vogue Design No. 2326. Suit and blouse, 4 to 12; 35c.
Vogue Design No. 2455. "Easy-to-Make" one-piece dre 4 to 12; 35c.
Vogue Design No. 2526. One-piece dress, 4 to 10; 35c.
Vogue Design No. 2450. One-piece dress, 4 to 12; 35c.

6402 6521

2462 2500 2512 2447 2310 2517 2457 2163 2258



2366

2524 2454 2519 2326 2455 2526 2450

Thrilling New Skin Beauty starts in just 7 days

the CUTICURA Medicated Way

Clearer, softer, more alluring skin, radiant new tone can be yours when you lather-massage your face regularly twice daily with Cuticura Soap. Fragrant, mild Cuticura Soap contains medical ingredients many skin specialists use. No other soap can match it! For all-over loveliness, use Cuticura Soap also for your daily bath. Follow with Cuticura Talcum for long-lasting freshness and protection. Buy Cuticura preparations at drug counters everywhere.

Cuticura

O YOU WANT $25?

v lovely Doehla Christmas and All-asion Greeting Cards, Stationery, Wrappings, to friends, neighbors, co-workers. 30 different assortments. You make $25 profit on only 50 $1 boxes. NO EXPERIENCE NEEDED—our FREE BOOK shows you easy ways for any beginner to make money! Write for 2 sample boxes on approval. If friends don't snap them up, return at our expense. HARRY DOEHLA CO., Dept. L22, Fitchburg, Mass.

E SAMPLES
eautiful "Name printed" stmas Cards them at $1 for 25

Pain soothed Promptly

BOILS BROUGHT TO A HEAD

Quicker

Nature often causes a boil to come to a head and thus ease painful misery..BUT..doctors agree that moist heat coupled with a poul-tice action helps bring boils to a head quicker. An easy, practical way for you to apply moist heat is by using proven, world-famous

TESTED AND COMMENDED by PARENTS' MAGAZINE

Antiphlogistine

MEDICATED POULTICE DRESSING

Helps in 3 ways...1—eases pain and tension ...2—softens the boil, relieving soreness...3—increases blood circulation, localizes and brings the boil to a head quicker.

WOMEN WANTED

EXTRA MONEY FOR YOU—Showing Exciting New CHRISTMAS CARDS

autiful New x Assortments
5 LINE! 21-card ature' ass't plus chings, Comic, t Wrappings, 16-d All-Occasion, tionery, many ers ...also ...W! Sensational ported English oral Napkins!

Just show friends, neighbors, others magnificent Personal Christmas Cards "Feature" box. Sells for $1—you make $1.50 and 25 for $1.95. Orders shipped direct to customers. Also big album of higher priced De Luxe Personal Cards. Season's greatest values! Extra profits showing 19 thrilling new Christmas and Everyday ass'ts, including glorious 21-Card "Feature" box. Sells for $1—you make up to 50c. Many others. SEND NO MONEY! Just rush coupon—get FREE Samples Personal Cards & "Feature" Box on Personal Organizations Wanted for Special Fund Raising Plan.

LACE BROWN, INC., DEPT H-9, 225 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK 10, N.Y.

H-9

AME _____

DDRESS _____

TY _____ STATE _____

ally he extended one arm around the back of Marybeth's chair. "Let's dance."

Marybeth tipped her chair ever so slightly and the extended arm fell on empty air. "You've talked me into it, Mr. Harkness," she said, and stood up smoothly while Pamela held her breath.

"Such a pretty girl," glowed Mrs. Harkness. "Chip's taken on so much polish lately that it scares me. They dance beautifully together."

"Yes," said Pamela vaguely. "I can't understand it. At home Marybeth knocks over everything that isn't nailed down."

Waiters placed the first course and Mrs. Harkness sighed extravagantly. "Of course, we've tried to give Chip everything without spoiling him. Now daddy's starting him in the firm right at the top and letting him make some pretty important decisions."

"Remarkable," breathed Helen Kingery, and pressed Pam's toe under the table.

The party moved smoothly into gear. Across the table, Chip and Marybeth maneuvered for position. The nearest available common ground was the dance floor, and their squab grew colder as the music grew warmer. After the third set Chip seemed to be moving on the edge of a trance. "This is heaven," he said. He disappeared from the table and returned with an orchid in a plastic box.

"Thanks," said Marybeth calmly, and pinned it in her hair.

With ice cream plentiful again, you may be frequently going to the soda fountain for a "sundae." Perhaps you have wondered at the odd name. It seems that about 1875 Evanston, Illinois, passed a regulation forbidding the sale of ice-cream sodas on Sunday. Someone thought of serving ice cream with sirup, but no soda water. This "Sunday soda" soon became popular, and on weekdays plenty of customers asked for "Sundays." The city fathers objected to naming the dish after the Sabbath, so the spelling was changed—and "sundae" it has been ever since!

—WEBB B. GARRISON.

Five minutes later a surprised cigarette girl disposed of her entire quota of carnations for the evening. "I love to do it," said Chip. "Anything else you want?" His arm dropped on the back of the chair and this time it stayed there. Marybeth smiled serenely. Pamela tore a small corner from her handkerchief.

"Chip is so thoughtful," sighed his mother. "Of course, he's had his own checking account for years. We believe he can handle his own money."

Handling isn't the word, thought Pamela. He barely touches it.

Over coffee, the subject of lumber was gently introduced into the conversation. J. C. thoughtfully brought it up and then, with a magnificent display of nonchalance, changed the topic. Inwardly rigid, Steve acted his part and kept bringing back the subject. At peace with the world, the lumber king smiled and surveyed the long ash on his cigar.

"Well, gentlemen," he said finally, "it really isn't up to me. Chip, here, is sales manager. What he says goes. I believe in letting the boy have some responsibility."

At the mention of his name Chip turned dreamily from Marybeth. "What's up?" he asked.

"Mr. Kingery's firm needs some lumber, Chip. Around a hundred thousand feet—mostly flooring. It's up to you."

Chip tilted his head, half shut one eye and pondered. Suddenly he turned to Marybeth. "What do you think, dreamboat? The men need a little lumber. Think we ought to let 'em have it?"

Pamela shut her eyes. When she opened them Marybeth's shoulder was snuggled securely against the white mess jacket. The

(Continued on Page 115)

Instant New Glamor

Yours with Life Bra's "Figure-Type" Fit

Here's why—each of Life Bra's nine separately designed pieces is changed in proportion not only for size and cup width, but for every variation in your exact figure type! Be fitted—see the difference instantly!

Life Bra

Life Bras from $1.25 White, Nude, Black, Blue, at all better stores

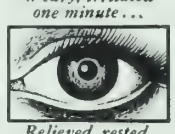
Formfit TAILORED-TO-FIT

MADE ONLY BY THE FORMFIT COMPANY • CHICAGO • NEW YORK

MATERNITY FASHIONS

FOR FALL Young Mother-to-Be daytime and dressy dresses, suits. Also Maternity lingerie and corsets. WRITE FOR FREE CATALOG

YOUR MATERNITY SHOP, INC., Dept. L, 251 W. 40 St., N. Y. 18



SAFE EYE-GENE

Relieves TIRED EYES In SECONDS!

Wonderful EYE-GENE! Just two drops in your eyes that are tired or irritated from wind, glare, overwork, lack of sleep, reading, driving or movies—will relieve, rest, refresh, clear them in seconds. Use it every day. EYE-GENE is safe and gentle. 25¢, 60¢, and $1.00 in handy eye-dropper bottles at Druggists everywhere. Insist on EYE-GENE!

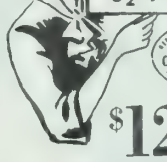
Weary, irritated one minute...

Relieved, rested, cleared the next!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

New improved Skat chases mosquitoes, biting flies, gnats and chiggers before they bite.

NEW GOVERNMENT 6-2-2 FORMULA! 3-HOUR PROTECTION



CAT-TEX by CAT'S PAW SOLE OUT-WEARS LEATHER!

CUT OUT AND BUY DIRECT VIA MAIL

SEND PENNY POSTAL TODAY FOR Free Booklet! LJ

TALL GALS SIZES

8½ 9 9½ 10 10½ 11 11½ 12

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

$12.95

Sizes 8½ to 12, add $1

SHEBA ... A BEAUTY!

Your link to style in black sueded leather.

Mrs. D.P.R. of Bedford, Iowa writes: 'Only you can fit my 11 aaaa foot.'

SHOECRAFT nationally famed Fifth Avenue shoes are chosen by style-and-quality-minded 'Tall Gals'. Perfect fit means better wear. A trial convinces. Get your copy of our FREE BOOKLET LJ TODAY. Smart styles! All sizes! Any pair sent on a 10 day money-back guarantee if unworn. Prompt REFUNDS. When ordering send check or money-order. Charge accounts invited. SHOECRAFT shoes are sold direct ONLY

Special TALL GALS Extra, extra Long Nylon Stockings Sizes 10½ to 12—Off-Black, Taupe, Toast, Suntan $1.95

SHOECRAFT

603 FIFTH AVE. • NEW YORK 17

All sizes 2½ to 12 • AAAAA to C

PRINT NAME AND ADDRESS IN MARGIN

Nashua

the "magic" blanket

—guaranteed against moth damage for 5 years*!

IMAGINE—a beautiful, warm blanket that moths won't eat! You can forget about old-fashioned summer moth protection when you own a Nashua Purrey† blanket.

This "wonder" blanket is the result of years of research at Nashua Mills. You'll be amazed at its lightness and warmth! Tests prove a Nashua Purrey blanket is warmer than many costing nearly twice as much. The secret is a patented blend of scientifically processed rayon fibers and wool.

You've never seen such rich colors—each matched with wide, rayon satin binding. And they cost so little!

Leading stores throughout the country feature Nashua blankets. Ask to see them at your favorite store today.

Patent 2,208,533 †Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Only Nashua gives you all this

Money back if your Nashua Purrey blanket is damaged by moths within 5 years

Warmer than many blankets costing nearly twice as much

Deep, "frosted" nap—light as a cloud

9 gorgeous colors—and white that stays white

Rich rayon satin binding

Washable in mild suds

In 3 sizes: 72 x 84—$6.95
72 x 90—$7.95
80 x 90—$8.95

Only $7.95 FOR 72" x 90" SIZE

NASHUA MILLS, DIVISION OF TEXTRON Inc.,
ALSO MAKES BLANKETS OF COTTON AND MIXED FIBERS • COMBED PERCALE AND MUSLIN SHEETS • INDIAN HEAD† COTTON • SHOWER CURTAINS • HOME FASHION

aming blond head tipped back and her s half-closed.
"Don't be a square," she said softly. "Of rse we'll let them have it."
Chip looked across the table and grinned.
's a deal," he said. "Just to make it legal ouldn't object to something on account."
"Naturally," answered Steve and J. C. in breath. A pen scratched across paper and
C. passed over a check. "That should hold Chip accepted the check carelessly. "How you like that, kid?" he asked Marybeth.

ve thousand bucks just like finding it."
stuffed the check into his wallet. "What acket," he said. "Let's dance."
The evening coasted to a successful finish.
e party came out into the clear, warm
t with a silver moon riding high.
I have my car," said J. C. "Suppose rop you at your hotel?"
No thanks," said
s. Harkness. "It's a lovely night only a step. We'll
lk. Coming,
p?" ttention suddenly sed on Chip and ybeth. The lum-heir, leaning close Marybeth at the
nd of the canopy,
ed up.
Toddle along,
s," he said.
e're going for a ride in the park."
No," said Pamela
enly and a little
ly. "I mean it's—
it's awfully
" She looked at e desperately.
Yes," said Steve weakly. "It's really y late. That is ——" arkness chuckled amiably. "Wouldn't ll being young myself on a night like u."
A cab whirled up and the Carmichaels shed in frozen silence as their daughter isappeared with a gay little wave of her ar.

Twenty minutes later Steve let Pamela in the front door. Their sitter, Mrs. Patch, came out of the kitchen where she had been having a little snack.
"The twins were wonderful, Mrs. Carmichael," she said. "Not a whimper out of them. They sleep like little logs."
"That's fine," said Pamela dully.
Mrs. Patch looked at her. "Something wrong, Mrs. Carmichael? You look a little pale."
"Nothing, Mrs. Patch. Nothing at all. Good night and thanks for everything." The door closed on Mrs. Patch and a deadly silence.
"Well," said Steve finally, "no use worrying."
"Oh, Steve," groaned Pamela. "Why did we ever let her go? Of all the stupid, idiotic things. Why didn't you stop them?"
"Stop them? How could I without throwing myself under the wheels of the cab?"
"My baby," said Pamela. "My little baby out alone with that—that young timber wolf."
"I, for one, am not going to worry," said Steve, pacing rapidly up and down the floor. "After all, Marybeth is sensible."
Silence fell. A deep-blue silence. An occasional car whirred up the street and passed. Aeons later, tires scraped the curb and footsteps tripped rapidly up the steps and across the porch. Marybeth swept into the room, tossed her wrap in the general direction of a chair, stepped out of her slippers and slid onto the piano bench.
"Hi, everybody," she said through a yawn. "Creepers, am I sleepy!"
Pamela walked slowly across the room. "Baby," she said, "are you all right? I mean ——"
Marybeth looked up wide-eyed. "All right? Why, mother, of course I'm all right." She reached up and unpinned the orchid. "Mother, do you suppose if I put this in the refrigerator it'll keep for the prom?"
"Maybe," said Pamela. "Marybeth, what did you do with that awful boy?"
"Do with him? I told him to get lost. Mother, wasn't he an incredible drip?" She stood up and started for the kitchen. Pamela followed doggedly.
"He won't be back, will he, Marybeth? I mean, did he try to make another date?"
Marybeth opened the refrigerator and stood pensively taking inventory. "Huh-uh," she said. "I told him I was only fourteen and he lost interest. I'm starved. Mother, can I have this piece of lemon pie?"
From the doorway Steve yawned suddenly and expressively. "I, for one, am going to bed."
Pamela pivoted slowly and started toward him. "And I for two," she said, "before my knees give out." THE END

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Girls With Hoops

By R. H. Grenville

They race together through the park,
The golden sister and the dark,
Blue eyes and hazel equally
Intent upon a wavering arc,
Being too young as yet to know,
Unless some elder tell them so,
How, faster than their flying feet
The days of childhood go.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

THIS ROOM FOR $395.14 AT AUCTION

(Continued from Page 106)

ding to see that it isn't lumpy, an indi-tion of cheap quality when new. Well-made es, even when old, will retain their smooth
pe. The webbing may have to be replaced, at n amateur can do this satisfactorily.
The big green club chair cost $6.00, and e fabric to cover it came to $13.00. We up-olstered it ourselves, but a slip cover would ser quite as satisfactorily and be a bit s double. If new, such a chair would sell r ll over $100.00.
To Italian-style armchairs, for $12.00 ch had their tops cut down to modernize em and were slip-covered in coral to use a air. The fabric came to $28.00, so that total cost of $52.00 we had two chairs ich couldn't be duplicated for $200.00.
Our sofa is about twenty-five years old, t well made we had only to plump the springs before upholstering it. We put the w chintz right on over the original wool ver, after giving it a good shampoo.
If buying a sofa to do over at home, choose e th simple square lines, for it is easier to re and stays in style longer. A new sofa of ir quality would sell for $250.00 in mus-
. It this one cost only $27.50 at auction.

Our tables are made from really out-of-date old ones. The tops were very handsome walnut and mahogany, scratched a little and covered with old varnish put on over dirt. We removed the objectionable finish and sanded them to smoothness, revarnishing evenly and rubbing down with pumice and linseed oil. We took off the old pedestals, which gave them a dated look, and bought new legs.

Did you know that you can buy all styles of table legs at the retail lumber stores in cities and big towns? You go in and pick out what you need, just as if you were buying groceries. These stores also have knobs, moldings and other helps for the amateur handy man. Legs cost from $1.00 up, according to style and ornament. You finish them yourself.

The long console in the window is made from the leaves of an old dining table which cost $12.00, with $4.00 more for new legs. It would be a custom job if new, costing at least $150.00.

The carpet is new, for it pays to get the first year's wear out of a carpet yourself. There are good carpets to be had at auction

NEW

Miracle deodorant speeds away your perspiration worries!

1. ETIQUET actually ends under-arm perspiration odor—safely—surely!
2. ETIQUET—made by specially patented formula—really checks under-arm perspiration!
3. FLUFFY-LIGHT AND SOOTHING—Etiquet goes on easily—disappears in a jiffy! No gritty particles!
4. MORE ECONOMICAL TO BUY—Etiquet won't dry out in the jar!
5. NO DAMAGE TO CLOTHING when you use Etiquet—famous cloth-test proves!

Etiquet

THE SAFE-AND-SURE DEODORANT

COPR 1948 LEHN & FINK PRODUCTS CORP.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

"Chesterfields make a hit with me because they're Milder"

William Bendix

Starring as BABE RUTH in
"THE BABE RUTH STORY"
A ROY DEL RUTH PRODUCTION
AN ALLIED ARTISTS PICTURE

GENUINE
"George Babe" Ruth
LOUISVILLE SLUGGER

Powerized

WHY... I smoke Chesterfield

(FROM A SERIES OF STATEMENTS BY PROMINENT TOBACCO FARMERS)

I am at the auction sales practically every day and Liggett & Myers buy the best cigarette tobacco grown in this section.

I am a Chesterfield smoker. So put me down for that. It's a good cigarette and I like it.

D. T. McLawhorn
FARMER – WINTERVILLE, N.C.

Always Buy CHESTERFIELD

ALWAYS MILDER BETTER TASTING COOLER SMOKING

THE ROODS' PROMISED LAND

Henry and Vera Rood, of Wahoo, Nebr., worked off a $12,800 mortgage in 6 years instead of 40.

For farmers in the state that "the weather runs," the soil is both a way of life and a livelihood.

PHOTOS — ESTHER BUBLEY

by HARLAN MILLER

WHEN the poker stirs up the embers in the twenty-year-old gray-enameled kitchen range at the Rood farmhouse, the hand on the poker is Vera Rood's, not her husband's. She stuffs in some corncobs and scurries back to bed, for it is 6 o'clock on a cold winter morning.

"Daddy loves that last fifteen minutes in bed so much," she confesses a little guiltily, "that I just let him sleep."

When a louder clank and clangor float up from the furnace in the cellar at 6:15, that's Henry. By the time the four children leap to the hot-air registers or huddle around the stove to dress, there'll be warmth in the air. Thus the Rood family goes into action as a team:

At 6:20 son Don, the blond 17-year-old six-footer, hits the cold linoleum. In ten minutes he meets his father in the cow barn.

By 6:30 Vera is back in the kitchen. In a few minutes merry-eyed, round-cheeked Marjorie Anne, with dimples and the cutest tilted nose in the township, is downstairs too. She was 14 a month after she became a freshman at Wahoo (Nebraska) High last autumn. If she doesn't need the time with her books she helps her mother get breakfast and pack four lunches.

Until 7 o'clock the two youngest will remain curled up in the big double bed in the southwest bedroom upstairs. Sound sleepers, like all the Roods, they haven't heard the clanking and the bustle of early morning. Then comes the inevitable summons. Norma brushes her blond hair with 13-year-old awareness, alert, withdrawn and watchful as a fawn. The youngest, 7-year-old Deanna, is last out of bed in winter. She is the family darling, the sitter in every lap, a self-assured but elusive pixy.

At 7:15 the milkers are back from the barn. Vera takes the glasses off Henry's thin, bony nose, wipes the mist off carefully, puts them back on for him; he hardly notices. They sit down to their well-earned breakfast.

Hen session: Deanna Rood is the family sleepyhead but, at 7, has learned to follow the rule that chores belong to everyone. Gathering eggs—about 55 a day—and helping out with the dishes are her current specialties.

Cleanup campaign: Deanna takes a scrubbing in washtub near the kitchen stove. Because new machines mean increased income, Roods have waited to modernize their home and spent most of their savings on farm equipment.

Though Roods have two cars, Bess is preferred conveyance when Marj does postal duty on mud-blocked Nebraska roads. A star member of the 4-H Club and top date-rater at Wahoo High, she plans to study for nursing career.

"Farming's a family enterprise— it draws us all together."

In summer all this happens forty or fifty minutes earlier, but less painfully; on Sundays, perhaps an hour later.

The Rood family is worth inspecting as they eat breakfast around the kitchen table. For the first time in his life Farmer Henry Rood is a $10,000-a-year man, give or take a few hundred.

"We grossed $14,000 last year," he told a caller recently, "and I guess our net income was at least two thirds, or around $9333."

Eight years ago Henry was a tenant farmer. All he owned was his furniture and some pots and pans. When he borrowed $12,800 to buy this 160-acre farm, he got forty years to pay it off. The lean thirties had eaten up his $2000 savings.

"We agreed to live on $1510 a year," recalls Henry. "All money over our expenses was to go on the mortgage."

They paid it off in six years instead of forty. A miracle compounded of war and high prices, good crops here and scarcity abroad, caught him off guard. One day in the late summer of 1944, when Patton's soldiers were at the German frontier, their good fortune dawned on them. It was the year of victory. "We suddenly realized," Henry likes to recall, "that the way things were going, with good crops and good prices, we'd pay it off in 1946." Their hearts soared.

"He gets absent-minded around machinery"; but Don, 17, would rather drive the new corn picker than go to the movies. Last year, in addition to work with father, he rented and farmed 40 acres on his own, made $1300 profit.

It's a table of plenty but, remembering the "lean '30's," Vera holds bought-food bills to $45 monthly, puts up 400 jars of fruit and vegetables each summer.

This prophecy came true. One spring day in 1946 they drove into Wahoo, made the final payment, and got the papers. They looked at each other almost in disbelief and were too dazed to celebrate. Not even some pie à la mode at the neon-trimmed City Café in the whitewashed three-story brick building on the main street.

Now they are a family of substance, and Vera insists that Henry put on a freshly washed pair of overalls every day. They own a farm worth $32,000, and besides that they've bought more than $10,000 worth of Government bonds. Henry also owns six neckties, and two suits: a blue and a gray. He has four dress shirts.

Vera figures she has five different costumes she could wear away from the farm: "My suit and four dresses." Young Don, who farms 40 rented acres cornering on his father's farm, netted $1300 last year and paid $138 income tax. He has a new suit, a handsome sports coat, and four neckties.

"If he wears a necktie to school," explains Marjorie, giggling, "somebody's sure to come up to him and say 'I work on the railroad, I pull ties.' Then they yank his necktie till he's almost choked." But she thinks the boys should dress up occasionally. Sometimes they do, by agreement, neckties and all. "Then they look real snitzy!"

At this high praise Don wriggles a little.

Marjorie, who is pretty enough for any magazine cover as the All-American girl, boasts the big wardrobe of the family. She claims fifteen separate and distinct costumes. This variety she achieves by artful blending of sweaters, skirts, sweat shirts, slacks and blue denims. And dresses, naturally. She has a figure which transforms a flannel shirt worn with shirttail hanging out into a Bendel creation.

After breakfast the four young Roods in pairs take off for school in opposite directions. Until the new Chevrolet four-door sedan finally arrived this spring, after eighteen months of waiting, Don and Marjorie walked the gravel road to the paved highway to catch a ride into Wahoo with friends. But now they drive to and from Wahoo High in style, Horses and music are Norma Rood's hobbies, with Home on the Range the first piece she learned to play. Once a week, she and her mother drive over to Wahoo for an evening's piano workout with teacher, Alice Bader.

Beauty—junior grade: the largest red ribbon on Norma's mirror was won 11 years ago in the Saunders County "better baby" contest. Other prizes are for her sewing prowess. Says mother: "She'll make a good farm wife."

"Today, we don't have to budget every chocolate bar."

"We hate to miss church." But demands of farm life often mean 7-day work week for senior Roods. Marj is leader in Wahoo Methodist youth fellowship.

Shopping in Wahoo: good crops make farmers good customers. In 1940, Henry was tenant farmer, living on $1500 a year. Now, net income is over $9000.

Recipe for a happy evening: Chinese checkers and chocolate cake. Roods are "great for visiting," like to have company in at least once a week.

Eight-party line is better than th paper for gleaning the local gossi in the 1935 Chevvy coach Don has inherited from his dad.

But even two cars haven't solved the transportation problem entirely. For twenty-two days in a row the new sedan couldn't be backed out of the garage. The farmyard was a bottomless mire. (Henry plans to pave it next year.) And the old Chevvy had to be left half a mile away where the gravel road intersects the paved U. S. hig way No. 77 into Wahoo. Don and Marjorie either trudged the deep mu and ruts or cut across the fields. They could have used a version of sno shoes to advantage.

This mud road incited Henry Rood to his first burst of extravaganc He has spent $300 of his own money grading and graveling the road th county tries vainly to maintain from his farm to the highway. Now he grimly convinced it'll cost more money. And worth it. When he has a litt spare time he drags it with his own road drag attached to his tractor.

Like so many farmers, Vera and Henry Rood look solemner than th are. Both of them are lean and thin and angular. Like so many wives a husbands, they have come to resemble each other a little. Vera is wi and underweight. Her thin, sympathetic face looks at you with deferen and compassion and her overstrained eyes seem somber. Henry, who is ov six feet tall, tilts his head back to gaze at you thoughtfully. These two, wi their deceptively serious son Don, mind you of Grant Wood's rollicki friends posing in American Got solemnity with their pitchforks for h famous picture. In reality, their fac mask a natural gaiety and a talent f quick mirth, gentle and never violen Their solicitude and sweetness are s dom in repose.

Henry and his barber discuss what's new with farm products and prices.

One of their friends recalls a typic example. When he dropped in o morning Vera was complaining swee that she was tired of that untidy pile brush seventy-five feet away from h kitchen window.

"It ought to be burned today," she suggested meekly.

"I'll get at it in a few days," said Henry. "There's a lot to do."

After lunch their friend happened by again and was surprised to s Henry tending the big brush fire. The yard was tidied up. Henry looked him with a poker face.

"Never underestimate the power of a woman," he said quietly.

Almost all their arguments (if that isn't too violent a word) are strang reversed: She argues that he ought to have his way, while his contenti is that her way is better.

In the younger Roods, the three daughters, the solemnity is abse They missed the rough, lean times of the thirties, or can't remember the

"It was doggoned tough going," Henry Rood told a visitor recently. "V almost went under, between the low prices and the small crops. I remember those dry years. The blackest day was March 4, 1933, the day the banks closed. I got a small check from the grain elevator. We went to buy some groceries, but they couldn't cash our check. We just about hit bottom. Our second baby was on the way. I went back to the grain elevator and they gave us a little cash."

All told, the Roods—he is 45 and she 40—were tenant farmers twelve years. In the better of those years, they grossed around $2000. In the worst

Dominoes before supper: if fathe tired, Deanna reads him Three Be Four-o'clock coffee, like the Englishman's tea, is a must custom on a farm. If Henry is unable to come home for his, Vera brings it out to the fields.

they lived on less than $1000. More than half of their twenty years of marriage was like that.

"One very bad day," he reminisced over afternoon coffee, "was the day I took Vera to Lincoln General to have her tonsils out. At the hospital my appendix flared up, and they had to cut it out. I'd expected to be away from the farm three hours and I was gone three weeks. My brother came and took care of the farm. I thought I'd never get those hospital bills and doctor bills paid."

Vera still winces and looks agonized when they remember the November day in 1945 when Henry lost the three middle fingers of his left hand. His mangled hand remained tangled in the gears of a hoist at the corncrib for twenty minutes while a panicky hired man fumbled with the lever.

"It was a moment of carelessness," he admits, while Vera looks at him sympathetically. "The gears of the wagon hoist caught a new glove and dragged my hand in. I had to direct my helper how to go about releasing me. That time I was disabled almost three months."

Rood has at least nineteen different pieces of machinery on his farm. Virtually every one of them is a mantrap unless operated with extreme

Henry bones up on farming know-how through state and govt. extension services. "Extension" okayed tenant-purchase loan which staked him to land he owns.

At daybreak or dusk—to each hour its own labor.

caution. The mechanized farm is a dangerous place, and Henry is worried about Don's tendency to let his thoughts wander. He reminds Don of the gash on his head; the gash over one eye; the time he stuck a finger into the gears of the washing machine (that's almost healed), and the time Don thrust his foot into the wheel of the seeder.

"And remember when Norma jumped in front of the disk harrow when it was moving?" reminds Vera with a shudder. "If she'd missed her grip it would have run right over her."

Frequently Henry and Vera like to dwell on the genesis of their good fortune. "We owe it all to Extension," they say, and their tone puts a big capital E on extension. By Extension they mean the extension services of Saunders County, the University of Nebraska and the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Henry freely and frankly gives these services all credit and gratitude for his success.

(Continued on Page 156)

No more dustbowls: (Above) Henry goes to work with the sun, terracing his land to save the topsoil. (Below) Marj drives cows home for evening milking.

Gibson

features acclaimed by the women of America!

Everywhere women are singing the praises of the outstanding features that distinguish Gibson Freez'r Locker-Fresh'ner Locker refrigerators and Gibson Kookall Automatic Electric ranges! . . . Here, truly, are the modern miracles—the twin wonders of kitchen convenience—you've been waiting for. Visit your nearby Gibson dealer and see these beauties today—see for yourself why so many thousands of women say Gibsons out-feature and out-perform all others! Buy Gibson and you'll buy the best! Models for every need.

MORE FREEZER SPACE
8 pounds of ice cubes at a single freezing! Easy to get out too!

FASTER FREEZING
Ice cubes and frozen desserts in a hurry! Wonderful for entertaining!

FREEZ'R LOCKER
Freezes and preserves all kinds of frozen foods! Favorite delicacies in season and out!

FRESH'NER LOCKER
For fresh meats, fruits, vegetables. Keeps salads crisps-fresh. Retains vitamins.

ECONOMICAL
Operates on just a trickle of current extra power for fast freezing. Only 3 moving parts.

EASY-REACH SHELVES
Convenient heights no back-breaking stooping. Full width and unobstructed!

VEGETABLE CRISPER
Holds more than a week's supply keeps vegetables dewy-fresh!

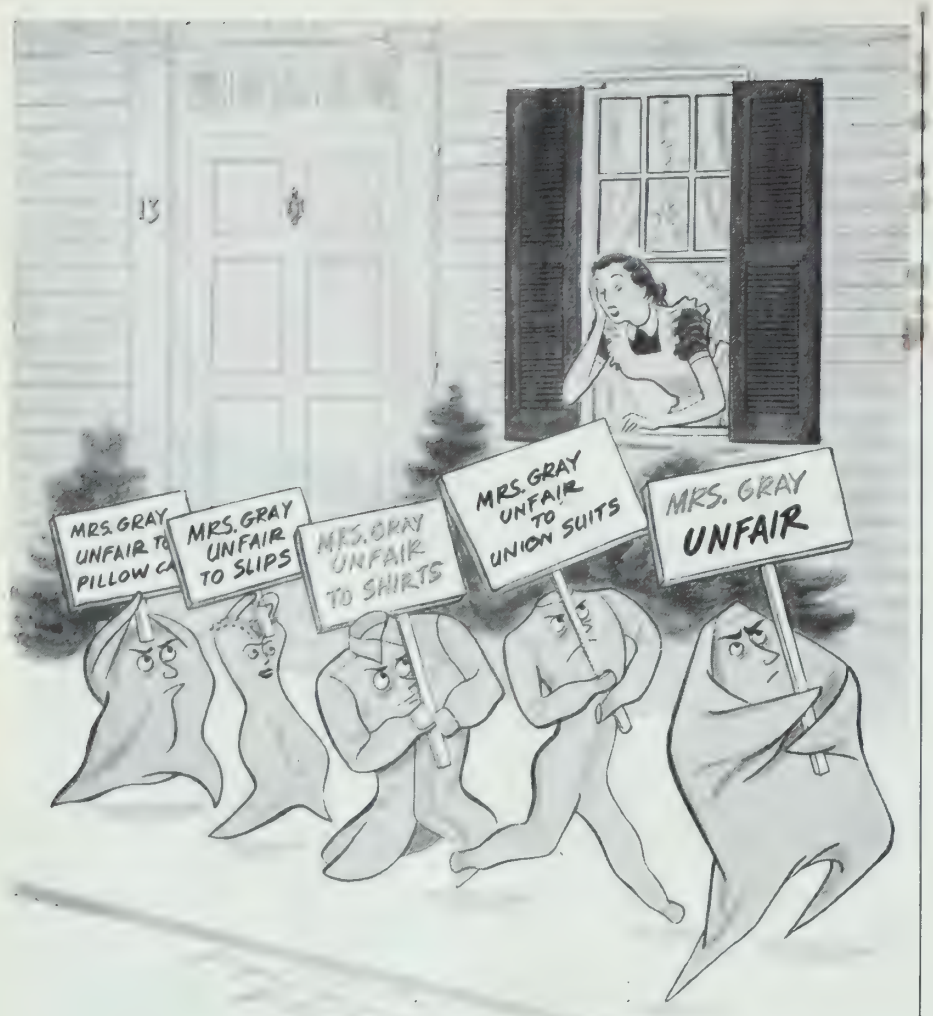
UPS-A-DAISY
4 surface units OR 3 surface units and deepwell—either combination in a jiffy, and both on the same range.

AUTOMATIC
Cooks entire meals while you do something else. Just set it and forget it!

CONCEALED OVEN VENT
Helps eliminate smoke-stained walls cuts down cooking odors.

TWO COMPLETE OVENS
Banquet-size for complete meals extra oven large enough for most cooking needs.

DRY STORAGE BIN
Capacity well over one bushel. Tilts out at a touch. Wonderful for crackers and cereals!



WAIST-HIGH BROILER
Up where you can get at it—not down on the floor. High-speed!

PORCELAIN-ON-STEEL FINISH
Easy to clean acid-resisting. TOE-ROOM at bottom permits you to stand close.

GIBSON HOME FREEZER
Upright design for downright convenience. Freezes and stores huge quantities of frozen foods. Buy when prices are low and qualits high. Enjoy favorite delicacies in season or out.

GIBSON REFRIGERATOR COMPANY
GREENVILLE, MICHIGAN

Copyright 1948, Gibson Refrigerator Co

This is the Fable of Mrs. Gray and the WASHDAY REBELLION . . .

Mrs. Gray was a careful housekeeper—except on WASHDAY.
Any SOAP, real or imitation, that made SUDS suited her. . . .

When neighbors whispered, "TATTLE-TALE GRAY," she wasn't worried.
Even when best friends mentioned FELS-NAPTHA SOAP,
she ignored them. . . .

One day Mrs. Gray hung out her HALF-CLEAN WASH and went inside to REST. Suddenly she looked out the window—and was HORRIFIED! . . . she was being PICKETED! Her neglected clothes demanded BETTER WASHING CONDITIONS!

Mrs. Gray hustled the INDIGNANT PICKETERS down to the LAUNDRY. . .
for some COLLECTIVE BARGAINING. Then she flew to the 'phone.
Ordered LOTS and LOTS of FELS-NAPTHA. In a RUSH. . . .

Next day Mrs. Gray's WASH swung gayly on the LINE—
CLEAN and WHITE—just like her neighbors'!

Moral—Don't let your wash line become a picket line.
Change to golden Fels-Naptha—bar or chips, today.

Golden bar or Golden chips—

FELS-NAPTHA banishes "Tattle-Tale Gray"

HOW TO CONQUER SHYNES

By Irma Simonton Black

LIKE all psychological problems, shyness may be the result of a variety of causes. Some are superficial, and relatively easy to change; others are embedded deep in the child's personality.

One kind of shyness is a natural part of growing up. A typical example of such "normal" shyness may be seen in the baby a year or a year and a half old who cries and clings to his mother when a stranger tries to be friendly with him. That baby is no problem—he is simply learning. He no longer accepts people indiscriminately. He wants only his mother or his father.

Another kind of shyness that is part of the growth process is the kind that arises from lack of social experience in the preschool years. At first, the baby's social contacts are limited pretty much to his immediate family. It is only gradually that he comes to accept other people as friends, that he learns to feel safe and happy even when he is temporarily away from his parents or his home. In the early years the child stands between the outside world, with its attractions of new friends and new adventures, and the safe, smaller world of home. It is certainly natural that sometimes he should hesitate to take the step away from the known to the unknown.

If a child continues to be markedly timid and shy when (1) he is four or more and (2) has had normal opportunities for pleasant social contacts, or (3) has other definite problems such as bed wetting, nail biting, or other emotional difficulties, or (4) has a history of problems such as tantrums or night terrors, his parents are wise to seek professional help.

Have you all the attributes you are looking for in your friends?
—WARREN HENRY GOLDSMITH.

General timidity may occasionally result from a major fright in early childhood. The youngster who has been knocked down by an angry dog may at first be afraid only of animals. In time, however, his specific fear may become a generalized anxiety that makes him uneasy and shy in many situations. A parent who suspects such a basis for timidity should also seek professional guidance.

Deanna Rood is an excellent example of one of the less serious types of shyness. It was because of her timid, retiring ways that the editors of the JOURNAL asked me to visit the Roods.

I visited the Roods at an unusual time. Seven-year-old Deanna was just recovering from a mild case of chicken pox. Norma, thirteen, had come down with a full-blown case the day before, and that very morning Mrs. Rood had noticed some tiny but suspicious-looking red marks on Marjorie. Donald, the eldest of the Rood children, had had it the week before.

Mrs. Rood told me the situation as we sat in the kitchen, which, as in farm homes all over the country, is the center of most of the activities in the Rood family.

Donald came in as we talked—a good-looking, poised and friendly boy. Then we went upstairs to see the girls. Marjorie, her mother explained, was still hoping that she could go to the school music festival that night. Marjorie lay in bed looking about as ill as a fireman waiting for an alarm. She greeted us cordially, and chatted with complete ease.

In the next room Norma and Deanna lay in a big double bed. Deanna was there more for company than anything, as she was allowed to get up if she felt like it. Norma welcomed us and said she'd be delighted to have us visit.

Deanna said nothing. She looked ple ant enough, but she just lay there and e me carefully. After the genuine natu ness of the three older children, Deann aloof quietness was the more conspicuo

I stayed with Norma and Deanna w Mrs. Rood had to go down to put so thing in the oven. After the first words, I could see that it would be b tactless and useless to try to talk direc to Deanna without an introductory int val. I noticed that she had a book n to her and asked if she'd like me to rea story. That brought a very prompt a definite "yes." After the story the mosphere was a good deal less chilly. I Deanna, though she smiled and answe questions, still confined her answers t monosyllable if possible, as if she felt sa when she limited her verbal contact w strangers to a minimum.

Norma took an almost maternal int est in her little sister. We talked about puppy, Skipper, who had met me ga and who has a regrettable fondness chasing chickens. We talked about Ju the doll, and about school. Rather, Nor and I talked and Deanna listened and s "yes" or "no" occasionally. Mrs. R had said that Deanna loved to read, sc last I asked her about her favorite boo That took more than a syllable in re and it seemed difficult for Deanna to co mit herself to several words at once.

"You liked the Bobbsey Twins, did you?" Norma suggested gently, and I anna was able to ag with a nod.

Later, Mrs. Rood t me that as a baby Dean had been the easiest of all the children. had had no feeding di culties, no temper t trums, no marked fea She had been outgoing and friendly u the toddler stage.

When Deanna was a small baby three older children were delighted by h They tended to spoil her and to make a of her. We must remember that by time Deanna was a year old, the ol children were seven, nine and eleve from a baby's point of view they m have seemed almost like grownups. A as so often happens in such situations, Deanna grew older and began to around under her own steam, she seem less and less like an enchanting pet a more like something of a nuisance. T older children were never mean to D anna, Mrs. Rood said, but they tended boss her rather than to coddle her.

"She's had too many bosses," M Rood said. "I've always thought that h a lot to do with her shyness."

Deanna, moreover, was in a situat where she had no children her own age play with, to soften the impact of ol children and grownups. There were, course, visits to and from other famil with young children, but these were sporadic to have any consistent effe In fact, Deanna had no regular cont with children her own age until she w to school last year. But there wasn't mu the Roods could do about it.

Deanna is not shy with children— deed, she is pretty bossy with the Though this causes Mrs. Rood some sli embarrassment, it is a healthy sign. Deanna had been completely beaten do she would not dare to be even mildly gressive. Deanna is doing exactly wha child with too many bosses might be pected to do: she's trying the same te nique on someone else.

Another characteristic that is marked in eanna's personality is an uneven, temper- nental streak. Deanna is supposed to ack or dry the dishes at dinner. "It works th ways," her mother said. "Sometimes e will join in and do a good job. Other nes she tries to get out of it. And some- nes the older ones will excuse her. 'Oh, e's just little,' they say. 'Let her play.'" This same uneven quality is characteris- of Deanna's play. Sometimes she will ay quietly alone for hours. At other times e tags after her mother with the classic What'll I do now?" In her schoolwork, eanna is bright and capable, but she tends rush from one job to another, so that the sults are not always up to the level of her ility.

Both Deanna's shyness and her tempera- ental ways appear to be the result of one sic cause: a genuine uncertainty about ere she fits in, what role she should play th strangers, what their reaction to her ll be. Her isolated childhood kept her m opportunities to make tentative, trial- d-error social contacts. The varying atti- des of the older children gave Deanna od reason to be uncertain as to the reac- ns of strangers. And the fact that she s—and still is—far and away the smallest d least capable of this family of six added her own doubts as to her ability to take e lead in new situations.

Mr. Rood takes Deanna's shyness calmly, d I think he is right. "She'll work out of " he says. "I've always been sure of at."

Deanna is one kind of shy child. There e other types of shyness and other reasons y children become timid in new situations.

Rule I. The shy child needs particu- ly mild and friendly discipline. ysical punishment or extreme dis- proval may be the cause of shyness.

Parents do not always realize how fright- ng an angry grownup can be to a small ld. Take the mother who gives her two- ar-old a hard spanking for writing on the ll of his room. The child may honestly know that he isn't allowed to indulge in t particular indoor sport. Severe spank- for innocent mistakes of this kind will ke a child fearful of any action that might ult in even more severe punishment.

Mothers should be particularly careful in ndling a small child's early and awkward empts to fight back in his play with other ldren. Practically all youngsters push l hit when they are introduced to social y. Of course they need guidance and gestion. But severity at this point may ke a child give up all attempts at even lthy aggressiveness.

Rule II. Constant warnings may be important factor in the develop- nt of shyness.

There are not many American families ay who thoughtlessly tell a small child t the policeman will come and get him if sn't good. Such gross and untrue threats definitely and blessedly on the decline. even scrupulous parents may inadvert- ly make their children timid by constant nings. "Watch out, you'll fall!" . . . e careful, you'll get run over!" . . . on't get your feet wet, you'll get sick!" l similar admonitions may add up to an nishing bulk of quite frightening sug- tions. Children must be kept safe, and y must be taught to be careful. These ons can be on the child's level of under- nding, however. The wise mother will p her child in the yard until she can trust to stay out of the road.

Rule III. Shyness may be the result basic doubts about being wanted, or rs of being loved less than other mbers of the family.

The child's family is the only world he ows, and he needs more than anything to safe and wanted there. It is natural ugh for a child who imagines he is un- nted or unloved to have a deep distrust of all human [illegible] even when the child's suspicions are completely groundless, as in the case of the older child who unjustifiably thinks his parents have given the bulk of their affection to a new baby. Only warmth and reassurance can dissolve the child's fears and give him the self-confidence he needs.

Rule IV. Extremely high standards may have the effect of making a young- ster unsure of himself even when he is actually capable.

I remember a four-year-old whose par- ents constantly talked about his high I. Q. and his superior ability, until the child got the idea that he was loved because he was smart and superior. Other parents may ex- pect youngsters of preschool age to have the airs and graces of adults with years of social experience. In any case, the child usually has a sense of failing to meet his parents' expectations for him. He doesn't realize that they are being unreasonable. He sim- ply feels strained, and uneasy—and shy. Sometimes a child sets excessively high standards for himself as the result of trying to keep up with older, more skillful children, as in Deanna's case.

Rule V. Inconsistent, uneven treat- ment may be the basis of timidity.

If parents jump from one method of han- dling to another, a child literally doesn't know what's coming next. Take, for in- stance, the poor eater who is bribed one day, scolded the next, and diverted the next. At last, in desperation, his mother spanks him to make him eat. It's natural enough that such a child will be leery of new people and new situations. He hasn't the solid, reassur- ing background of consistent experience that would give him faith in the future.

Rule VI. The shy child needs regular social life with children his own age.

This is perhaps the most important op- portunity for the parents of a shy child to provide. It is far easier for a timid young- ster to get into play with other children than to carry on a conversation with grownups. A good deal of mild shyness, like Deanna's, is largely social ineptness. The child, not knowing what to do, does nothing at all. Day-to-day social play provides a young- ster with a life of his own in a group where he is the peer of the rest instead of being al- ways the smallest and least capable of a family group. The halting, often wordless social contact that is characteristic of the preschool years is a solid foundation for later poise.

Rule VII. The first social contacts will be slow, but they should not be hurried.

Parents of a timid child are often fooled because the child pointedly stays out of group play and seems to prefer watching from the side lines. That does not mean that a youngster is not interested in play- ing. The shy child has the same basic needs for friendliness and human warmth that all of us have—child or adult. He is simply not sure of himself. He needs to look before he leaps. Thoughtful parents will let the timid youngster take his own time about joining other children in play. But they will see that the opportunity is available where it is humanly possible. The very shy child may prefer just one playmate at first. That's all right, too—group play will come later.

Rule VIII. Encourage the shy child to independence in many small ways.

The shy child is often the one who runs to mother for protection, for whom a mother feels especially sorry, so that she gives him protection in larger doses than is good for him. The child of preschool years may be encouraged to many small acts of independ- ence through praise. "That was a fine job" will give a youngster the good feeling of being appreciated—and capable. He

New! In large Bath size

The soap 9 out of 10 Screen Stars use!

"I love this fragrant bath size cake"

says

ROSALIND RUSSELL

starring in

"THE VELVET TOUCH"

an RKO Radio Pictures' release

"The big new bath-size Lux Soap is so luxurious," says lovely Rosalind Russell. "It makes my daily beauty bath more delightful than ever!

"If a girl isn't dainty, no other charm counts, and a daily Lux Soap beauty bath makes you sure. The rich creamy lather swiftly carries away dust and dirt, leaves skin fresh, sweet. Perfumed with a delightful fragrance you'll love!"

Try this big, generous satin-smooth cake of the new bath-size Lux Toilet Soap.

YOU thrill when he whispers "You're sweet!" There's appeal men can't resist in skin that's fragrant with the delicate Lux Toilet Soap perfume that clings.

9 out of 10 Screen Stars use Lux Toilet Soap— Lux Girls are Lovelier.

RAPHS BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

Teen-Agers Do Their Own Hair

For most teen-age girls, hair is an invaluable asset to be cared for and coaxed into a major expression of their own good looks. Here are six girls—Margie Rood, who lives on a Nebraska farm, and five teen-age models—who prove that home-grown hair-do's can achieve a variety of special effects! All of them shampoo and set their own hair. One girl may shampoo as often as once every five days; another, once a week; still another, once every ten days. They use bobby pins or rag curlers for "setting"—depending upon the results. The only established rule, according to the girls themselves, is to "know" your own hair. Then you'll know how much shampooing, brushing and combing it takes to maintain healthy, polished and pretty locks! ★ By DAWN CROWELL NORMAN

Beauty Editor of the Journal

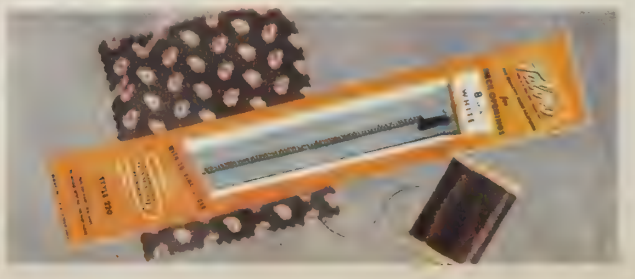
Rood, 14, has brown hair and bright blue eyes. "I soap, use it as a liquid shampoo," says Margie. od for oily hair." For softer curls Margie lets her almost completely before she pins up the ends.

★ How America Lives ★

Eunice Ward, 19, says, "My short hair is versatile. One day I can have curls—the next, a page-boy with bangs!" Between shampoos Eunice uses a dry shampoo.

Bobbie Shaw, 17, "pushes" her waves into place with the sides of her hands when her hair is still damp after her shampoo; rolls ends under.

m, 17, has shoulder-length blond hair which braid and roll over her ears in two minutes. goes diagonally down the back of her head.



June Thompson, 19, puts the ends of her long, red hair up on rag curlers. For her Alice in Wonderland hair-do, she brushes the sides back, fastens with bobby pins.

Helen Sinclair, 16, brushes all hair back, secures close to the head with an elastic band. Equal sections of hair are rolled toward face and pinned in place.

Big attraction for every little girl... Like dolls and dress-up . . . like party pumps and playing house . . . the Talon slide fast fascinates the ribbon-bow crowd. It's a new idea—and a wonderful idea—to add these famous fasteners to little girls' v robes. Children love their speed and sparkle and grown-up air. Mothers dote on their dainty neatness . . . on the way wash, and wear, and stand up to tugging fingers. Look for little girls' dresses and skirts with Talon slide fasteners: so s fine . . . yet so inexpensive . . . that they couldn't be more practical!

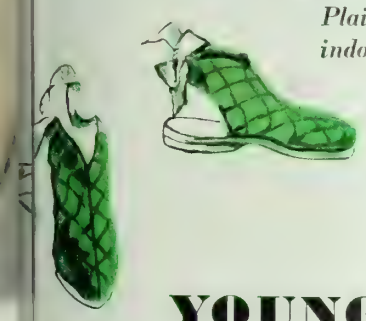
Ideal for home sewing, too! You can buy smooth, perfect Talon slide fasteners at notion counters everywhere, complete with sewing directions. At the right, you see the neat neckline fastener—it's in the ORANGE package.

Talon
REG U S PAT OFF
THE QUALITY SLIDE FASTENER

TALON, INC., MEADVILLE, PA.



PHOTOS BY FRANCESCO SCAVULLO

Quilted velveteen collar and cuffs, 2510; and muff, 2511, brighten up last year's suit; in matching or contrasting color.

Margie dressed in her favorite school dress. Quilted blue wool-jersey bolero with matching jersey skirt . . . quilted pockets. Worn with a crisp white cotton blouse. 2509, 10 to 16, 25¢.

Plaid quilted wool or cotton topcoat to wear outdoors in the fall, indoors in the winter. Pattern also has sleeves. 2508, 10 to 16, 25¢.

Cozy velveteen tops attached to leather soles. (Soles about $1.50.) 2514.

Quilted hat with cuff effect; matching shoulder bag with double pockets . . . make each in a different color. 2512.

YOUNG IDEAS . . . for quilting

Margie Rood is as pretty and as typical a high-school freshman as we have ever seen. Besides all her school activities, she finds time to make most of her own clothes. Margie, like most teen-agers, goes for fads and sometimes finds herself creating one. Take quilting. Margie discovered the possibilities were endless. A quilted velveteen collar, cuffs and muff made last year's suit look new. A quilted basque worn with her favorite dirndl and peasant blouse looks very grown-up. A quilted wool-jersey bolero with quilted pockets on a matching wool-jersey skirt turned out to be her favorite school dress. Her sleeveless topcoat can be worn outdoors in the fall or indoors as a smock or housecoat . . . perfect for doing homework on cold nights. (Pattern also has sleeves if you prefer.) You can buy many quilted fabrics by the yard. (Look in the upholstery departments too.) Or you can quilt them yourself by hand or sewing machine—we'll tell you how. ✦ BY NORA O'LEARY

All accessory patterns are 15¢; dress and topcoat are 25¢ and must be ordered in your own size. Send money and state size required to Journal Reference Library, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

Quilted red velveteen basque laces tightly to make the most of a tiny waistline. 2515.

How America Lives

PHOTO BY SQUARE

DI

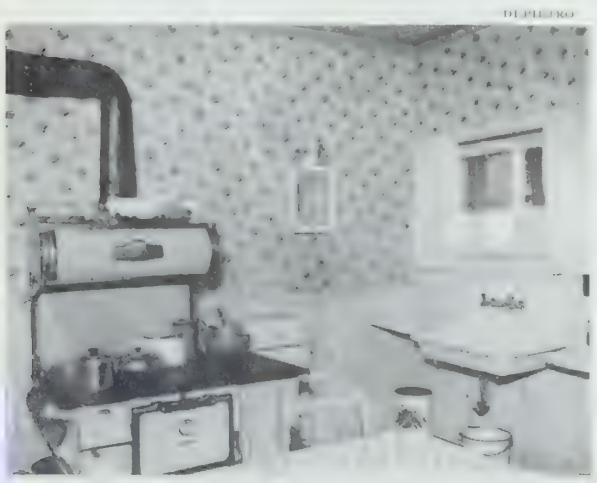
Setting up small models helped Mrs. Rood to see how c pact and convenient her new kitchen would be. "It wi wonderful to get a meal without walking around the tab

KITCHEN ON THE FARM

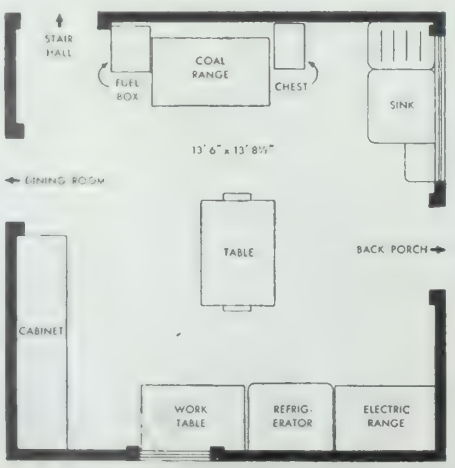
By Gladys Taber

When I was little, we used to visit my Aunt Tunie on her farm in Iowa. We always visited there in August, for some curious reason, when the days were hotter than burning anthracite and at night you could hear the corn grow. Over the big black range on those steaming days, Aunt Tunie would stand feeding dry corncobs in and I would stand there, too, sniffing the heavenly smell of roasting chicken.

Like Mrs. Rood in her Nebraska farm kitchen, Aunt Tunie in Iowa fed the farm hands, raised her family with three generous meals a day and sent mid-afternoon coolers and sandwiches to the hayfields. Had church suppers too. Did all her own baking, naturally. Who would buy store bread even if they could use the horses to drive to town?



In that day, nobody ever thought of getting any special equipment for the kitchen. A big stove, a big table, a few high cupboards, a sink with a hand pump—that was the kitchen. The farmer took to tractors, stalk choppers, corn pickers, straw bailers, milking machines, automatic drinking troughs for cows, and his wife went on heating water in the reservoir at the side of the stove. This was partly because the man's end brought in the cash and the cash paid off the mortgage.



Now on the 160 acres that the Roods own, there is no shadow of debt, the equipment for farming is modern and efficient, and so the kitchen comes into its own at last.

The Roods began their modernization by bringing running water to the kitchen, wiring the house and installing the electric refrigerator, a big one to accommodate large containers of milk and cream and supplies brought weekly from town.

The electric range came next, and was connected with an extra-long cable so its location could be changed when the kitchen plan was complete. Mrs. Rood kept on feeding cobs to the old range for several weeks until she got used to the idea of the electric range,

(Continued on Page 166)

AS IT WAS Mrs. Rood cooked the hard way in her awkwardly arranged kitchen. The coal range, with its box of corncobs, dominated one wall, the sink with its inadequate drainboard was tucked in a corner, and tall, deep cupboards with no working space lined the dining-room wall. Across from the coal range, an electric range and refrigerator were temporarily installed side by side. At the small work table under a low window and at a drop-leaf eating table in the middle of the room, Mrs. Rood prepared the food. As in any farm kitchen, this room is the hub around which family activity moves—family and guests gather there. The new plan streamlines the arrangement on the light side of the room across from the old coal range.

Here's another wonderful NEW FRIGIDAIRE REFRIGERATOR made just for you!

The brand-new model you see here combines a home freezer with the famous Cold-Wall refrigerator. It's proof that Frigidaire leadership comes from a knowledge of your needs...an ability to give you more refrigerator value.

No wonder! There's a quarter-century of experience in every Frigidaire, to give you complete dependability. Years-ahead styling. Dozens of features to make food-keeping and food-handling easier; many, such as Quickube Trays and the Meter-Miser mechanism, found in no other refrigerator!

Three great series of new Frigidaire Refrigerators—9 models in all—enable you to choose the right model, right size for your needs and budget.

You're twice as sure with two great names

FRIGIDAIRE
MADE ONLY BY General Motors

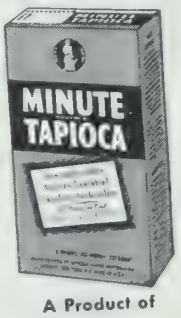
See your Frigidaire Dealer. Find name in Classified Telephone Directory; or write Frigidaire, Dayton 1, Ohio, Leaside 12, Ontario.

Listen to Frigidaire's "Man Called X," Sunday nights. See newspaper for time, station.

Frigidaire Cold-Wall Imperial is combination refrigerator and home freezer. Locker-Top holds up to 70 lbs. of frozen foods. Cold-Wall compartment below protects foods, uncovered, in moist-cold. Full-width Super Moist Hydrator for fruits, vegetables. 10 cu. ft.

GET SET FOR RAVES! MINUTE TAPIOCA IS BACK!

(REAL PREWAR TAPIOCA - GENUINE MINUTE TAPIOCA)



Hear the cheers for PEACH-Y TAPIOCA!

1 egg yolk
2 cups milk
3 tablespoons sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons Minute Tapioca
1 egg white
2 tablespoons sugar
½ teaspoon vanilla
Sweetened fresh, canned, or quick-frozen sliced peaches

Mix egg yolk with a small amount of the milk in saucepan. Add remaining milk, 3 tablespoons sugar, salt, and Minute Tapioca. Place over medium heat. Cook until mixture comes to a full boil, stirring constantly—this takes 5 to 8 minutes. (Do not overcook . . . mixture thickens as it cools.) Remove from heat.

Beat egg white until foamy throughout; add 2 tablespoons sugar, 1 tablespoon at a time, and continue beating with rotary egg beater until mixture will stand in soft peaks. Add hot tapioca mixture, stirring constantly. Add vanilla. Cool, stirring after 15 to 20 minutes. Chill. Garnish with sliced peaches and mint leaves. Makes 4 or 5 servings of luscious Tapioca cream—sure-fire magic for frequent encores.

More rave ideas! 86 servings in every thrifty Minute Tapioca box! And every one a cook's helper! Use Minute Tapioca to make a meat loaf that never crumples, to thicken soup, to prop up fluffy omelets. See recipes on box.

Note to Brides!

The boss to dinner . . . your mother-in-law? For those command performances when nothing but your best will do—serve Minute Tapioca! Your reputation is made the instant you appear with a proud Minute Tapioca dessert! Superbly glamorous, delightfully refreshing!

A Product of General Foods

FOLEY SIFTER

Jr. Miss of sifters, holds 2 cups. Cone-shaped, sifts right into your measuring cup . . . Aluminum . . . 96¢ at DEPT. HOWE. STORES or send coupon

FOLEY MFG. CO., 3440 N. E. 5th St., Minneapolis 18, Minn.
Enclosed is 69¢ for one "Jr. Miss" Foley Sifter, postpaid.
NAME
(Write address plainly in margin)

"Be FOLEY Equipped" with FOOD MILL, CHOPPER, SIFTER, BLENDER

MAKE MONEY EASILY

Take easy, big profit orders from friends, others. Show Christmas Cards with name—big line, selling at 50 for $1.00 up. Amazing designs, gorgeous papers. FREE SAMPLES. Also sell $1.00 assortment of Christmas Cards, Gift Wrappings, Everyday Cards, Stationery on approval assortment on approval. Write

Sell Name-Imprinted CHRISTMAS CARDS 50 for $1 Also Assortments

Southern Greeting Card Co., Dept. A-21, 216 S. Pauline Street, Memphis, Tenn.

Want Extra Money?

Quick CASH Earnings are yours—for showing fast-selling Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards, Box Assortments, Everyday Greetings, Gift Wraps. Amazing values sell for 60c and $1.00. FREE SAMPLES Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards and Assortments on Approval. WRITE TODAY!

SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS WITH NAME 50 for $1

FREE SAMPLES

CARDINAL CRAFTSMEN, Dept. H-71, 117 W. Pearl St., Cincinnati 1, O.

PHOTOS BY J. DI PIETRO

During the school months Mrs. Rood packs two lunch boxes every morning—plus the afternoon lunch for the men in the fields.

LUNCH BEFORE BREAKFAST

By Louella G. Shouer

SCHOOL bells will soon be ringing. That means lunches to pack in the morning, unless your children are fortunate in attending a school which has a hot-lunch program. The Rood girls go to a district school, 1½ miles across the fields from the farm, and carry their lunches each day.

Six o'clock is getting-up time for the Roods. From then on, it's a busy bustle. By 7:30 Mrs. Rood has a hearty farm-style breakfast on the table. Before that, she packs the girls' lunches.

There are just three things to remember when you're putting up a lunch, whether it's for a man or a child. Make it nourishing and filling, make it taste good and pack it so it will have eye appeal.

To save precious time before breakfast, plan your daily lunches by the week. Sandwich fillings, if they are favorites, may be made in quantity and used in sandwiches on alternate days. Do your baking in batches. Having a freezer helps too. Sandwiches, cookies and so on can be made ahead and frozen, ready to pack into the boxes each morning. Packing the lunch box the night before is not practical. Sandwiches tend to stale, flavors mingle. Packed lunches have a long enough stand as it is.

PREPARATION AND PACKING POINTERS Plan the lunch so there will be a pleasing combination of color, flavors and textures. Sandwiches are the main dish of the lunch box. . . . Rather than make one sandwich at a time, lay out all the pieces of bread on the table in front of you. Butter all the slices, spread with filling and cover. It goes faster this way. . . . Never melt butter or margarine for spreading sandwiches. It soaks into bread. But have it soft and spread it clear to the edges. . . . Jelly's a soaker too. If your small fry are fond of jelly sandwiches, cream the jelly with butter or margarine before spreading. . . . Skimpily filled sandwiches are dry. Hit a happy medium. Wrap lettuce for sandwiches or crisp raw vegetables in wax paper. When you send along a red apple, tuck in a chunk of good cheese. Use waxed cups or containers with lids or small jars with screw tops for carrying such foods as salads, condiments, fruit desserts and so on. Be sure lids are tight. Raisins or salted nuts are good after-lunch surprises.

LUNCHES FROM THE FREEZER. If you have a freezer, freeze some of your lunch-box specials now and save many early-morning minutes next month when the children start to school. It's usually the baking of cakes and cookies and the making of the sandwiches that take the real time. This can be done once a week or once in two weeks if you have a freezer. Foods packed frozen will thaw out just in time for lunch—in about three hours.

No special recipes are needed, but there are certain do's and don'ts in freezing cooked foods. First of all, be sure the food you pack is fresh: the cakes and cookies freshly baked; the bread for sandwiches fresh. Be sure to use moisture-vapor-proof papers and containers and package correctly, using the heat seal with a warm iron. Date what you freeze and label it. Cheese, meat and nut sandwich fillings freeze well in sandwiches. Mixtures with egg and celery usually do not, but we were most successful with one egg filling which I'll tell you about later. Pudding desserts, such as chocolate or vanilla pudding and rice pudding, do not freeze successfully, but there are many other sweets you can freeze. Pack desserts in individual containers. Wrap sandwiches separately and pack in containers of suitable size and shape. We have found that baked apples, applesauce, tapioca pudding, fruit cup, tarts and turnovers, cupcakes, brownies, cookies and apple-crisp pudding freeze successfully.

Here are two sample menus made up of foods packed frozen from the freezer, just to show you how easy it is:

Egg Sandwiches on Whole-Wheat Bread
Peanut-Butter-and-Bacon Sandwiches
Brownies
Container of Applesauce

Tuck in a bundle of crisp raw carrot sticks and fill the vacuum bottle with hot soup or milk. This makes a satisfying lunch and it takes almost no time to pack, as the sandwiches, brownies and applesauce were prepared and frozen in advance.

Deviled Fried Chicken
Bread-and-Butter Sandwiches
Double Stuffed Celery
(2 pieces of celery put together with cream-cheese filling—not frozen)
Cupcakes
Hot Soup, Milk or Fruit Juice in vacuum bottle

CONTINUED ON PAGE 159

★ How America Lives ★

Marjorie and Ann carry lunches to school—walk 1½ miles each way.

Top off egg salad with cool-tasting

Treet!

How smart of you to have Treet as handy on your pantry shelf—ready to add meat to your meals in the easiest possible way! You'll add a cool look and a cool taste to summer meals, too, with Treet—the refreshing Armour blend of tender pork shoulder and sugar-cured ham. Treet is always considerate of your budget, too!

IT'S ANOTHER ARMOUR STAR PANTRY-SHELF MEAL!

Treet Tray for a Summer's Day

This gay lunch or supper keeps you cool as can be in the kitchen, for there's hardly any cooking to it! Simply make egg salad according to your favorite recipe and heap it on trimmed bread slices. Slice the meat from one tin of Treet and place on top. Arrange these delicious sandwiches alongside pineapple and cherry jellied salad molds. There, your whole meal's ready—so cool, so good and so good-looking!

For additional recipes for Pantry-Shelf Meals write Marie Gifford, Dept. 279, P. O. Box 2053, Chicago 9, Illinois.

Tune in HINT HUNT—CBS Monday through Friday afternoons

The best and nothing but the best is labeled ARMOUR

"Satina in my starch makes ironing 3 times easier!"

WRITES MRS. FRANK H. McCUE, PITTSBURGH, PA.

MRS. McCUE, far right in the snapshot of the McCue family above, writes:
"I make sure I am never without Satina. With Satina in my starch, the starched clothes are more than 3 times as easy to iron!"

Satina is a wonderful ironing aid that you add to boiled or unboiled starch. It dissolves easily in boiling water or the boiling starch solution.

Satina not only makes ironing lots easier, it makes clothes smell fresher. look newer, stay clean longer, too!

FREE
FULL-SIZE PACKAGE

WE'RE SO SURE you'll love Satina, if we can just get you to try it once, that we're offering you a free full-size package. Enough for 4 big starchings. Just try it and judge Satina for yourself!

SATINA, Dept. 53, Battle Creek, Michigan

Dear Sirs: Satina sounds good to me. Now I'd like a free full-size package to see how much easier it makes my starched ironing.

NAME

STREET

CITY STATE

A PRODUCT OF GENERAL FOODS

Women say: "Put SATINA in your starch! It makes starched ironing 3 times easier!"

The kitchen sink is the wash-up center for the Roods. Water is warmed in range reservoir and a near-by chest holds toilet articles. They have an unhea basement bath, an outdoor toilet, but a modern bathroom is on the "want" l

"CAN WE AFFORD A NEW BATHROOM?"

BY MARGARET DAVIDSON

MANY people, like the Roods, are dreaming of new or additional bathrooms and lavatories. When plans call for installing them in an old home, it's often a case of fitting them into minimum space.

Then it does take thought to make the most of the room available. A compact two-fixture lavatory with a toilet and washbasin can be installed in a space as small as 3½ by 5 feet. A complete three-fixture bathroom, including a tub, can be set up in an area no larger than 5 by 6¾ feet. Of course, more space is desirable to provide room for easy movement and for added conveniences that mean more comfort.

The three main bathroom fixtures of basic design can be purchased for less than $200. Units of better quality, of larger-than-average size, with more deluxe fittings and better design, are priced higher.

The cost of putting in a bathroom will vary with each installation, for it depends on such things as the construction of walls and the availability of plumbing connections. For the budget-minded, walls finished with a good quality semigloss paint can be maintained inexpensively for long periods of time. Wall linoleum, coated-fabric wall coverings, washable papers, tile or tilelike finishes are appropriate for bathrooms, and can be used to add to the decorative effect. If a shower is installed over a tub, special attention is needed to be certain the wall surface is watertight.

For floors, a properly installed, good waterproof surface such as linoleum, enameled or printed floor covering, asphalt or rubber tile is desirable.

In many new homes, more than one family bathroom or supplementary lavatories are provided to take care of several people's needs at one time. Family-style bathrooms sometimes have two lavatories.

Some new modern bathrooms are even divided, with tub or shower and toilet in separate compartments with separate entrances, providing privacy for several people at any time. This arrangement is less costly than duplicate bathrooms, and does ease the before-breakfast rush as the family prepares for the day.

A CHECK LIST FOR BATHROOM PLANNE

● Is there space between and in fr of the fixtures to allow unhamp movement and easy cleaning?

Minimum space is listed—more is d able.

Between front of any fixture and wall across from it	2
Between front of lavatory and front of toilet	1½
Between sides of lavatory and wall	6 i
Between sides of lavatory and toilet tank	2 i
Between toilet tank and tub	3 i
Between toilet tank and wall beside it	4 i

● Are fixtures on an inside wall?

Where winters are severe, pipes in ou walls may freeze and burst.

● Are fixtures placed satisfactoril relation to window?

A tub under a window is objectior because of drafts and lack of privac window is desirable in free wall space side lavatory or over dressing table.

● Have fixtures been located plumbing connections in mind?

Three fixtures on one wall is usually most economical installation, with loc on two walls ranking next and on t walls most costly. Access to drain e tub is necessary for future servicing. contractor about location of hot- and water pipes, drains and ventilation p

● Has the door swing been conside

The door should not bump into an using a fixture, it should shield or co the toilet and should be placed so it m opened in summer for ventilation.

● Is the bathroom as safe as it sh be?

Bathtubs with flat bottoms and firm grab bars at tubs and showers are sa first features. Nonskid bath mats are i ance against falls. Faucets that mix ho cold water save burns. Switches for l and electric outlets located out of by anyone using a faucet or in the tub help prevent electric shocks. Mec Roods dream of a new bathroom on the old back porch—the only usable space. Enclosing 8½ by 9 feet provides room for fixtures, linen and clothes closet—needed since door to bath will be through old closet. Two of three windows in porch wall will be closed. Basement will be reached through present outside door and reopened inside stairway. Water heater and furnace connections will bring year-round comfort.

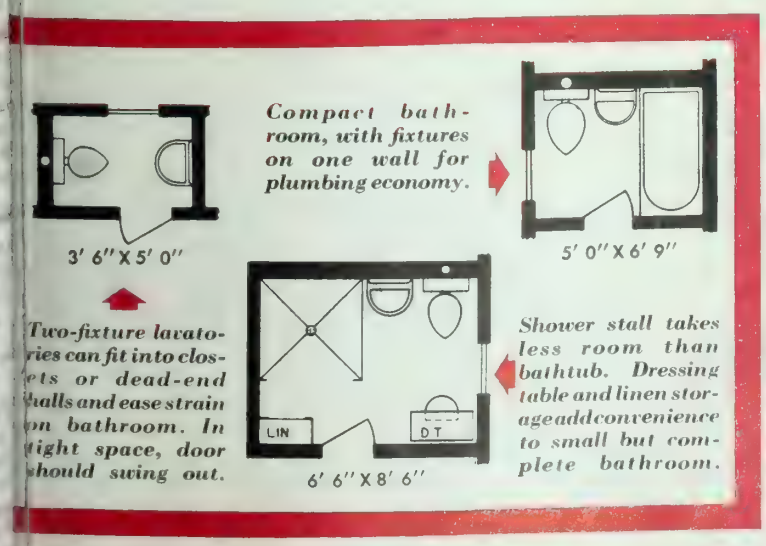
DI PIETRO

ts should be out of reach of children. aters well shielded.

irror lighted to avoid shadows?

t should shine on the face, not the Lights on both sides of the mirror ter than one centered above it, which part of the face in the dark.

a place for medicines and toi- been planned?



ored-door medicine cabinets can be recessed in walls to save space, or n walls if wall depth is limited. Cabi- by 15 inches with two adjustable helves are useful in small homes. ones with toothbrush brackets and elves for tall bottles are available.

plenty of towel racks included vatory and bathtub?

Each member of the family and guests need places for their own towels and washcloths. Bath towels, folded in thirds, need 8 inches of towel-bar space and 24 inches free below. Large face towels, folded in thirds, need 7 inches of towel-bar space and up to 18 inches free below. New-designed racks have bars arranged to give maximum hanging space in limited wall space.

● Have accessories that add convenience been provided?

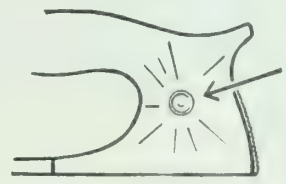
Holders or a shelf for soap, toothbrushes and tumblers are needed near the lavatory. A toilet-paper holder should be within 30 inches of the toilet and between 28 and 30 inches from the floor. "Nice to have" accessories which may be portable or built-in include: a full-length mirror, scales, hamper, dressing table with planned space for toilet articles and supply closet.

The most important feature of this Iron is invisible!

When you buy your new iron, look for the streamlined beauty shown here.

It has a most important feature that, unfortunately, you can't see. This built-in feature is dependability. Famous General Electric dependability!



This new General Electric Iron is the latest of a long line of dependable General Electric Irons. For more than a generation, millions of women have known how satisfactory the General Electric Iron is, year after year. Many women vote it America's best.

Look at all these worksaving, timesaving features.

With this famous "Dial the Fabric" Control, you just tune in to the correct temperature for each fabric.

This remarkable Iron has the Calrod* unit that heats the iron rapidly. It is cool to work with, too. Between the form-fit handle and base, there's space for circulating air to keep the handle c-o-o-l.

This temperature-indicating light tells you the instant your G-E Iron is ready. No guessing, no testing.

There are double button nooks . . . built-in thumb rests . . . and a large ironing surface 27½ sq. in. Yet this General Electric "Visualizer" Automatic Iron weighs only 2¾ pounds.

See it at your General Electric retailer's.
General Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Conn.

*Trade-mark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

GENERAL ELECTRIC

COTTON CLASSICS FOR FUN AND FASHION!

Their Creator Dorothy Cox

agrees: "In dress designing . . . and in choosing a cigarette, too . . . EXPERIENCE IS THE BEST TEACHER!"

DOROTHY COX, shown here in her salon, developed her keen color sense, her regard for detail, through the study of portrait painting. Now she lavishes all her talents on day-in, day-out, typically American fashions. Outstanding achievement? . . . That classic favorite, the shirtwaist dress! Her designs, as tailored by McMullen, create a twice-yearly fashion stir – not for just a famous few, but for Miss and Mrs. Average American.

● Dorothy Cox mak this strapless sun-see ing Saturday-Sund dress with its own sho der kerchief to whi on or off. Notice h beachcomber plaid c ton becomes a form fabric in this undec rated style!

"Of all the different brands of cigarettes I've tried and compared, cool, mild Camels suit me best!" says Dorothy Cox

● Palest grey chambray is beguilingly feminine in this gently styled shirtwaist dress with its immaculate white tucked bosom and subtly flared skirt.

More people are smoking Camels than ever before!

City or country, at work or at play – wherever you turn, you'll find more and more people smoking Camels.

Why? Let your "T-Zone" tell you. (That's T for Taste and T for Throat.) Let your taste tell you about Camel's marvelous flavor. Let your throat discover that wonderful Camel mildness and coolness. See why, with smokers who have tried and compared different brands of cigarettes, Camels are the "choice of experience."

According to a Nationwide survey:

MORE DOCTORS SMOKE CAMELS THAN ANY OTHER CIGARETTE

Three leading independent research organizations asked one hundred thirteen thousand, five hundred and ninety-seven doctors what cigarette they smoked. The brand named most was Camel.

Let your "T-Zone" tell you why!

T for Taste...

T for Throat...

that's your proving ground for any cigarette. See if Camels don't suit your "T-Zone" to a "T."

R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.
Winston-Salem, N. C.

I SAVED $8 ON MY MONTHLY FOOD BILL

(Continued from Page 37)

rch 30. Served MPF hash—few pieces o neat loaf left, browned it with onion, 2 up cooked diced potatoes, 1 cup cooked M F. With stewed tomatoes as a sauce this w quite something. For dinner I made a st fing of cooked MPF for my pork chops. P s chops flavored the stuffing—good.

rch 31. Made a soup of the left-over v tables and tomatoes and added ¼ cup M F. Only objection to MPF in soup is that it ttles in the bottom of the bowl. Had M F sausage patties—1 pound sausage does at least three meals, sometimes four, with ed MPF, whereas 1 pound sausage alone ly did me two meals.

il 1. Made our favorite MPF fish cakes fr one small piece of left-over fillet. These sh d be shaped into croquettes and fried in de fat, garnished with fresh parsley and w ges of tomatoes for a company luncheon or inner.

il 2. Extended my ½ pound sausage wi 1 cup MPF to serve with pancakes for su per. I prefer sausage mixed with MPF to ma ng it plain. At the supper table, I asked Bo to tell me honestly what foods he would lik to go on using MPF with, as today com- ple s four weeks' experimenting with MPF. He old me that he liked fish mixed with it be —in fact, much better than fish alone. Ot er favorite dishes were meat loaves and ch ground-meat patties. He doesn't care ab t it served plain as rice. Other foods h he isn't very fond of he found he lik l when mixed with MPF—like luncheon me , and lamb. I like it particularly in ham- bu ers, meat loaf, sausage. Asked Bobby how he been liking the food; his answer was ch acteristic of Bobby: "I don't know—I eat t, don't I?" Little Chuckie, bless his he t, eats everything set before him. And so MPF will remain on my pantry shelf, an on our table. Just think, I've saved al- mo $8 this month. We've had no colds, even tho gh we skipped the vitamins—and we've ac ome new and good meals.

Th here's the way my food budget looked:

$	$80.36 month by average
	70.15 this month—with MPF
	$10.21 saved on food
	.80 saved on vitamins
	$11.01
	3.10 minus cost MPF
$	7.91

Recipes

MPF STUFFED PEPPERS

cup cooked MPF
½ cup ground lamb or beef (cooked) onion cut fine
¼ teaspoon parsley
Salt and pepper

Mix all ingredients together, stuff halves gr en pepper (split lengthwise) and bake ov n, 350°–375° F., thirty minutes.

MPF SHRIMP CASSEROLE

Combine 1 cup cooked MPF, 5-ounce can shr p (try salmon or tuna), 1 medium onion ch ped, 1 cup peas, ¾ teaspoon salt, dash pe r, 2½ cups tomatoes, 2 tablespoons margarine. Place in casserole, cover and bake in moderate oven, 350° F., about 40 minutes. Serves 4 to 5.

MPF MEAT CAKES IN CASSEROLE

Mix 1 cup cooked MPF, 1 chopped onion, 1 beaten egg, ¾ pound ground meat, salt and pepper, little parsley. Shape into balls. Brown lightly in a little fat, put in casserole and cover with 1 can condensed tomato soup. Bake in moderate oven, 350°–375° F., thirty minutes. Serves 4–6.

MPF TUNA FISH SALAD

½ cup grated or flaked tuna fish
1 medium onion chopped fine
2 stalks celery cut fine
1 cup cooked MPF

Mix well with mayonnaise. Serve on lettuce or as a sandwich filling.

ROAST LAMB—MPF STUFFING

Have the butcher put a pocket in a shoulder of lamb and stuff with the following:

2 cups bread crumbs
1 cup cooked MPF
1 large onion
1 tablespoon poultry seasoning
4 tablespoons butter or margarine
Salt and pepper

Moisten with hot water to desired consistency. Stuff shoulder and sew opening securely. Roast 3 hours at 375° F.

INDIVIDUAL SAUSAGE PIES

1 cup flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon shortening
Scant ½ cup milk
¼ pound sausage
2 tomatoes
1 cup MPF
Small onion, grated

Sift together dry ingredients. Add shortening, mix in thoroughly with fork. Add liquid to make stiff dough. Turn out on floured board and knead lightly until outside looks smooth. Roll ⅛ inch thick. Cut into 4 four-inch squares. Mix sausage, grated onion and 1 cup cooked MPF together. Divide sausage mixture into 4 flat cakes. Put one sausage cake on each square dough; fold edges of dough around sausage. Sprinkle tomato with salt and place on top of sausage (tomatoes cut in halves or canned tomatoes may be used). Bake in hot oven, 425° F. about 25 minutes. Serves 4.

MPF MEAT LOAF

1 pound lean beef ground
1 teaspoon chopped parsley
1 egg
1 onion, chopped fine
1 cup MPF
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
¼ cup chili sauce
⅛ cup milk

Mix thoroughly. Shape in roll and bake 40–60 minutes at 350°. Baste often. Serves 4–6. For a larger loaf, and more tasty, add ¼ pound ground veal, ¼ pound ground pork.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Thought for a Friend

By Julia Collins Ardayne

ow warmly the lamplight falls upon your face as you sit reading!
ou do not know that I have stolen cross the several hundred miles between us
o stand beside your chair
o close that, with a hand outstretched,
touch your hair.
speak—ou think my voice the throbbing of the rain outside;
Yet you do not close the window.
Rather do you pause as though you listen to its falling.
I am here within your silent
room
Saying your name ever so softly.
Your eyes have left the page—
And, as I speak again, you smile.
Dear, distant friend! How blest are those whose miles
May hold no separation—only tenderness.

YES, I'M JEANNIE. Together, Fred and I turned out songs . . . about love and moonbeams. To annoy me he sometimes whistled "Jeannie with the Light Brown Hair". . . for my brown hair was nothing to dream about. It was just dingy-looking and unruly.

BACKSTAGE ONE NIGHT, [illegible] Magic told me the secret of [illegible] "Lustre-Creme Shampoo [illegible] Mr. hairdresser uses it. It's not a soap and a liquid but a new cream shampoo with [illegible] Use it at home, too, and keep your hair lovely!"

Jeannie with the dull wild hair... now a "LUSTRE-CREME" Dream Girl

WHEN I GAILY ARRIVED at our studio next day, Fred whistled in amazement. "Hold it, Gorgeous!" he cried. "Your hair! It's wonderful! If Stephen Foster could write lyrics about lovely brown hair, so can I. What rhymes with glisten, glamour, sheen, and pays off with lovely Dream Girl?" Thanks to Lustre-Creme Shampoo, I rated a love song after all.

For Soft, Glamorous "Dream-Girl" Hair

Whether you prefer the TUBE or the JAR, you'll prefer LUSTRE-CREME SHAMPOO

YOU, TOO . . . can have soft, glamorous "Dream Girl" hair with magical Lustre-Creme Shampoo. Created by Kay Daumit, to glamorize hair with new 3-way loveliness:

1. Fragrantly clean, free of loose dandruff
2. Glistening with sheen
3. Soft, easy to manage

Lustre-Creme is a blend of secret ingredients—plus gentle lanolin, akin to the oils in a healthy scalp. Lathers richly in hard or soft water. No special rinse needed. Try Lustre-Creme Shampoo! Be a lovely "Lustre-Creme" Dream Girl. 4-oz. jar $1.00: smaller sizes in jars or tubes, 49¢ and 25¢. At all cosmetic counters. Try it today!

Kay Daumit, Inc. (Successor) 919 N. Mich. Ave., Chicago, Ill.

OUT-PERFORMS ALL OTHER SHORTENINGS !

So differe
it's making fo history! Actual Swift'ning* gi
you a combinat of import advantages get in no ot shorteni

Swift'ning is superb in any recipe!

Try Swift'ning in all your favorite recipes, new or old. Try it for cakes, pies, light digestible fried foods. See if you don't get finer all-around results than ever before.

PEACH-PECAN SHORTCAKE MARTHA LOGAN'S

"HELPING HAND" RECIPE POINTS THE WAY TO SURE SUCCESS

Here's something new in shortcakes . . . new, and marvelously good to eat. It's easy to make. Just watch the little "helping hands" they point out where mistakes might be made. And, of course, use Swift'ning. Tests prove it makes tenderer, flakier shortcake than any other type shortening.

Preparation: Preheat oven at 425°. Flour bread board so lightly the board shows through. Grease cooky or baking sheet.

Ingredients: (Use standard, level measures.)

- 2 cups sifted all-purpose flour
  Be sure to sift flour before measuring.
- 3 tsp. baking powder
- 1 tsp. salt
- 3 tbsp. sugar
- ⅓ cup Swift'ning
- ½ cup broken pecan meats
- ⅓ cup milk
- 1 egg

Sift dry ingredients together; cut Swift'ning into flour mixture with pastry blender or 2 knives until mixture is the consistency of cornmeal. Add nuts. Combine milk and slightly beaten egg. Add to flour mixture all at once while stirring with a fork.

Turn dough onto lightly floured board and knead gently two or three times. Roll dough ¼" thick, cut into 3" rounds with floured cutter.

Lightly tap cutter to dislodge any extra flour before cutting.

Knead dough trimmings together and roll out and cut as above until dough is all used. Place 2 rounds together on prepared baking sheet. Bake about 15 minutes. Serve with sweetened peaches and whipping cream between and on top of biscuits. Top with pecan halves.

PURE, TASTELESS SWIFT'NING COMES IN 3-LB. AND 1-LB. TINS, AND 1-LB. CARTONS.
KEEPS WITHOUT REFRIGERATION

ONLY IN SWIFT'NING—THIS SPECIAL "QUICK-MIX" I GREDIENT FOR CAKES! Whether you use conventio recipes or speedy-mix methods, your cakes with Swift'n will be high, light and handsome. Snow-white, delic Swift'ning contains an exclusive ingredient that makes it w derfully blendable—gives tender, velvety cakes every ti

FLAKIER PASTRY THAN WITH ANY OTHER TYPE
SHORTENING! Tested and proved—pies are flak more tender made with Swift'ning than w any other type shortening. And biscu —mmm! The melt-in-your-mou kind. Try Swift'ning for every u

HIGHLY DIGESTIBLE! EXT NUTRITIOUS! No other t of shortening is more digesti than Swift'ning. And it tains a combination of imp tant nutritional essentials supplied by shortenings other types.

THE QUARREL

(Continued from Page 52)

night before; there were two dozen people ne who had been there since six in the ning; the advertisement had been a mise, there was no vacancy. When Ken came ie from the office in the evening he would ly as not find her stretched out on the in the hotel room, exhausted, depressed, with the memory of shabby rooms ally taken, sinister superintendents, bitter, ting applicants. Once she witnessed a -pulling match between two well-dressed s who each claimed to be first in line, and went away trembling, her heart heavy, dering what had happened to all the ency in the world, the ready laughter and clean eyes of the people she had known ore the war.

I'm so tired of being unhappy!" she told , crying one evening in his arms. "There sn't seem to be anything in the world but ible! And everybody is so hateful!"

en took her down to the lounge in the l, a dark little room in imitation leather worn oak, and to laugh.

I just want to be erable in my own
," she told Ken,
ing a smile. "I en't got room to unhappy about sia or the atom
b, or the U.N."

was at the end he third month
Ken found the -water flat. Jane e back one day at htime to find a sage waiting for to call him. He quite excited over telephone, even if oice was carefully
h. She could see at his desk, "mak-like a business-
," as she teased
his hair brushed smoothly, his hest, wonderful that was en-
ed on her heart, clean, square
s quiet, always t, so that somes she knew she dn't exist unless ouched her. She d fly to pieces
rwise.

Al Mott told me about it this morning,
I went up there right away. It's a tenet, darling," he added, making his voice er-of-fact. "The neighborhood isn't , and there isn't any heat." It was then ber. "That's what a cold-water flat s," he explained. "There is hot water e tap, but there isn't any steam heat.
s three rooms," he said, saving the line, unch line, until the very last.

Oh, Ken!"

s nothing to get excited about," he quickly. "Don't expect anything. I'll you the address. The superintendent is ng it, and if you like it, it's ours."

e went to the address immediately. It n the East Side, near Ninetieth Street.
he started down from the corner she see a thread of bridge hanging before ver the East River like a loop of tinsel Christmas tree. The building was even than she expected. She went into a hole of a doorway, cool with stale air, p three flights of musty stairs. There were, the three rooms, tiny, like boxes, leading into the other: living room, om, kitchen. The bathtub was in the en; it had an enameled cover over it.
oilet was in a closet.

Of course we'll take it," she said to the intendent, a thin, grimy, disgruntled man. She went out to telephone Ken, her voice light with excitement, and then she bought a galvanized bucket and a scrub brush and a box of soap powder, and climbed back up the three flights of stairs to her home.

The war is over, she said.

AFTER she had scraped the peeling walls she painted them over again, herself, with bright water paint. Primrose yellow in the living room, light blue in the bedroom, white in the kitchen. She foraged in the secondhand stores on Third Avenue and bought rickety chairs and painted them, too, after Ken had nailed them back together again, and she bought a bright slip cover for an old, lumpy sofa she found. The slip cover, the curtains and the bed linens were the only new things she bought. Everything else, even the flower prints on the walls, came from the secondhand stores. Lamps, china, rugs.

"We don't want to invest any money," she would say. "Not until we find a real place. A place of our own."

As the days went by, days which she tried to fill with work, and bargain hunting, and recipe collecting (she was learning, now, to cook with wine), she fought desperately against a returning depression which began to mount in her again, seeping slowly upward, like damp. In Chicago she could look out her windows and see trees; at twilight they could watch the sun set. Here there didn't seem to be any light, anywhere. The window of the living room faced north, so that sometimes she got a little light in the morning, but the kitchen and bedroom windows faced on a narrow court, and there was never any light. Even fixing her makeshift wife's lunch, of whatever she could find in the icebox (there was no electric refrigerator), she would have to turn on the light. When the days grew colder she heated the rooms by lighting the gas grate in the living room, and the stove in the kitchen, leaving the oven door open. Neither had a flue, and the grate was faulty, so that just about the time the rooms became warm she would have to open the windows to let in the fresh air.

When she went out to shop, the cold brutality of the street hit her with an almost physical impact. The sidewalk joined the paving of the street to the dingy stone and brick of the buildings, so that nowhere was there so much as an inch of earth exposed. (Once, when she wanted to move a begonia slip to a larger pot, she had to buy a little bag of earth at a florist's shop, and she ran her fingers through it, thinking how clean it felt.)

The street, the whole scene was alive with children. Pathetic, frightening, raucous children, with pinched, soiled faces and harsh voices, thin but filled with hysterical energy. They fought, pommeling one another in the gutters, or spilled over the worn doorways of buildings, eating bread from dirty hands. The block in which they lived lay at the bottom of a slight hill, and the children had a game they played: sitting, balancing themselves on a single roller skate, they careened down the incline, so that often she

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Magic Lens

By Mae Winkler Goodman

Love is a crystal glass that magnifies,
Making far things suddenly glow clear.
As with a telescope pressed to the eyes,
The velvet sky, star-studded, will come near.
Love is a lens through which we clearly mark
What heart and eye had missed . . . small, golden things:
Firefly lanterns strung across the dark;
The rainbow shining on a robin's wings.

Love magnifies the good, the beautiful,
Focusing the ear, the eye, the heart,
Yet love can minimize almost as well,
Dwarfing to their dim, remotest part
Ugliness, and hate, and all thereof;
Such is the magic telescope of love.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

FOR EXTRA RICH BROWN DELICIOUS GRAVY
Use
KITCHEN Bouquet
Here's the gravy secret good cooks have known for over 70 years—Kitchen Bouquet offers the easy, never-fail way to get extra rich, brown, delicious gravy! Kitchen Bouquet adds no artificial flavor — simply steps up true, rich meat taste. Helpful recipe folder with every bottle.
ONLY BinB MUSHROOMS are Broiled in Butter to Give You that rich, new far-more-delicious BinB Flavor!
Economy Dish with the Party Touch
Make chopped meat a company dish with a rich sauce of BinB Sliced Mushrooms.
Delicious—Ready to Use! No Waste—No Loss!
Choice hothouse mushrooms—tender, meaty—are picked when their flavor reaches perfection! Then they're rushed to our spotless plant, broiled in finest creamery butter and packed in their own luscious broth, to add appetite appeal to hundreds of dishes.
B in B MUSHROOMS
now packed in 3 different styles for every mushroom use!
Whole Crowns
Sliced Crowns
Chopped Mushrooms

had to jump quickly out of their way or be knocked down. She did not like to admit to herself that she was afraid of them. There was too much bitter knowledge of the world written on their young-old faces, and she was so terribly sorry for them that she averted her eyes when she passed them, not wanting to know anyone by sight, so aware of her inadequacy to help them that the thought of one on whom she might fix her compassion was not to be endured. Was this the world in which she could have her baby?

THERE was a baby across the hall from them. Sometimes in the morning she could hear the wonderful, meaningless talk and laughter of the bath, and her heart, her breast would ache with longing and loneliness. She knew that the couple who lived there were young, like themselves. The husband came home in the evening before Ken; she would hear the door slam, and their loud gay voices speaking together. She wanted, so much, to know the girl, but even though she tried to make opportunities, she never met her in the hall. She always heard her neighbor going out after she had come in, or else she left just as the door closed.

One day, unable to bear her loneliness any longer, she stifled her shyness and stepped out into the hall and knocked on the kitchen door opposite hers. When the door opened she said quickly, "I am Jane Malcolm, across the hall. I just wanted to say hello."

Her neighbor smiled, suddenly and shyly, and Jane had a sudden memory of those other faces she had seen on the street, a little pinched, suspicious, the friendliness waiting to be released.

"Oh, please come in," she said. "I am Nancy O'Connor. I'm so glad you came."

Jane went into the tiny kitchen, exactly like her own in reverse. But there was a warmth in this literally overheated room which was not in hers. She sat down at the table, on the chair which Nancy pulled out for her, and looked up at the pink-and-white canisters, the pink-and-white shelf paper, the clutter of baby bottles, formula cans, funnels, nipples in a rack on the table.

"Oh, it must be nice to have a baby!" she said.

Nancy smiled shyly, proudly, as though it were something very special, personal, not given to everyone, to have a baby. "He's kind of cross today," she said, not even trying to deceive herself with the mock disapproval in her voice. "I think he's catching cold, or cutting a tooth, or something. Would you like to see him?"

"Oh, yes!" Jane exclaimed. "But I don't want to disturb him if he's sleeping."

"We can peek at him."

Silently they tiptoed into the darkened bedroom and stood beside the baby bed.

"His name is Mike," Nancy whispered. She said it as though it were really extraordinary, as if no one had ever been named Mike before. "He looks just like his father."

"Oh!" said Jane. Then she couldn't say anything else. She thought she might cry if she did.

Mike slept on his back with his fat arms above his head, his legs drawn up, apart. There was a bubble of milk in the corner of his mouth, and the light, thin hair was damp on his forehead. Suddenly Jane wanted to put her arms around Nancy. It was very strange. She wasn't a demonstrative person with strangers, she always told herself, but she wanted to hug Nancy as she might have hugged a sister if she had ever had one. And then tell her all about everything. Her loneliness. How much she, too, wanted to have a baby, but how hopeless everything seemed. No real home. No prospect of one. No solid future to plan on because the world was suddenly such a difficult, frightening place that maybe it wasn't even right for people like them to have a family any more.

"Would you like to see the rest of the house?" Nancy asked.

Jane followed her happily into the tiny living room and admired the overstuffed sofa with the chair and hassock to match. There were a fern stand, a table with an embroidered runner under the lamp with its parchment shade, and over the sofa on the wall was a colored picture of an English cottage covered with roses.

"Oh, it's nice!" Jane said. "It's a real home, isn't it?"

"We were so happy to find it," Nancy said eagerly, pinching a dry frond from the rather tired-looking fern. "We had to live with my mother when Dan came home from the Navy, and we thought we'd never find a place. I was working, and Dan was working, and we didn't have time to look, and then I had to stop working—on account of the baby, you know." Nancy paused; she looked suddenly wistful, and her eyes avoided Jane's when she spoke again. "Dan and I were both born and grew up in this neighborhood. We sort of wanted to live someplace else, you know, when we got married." She stopped again, but then she smiled and looked at Jane. "Dan found this place just two weeks before the baby came. So we had our own home to bring him to, after all."

"We had the same trouble," Jane said. "About finding a place, I mean." And that was all she was able to say, about everything, even though there was so much she wanted to say.

"Will you have a cup of tea?" Nancy asked.

"I'd love it."

They went into the kitchen again, tiptoeing past the sleeping Mike, and Jane sat down at the table. There was hardly room in the kitchen for the two of them unless she sat down at the table. While Nancy busied herself with the kettle and the teapot, Jane noticed with concern how thin and tired she seemed, beneath the brave smile and the quick movements. She was a slight girl with dark hair and the sort of transparent white skin that sometimes goes with Irish coloring, but there were no roses in her cheeks, only a flush of heat from the stove.

"I wish you'd come and see me," Jane said. "I'd like to show you my house."

The response was so quick that she knew she had said the right thing.

"Maybe after tea you could leave Mike alone for a minute."

"Well," Nancy said, "maybe a minute."

They drank the tea and Nancy looked again at Mike, and then they slipped out the door quietly and went into Jane's kitchen. As they went through the absurdly small rooms Jane didn't know whether to be proud of her efforts or not. Somehow it all suddenly seemed empty, unworthy, a little pretentious. She had looked at pictures in decorators' magazines for tricks to achieve the illusion of space, and now her bright walls with their prints, the scrubbed bare floor, the few pieces of furniture looked not smart at all, but just rather cold and unfriendly and superior.

Nancy didn't say very much. It was "nice," and then it was "awfully nice." She went here and there quietly, her eyes missing nothing, standing in front of the prints, feeling the fabric of the covering on the sofa, studying the arrangement of flowers in the old yellow bowl on the walnut table under the window. Jane had bought the bowl and the table, which she had rubbed down to its original finish, from a secondhand dealer.

"I hope you will be my friend," Jane said suddenly. She surprised herself by saying it; it was as close as she had ever come to sentiment, but she wanted to dispel the uncomfortable feeling that was growing between them as Nancy looked at her house.

Nancy turned to her and smiled shyly. "I'd like to be," she said.

They were friends. After that they took to shopping together, and they would open their kitchen doors in the morning and call back and forth to each other as they washed the breakfast dishes. Sometimes Jane sat with Mike so that Nancy could go on errands, and they always had a cup of tea together in the afternoon, sometimes in one apartment, sometimes in the other. When Nancy would get Mike dressed, before his father came home, she would bring him over and lay him on Jane's bed while they sat and talked. It was as if they had stumbled on a new world together, a world waiting, not for any girl, but for wives only; yet it was curious, because their husbands were excluded. Jane knew nothing of Dan, and she never spoke to Nancy of Ken. What disturbed her, however, although she did not really permit herself to think about it, was that she began almost to dread seeing Ken come home in the evening. He seemed to bring the weight of the world's weariness with him, in spite of his determined cheerfulness, and all Jane's despair would settle upon her again.

SHE couldn't remember, exactly, when they began to quarrel. Alone, she would grow weak with fear, trying to remember how it had started, and what it was they argued about. They had never quarreled in Chicago. Oh, now and then there were, as the saying is, "words." But what young married couple does not have them? And the "words" were almost worth it, because afterward they had to find each other again, coming, it seemed, each time closer to each other. Yes, it was almost worth it.

But these new quarrels drove them apart. They never seemed to come to anything but a truce. They would say "dear" to each other a great deal while getting ready for bed, but even when Jane knew that Ken, too, lay awake beside her, she couldn't turn to him because inside she was so hurt and lonely.

Maybe it was inevitable that all this must burst at once into flame, as if a slow fuse had smoldered to a store of powder. It happened the night she burned the steak, in the inadequate gas oven, and then she cried.

"Everything is wrong!" she said. "Everything!"

But Ken did not come to her to comfort her. He just stood in the kitchen door, cold, his face set, the flesh about his mouth white with anger. "My big girl," he said. "My big, brave girl."

He had never spoken to her that way before. She had never heard in his voice that tone of bitterness and sarcasm, and she stopped crying, frightened. But when he continued to stand there, his arms folded, she was filled with cold fury, and she ran to him and beat at his chest with her fists. "I hate you!" she cried. "I hate you!" Somewhere within her was a void, filled with fear, and disbelief, and shock at her behavior, but she was powerless to control herself.

"You must hate me," Ken said, holding her wrists with a painful grip, "to do what you're doing to me."

(Continued on Page 144)

"Good heavens, I don't know. I thought it was you."

LET LUCKIE MAKE IT—

Best Lemon Pie you ever tasted—

TENDER, LIGHT-AS-AIR PIE CRUST!

LUSCIOUS CREAMY FILLING WITH THAT "FRESH LEMON" FLAVOR!

A dream of a lemon pie —— made from a real New England recipe! "Down-Easters" are famous for their pies, so no wonder more Good Luck lemon filling is sold in New England than any other brand. Try it—it's tops in quality and flavor.

You can't fail with Good Luck Pie Crust Mix—follow simple directions on package and get flaky delicate crust—every time. Good Luck is easy to handle because shortening has been "cut into" flour in exact proportions, skillfully blended by our exclusive process.

Made of finest shortening and pastry flour

Fine pie crust can be made only from top-notch ingredients. Special pastry flour made from the finest soft white winter wheat and the highest grade hydrogenated vegetable shortening are used exclusively in Good Luck.

Make the "Sniff" Test!

Open a package of Good Luck Pie Crust Mix and sniff! What a fresh, clean odor! That's because only the finest hydrogenated vegetable shortening is used in Good Luck. You'll find it keeps fresh and sweet on your pantry shelf!

Good Luck is a lemon pie filling with natural flavor and tartness—a real "fresh-lemon" taste. Creamy and smooth, the consistency is always right—neither too "spready" nor too stiff. You're sure of the perfect lemon pie with Good Luck!

GOOD LUCK WITH GOOD LUCK — ANOTHER FINE French's PRODUCT!

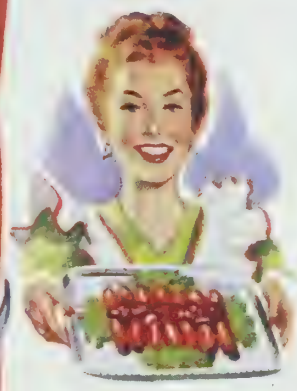
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

*Good Luck Food Co., Inc., Rochester, N. Y. Subsidiary of The R. T. French Company

"THE WIENER THE WORLD AWAITED"

All Meat WIENERS



with Barbecue Sauce

. . . in flavor-tight sack to keep flavors unmixed until ready to serve

"Sack O'Sauce"* Keeps Flavors Separate —Keeps Flavors Fresh

Just heat and serve. One can serves four as main meat dish—nourishing and wholesome.

Delicious for luncheons, picnics, and snacks.

GUARANTEED Oscar Mayer QUALITY

U.S. Government Inspected

Also plain without sauce

Trade Mark

Wieners made solely of Selected Beef and Pork

Get their flavor from the meat itself—absolutely no cereal filler added

Here's that new way of packing food that's making a delicious meat meal a matter of minutes.

These Oscar Mayer Wieners are made to a new high-quality standard. The meats are selected—the beef extra lean—the pork tender and flavory. No cereal filler is added.

Packed in the can with these nutritious all-meat wieners is a flavor-tight sack of delicious mild barbecue sauce . . . a sauce voted first choice of 27 recipes tested.

This "barbecue treat complete" is ready to heat and serve in a few minutes—as the economical main dish for dinner, for picnics, or an appetite-satisfying snack. Ask your grocer for this new treat.

OSCAR MAYER & CO. • General Offices, Chicago • Fine meats since 1883

(Continued from Page 142)

"What I'm doing to you!" she said, starting back from him, staring up into his face.

When he answered her his voice was choked, as though his feelings had been pent-up for so long that he could not release them. "The office may fail," he said. "Do you understand that?" His face was close to hers and she could see shadows of fatigue under his eyes, but the eyes were filled with anger. "Did you ever ask me about it? Do you ever ask me what I am doing? How I am feeling? Do you care?"

She was beyond reason now. "I'm too tired. I slave in this dirty, stupid place, and what do I ever get out of it? Nothing! You come home and eat, and you don't even talk to me. I have to stay in this miserable slum all day, cold and lonely!"

"You could be cheerful about it!"

"Cheerful! What have I got to be cheerful about!" She was shouting. She pulled away from him, and stood there, defiant. "I wanted to be a wife to you," she said, forcing scorn into her trembling voice. "I wanted a home, and a baby—something to live and work for! But I have to stay here. Maybe I'll die here! Maybe I'll never get away from this terrible place!"

Ken's hands dropped to his sides. She looked at him, standing there in his neatly pressed gray trousers and vest with the fountain pen and pencil in the breast pocket. He was wearing a conservative foulard tie, but the city's grime was on the turned-back cuffs of his shirt, and at his collar. The city's grime and weariness were in the shadows under his chin, and in his hands which suddenly looked defenseless and beaten.

"You mean I'm not a good husband," he said quietly. "I can't find a proper home for you, and maybe my job will fold up, but I think that all of it might work out if I had the right kind of a wife."

He turned then and went back into the bedroom. Jane watched him as he picked up his coat and put it on, and walked into the living room, and out the front door. After that she found that she could move again, and she went into the bedroom and flung herself on the bed.

She had lost everything. Burying her head in the pillow, she tried, like a child, to sustain her anger and righteousness, but all her conviction subsided with her sobs. She told herself that she had behaved no better than a common shrew, and it came to her, with dismay, for the first time in her life, that she might after all be just like other people, given to error, full of common weakness which she was not big enough, sometimes, to recognize or admit. Her whole life was Ken; how could she have treated him so badly? Even in her anger she had known somewhere that it was not directed toward him; but if not, then what was the basis of her unhappiness?

Suddenly she sat up in the darkness, pressing the palms of her hands against her eyes. For her, she knew all at once grasping at a thought so tenuous that it threatened to elude her, the war was not over! She began to laugh to herself, crazily, with exhaustion, remembering how Ken had said that they did not need to be rehabilitated—old married folks like them! But this was their rehabilitation; they were going through it, and she had not recognized it. It was a long process, painful, she could see now, like being born again. They could not take up just where they had left off; too much had happened to them—to them and to the world. They had to take into account all that enforced loneliness and separation, the dreadful unrest of the world, the bitter unhappiness of a line that was broken, the groping to find the two ends and join them together again. They had had a piece taken out of their lives: the years during which, living quietly together, they would have grown in tenderness and knowledge of each other. Her mistake had been in thinking that she could start being a wife again, like a little girl playing house; that she could ignore all the grim reality outside.

In the midst of these reflections she was conscious of the sound of voices raised, and she realized, abruptly, that across the hall the O'Connors were quarreling too; they had been quarreling for some time, she knew—she had been hearing their voices in the back of her mind. Through the thin, cheap walls the sound came to her: Nancy's shrill cries, and Dan's angry bellow. There was something disgraceful about it, as though the long heritage of the streets had grown into something destructive and shameful. She began to tremble, knowing in her heart that she and Ken had sounded no better. Perhaps the O'Connors had heard them, too, if they were not too engrossed in their own quarrel. She put her hands over her ears, but just as she did she thought she heard her name.

She got up quietly, feeling sick and shamed, and went to the kitchen door and put her ear against it. They were quarreling about her!

"I forbid you to see her again!" Dan was saying. "I do my best, and that's got to be good enough!"

Jane leaned against the doorframe, stunned by the bitterness and venom in his voice. What had she done? Her answer came quickly, in Nancy's tearful voice.

"She has everything so nice," she said. "She has such nice clothes, and all her furniture is different, and she goes to a beauty parlor to have her hair washed."

Dan's reply was mystifying. "But I don't like it!" he shouted. "My mother never cooked with wine! Your mother never cooked with wine! Are you better than they were? Aren't we good enough for you?"

Oh, it was funny! It was terribly funny, if

(Continued on Page 146)

Is Your Child a Little Traveler This Month?

THE "watchbird" for the young traveler is the Travelers Aid Society. This nonprofit social agency helps all travelers who need help, regardless of race, creed, color or economic status. Here are some suggestions it offers for the occasion when it is absolutely necessary to let a child under twelve travel alone:

1. Provide the young traveler with an identification card bearing the names of parents or relatives, addresses and telephone numbers.

2. Be sure relatives or others at the destination know the arrival time, and plan so it isn't late at night.

3. Give the young traveler some books, magazines, puzzles or games for the trip. Something to eat helps too.

4. Be sure he has spending money to take care of necessities or emergency phone calls.

5. Tell the child about the Travelers Aid Society, which provides help at most large terminals and will meet and assist children at transfer points if notified in advance.

Any travel problem may be discussed with Travelers Aid.

BEAT THE HEAT!

"Fresh up" with Seven-Up!

PLAN ACTIVITIES TOGETHER
BE A "FRESH UP" FAMILY!

Family days at the beach are always fun . . . but what a thirst they can produce! When your tongue is parched after a swim and a frolic on the hot sand . . . boy, that's a time when a "fresh up" with cool, clear 7-Up really clicks!

Chilled 7-Up has a liveliness, a fresh clean taste that tempts all ages . . . and there's just nothing like 7-Up as a thirst-quencher.

Be a "fresh up" family. Enjoy happy times with your youngsters. And enjoy wholesome 7-Up together, too . . . it's the all-family drink! Order a case of 7-Up wherever you see those bright 7-Up signs on display.

HT 1948 BY THE SEVEN-UP COMPANY

OU LIKE IT  IT LIKES YOU!

MOM'S OWN HIT PARADE

BEST IN CLASS—or out! Mrs. Jones, proud mother discovered a simple, easy way to make her youngsters' clothes look like new for the first day of school.

BACK TO SCHOOL!

With clothes dry cleaned better, spots banished—dulled colors revived

Mothers! Now is the time to have back-to-school clothes cleaned better at your Sanitone dry cleaner. With Sanitone cleaning stubborn spots and ingrained soils disappear like magic. Clothes actually become fresher and cleaner than ordinary dry cleaning methods can ever get them—and they come back to you with a longer-lasting press, greater brilliance of color, without a trace of perspiration stains or "dry cleaning odor"!

And you busy mothers may rest assured that your Sanitone Cleaner will carefully attend to all details—securely sewing on all buttons, doing all minor mending—at no extra cost! In fact, Sanitone Service costs no more than ordinary dry cleaning!

Phone your Sanitone Dry Cleaner today! His name and number are listed in your classified phone book under the famous Sanitone Seal. Ask him to pick up and clean your whole family's clothes now! You'll be amazed at the difference!

HEY KIDS!

Ask your Sanitone Dry Cleaner about his big "back-to-school" surprise for you. Sanitone is a division of Emery Industries, Inc., Cincinnati 2, Ohio.

APPROVED SANITONE SERVICE

(Continued from Page 114)

you could laugh about it! Nancy had cooked the beef in wine, as Jane had told her to do it. She could hear Nancy crying, great, dry sobs, and then she began to talk as she, Jane, had talked to Ken, irrationally, as all arguments are.

"I want to live somewhere else," Nancy cried. "I don't want my baby to grow up in this dirt, like we did! He won't have a chance! They'll turn him into a crook, just the way they did with my brother! He'll hang around the poolrooms, and learn to steal, and ——"

Then Jane heard a crash, as if a fist were brought down on a table. "Not as long as he has Danny O'Connor for a father!" Dan said.

Oh, it was funny, all right. Clothes, and furniture, and beef cooked in wine, and a baby growing up in the slums.

Nancy was crying quietly now; there was silence in the kitchen across the hall, and then Jane heard Nancy say, in a quiet voice, "I just wanted to be like her."

She clung to the door for support. It wasn't fair, Jane thought, to have all her dishonor shown to her at once! First Ken, and now Nancy. Had she only tried to be friendly, she wondered, or was it possible, honestly, that somewhere in an unworthy part of her mind she had enjoyed contrasting herself with Nancy, enjoyed showing off her taste, her skill with secondhand furniture, her recipes with wine and herbs? Why, even she could tell that Nancy and Dan must have paid far more for their overstuffed "suite" of furniture than she had paid for all her things, because she didn't want to "invest any money" until she found "a real place to live."

Oh, it was so wicked, so absurd, so small and stupid to have acted the great lady in a tenement!

"Why?" Dan was saying. "Why did you want to be like her, or anybody else, when I married you because I like you the way you are?"

SUDDENLY Jane knew what she must do. If she hesitated for a moment she would know that it was wrong to do it, and she would be lost. She wrenched the door open and stepped into the hall and pounded on the door opposite hers.

"You must let me in," she called, surprised at the volume of her voice.

When the door opened suddenly she stood there, defiant, forgetting her tear-stained face and disordered hair, facing Dan in his undershirt, his hair rumpled, surprise on his unhappy face; Nancy in the background, startled, her eyes streaming, the lipstick smudged about her mouth.

"You mustn't say that," she said to Nancy.

They all stared at one another for a moment in silence.

"You don't want to be like me, Nancy," she went on. "I'm not a good wife. My husband left me. I've been complaining and unhappy, and I haven't helped him, and I didn't like it here, and I cried, and argued with him. He left me because I deserved it." She was talking rapidly now, to cover her failing courage, hardly knowing what she was saying, and as she talked Mike began to cry in the next room so that she had to raise her voice to be heard. "I was showing off to you," she said. "I wanted you to know that I was better than this place, and that I didn't want to live here, and that I was dissatisfied with everything. And what if Dan doesn't like things cooked in wine, and what if I did buy different furniture than you did? It didn't even cost as much as yours did, and I'll go shopping with you, Nancy, if you like my clothes—they aren't expensive—and ——" But then she burst into tears, and suddenly she found that she and Nancy were holding onto each other, after all, like sisters. "He left me," Jane sobbed. "He walked right out the door!"

That was when Dan began to laugh. He said "Women!" a couple of times, as only a man who has been pressed too far can say it, and then he went into the bedroom and picked up the crying Mike and brought him, Jar and Plastic Tray Set—Pink, blue, ivory. In large jar, 300 cotton-tipped, 3-inch "Cotton-Tail" applicators. $3.50.

Separate Jar you can re-use—with 400 "Cotton-Tails." $1.00.

"Cotton-Tails" for Refill—box of 100—$.25. Glasco Products Company, Chicago 6, Illinois

The Captain Marvel sweatshirt was our first big hit! This easily washable cotton sweatshirt for children, sports a color reproduction of Captain Marvel of the funnies. Children everywhere were so enthusiastic, we added other famous characters to our line.

Here they are: Gene Autry, Little Beaver, Red Ryder, Dick Tracy—a different sweatshirt for almost every day of the week. All are spring needle knit . . . in white and colors. About $1.25. Little Beaver in sizes 2 to 8; others from 4 to 14.

Get them at leading department and chain stores . . . Or write

J. T. FLAGG KNITTING CO., INC.

Makers of High-grade Knit Goods
Mills: Florence, Alabama
New York Office: 93 Worth Street

king, into the kitchen. "I want you to renber this," he said solemnly to the baby, ding him up. "Maybe this will make you and think, when you want to get mar-
!"

was just at this moment, of course, that came up the stairs and down the hall.
e heard him and went to the door and he e back, wearing his politely baffled look, ding a bottle of something in his hand.
re was something else in his face which e, as a wife, knew, and she thought her t would burst with love for him. He had n to a bar; she could see him in her mind, ng there, manly and angry but thinking it and then coming back to her because was his wife.

Jane," he said.

ane turned her tear-flushed face to him, but trying to show her love in her eyes.

es, Ken," she said.

What is all this?" he asked, looking r her head at the tableau in the O'Conkitchen, using his best office-manager e.

Dan laughed again. "I don't know," he . "He's wet," he said to no one in parlar, gingerly shifting Mike from one arm he other.

My poor baby!" Nancy took him to her disappeared into the bedroom.

This is Mr. O'Connor, dear," Jane said, ng to save the situation with what digshe could muster.

Ken and Dan looked at each other. "It's to know you," Dan said, and they shook ds.

I have a bottle here," Ken said after a ment. "The man said it was champagne," added, rather uncomfortably. "Maybe will join us for a drink. We're celebrator something."

Celebrating?" Jane blurted.

Ken looked at her, quieting her with his
s. "Yes," he said softly.

But even in her happiness and excite-nt, Jane remembered. Wine, and the Connors . . . it was all wrong again.

Dan saved her. "Come on, honey," he called into the bedroom. "We're going to have a drink. Bring Mike along."

When Nancy came out of the bedroom, carrying Mike, Jane wanted to laugh, with relief, and sympathy, and amusement. For just in that moment Nancy had accomplished the womanly miracle of changing Mike, and combing her hair, and powdering her face.

"How do you do, Mr. Malcolm?" she said demurely.

Afterward, in their living room, Jane sat with Nancy on the sofa and talked to her about upholstery, and materials, and shops, and other feminine things. She did it with the forepart of her mind, knowing that their woman's world was, after all, saved, but that their mistake had been in thinking that the other world, the world with their husbands, could be taken for granted. She could see all that ahead of her, happily, talking with Ken—or, rather, letting Ken talk. About the office, about his problems, about their life together. They would work it out, she knew; they had always done it before. And suddenly she found herself praying in her heart that the O'Connors would go quickly. She had almost forgotten how she used to feel that way at parties—happy, but wanting everyone to be gone, so that she could be alone with Ken.

She looked at him quickly, across the room: stanch, handsome, competent. He was laughing, and Dan was saying to him, broadly, with gestures:

"I guess you know that the Navy won the war!"

What did it matter where they lived, as long as they were together? What did it matter about the world if they had each other?

Oh, why didn't they go! she wondered, knowing that when they did she would go to Ken, and he would hold her, and she would tell him that now, at last, she wanted to have the baby. THE END beautiful suit by Milgrim, beautiful folding coach by Whitney

He's something to show off, that baby of yours. He's part of your heart and life. Yes, even your fashion!

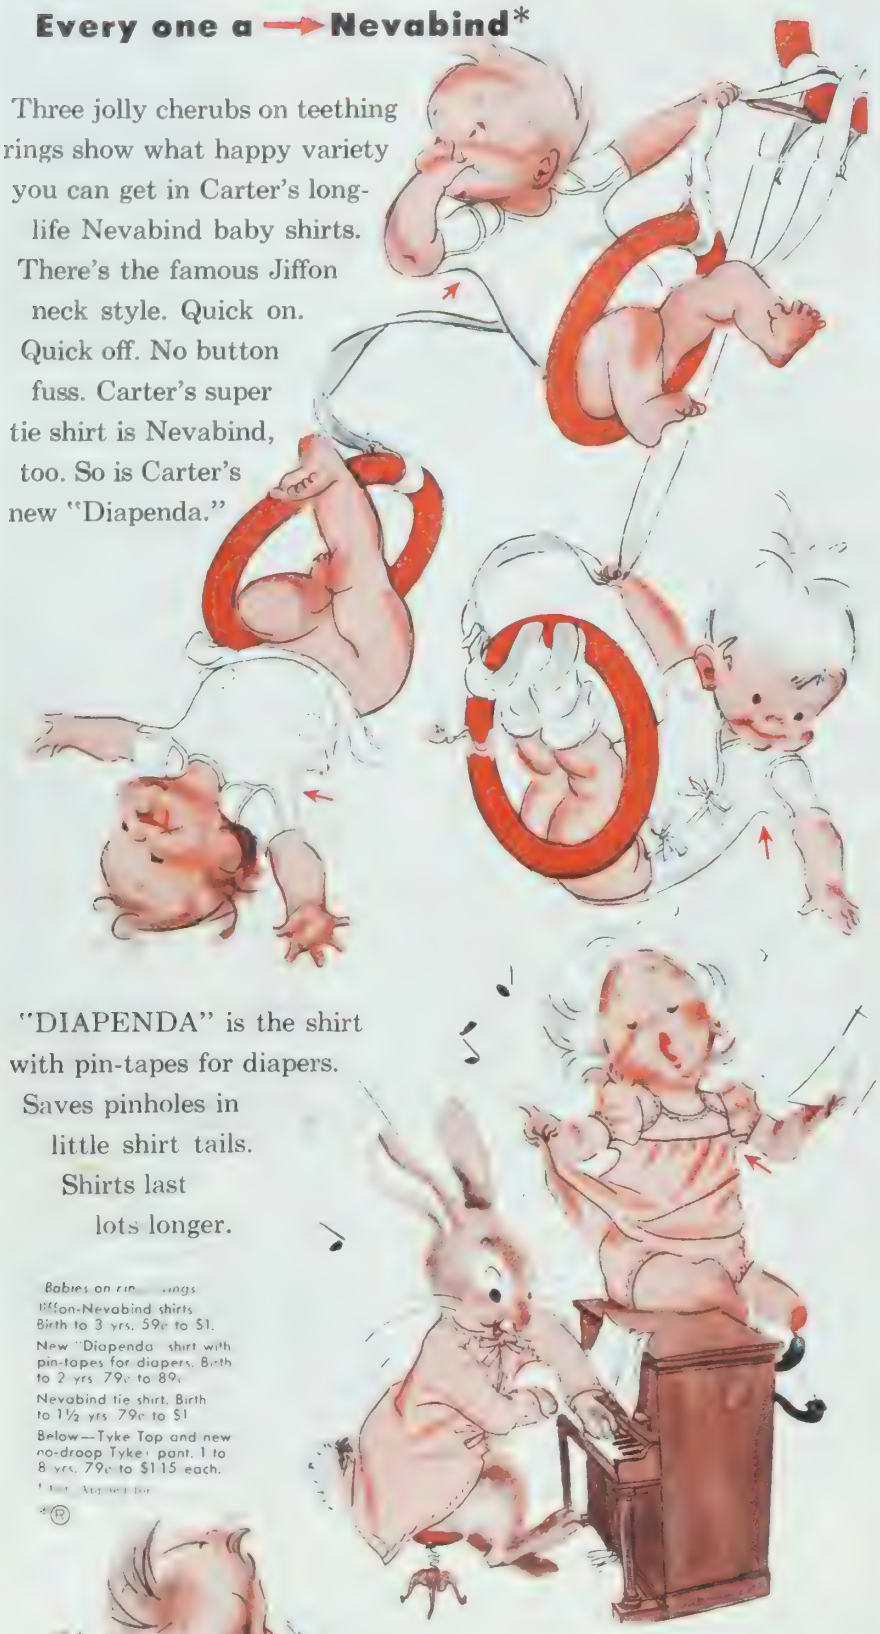
When you wheel your baby in a Whitney Folding Coach, you're wheeling luxurious good looks as up-to-date as your last-word outfit! A folding coach that looks like an expensive English coach! No ugly crossbar to mar its gleaming lines, thanks to Whitney's exclusive Invisible Folding Frame.† In smart fashion colors, too.

Two de luxe features for baby's comfort! For jar-free slumber riding...Whitney's exclusive Center-Suspension Springs. For steering automatically around corners . . . Whitney's exclusive new, improved, self-centering Steer-O-Matic Wheels.* No other carriage has all these extras! Yet a Whitney costs no more. See the new Whitney Folding Coach today!

†Pats. applied for. *Pat. under the Jonkhoff System.

Fashioned for Baby... in fashion for you

Free! Write for your free copy of "The ABC's of Making Baby Happy." Address Dept. T-8.



F. A. Whitney Carriage Co., Leominster, Mass. 1858-1948

Whitney Folding coaches

Shirt tales by Carter's

Every one a → Nevabind*

Three jolly cherubs on teething rings show what happy variety you can get in Carter's long-life Nevabind baby shirts. There's the famous Jiffon neck style. Quick on. Quick off. No button fuss. Carter's super tie shirt is Nevabind, too. So is Carter's new "Diapenda."

"DIAPENDA" is the shirt with pin-tapes for diapers. Saves pinholes in little shirt tails. Shirts last lots longer.

Babies on ri... ings
Jiffon-Nevabind shirts. Birth to 3 yrs. 59¢ to $1.
New "Diapenda" shirt with pin-tapes for diapers. Birth to 2 yrs. 79¢ to 89¢.
Nevabind tie shirt. Birth to 1½ yrs. 79¢ to $1.
Below—Tyke Top and new no-droop Tyke® pant. 1 to 8 yrs. 79¢ to $1.15 each.
*® Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

Musicians at the piano
Pretty knitted kimono. Pink, blue, white. Birth to 1 yr. $1.65.
Panti-dress Twosome. Buttercup, blue or pink. 6 mos. to 2 yrs. About $2.
Below—Jiffon-Nevabind gown. Open or closed back. Birth to 1 yr. $1.65 to $2.

The William Carter Company, Needham Heights 94, Mass.

Carter's Jiffon-Nevabinds for layet-teers and busy toddlers

P-s-s-t, Carter's make fine underwear for the entire family!

TO CONQUER SHYNESS

(Continued from Page 127)

can be encouraged to self-expression through play, which also creates independence.

An older child may gain independence and self-esteem by acquiring skills of various kinds, from rope jumping to reading. Such abilities give a child a feeling of belonging.

Rule IX. Do not attempt to force a timid child to "stand up for his rights."

Timid youngsters need courage and independence, but these feelings must grow within the child. Many parents, however, sincerely believing that they are helping their child to overcome a serious handicap, insist that he fight back. I have even known parents to punish a youngster who let someone get the better of him. But let's see why the child behaves as he does. The basic reason is fear or a feeling of inadequacy and helplessness. If a child's parents turn on him when the rest of the world does, it will make him more panicky and helpless than ever.

Rule X. When strangers are present, pay attention to something the child has, rather than to the child himself.

Many children, though they crave attention under that veneer of reserve and aloofness that they acquire, cannot stand the full spotlight of attention all at once. Deanna, for example, was ready to show me her doll and the doll's clothes, but she would have shrunk from interest in her own clothes or looks. The doll was something we could enjoy together, and it was safely removed from Deanna herself. "Show Aunt Nellie your new blocks" is a much safer try than "Say hello to Aunt Nellie." Parents who are tactful try to give the child something to do and to talk about, and they also try to keep the full glare of adult attention from the child if it makes him uncomfortable.

> The best you get is an even break.
>
> —FRANKLIN P. ADAMS.

Rule XI. The shy child should have many opportunities to express his feelings, even when they are hostile.

Temper tantrums, fears of many kinds, are often the forerunners of shyness. Psychiatrists tell us that it is often the child's fear of his own disturbing emotions that keeps him so aloof and rigid. He maintains his control by bottling up his feelings. Such children need materials that encourage free expression of feeling. Paints, hammer and nails, clay, and all sorts of toys that stimulate dramatic play are excellent. And if the child makes an interesting clay figure and then pounds it flat, don't reproach him. The expression of destructive feeling may be his way to a freer expression of all feeling. Children normally have moments of hostility toward brothers and sisters and parents. These feelings will be less disturbing if they are freely expressed.

Rule XII. Some shyness is a part of normal development, and should not be confused with shyness that is a persisting problem.

Parents often get alarmed when a baby who has been friendly and outgoing during the first year of his life suddenly becomes upset at the sight of strangers. This is a very usual development, however, and is associated with the baby's growing ability to discriminate between family and strangers rather than with any deep-seated fears. If this early shyness is treated calmly and patiently, if the child is protected from the more excessive outbursts of well-meaning friends, he will come out of it naturally to the spontaneous friendliness of the normal child.

THE END

THEY dry in record time, indoors or out. And just look at the many other advantages.

Easier to wash — their open weave permits speedier washing with pure Ivory Flakes, Ivory Soap or Dreft.

Faster drying speeds diaper laundering, indoors or out.

Highly absorbent — their surgical weave absorbs more thoroughly.

Have no hems to chafe or irritate baby's tender skin.

Curity Foldline, a patented feature, woven into the fabric, for easy, convenient size adjustment as baby grows.

Endorsed by medical authorities and leading hospitals.

NURSERY PADS • BIBS • MASKS • COTTON

KENDALL MILLS — Division of The Kendall Company, Walpole, Mass., Dept. JN-8

Enclosed is 25c for full-size Curity Diaper and literature on Curity Nursery Products. (Only one diaper to a family.)

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

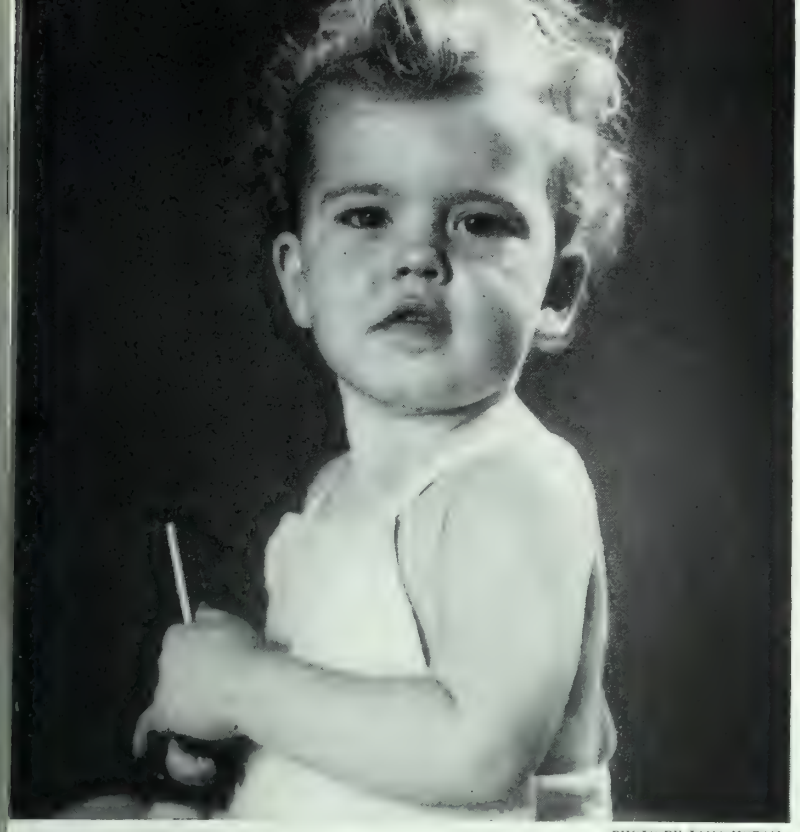


PHOTO BY TANY HOBAN

At about two, a child learns of "otherness," the possibility of disobedience. It is normal for him to exploit this new knowledge to the hilt.

That "I Won't!" Stage

BY DR. HERMAN N. BUNDESEN

President, Chicago Board of Health

At one time or another in the life of every young child there is likely to be a period when it seems that the easiest thing he does is to say "No!" This commonly occurs when the child is between two and three years old, although it may begin before two and last a little past three. This negative period is often a worry and a burden to mothers. I see it right now in my grandchild, who is now living at my home.

"We can't get Jimmy to do anything!" we heard distracted parents wail. "All we ever seem to hear is 'I won't!'" When the negative response continues for weeks or months, as it sometimes does, the strain on mother may be severe. In many cases, mistakes made in handling the child during this period, which is a critical time, have a harmful effect that may be lasting.

It is important for parents to understand, therefore, that a certain amount of negative behavior is perfectly normal and occurs as a necessary part of the child's development. Only when the negative responses—the "no's" and "I won'ts"—are violent, and persist well beyond the six months or so of the normal negativistic phase, is there any cause for concern. In these cases, the reasons must be sought and eliminated before improvement can be expected. Often the parents themselves may unwittingly change the mild or normal type of negativism into the extreme type by using improper methods during this difficult phase of growth. But with wise, patient recognition, the child's negative period is likely to vanish quickly and be forgotten. Like the lisp and the first teeth, it is a natural part of passing babyhood.

Normal negativism appears because, at about two years, the child's developing mind first becomes aware of "otherness." Where his life before has flowed evenly along without much necessity for choice on his part, he is now confronted with opposites or alternatives. Shall he play with the train, or with the doll? Eat this food, or refuse it? As it does to all of us, the opportunity to exercise free will gives the child an exhilarating sense of power. For a while, it takes control of him, and his conduct is dictated by what looks like contrariness, or maybe pure cussedness, to his elders. When mother suggests that it is naptime, the opposite or alternative to napping—staying up—flashes into the child's imagination, and "No!" or "I won't!" comes out, in most cases without any conscious intention to disobey or refuse.

When this happens time after time, day after day, it is difficult for many a mother to remember that the child is not being deliberately perverse or wicked. Unfortunately, the parent's temptation to mete out punishment and to force compliance with suggestions may become almost irresistible. I have had toddlers—my own grandchildren—in my home a great deal in recent years, and I know how hard it is, especially near the end of a long day, to refrain from disciplining the child who keeps on saying "No" and refusing to eat his cereal!

GRATEFUL young mothers from Maine to California tell us that Doctor Bundesen's baby booklets have been of the greatest help to them in caring for their own babies. The first eight booklets cover your baby's first eight months. They sell for 50 cents. The second series of booklets covers the baby's health from nine months to two years—seven booklets for 50 cents. The booklets will be sent monthly; be sure to tell us when you want the first booklet. A complete book on the care of the baby, a necessary supplement to the monthly booklets, OUR BABIES, No. 1345, is 25 cents. A booklet on breast feeding, A DOCTOR'S FIRST DUTY TO THE MOTHER, No. 1346, sells for 6 cents. Address all requests to the Reference Library, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania.

"But Mom, what's the matter with lullabies?"

BABY: Now that you're being me for a day, Mom, I thought you'd like to hear lullabies. They're supposed to be soothing!

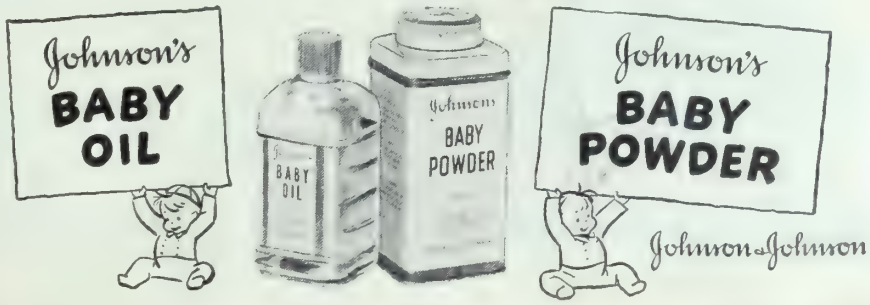
MOM: Honey, it's going to take more than lullabies to soothe me! I've been wriggling and twisting ever since I woke up. And my skin's so uncomfortable I could howl.

BABY: Can't sympathize, Mom. Maybe now you see that a baby's skin needs plenty of Johnson's Baby Oil and Johnson's Baby Powder!



MOM: I'll listen to anything, lamb! Tell me—why do you need both Oil and Powder?

BABY: Mom, that's the secret: Pure, gentle Johnson's Baby Oil for after-bath smoothovers, more of it at diaper changes, to help prevent what my doctor calls "urine irritation."

And these hot summer days, I can use lots of silky Johnson's Baby Powder for cooling sprinkles that help chase little chafes and prickles. That's how to soothe a baby!

MOM: Angel, I guess your mother hasn't been quite hep! But you can put this on the record: From now on, it's Johnson's Baby Oil for you—Johnson's Baby Powder too!

IN SPITE OF

VARICOSE VEINS!

Many women today lead a normal, active life in spite of the pain and unsightliness of surface varicose veins . . . thanks to Bauer & Black Elastic Stockings.

They're almost invisible under sheer hose. And their firm, comfortable, scientific support gives real relief and greatly improved appearance.

Two-way stretch, lightweight and cool, neutral in tint, they have long-wearing lisle heels and authentic fashioned leg and instep. They'll withstand repeated launderings.

Ask your doctor's advice . . . then get Bauer & Black Elastic Stockings for the finest combination of relief and beauty.

Elastic
STOCKINGS

At drug, department and surgical stores

BAUER & BLACK

Division of The Kendall Company
2500 S. Dearborn St., Chicago 16

It is a mistake, however, to think that a child can be disciplined out of the negative reaction. As a matter of fact, any such attempt on the parents' part is much more likely to have an effect just the opposite of what is desired. Most small youngsters are incurable attention seekers, and the child who learns that the "no" answer attracts attention, even though it is unfavorable attention, may be more inclined to continue than to stop it.

As the negative habit grows, the unknowing parent thinks sterner measures are called for. Before long, the mother-child relationship (or, sometimes, the father-child relationship, or both) has become a series of clashes. A suggestion is made and refused. This is followed by an order and a threat, and another refusal. Then comes parental loss of temper with force or punishment and, finally, tears and resentment on the part of the child. I have seen the results of hundreds of these conflicts of wills between mother or father and child. Invariably, the result is a worried, unhappy parent and a sullen or belligerent child.

Except in the comparatively rare cases where negativism is caused by real emotional upset or instability in the child, there isn't any need for this to happen. After the child's second birthday, mother should be on the alert for the "no" response to appear. When it starts, instead of fighting it she should take pains to avoid making direct suggestions or requests which give the child an opportunity for overt refusal. Instead, offer a choice of desirable behaviors.

For the mother who knows that it is important, this isn't so hard to do. For example, instead of asking the child to eat his cereal, ask which kind of cereal he wants—this good kind, or this? Instead of announcing that it is naptime, ask him if he wants to nap with Teddy Bear or Fuzzy Elephant. This method will give the child all the opportunity he needs to exercise free will and indulge his newly acquired sense of opposites or alternatives, without inviting a head-on collision with parental authority, which, of course, must be maintained. When this course is followed, negativism soon dies a natural death.

An ingenious mother can develop this system of "favorable alternatives" to a point which will cover practically every opportunity the child has to say "No." Of course, there will be some occasions when both the offered alternatives will be flatly rejected, and possibly a few times when it is necessary to make a direct request, without offering any choice, and firmly but unemotionally see that it is carried out. On these occasions mother must be guided by her own good judgment and common sense, but she will be wise to bear in mind two important facts:

1. It is always better to avoid a frontal clash of wills with the child.

2. Discipline for discipline's sake is always wrong. The parent who insists on compliance with an order or suggestion just to "show who's boss" reveals weakness, not strength, and is in for a lot of trouble.

When negativism doesn't disappear under suggestions given above, or at least subside into infrequent and comparatively harmless outbreaks, it is possible that the child is emotionally disturbed and needs careful study by the family doctor—possibly aided by a psychiatrist. The repeatedly violent, hysterical "I won't!" may be closely related to temper tantrums and nightmares as a symptom of deep-set fears of some kind. Usually, investigation reveals that something is threatening the child's sense of security. The cause may prove to be jealousy of a brother or sister, or quarreling between mother and father, or an indifferent attitude which makes the child feel unwanted, or some other circumstance leading to subconscious feelings of insecurity and consequent negative behavior. Obviously, discipline or force will only make matters worse in any such case, and strategic avoidance of conflict will be difficult if not impossible.

What children with this type of negativism need is careful study to identify the cause of their emotional instability, then effort by parents to build a real atmosphere of love and harmony in the home. Negativism never lasts long in a truly happy environment.

TELLTALE HANDS

(Continued from Page 51)

"They're coming a week from Saturday, I guess," father said.

"I can close my eyes and just see her in some of those clothes, even now," mother said. "There was a powder-blue wool dress that somehow made her cheeks look pinker. Her eyes were blue and she had gorgeous long, black eyelashes, and beautiful hands. You know, long white fingers, and she was so graceful with them. Hands always tell a lot," she said. "You can tell a lot about people by their hands."

Pud had stopped playing with his cars and was standing looking at mother. "I bet she was your very best friend," he said.

"What?" mother said, looking away from the other side of the room and looking at Pud.

"I said she must of been your very best friend," Pud said.

Mother laughed. "She was a very beautiful girl," she said, starting to fill up a hole in another sock. "I admired her very much. What brought her up, anyway?" mother said. "I wonder where she is now."

"Where she is?" father said. "She's coming along, of course."

"Coming along?" mother said, looking at father like he had just come in. "Where?"

"Here," father said. "To live."

"Here!" mother said. "Here! You mean here?"

"Sure I mean here," father said. "That's what 'here' means. Here."

"Well, my goodness," mother said. "For heaven's sake, tell me about it. You never tell me anything. Here I am alone all day with no one to talk to and you come home in the evening and stick your nose in the paper. You know what I think? There would be less divorce if men would talk to their wives in the evening."

"Oh, my goodness," father said. "A-b-c-d-e-f-g."

"What?" mother said.

"And also h-i-j-k-l-m-n-o-p," father said. "The last thing we want is a divorce, I'm sure. From such a good cook. Q-r-s-t-u-v-w."

"Have you lost your mind?" mother said.

"Yes," father said, "and a very pleasant sensation it is. It seems to get me lots of attention from my wife. It does not matter what I say, does it? Just so I talk?"

"The man's crazy," mother said. "Plumb crazy. Talk sense!" she said.

"All right," father said. "We will try again. Let us start from the beginning." Father took a great big breath. "As I was saying," he said, "when you so rudely interrupted with all that vulgar talk about Helen Gleason's clothes, Ray Smith and his wife, the beautiful Helen, are being transferred. Here."

"For heaven's sake!" mother said. "Why didn't you tell me? When?"

"To repeat my second statement," father said, "a week from Saturday."

"For heaven's sake!" mother said. "Go on."

"With some slight encouragement, I will," father said. "Ray is getting Mr. Roody's job."

"Is that good?" mother said.

"Sure, it's good," father said. "All the jobs in my company are good. I think it would be very nice to have them over. Ray is a nice guy. I always liked him. They won't know anyone. Be nice to have them over for dinner or something. If it isn't too much work."

"Me?" mother said. "Have them over for dinner? They don't have any children, do they?"

Genuine Evenflo Costs No More!

Give Her An EVENFLO
LAYETTE PACKAGE—
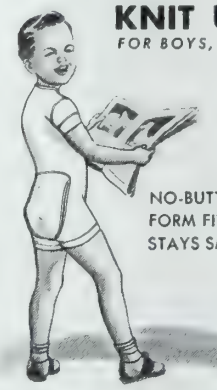
the ideal baby shower gift

★ America's Most Popular Nurser
★ Nipple, bottle, cap all-in-one
★ Attractive, dainty gift box
★ Six 8-oz., two 4-oz. Evenflo Nursers
★ Twin Air Valve Nipples
★ Approved by doctors
★ Easier for baby to nurse
★ Handier for mother
★ Price: Approx. $2.00 at all baby counters

Evenflo*
"America's Most Popular Nurser"
"It breathes as it feeds!"
*Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.



There's Only One Evenflo—Ask For It.

Don-Dee
TRADE MARK PATENT PENDING

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

KNIT SLEEPERS
FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

KNIT UNDERWEAR
FOR BOYS, GIRLS, AND MEN

TESTED AND COMMENDED BY PARENTS' MAGAZINE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU

NO-BUTTON—NO-DRAFT BACK
FORM FITTING SEAT,
STAYS SMOOTH...STAYS CLOSED

★ GREATER COMFORT—Buttonless, self smoothing bias seamed double seat. No more rolling. No more bunching. No more drooping flaps.

★ EASY OPENING—Unbutton bottom front button for wide open seat. Simply rebutton...body movement closes and smooths seat. ★ COMPLETE COVERAGE—Bias seaming keeps double seat smoothly closed no matter how active you are.

★ FORM FITTING—Seat design is self smoothing, comfortably follows the curve of the body. Back does not bunch. ★ TIME SAVING—No stretching for a back button. Fewer buttons. No flap to dangle, soil or wet.

New

KAIN-MURPHEY CORPORATION
CHATTANOOGA, TENNESSEE
Sales Agents for SIGNAL KNITTING MILLS
ILENA MILLS, INC.

," father said. "They don't have any n."
her was staring across the room again.
idn't say anything.
, well," father said, reading the paper
"I just thought it might be nice."

next day mother started doing things house. You'd have thought the Presi-as coming. She washed curtains and ws. She got new curtains for her room.
t a lot of cloth and made a cover for air in her room. She washed the floors rs and waxed them. Every time you in the house she was polishing some-furniture and silver and copper things.
elled like wax and polish all the w stay out of that room," she would me and Pud. "I want to keep it clean."

e you going to have a party tomor-Pud asked her.
course she is, dope," I told him. "For well woman that's moving here."
e's not any r than any of my
s," mother said.
I'm not having ty tomorrow."
hen why are you
all that stuff?"

ou have to clean
," mother said.

he ads say you ut it on in a e of hours and it right away," er said to father
ight. "Anybody
o it."
ut what on?"
r said.
hat new paint," er said. "I'll you a picture of he clerk said it
d take about a n for that room.
there's a thing to t on with. I got I'll show you. It rolls on."
Yeah, I imagine,"
r said.
What color do you
k would be
?" mother said.
What colors do have?" father

Here they are,"
er said, and she him one of those things with little s of color on them.
think the peach is pretty," father said.
You do!" mother said. "The peach!"
t looks good to me," father said.
here were you thinking of putting it?"
Well, all over," mother said. "The living and the dining room and the hall and well. I think the green," she said.
th those hooked-rug colors and the nial furniture and this woodwork. It's a soft green, don't you think? I think davenport would look well against it too.
n just see that room with green walls."

REEN it is," father said. "Maybe I can a couple of days off sometime next th and try it."
Next month!" mother said. "Next th? Why wait till next month? Why time off to do it? It only takes a few of that thing. You can do it in an hour two," she said.
ather took a big breath again. "Well,
see what I have to do Saturday," he said.
ou get the green if you want it. I still k the peach is pretty."
I got the green," mother said. "I thought be I could help you tonight. I can move niture and wipe up the spots you spill."
Ye gods!" father said. "Tonight!"

t smelled kind of like sour milk when we e downstairs in the morning. Mother was standing in the living-room doorway all smiles.

"Doesn't it look grand?" she said. "You've got the smartest father in the whole world, I believe."

Father was drinking coffee. "Anyway the tiredest," he said.

"I don't suppose you have time to help me get the pictures back up before you go?" mother said.

"GOOD-BY, coffee," father said, and got up from the table.

"You know," mother said, "I think I'll have that old frame refinished. That one your mother gave me. And a mirror put in it for over the desk. It shouldn't cost much. And we saved a lot on that redecorating. I think I'll use a different color in the hall. I'll get that today too. What color do you think would go well," she said, "with the green?"

"Peach," father said. He was holding a picture. "Is this right?" he said. "I've got to get going or I'll miss my ride."

"I got yellow," mother told father that night. "The hall and stair well shouldn't take long."

"It was one o'clock last night," father said.

"Well, I know," mother said, "but that's a big living room. Then on Saturday you can do the dining room and it'll be all done."

"Won't that be dandy?" father said. "Everything fresh and sweet but father."

"Well, you are sweet," mother said. "And I'm crazy about it. Doesn't it make a difference? It's like a new room. Everything shows up better. It makes everything look better. Except that chair of yours. If you wouldn't sleep in it all the time you could keep it nicer."

"But then I'd wear out my bed," father said.

"I wonder," mother said, "if Mr. Bros could get it back in time."

"What?" father said.

"If he could get it back in time for the party," mother said.

"Are we having a party?" father said.

"Well, didn't you tell me to?" mother said. "You act as if you didn't know all about it. I try to do what you want me to and you forget what it's all about. Don't tell me now they aren't coming."

"Who?" father said.

"Ray and Helen Smith," mother said. "Remember? The party you told me to have for Helen?"

"Me?" father said. "A party? I thought a—just for dinner or a ——"

"You don't have people like Helen Gleason over just for dinner," mother said. "With the family."

"You don't?" father said. "Why not?"

"Try to remember," mother said through her teeth. "This is Helen Gleason. The Helen Gleason. Of the two fur coats." Mother looked funny.

"Don't you like her?" I said.

Mother looked down at me. Her mouth curled up on one side.

"You don't like people like Helen Gleason," she said.

"You don't?" father said.

"No," mother said. "You don't. I was one of the ones stuck with gray shoes. You don't like people with gleaming hair and bright blue eyes and two fur coats."

Texture

By Catherine Haydon Jacobs

There was a time when selfishly I sought
To weave life's pattern with a single thread.
Woman's career, irrevocably sped,
Scorned proffered help. Impatiently I wrought,
Day upon day, defiant and alone;
Until this web so pitifully mine,
Twisted and frayed within its pale design,
You mended with a stout thread of your own.

No longer is there need to reach above
This fragile pattern torn within my hands.
Miraculously lifted by your love,
I know at last my love for you demands
In all I think, in all I feel, and do,
Of me so little—and so much of you.

can't wait to get out of these hot clothes and into cool new

Mennen baby powder

refreshing as a shower! You can't beat New Mennen Baby Powder for cooling baby off, when the mercury mounts. It helps absorb excess perspiration, acts to keep baby's precious, tender skin dry and comfortable! And it's borated, too, for extra protection.

chase away prickly heat! New Mennen Baby Powder shoos away mean old Prickly Heat. What's more, this soothing, silky white powder helps prevent and relieve chafing, itching, diaper rash and urine irritation.

so flower fragrant! So fresh, so light; it's the pet fragrance of the high-chair set! P.S. Baby won't mind if you borrow his New Mennen Baby Powder! Perfect after showers—for quick fresh-ups. Get some today!

you're safe at home with cool new Mennen Baby Powder

"And fluttery white hands," father said. "Well, I do. I always liked Helen. Ray wouldn't have married her if she hadn't been nice. She had something, Helen did."

"Indeed she did," mother said, biting off a fingernail she had torn on the baby's high chair. "Nice long fingernails, for instance. Sure she had something. An orderly house and redecorating every two years. I was there once. That time I visited Florence. She had a tea. Cateresses all over the place and maids opening the doors. You don't like people like Helen Gleason. You just try to impress them!"

"Yeah," father said.

"It's going to be puhlenty nice too," mother said.

"I'll bet it is," father said. "What is it going to be?"

"A luncheon," mother said. "A week from today. For twenty."

"Have you asked Helen?" father said.

"Well, naturally," mother said. "I called her at the hotel. I've talked to her several times. She's been very busy looking for a house. They're moving in today."

"Oh, did they get a house?" father said. "That's nice."

"It probably is," mother said. "It's over on the boulevard. I'm going to have deviled crab," she said, "and you know that salad we had at Stairs' that night they had the fish dinner?"

"I didn't like it," father said.

"I did," mother said. "And that cateress makes it to perfection."

"But can you?" father said.

"I've got that cateress," mother said. "After all, we saved a lot on the decorating."

THE next night mother brought in upside-down cake for dessert, father's favorite. "Everything's working out so well," she said.

"What is?" father said.

"Well, I can get it back Wednesday," mother said. "And he had a remnant that's perfect with the carpet. I know I'm going to like it. And I saved a lot having the remnant. And you wouldn't have time to sit in it anyway over the week end."

"Wouldn't I?" father said. "In what?"

"Your chair," mother said. "I'm having it redone. It's beautiful stuff—flowered and quaint-looking."

"I don't look good in flowers," father said, "and I'm not quaint at all."

"You are too," mother said. "You're darling. You're going to finish the hall and stair well tonight, aren't you? And the dining room tomorrow?"

"I thought I might sit down tomorrow night," father said.

"Well, sometime over the week end I thought you might help me wax the downstairs floors," mother said.

"Can't Edna May do that?" father said.

"She's changed days for me," mother said. "She's coming Friday instead next week and help serve."

"After all!" father said. "It's only Helen Smith. She's just a human being."

"Well, all right," mother said. "All right if you don't care. I'm doing it for your sake."

"For my sake?" father said.

"We don't want them to think we're not getting on, do we?" mother said. "I mean you did graduate with him, didn't you? You want to look successful, don't you?"

"Well, sure," father said. "We are successful. We're darned successful. Look what we have—a nice home, a standing in the community, a darn good job, three fine boys ——"

"Children!" mother said. "Helen and Ray haven't any children. People like that just think children mess up a place."

"Then let 'em!" father yelled. "If they're going to think I'm a failure unless the floors are waxed, let 'em. I've got other plans for the week end."

He stamped down to the basement to mix his paint. Mother started to get Bumps ready for bed.

"Aren't you glad you've got children?" Pud said.

"Of course I'm glad," mother said. "Of course I am."

"Maybe we could go away till after the party," Pud said.

"Silly!" I said. "Where could we go?" Pud acts so young.

"We could put up the pup tent," Pud said.

Mother laughed and hugged him. "You're sweet," she said. "Your hair doesn't gleam and your eyes aren't blue and your fingernails are awful, but I love you, so stick around, won't you?" she said. "I couldn't even have a party if you weren't all here," she said.

"We'll help," I said. "Me and Pud can wax, can't we, Pud?"

It looked like a different house by Thursday night. Mother had baked stuff and she had icebox rolls set and it was so clean all over. And all of the stuff she had carried up to the attic! Rugs we have to keep the good rug from wearing out where we walk all the time, an old stool, two geraniums she was keeping to set out again in the summer, two chairs that me and Pud sit on when we eat, some cushions we have on the sunroom couch, Bumps' kiddie kar and some trucks and a steam shovel that are too big for the toy boxes and a few tobacco cans of my father's and that great big catalogue he has that he likes to look in and send for things because they did when he was a little boy, and a lot of other junk.

"Doesn't it look nice?" mother said.

"Um-hum!" father said. "Like no one lived here. And you look dead. Where'd you put the children?"

"Not out of the way," mother laughed. "Pud and Bumps ate early. They're in bed looking at books. We have to eat in the kitchen. I'm going to bed as soon as I get through with the dishes and get out the linen and dishes for tomorrow. I really think it's going to be nice."

"Yeah," father said. "I wonder if it's worth all the trouble. I still think we could just have had them over for dinner."

"And then the husband could of come too," I said.

"Men don't understand," mother said. "You have your good friends over for dinner. People you want to sit and talk to. People who like your children. People who like you even if your wallpaper is stained. If I wanted to be friends with Ray and Helen and see a lot of them, I'd have them over for dinner so we could talk over old times. This is different, see?"

"Yeah, I see," father said. "It certainly is. But just the same, I like Ray. He was about my best friend at one time. We like the same things. I used to use his darkroom. One summer we had a job together on a pump out at Kandiohi. We had to work shifts. One slept while the other watched the pump to see that everything was O.K."

"Here's an interesting article on what husbands do that makes their wives mad."

"That always makes for a lasting fri ship," mother said. "You get to know other so well sleeping opposite times that."

"Yeah," father said. "He's a nice guy, is."

"You said that," mother said. "M guys ought to be careful who they mar they want to keep their old friends. H Gleason was not ——"

"Yes," father said, "I know. She long fingernails and sand-colored sh Any dope ought to know better than marry into that."

It looked wonderful in the dining ro when we came home from school Fri noon. There were just beautiful flowers the middle of the table and the prett tablecloth we have. And in the sunro another table and more flowers. There a woman cooking and Edna May was dressed up in a white dress and apron a even a little kind of a nurse's cap on.

"You look wonderful," I told her, but said, "Humph!" and looked mad at the in the mirror.

"Do we get some of everything?" I ask mother. "Do we get some of that salad? we get some dessert?"

She was fixing some flowers in the livi room. "I have some nice soup for you a Pud," she said.

"I don't want soup," Pud said. "I wa some of that stuff she's making. I want so ice cream."

"THE ice cream can't be unpacked now mother said. "You'll get some of everythi tonight."

"We want it now," I said. "Why does t company have to have everything? I ha soup."

"Eat your soup like good boys," moth said. "Hilda's putting it up for you. A when you come home from school this afte noon she'll give you some ice cream."

"We don't have school this afternoon," said. "Teachers' meeting."

"Good grief!" mother said. "Eat th soup and let me think!"

Maybe it would have been all right if had been a nice day. But it was rainin Mother took Bumps up on the third floor f his nap because he'd never sleep with all th people talking downstairs. Me and Pud g all cleaned up in our best clothes and we wer going up there too. We were supposed t stay in the other room from Bumps, an mother got us a lot of books and games an comics and paints and crayons, and she sa for us to be quiet as mice so as not to wak Bumps and when he woke up to come dow and get Edna May to take care of him and do it quietly. And then we could come like gentlemen and meet the company so w must keep clean for it. And then there woul be some ice cream for us.

Mother had on her good blue dress an she was doing something to her fingernail and looking at them with her head on on side and we tiptoed upstairs.

Maybe Bumps hadn't ever gone to sleep yet. Or mayb Pud woke him up when he went in there to get a pencil. Any way, Bumps started crying. A first we just let him cry, but then I thought maybe I ought to do something about it so I went in. Bumps screamed harder than ever. There wasn't anything I could do that helped. He has a bed with sides on in his own room, but up on the third floor he was in just an ordinary bed. And I couldn't keep him there. So I thought it would be best to let him get up and I gave him an old coloring book and a great big paintbrush and some liquid paints that come in jars and it worked swell. He sat on the floor in his sleeper and painted purple all over the pages of the book and was good and quiet.

(Continued on Page 154)

THIS MONTH

FLIES* BRING INFECTION DANGER TO EVERY HOME

• Protect your home against disease germs brought by these dangerous Housefly Invaders! Germs carried from neglected garbage pails, public dumps, playgrounds, picnic areas. Fight germs on every surface where flies may deposit them . . . and in all germ "hide-out" cracks and corners throughout your house. Do this the easy "Lysol" way . . .

America's Largest Selling Disinfectant

A CONCENTRATED GERMICIDE

• • •

Used by leading hospitals... recommended by doctors

* Houseflies breed in, feed on, filth . . . may carry, on feet and hairs, germs of more than 30 diseases. Laboratory tests show one fly may bear 5 million bacteria.

Every Day... Fight Germs as you clean ...with potent

"Lysol" Brand Disinfectant

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Product of Lehn & Fink

OUR GARBAGE PAIL is extra dangerous hot weather. Both flies and germs breed ere! So be sure to empty your garbage ail every day and scrub it out with germ-illing "Lysol"!

YOUR KITCHEN...with its food odors and moisture around plumbing . . . particularly attracts germ-carrying flies. Disinfect your sink, drainboard . . . all kitchen surfaces, regularly . . . with germ-killing "Lysol."

WINDOW SILLS are favorite places for flies and dust to settle in Summer. Keep sills hygienically clean especially in children's rooms and sickrooms. Wipe them off with protective "Lysol" on your cleaning rag.

YOUR BATHROOM calls for hygienic cleanliness at all times, since disease germs often lurk here. Always have germ-killing "Lysol" in the cleaning water, to disinfect floor, tub, toilet.

MPORTANT "LYSOL" CLEANING USES:

Bathroom tub, toilet, basin, walls, floor — kitchen sink, drainboards, garbage pail. • Laundry tubs and washers — closets, cellars, stairs, storerooms, shelves. • All woodwork, floors, walls, doorknobs, rails — children's rooms and furniture; diaper pail. • Sickrooms, including bedding, utensils and linen — cleaning rags, mops, brooms, brushes.

LITTLE LULU

"Look, Mister, Kleenex jumps up, too!"*

Little Lulu says... Only Kleenex has the Serv-a-Tissue Box—pull just one double tissue—up pops another! Compare tissues, compare boxes—you'll see why Kleenex is America's favorite tissue.

© International Cellucotton Products Co. *T. M. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

(Continued from Page 152)

Pud and I were painting. We had great big sheets of paper and we were painting farms and I didn't notice Bumps was gone till all of a sudden it seemed so quiet.

"Hey, where's Bumps?" I yelled.

"He musta gone down," Pud said.

We dropped our paintbrushes and ran. It's a wonder we didn't fall sooner, because Bumps had taken the jar of purple paint with him and it was spilled all over. But anyway Pud did fall at the top of the second-floor steps. Bumps had spilled quite a lot right there in the hall and Pud slipped.

Most times I'd of been looking at Pud at a time like that. It's pretty terrible to fall at the top of the stairs. But something worse was happening downstairs.

Mother had just let someone in and was bringing them upstairs. I knew it was the lady because mother said, "Helen, dear, it's wonderful to see you again!"

AND on the landing was Bumps painting the new yellow walls purple, and his sleeper and his face were purple too. It was a mess! It wasn't only the purple paint splashed every place and Bumps screaming like mad because Pud had knocked him over. Or mother, white-faced and trying to see if Bumps was hurt and and trying to comfort him. But Pud wasn't crying. He was sitting very still on the landing and not crying. It was the first time I ever saw Pud get hurt and not cry.

It scared me. He just sat there with his face in his hands facing downstairs. The lady looked scared too. I started running downstairs.

"Are you hurt, Pud?" I yelled. "Hey, mother!" I yelled. "Pud's hurt!"

His hands were all blood. His face was bloody. The lady stooped down.

"It's only a nosebleed," she said, and her voice was soft and quiet. She pulled a handkerchief out of her bag and started to wipe his face. She had on a green suit with an awful pretty yellow blouse. Blood got on the blouse. "It's only a nosebleed," she said. "Get a wet cloth," she told me and I ran up to the bathroom to get one.

Mother had been working for a couple of weeks to get ready for that lady. We'd been tiptoeing around the house. We'd moved out a lot of stuff. We'd done all that painting. We'd had it looking about as slick as a house can look. It had sure been ready for a party. Even a party for a swell lady like that. And now look at it. Purple paint all over the walls, blood all over the steps and the lady. And the baby that mother had meant to show off after his nap when he was fresh and rosy and in his new white suit, with a big black-and-blue bump over his eye and a scratch on his cheek and all purple paint and in his sleeper. I was thinking all that while I was wetting the cloth in the bathroom. If only the lady hadn't come first so she'd seen all the mess. She would have to come early!

I gave the cloth to the lady.

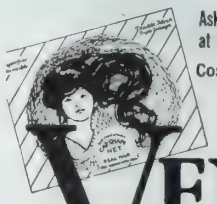
"Get another one for the baby's head," she told me, and she was helping Pud with his nosebleed, having him lie back on the landing.

Mother looked stunned. She didn't seem to be able to move, except to rock Bumps back and forth a little bit. I got another cloth. The lady put it on Bumps' head and looked at Pud.

"It's stopping," she said. "Now," she said, "let's get at that wall. It's water-soluble paint, isn't it? Just put on? I can mix up a little and cover that in no time. Before anyone comes. It won't be dry, but it'll be better than it is now, and it's that side of the landing away from the railing. No one will brush against it there. You get the children back where they belong," she said to mother, "and I'll fix the wall. You must have some left over," she said to me. "Come on, show me where it is."

"O.K.," I said. "In the basement."

We started down the steps and mother came too. "Oh, you can't!" she said. "You'll just get your hands all ——"



And that was all she said because she was staring at the lady's hands. I looked too. Good gosh, they weren't pretty hands at all! Her fingernails weren't long and polished.

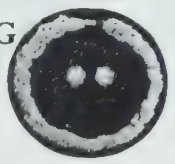
HAIR NETS and RIBBON Go Together

—says Drucella Lowe Fashion Director of the RIBBON GUILD

"Whether hair is worn long or short, soft curls look prettier with a perky ribbon bow over a Venida Hair Net." Venida—the invisible net hand made of fine human hair, in 9 shades to match precisely.

Ask for the familiar "Venida Girl" envelope at your favorite notion or drug counter.
Costs less because it lasts long.
20¢ White, gray, purple 25¢
Single or double mesh

VENIDA
The Guaranteed HAIR NET
"rules the waves"



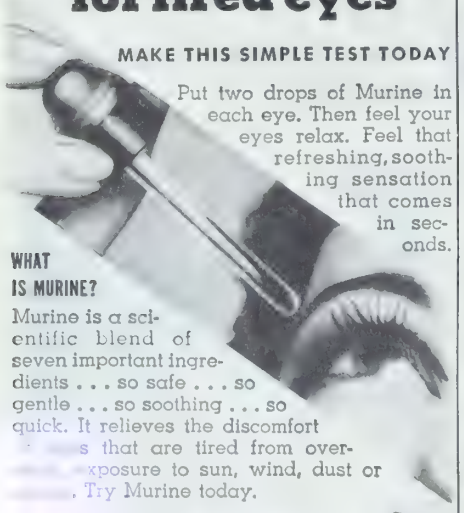
FAMOUS VENIDA HAIR BEAUTY AIDS BY RIESER CO., N.Y.

Rinse Hair Off Legs IN 5 MINUTES

. . . without rubbing or risk of bristly razor-stubble!

Now—without risk of cutting, without razor-stubble—you can rinse hair off in normally 5 minutes flat. New cream with Lanolin does the trick. Leaves skin smoother, sleeker. Keeps it free from hair a longer time by removing it closer to the follicle. Ask today for new Neet Cream Hair Remover at drug or cosmetic counters.

PARIS IS WEARING WHITE SHELL JEWELRY



This unique set of attractive White Shell Jewelry, made up of hundreds of tiny, delicate shells in the latest Parisian choker style, as illustrated, is available to you direct from the exporters in the South Pacific.

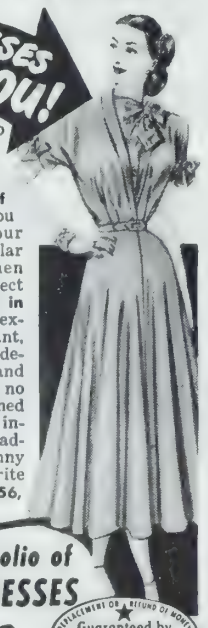
We will forward, by first outgoing Surface Mail, the set illustrated, comprising a roped necklet, with screw earrings to match, plus one 60 inch string. Send $3 for one set or $5 for two sets. Please print name and address clearly.

ROTARY (S.I.) LTD.
P.O. BOX 178. Wellington, NEW ZEALAND

You can get QUICK RELIEF for tired eyes

MAKE THIS SIMPLE TEST TODAY

Put two drops of Murine in each eye. Then feel your eyes relax. Feel that refreshing, soothing sensation that comes in seconds.



WHAT IS MURINE?

Murine is a scientific blend of seven important ingredients . . . so safe . . . so gentle . . . so soothing . . . so quick. It relieves the discomfort of eyes that are tired from overexposure to sun, wind, dust or smoke. Try Murine today.

MURINE FOR YOUR EYES

EARN UP TO $23 WEEKLY

LOVELY DRESSES GIVEN TO YOU!

Ladies, here's your chance to earn up to $23 weekly! And besides, take your pick of dozens of gorgeous Fall dresses — without a penny of cost. That's what we offer you for representing us in your spare time. Show our popular frocks to your friends, then send us their orders. Collect handsome cash commissions in advance. No canvassing or experience necessary. Pleasant, dignified business. Get free details of this unusual offer and Portfolio of new styles. Send no money. Everything furnished FREE. Lovely fabric samples included. Rush your name, address and dress size on a penny postcard. No obligation. Write Fashion Frocks, Desk A 2056, Cincinnati 25, Ohio.

Get the FREE Portfolio of LATEST FALL DRESSES as low as $3.98

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

SELL CHRISTMAS CARDS LOW COST—HIGH PROFIT

Up to 100% profit. Show top quality new 21-card $1.00 Christmas assortments. Novel Christmas Carol, Panorama, Gift Wrapping boxes. Others 30c up. Send at once for FREE SAMPLES personal cards—including special line name imprinted in silver, FREE STATIONERY SAMPLES and feature Christmas samples on approval. Special Offers. Cash bonus.

FREE SAMPLES 50 for $1.00 PERSONALS

NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS, North Abington 205, Mass.

NEW, DIFFERENT, EXCLUSIVE
Sell CHRISTMAS CARDS $1
SO WITH NAME IMPRINTED
Pen-'n-Brush STUDIOS

EARN EXTRA $$$ NEW BONUS PLAN earns you up to and OVER 100% PROFIT

Compare our 21-folder "Champion" Cheerio Ass't, sells for $1, sent on approval, no investment. Also new Christmas Carol Ass't with music; 3-fold Seniors' Religious, Gift wraps; De Luxe Personal Albums; Birthdays, etc. New Candlette decorations everybody buys. Full line personal stationery. Get FREE SAMPLES Religious imprints and other extra-profit imprint lines. Write today. DEPT. L-8, PEN-'N-BRUSH STUDIOS, 154 Nassau Street, New York 7, N. Y.

NOW—Save Money with Q-TIPS
NEW, FAMILY-SIZE
ECONOMY PACKAGE

240 Q-TIPS 480 SWABS
ONLY 98¢
—AT ALL STORES

FRAGRANCE OF YOUTH . . .

April Showers

39¢

Plus tax

Her hands weren't white. They were kind of red with paint marks on them.

The lady put her hands up and looked at them and laughed. "I couldn't get all the paint off," she said. "That house we got's a mess. I painted woodwork all morning."

That lady was wonderful. She fixed that wall in nothing flat. She wiped up what she spilled. She got Pud on his feet and smiling. All while mother washed Bumps and put him to bed again. The purple didn't show on the wall. Then she went in the bathroom and took off her blouse. She put on her jacket and buttoned it up to her neck. She looked even prettier than when she'd had it open.

When I came up from carrying the paint stuff down in the basement everything looked fine. Bumps was asleep. Pud was working a puzzle in the attic. And the ladies had started to come to the party.

I love to look at mother's friends. There were lots of ladies that day with new fall suits. They had pretty blouses, too, some with sparkly things on them and some that were wool and some that were silk. They all spoke to me and asked me about my school and my music lessons and my brothers and they all kept looking at the lady out of the corner of their eyes all the time they were talking. Mrs. Smith, I mean. She certainly looked pretty. Nobody could have guessed that a few minutes before she had been painting our wall in a bloody blouse. When I went upstairs to stay with Pud the ladies had all buttoned their suit jackets up to their necks and the pretty blouses didn't show.

That evening mother was humming and putting warmed-up deviled crab on the table when father came sneaking in the back way.

The lantern carrier should go ahead.

"Back to normal?" he said. "How'd it go? Did you impress her to pieces?"

"Almost," mother said. She arranged the flowers in the middle of the table and put father's napkin by his place. She stepped back and looked the table over, still humming. "It was fine," she said. "Sit down, everyone. We're ready. You're not doing anything Tuesday, are you?" she said, tying Bumps' bib. "I've invited Ray and Helen over for dinner."

Father dropped his napkin ring on the floor. "Huh!" he said. "With the family?"

"Sure," mother said. "With both families. Why didn't you tell me they were getting a child?"

"Ray and Helen?" father said. "What do you mean they're getting a child? When?"

"Tomorrow," mother said. "Put your spoon in the other hand, Bumpsy, dear."

"What!" father said.

"A child," mother said. "You know, like in high chairs?"

"Tomorrow?" father said. "How can they?"

"I don't know," mother said. "They're adopting it. It's a relative—I didn't quite get just how it happened. You didn't know?"

"No, I didn't know," father said. He wasn't eating. He kept looking at mother. "You mean you stopped hating her because of that?" he said. "Lots and lots of nice people don't have children."

"How you talk!" mother said. "Stopped hating her, indeed! Helen is one of my oldest friends. We went to school together, remember? We dissected frogs together and rode the same streetcar. On the same shift. We have a lot in common. I expect we'll enjoy the Smiths very much."

Father was still looking at mother from under his eyebrows. Like he was very confused.

So I thought I'd help him. "Her hands aren't a bit pretty," I said. "Red and two broken fingernails. And green paint in some places."

Father smoothed his napkin out in his lap very carefully. "You can tell a lot about people by their hands," he said real slow.

THE END

ON'T SHOUT!"

y Beltone Receiver, the orld's Smallest, Delivers
6 Times More Clear Power

ere's new hearing clarity—with far e sound intensity than before! And lly new hearing comfort—millions now hear with power turned way
n. No buzzing, no hollow sounds.
one—with Magic Silver Circuit—new standard of lifelike hearing.

REE Get free booklet of amazing post-war facts on deafness. Plain wrapper—no obligation. Mail coupon ltone—World's Hearing Headquarters.

Beltone FOREMOST ONE-UNIT HEARING AID

ltone Hearing Aid Co., Dept. LHJ-8
50 W. 19th Street, Chicago 8, Illinois lease send me without cost or obligation, e new FREE Booklet of facts about EAFNESS and How to Overcome It.

ame .....
ddress .....
own .....State.....

RELIEVE PAIN INSTANTLY
COMBAT INFECTION from minor CUTS
WITH SOOTHING CAMPHO-PHENIQUE

Use this modern, stainless antiseptic for relief of all minor Cuts, Burns, Scratches, Skin Abrasions

Avoid nasty infections from little skin injuries. Quick! apply soothing Campho-Phenique. It stops pain—instantly. Kills many germs on contact. Aids healing by combating infection. Use Campho-Phenique also to relieve cold sores, fever blisters, itchy insect bites. Many doctors, dentists and nurses prefer this famous liquid antiseptic. So do children. It does not smart or sting . . . and it's stainless! Recommended over 50 years. Get it now.

CAMPHO-PHENIQUE
(pronounced Cam-fo-fi-neek)
THE ANTISEPTIC THAT RELIEVES PAIN INSTANTLY

MAKE $25 or more quickly and easily, in spare time, showing beautiful, name-imprinted Writewell Christmas Cards, Stationery, Gift-Wrappings, etc. Costs nothing to try. Samples on approval.
WRITEWELL CO., 303 Transit Bldg., Boston 15.

MATERNITY DRESSES WRITE FOR CATALOG
Advance Styles
Smart, youthful styles for Morning, Street or Afternoon. Also Maternity Corsets & Lingerie.
CRAWFORD'S, Dept. A, 729 Balt. Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

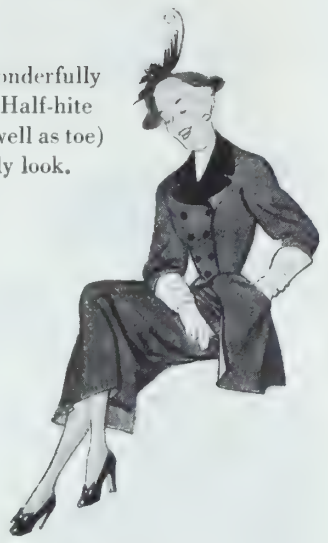
DEVELOPED ROLLS PRINTED
WATLAND BROTHERS
GIANT SIZE QUALITY PRINTS
8 EXPOSURES 40¢
12 EXPOSURES 55¢
16 EXPOSURES 70¢
Camera Shops
DEPT. A BLUE ISLAND, ILL.

Fast Way to MAKE MONEY!
Sell Christmas Cards
IT'S EASY! Just show friends stunning NAME-IMPRINTED cards low as 50 for $1. Make BIG PROFITS with $2.50 NAME IN SILVER line. Make up to 50¢ a box on gorgeous 21-card $1 De-Luxe box. Sell also Secret Pal, Religious, Kiddy, Etch-tone, Relative, Gift Wraps, Everyday and Stationery boxes. WRITE NOW for 21 card box on approval and FREE imprint samples.
MIDWEST CARD CO., 415 N. 8th St., Dept. 5-G, St. Louis 1, Mo.
50 for $1 With Name
GET FREE Samples

PAIN, CALLOUSES HERE?

If you suffer from tired, aching feet or pains, cramps, callouses or burning feeling at the ball of your foot, Dr. Scholl's Metatarsal Arch Supports and exercise will give you quick relief. Thin, light, flexible, adjustable. So scientifically designed, they feel as if they were molded to your feet. At Shoe, Department Stores and Dr. Scholl Foot Comfort Shops in principal cities. For FREE Foot Booklet and address of local dealer, write Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Department ASK, Chicago, Ill.

Dr Scholl's ARCH SUPPORTS



LAVORIS
MOUTHWASH AND GARGLE
Spicy Cinnamon - Clove Flavor
If You Want a Clean Mouth and Pleasant Breath—
Lavoris is for you
DETACHES AND REMOVES GERM-HARBORING FILM FROM MOUTH AND THROAT

THERE IS NO SUBSTITUTE FOR MOUTH CLEANLINESS

Happy-go-heels . . .
a street suede on the wonderfully easy-going Walk-Over Half-hite heel. Cut-out bow (as well as toe) give it a light and lively look. Black and brown.

Pretty Suedes

pretty sweet..you'll turn all heads on the street

Strap-dash . . .
the merest shell of a shoe . . . latticed with interrupting straps in a nice, high-handed way. Superb with everything, from silks to suits. The famous "Sally" by Walk-Over. Black and colors.

Instep excitement . . . demure but devastating little sling back, sleekly moulded to diminish your foot size. Perfect with swish-and-billow skirts. Black only.

Walk-Over

Walk-Over prices from $12.95
Geo. E. Keith Company
Brockton 63, Mass.

THE ROODS' PROMISED LAND

(Continued from Page 124)

"There's nothing exceptional about me as a farmer," he recently told a guest in his house. "I'm just a middling good farmer. If I hadn't taken my work with Extension and if Extension hadn't okayed the loan, we'd be back where we were in 1938. It was a great day for me."

Some of his neighbors missed the same boat; half of them are still tenants.

Both Vera and Henry show their gratitude by continuing to work closely with Extension. Recently she has undertaken two projects—"Breakfast a Family Affair" and "Laundry Conveniences"—under Elizabeth Hornung, the home extension agent at Wahoo, among a dozen of her neighbors. Henry is noted for his zeal in terracing and contour plowing.

When the Roods moved into their present home it seemed sumptuous to them by contrast with their former abode. Its eight rooms allow a separate bedroom for each of the children (though little Deanna usually prefers to sleep with Norma, especially in winter; in her own bed she keeps her dolls). It is a white, square, solid structure, with large basement and attic and three large porches trimmed with brick.

"But it needed a lot," says Vera, "and it still does. We spent $170 to wire it for electricity the second year; we'd been using lamps and candles. And for five years we carried water in buckets from the pump till we piped the water into the house in 1945."

A gleam comes into Vera's eyes when she thinks of the next three steps: a remodeled kitchen, a new bathroom, a hot-water heater. She already has her new shiny white refrigerator and a shiny white electric range to match. Now she wants white metal shelves and cabinets in her kitchen, and a stainless-steel sink, and a new window over the sink. And she has finally decided to get rid of the twenty-year-old kitchen range.

"I've stuffed enough corncobs into that stove to last a lifetime," she says. "I'll miss it, but I'm gradually getting acquainted with the electric range."

Vera expects to spend about $1100 on her kitchen, but she won't be too surprised if it costs more. So far they can't even get an estimate on the bathroom. There's a bathroom of sorts in the basement, but it freezes in the cold months, no matter how they try to drain and warm it at night. So they still rely heavily on the portable tub in the kitchen and on the well-built two-holer seventy feet behind the house at the other end of a concrete sidewalk.

This is an unusually sumptuous two-holer, more commodious than most. It is lathed and plastered, and has two large windo and stands on a concrete foundation. N it is the new septic tank they installe 1945. This will be connected to the new b room on the porch behind the kitchen, w and if.

But gradually the Roods realize the run into a log jam on remodeling and provements. They aren't the only farm who want to remodel their kitchens and stall bathrooms. It is difficult to lure penters and plumbers out into the cour for such work. They have all the work t want to do right in town. The Roods' g income for 1947 wasn't far above the aver gross income of $11,300 across the Miss River in Iowa. Most of those farmers w new bathrooms, too, and can't get th Many thousands are competing for them

"Maybe we could tempt a carpenter plumber with a quarter of beef," says on their friends ruefully.

They don't want to dicker with an Om contractor to send out workmen the fo miles. "We'd have to buy the equipm through him too." This would be dislo they feel, to their friends in Wahoo.

All four of the Rood children have trud toward education down the C. & N. W. sin track that bisects the mile-square sectio land, to the white one-room country sch house of District 64. The Rood farm is northwestern quarter of this square m the schoolhouse is cater-cornered at southeastern tip, within sight of Do rented 40 acres. In bad weather that r road track is a godsend.

Now that Don and Marj have gone on Wahoo High, the two remaining Roods m up one sixth of the student body of twe boys and girls. Of the other ten, four brothers and sisters from one family. Thi pretty Georgia Ruzicka's second year teaching all eight grades, and it's been lark. She's quitting this summer to ma a young farmer on the other side of Wah and can't keep her wedding out of thoughts. She has taught all three Ro daughters.

This is the last hour of school on Frid afternoon, and the pupils are devotin weekly period to the pursuit of art. With five older children on one side of the roo on low seats huddled around a low ta against the wall, heads bent low, is Nor the oldest pupil. They are painting sm ready-made plaster figures of animals bright, metallic colors, and quietly absorb at it too.

On the other side of the room with seven younger pupils is Deanna, sharing

How the Roods Spend Their Money

Note: This table of annual expenses and savings is based on a net income (estimated) of $9333 a year. Rood admits he's a $10,000-a-year man, with his 1947 gross income of $14,000.

Church and charity	$385.00
Electricity and telephone	85.00
Medical	280.00
Food	660.00
Clothing	322.00
Car upkeep	233.00
Insurance	164.00
Fuel	35.00
Books, magazines and newspapers	40.00
Recreation and gifts	209.00
Taxes	1533.00
Miscellaneous household operation	83.00
Household equipment	533.00
Total	$4562.00
Capital investments	2530.00
Savings	2241.00

5.3% of American families have incomes of $6000–$10,000 a year.

Foot-Cooler for HOT DAYS

Let Ice-Mint keep your feet in cool, esh comfort while the temperature oars. So easy to apply this frosty-white nedicated cream — so lasting in its soothing relief. A real help too, in softening stinging callouses and corns. And a grand first-aid for discomfort of sunburn. Don't delay. Get Ice-Mint today at drug and department stores. Also sold in Canada.

school seat and desk with a small boy; animated and mischievous, not too intent at drawing a crayon sketch of a rooster. All eyes are darting toward a visitor today, sitting on a kitchen chair, a self-conscious mother, a two-year-old on her lap, trying to watch her young artist impersonally.

A frieze of cutout paper hens and chicks rims the blackboard. On the rack of the well-scuffed upright piano the music book is open at a Dvořák song. Deanna almost pushes the tow-haired little boy off the seat and scampers out for a drink from the blue-and-white earthenware water cooler, in the anteroom behind the partition. She takes her own cup from a row of tin or enamel cups hanging on hooks identified by red-bordered stickers, each with the name of a pupil.

Her towel also hangs on a labeled hook, [illegible] do her coat and scarf on another, all in a ro[illegible] In the corner stand a shovel, spade, bro[illegible] and two baseball bats, and near the [illegible] bucket are two gloves and a ball, besi[illegible] clutter of tin lunch boxes. On the [illegible] ground beyond the pump is a bobtailed [illegible] ball field, with a big tin home plate. I[illegible] corner are those two small white rural C[illegible] structures, the demure one-holers, [illegible] feet apart, one for the boys and one f[illegible] girls.

When a pupil wants to leave the ro[illegible] doesn't need to raise her hand and a[illegible] mission, as her mother and father di[illegible] day is gone; this younger generation [illegible] another notch of freedom. Freedo[illegible] embarrassment too.

Outdoors against the wall, newly [illegible] stands the brown enameled oil heat[illegible] disguised as a cabinet radio. This la[illegible]th the old black cylinder stove with [illegible]t-black pipe was on the job again, [illegible]y, the ditch is a resultant pile of ashe[illegible]

On a colored chart on the inner [illegible] cupboard door at the back of the sc[illegible] is ruled off, in yellow, red and g[illegible] tangles, the prescribed hour-by-ho[illegible] ulum for Nebraska's rural school[illegible] done well by Don and Marj, if [illegible] typical. But the three rows of d[illegible] spaced to keep the lower, middle [illegible] grades apart; the young girl tea[illegible] grades; the torn shades on the eig[illegible] and the whole Lincoln log-cabin a[illegible] are a far cry from $10,000 incom[illegible] splendors of the consolidated scho[illegible] some miracle Norma and Deann[illegible] and Marj before them, seem to [illegible] as much that sticks to the ribs [illegible] pupils.

After breakfast, with the ch[illegible] school, Vera tackles a chore she [illegible] the washing of the milking mac[illegible] ing is a way of life, and the [illegible] are inextricably interwoven w[illegible] life.

"It takes so long!" she say[illegible] humored despair. "And there a[illegible] and I have to wash them twic[illegible] when we get hot running wa[illegible] to do it in one fifth the time."

For some reason clear only [illegible] thinks she isn't a high-grad[illegible] spoken praise and evidence in [illegible] fill volumes, but that's her [illegible] sticks to it.

"I'm just a plain cook," sh[illegible] who was eating at her table w[illegible] "For instance, the children li[illegible] and I can't make it as good a[illegible] Wahoo. So when we eat ban[illegible] store cake."

Vera is self-effacingly mo[illegible] and her cookies are minor tri[illegible] apple pie (which she makes [illegible] ranks with the banana cake a[illegible] ite. Yet she splurged at a [illegible] plowing exhibition and boug[illegible] once.

"Hers are better," says I[illegible] air of gallantry.

Vera bakes not only pies, c[illegible] ies, but virtually all their sav[illegible] Roods are strictly a fried-c[illegible] except for Henry, who prefer[illegible]

In deference to the rule of [illegible] family needs at least a quart of ir mother's She always try making g one into unches. . . .

y well. The nd children the ingredi-
The whole t once.

ogether 1½ g powder, ½ tmeg and 6 tablespoons r until mix-dlightly and d liquid all ir together for biscuit. -cake pan.

ith a fork ¼ r, 1 teaspoon g and 1 table-Bake 25 min-

Sift together our, ¾ tea-aspoon bak-t. Add ½ cup om tempera-teaspoon va-cup crushed gether until hen stir in 1 ght be added esn't. Drop rt on greased derately hot akes 4 dozen.

back empty.
ou can have.

THE END

DRINK GOLDEN-RIPE CALIFORNIA APRICOTS!

Heart's Delight

WHOLE FRUIT NECTARS

APRICOT · PEACH · PEAR

Think of the joy of drinking luscious California apricots!—That's the new flavor-thrill awaiting you and your family in Heart's Delight Apricot Nectar! It brings the healthful goodness of whole fruit—because it's made from fresh, whole apricots selected especially for nectar use!

NEW MEALTIME VARIETY AND FLAVOR!

Nectar adds a new zest to punches, salads, dressings, sauces, sherbets, desserts. Try the tested recipes on the label. Enjoy Heart's Delight Peach and Pear Nectars, too. Same whole-fruit "Juicidrink" quality!

HEART'S DELIGHT NECTAR FLUFF

Heat 1 cup apricot whole fruit nectar with ¼ cup sugar and few grains salt. Soften 2 teaspoons plain gelatin in 1 tablespoon lemon juice and dissolve in hot nectar. Cool until slightly thickened. Fold in ½ cup pastry cream whipped until stiff. Chill until firm in 1-pint mold. Unmold and garnish as desired. Serves 4.

HEART'S DELIGHT PASTEURIZED PRUNES

SAVE 20 MINUTES COOKING-TIME!

No soaking! No washing! Pre-cooked! So soft that they stew rich and juicy in one-half the usual time. Youngsters eat them like candy—right from the package!

RICHMOND-CHASE COMPANY, San Jose, California

Conversation Piece

The essence of outdoor cooking, as well as eating, is informality. Everyone will want to help—and should. That's all part of the general merrymaking.

BY RUTH MILLS TEAGUE

EVER since we came to live at River Farm I've wanted an outdoor grill—and every year we've planned one. I've had a perfect spot picked out near the pool, with a steep wooded slope at the back and our noisy brook in front. But every spring during the war years the local masons were either busy with more essential work or had actually gone off to the Army—and the grill never got built. Gradually, too, it dawned on me that the spot I'd picked was more xtra-hearty menu for outdoor eating: ham-rger specials, sweet potatoes Hawaiian, ixed green salad, and French bread buttered nd popped into a warm oven until heated.

(Continued on Page 162)

ream tart, a luscious and fairly rich, heavy, windup for an outdoor meal.

PHOTOS BY ST

Outdoor cooking calls for a good dose of advance brainwork. This is insurance against last-minute confusion.

ked I remove the cheesecloth, rim with white of egg and return to the oven for a few minutes to take cinnamon apples, peel and enly sized apples and cut in half se. Boil the halves until tender up made of ⅔ cup sugar, ½ cup red ion drops, 1 cup water and 3 table- lemon juice. Cook a few at a time, hen they are done transfer carefully pancake turner to a flat-bottomed If you crowd the pot you're apt to the apples when you move them. all are cooked, pour the remaining over them, cool and put in refriger- Do this the day before.

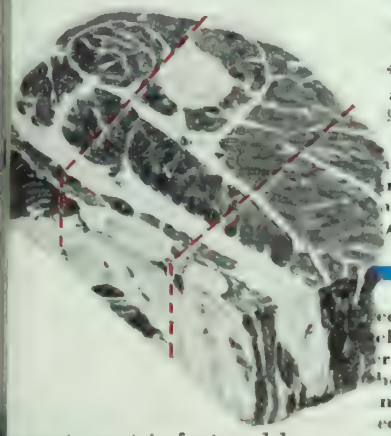
lling. This recipe will fill a deep 10-inch t. In the top of a double boiler scald cups milk. Mix ¾ cup sugar, ½ tea- on salt and 7 tablespoons cornstarch to- her. Blend to a smooth paste with ½ cold milk. Add scalded milk gradually. ok over hot water until thick, stirring stantly. Continue cooking until no e of cornstarch remains. Add corn- rch mixture gradually to 3 well-beaten yolks. Return to double boiler and ook 2 or 3 minutes, stirring constantly. emove from heat and stir in 3 table- poons butter or margarine, 3 teaspoons anilla, 1 cup broken nut meats, and 1 envelope unflavored gelatin which has been softened in ¼ cup cold water. Stir until gelatin is dissolved and cool as quickly as possible by setting pan in cold water. Stir occasionally during cooling, scraping sides and bottom of pan so that mixture won't congeal. Cut ½ pound dates into small pieces—I use scissors for this—and whip 1 cup heavy cream. When pudding is cool, fold in whipped cream; and now we're ready to fill the shell.

Put in about half the filling and cover with the chopped dates. The dates taste wonderful, but they wouldn't look pretty mixed with the filling, and that's why we're hiding them. Spoon in the rest of the pudding, or almost as much as the shell will hold. The apples will displace some of it, and you must allow for that. If you have any of the filling left—and you may have, because it's difficult for me to judge just how high your pie shell will be—have it for dessert the next day with some chocolate or caramel sauce.



Now to the apples. The sirup you poured over them will have jelled a little, and if it has filled the holes in the apple halves, poke it out. Put one apple half in the center of your tart, cut side up, and press it down until it is even with the top of the filling. Using the same technique, make a ring of apple halves around the center one. As you press, the filling will rise up through the holes in the apples and look very pretty. If there's room for it you can add a little more filling here and there, but be careful not to get it on the apples. Chill in refrigerator until ready to serve.

When I serve apple cream tart, I bake the crust, prepare the cinnamon apples, cut the dates and break up the nut meats the day before, but I make the filling and put it in the crust as early as possible on the morning of the party. It's such a delicious dessert and it's worth that much far-from-last-minute effort.

errice. The kitchen work involved in the reparation of this meal is really easy, and ou'll be free to spend as much time as you eed to make your out-of-doors arrangements omplete. As I said, this is manageable food, oth for cooking and for serving, but it won't anage itself. You're the boss, and you'll need have everything under control. When you your guests are gathered around the fire g fun—it is no time to remember what ot. Maybe that hasn't happened to me, but has happened to me, and I don't Engineering a smooth-running party is a real challenge to ingenuity, but it's gratifying might on and come off with me e's how it's done . . .

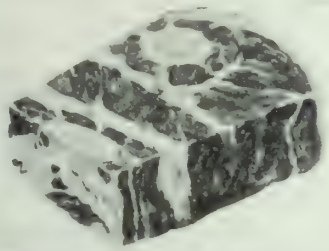
E CHILDREN



sh," said our seven- l continued, "but I sing."

a very good house— king."

don't have grand- mmies miss a lot of nd they don't have others and fathers."

ATHRYN COFFEY GLENNON.

Pot Roast. Cut a piece from the center to roast. This gives you a nice, chunky piece cook and carve well.

Swiss Steaks. With a sharp knife, and a saucer ler your hand for safety, you can easily split the haining piece to make two attractive Swiss steaks.

en pot roast is featured by your et a thicker-than-usual round bone. P- ar in m for es d : .

Beef Stew. At home, cut a piece off the divide it into uniform cubes. You co better boneless beef stew meat.

to be as good with Meat

Spreading ham, or other cold cuts, with Best Foods or Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise mixed with Best Foods Mustard-with-Horseradish is an idea born in gourmet's heaven. This delicious mayonnaise has no sissy sweetness. Not just "salad dressing," it's real mayonnaise.

as it is with Potatoes

A potato salad ring browned in the oven is a treat—especially when served with lots of Best Foods or Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise. This famous mayonnaise contains no starchy filler. It's flavor-rich with freshly broken eggs, added egg yolks, "Fresh-Press" salad oil, mild vinegar, and spices. It's real mayonnaise!

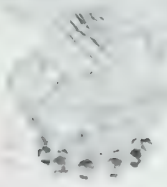
make sure it's

BEST FOODS

OR

HELLMANN'S

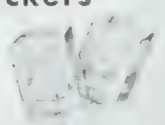
Real Mayonnaise



AMERICA'S LARGEST-SELLING MAYONNAISE

Thirst Quenchers

NO MATTER how hot it gets, you can keep your family refreshed. Here's how . . . take a 5¢ package of Kool-Aid. Make a big, two-quart pitcher of delicious, cooling, full-flavored beverage. Keep it handy in the refrigerator. Serve refreshing Kool-Aid whenever thirst calls. Enjoy all SIX of Kool-Aid's zestful, tangy flavors.



Frozen Desserts

1 package Kool-Aid (any flavor); 1 cup heavy cream; 2 cups milk; 1 cup sugar

(1) Dissolve Kool-Aid and sugar in milk; turn into freezing tray and freeze ¾ to 1 hour (until slushy). (2) Whip cream (well chilled) until stiff. (3) Add partly frozen Kool-Aid mixture to whipped cream and whip just enough to mix well, but keep as cold as possible. (4) Return quickly to freezing tray and freeze at coldest point. Requires no more stirring. When frozen, set control back to normal. Makes over 1 quart. If desired lighter, beat 2 egg whites fluffy with 2 tablespoons sugar and fold into above mixture before final freezing.

Frozen Suckers

No wonder children have made Kool-Aid Frozen Suckers their favorite. They know that only Kool-Aid gives them that taste-satisfying, home-made goodness that hits the spot.

SIX FLAVORS
KOOL-AID KID

For this kind of party I've learned to have a good, quiet pre-session with paper and pencil, and I find that it pays fine dividends. With my menu before me I plan when each item of food is to be prepared, and write this down. Then I visualize the party, step by step, exactly as I want it to be, and make a schedule. I write a list of everything I want at the scene of action, from flowers to cooking tools. Once the brainwork is done I can relax in the knowledge that if I follow my schedule and use my lists, there'll be no last-minute confusion to upset my plans.

A few last words and I'm off. The essence of outdoor cooking is informality, and everyone will want to help—and should. That's much of the fun. But if everything ne is ready at hand, at the right moment— result of your planning—the volunteer will fall naturally into a useful though pattern instead of disrupting the proceed And you'll be able to say truthfully, a paper in my little home town used to o social event, "A good time was had by that doesn't mind waiting through these hot August noons. Only they smell—if it's possible—sweeter for the sun.

NOW IS THE BEAUTIFUL MONTH OF AUGUST

(Continued from Page 65)

Each is complete. Each of these beautiful salads is the center of interest and reason for being of all the dishes that surround it. The menu for the luncheon is the salad. You add nothing, unless it's coffee or iced tea or sherbet for cooling off, and there isn't anything you can take away without somehow spoiling that August look, that real summer look.

Fruit and more fruit. This is the most elaborate salad, so should come first. It's definitely party fare. What is known as "important." Has just about everything. And this is the way it's put together. Looks a good deal more formidable than it is; in fact, it's our old friend shrimp all dressed up and ready to go places. Have everything very cold and put it in its place at the last moment. Except potato chips. Heat them up to a second blooming, and the same goes for nuts and such. But not for salad. That's a last-minute lady and comes in fanning herself with her hat, as it were. All set? Let's go.

CURRIED-SHRIMP-AND-MELON SALAD

To 1 pounds shrimp, cooked, shelled and cleaned (or enough canned shrimp to make 1 cups) add 1 cup mayonnaise, 1½ tablespoons grated onion, 2 tablespoons lemon juice, 1½ cups chopped celery and 1½ teaspoons salt. Blend 1½ tablespoons curry powder into 6 tablespoons sour cream. Mix all together. Chill several hours in the refrigerator. The longer, the better—for cold loves salads, and vice versa. Remove the seeds from 3 large honeydew-melon halves. Scoop out balls with the ball cutter and marinate them in an oil-and-lemon-juice French dressing. Scrape out remaining melon down to about ½ inch from rind. Chill the shells. When ready to serve, fill the shells with the curried-shrimp salad. Garnish with salad greens and melon balls marinated in French dressing. Serve with the following accompaniments: chopped cashew or pistachio nuts, grated fresh coconut and chutney. Some will prefer nuts, some the coconut sprinkled over their salads. Some will prefer to eat a bit of chutney along with the salad.

Potato chips are nice with this salad, and so are hot toasted and buttered crackers. And cassava cakes if you can find them.

What is so fine? I suppose that there are few things in the sea—unless it's a few fish I could name—that come anywhere near a lobster. No fish can share his "reflected glory." At home among his fellow citizens, he's only another breadwinner, another fellow with a dinner pail. Besides, he isn't very bright. But when this king and his queen get out of the sea and begin to go places, then they don their scarlet coats and arrive to become of all honored guests the most honored. Such is their compensation for an otherwise drab and colorless existence.

I know of no better eating for an August meal than a lobster salad, served very cold with crusty rolls. And for dessert, I want nothing more substantial than a lime sherbet with iced coffee.

LOBSTER SALAD

Remove the meat from 4 cold boiled lobsters of medium size, saving the fine-looking pieces of claw meat and the coral (if such there be) for garnishing. For the dressing, add 4 hard-cooked-egg yolks, sieved, to ⅔ cup mayonnaise. Thin with ⅓ cup cream. Add ¾ teaspoon grated onion and ¾ teaspoon salt. Mix with the lobster. Fill lettuce cups, place in a salad bowl set in a bowl of cracked ice. Celery hearts are served with and not in this salad.

LIME SHERBET

Squeeze the juice of 6 large limes, and strain. There should be about ¾ cup. Add ½ teaspoon grated lime rind and 1½ cups sugar to 1¾ cups water. Bring to a boil and cook 3 minutes. Sprinkle 1½ teaspoons unflavored gelatin over 2 tablespoons cold water. Let it stand 5 minutes. Add to the hot sirup and stir until it is dissolved. Cool and add the lime juice. Color light green with vegetable coloring. Set up the refrigerator to the coldest position. B-r-r-r! Pour the mixture into a freezing tray. Freeze it to a mush. Beat 2 egg whites with a pinch of salt to a stiff peak. Add ¼ cup sugar a tablespoonful at a time, beating well after each addition. Scrape out the partially frozen sherbet into a chilled bowl. Beat quickly with rotary beater. Don't let it become liquid. Fold in the egg-white meringue quickly. Return to the freezing tray. When half frozen, beat the mixture in the tray with a spoon. Continue freezing until firm. A little lime sirup in each glass is a nice touch, but don't overdo it.

Simple but satisfying. And what now? It's our old friend the "mixed" or "chef" salad. You toss everything up together and see what you get, or you may take some of this and some of that. There's lots to choose from. Better try them all.

> Man is the only animal that blushes, or needs to. —MARK TWAIN.

MIXED SALAD

Cut ¼ pound sliced Swiss cheese, ¼ pound sliced boiled tongue, ¼ pound sliced boiled ham into thin strips. Slice 4 hard-cooked eggs and 1 bunch radishes. Slice ½ cucumber. Cut all the slices into quarters. Cut 2 tomatoes into quarters or eighths, depending on the size. Line a salad bowl with a good bed of crisp assorted greens. Arrange the above ingredients in groups on the greens. Have a good big bowl to begin with, as you're going to toss it at the table with the following dressing: Mash 1 clove garlic to a pulp with 1 teaspoon salt. The salt hurries things up. Add ½ cup salad oil and 1 raw egg. Now beat with a fork. Add 3 tablespoons wine vinegar, 4 anchovies, finely chopped, 2 tablespoons chopped water cress, ¼ teaspoon paprika and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Beat again to blend smooth. The egg gives this dressing body, but it shouldn't be thick.

Peaches are ripe. Driving along, you come across one road stand after another devoted and dedicated to peaches. Nothing else to sell. The whole stock in trade is peaches. And toward night, if you're coming home this way, most of the stock will be gone. But if you're lucky you may get just enough for peach pie and peaches and cream. Or perhaps peach fritters, dumplings, ice cream. All these won't make much of a dent in the crop, but the rest we enjoy next winter.

PEACH PIE

Prepare pastry for 2-crust pie. Line 9-inch pie pan with pastry. Chill while filling is prepared. Slice enough peeled fresh peaches to make 1 quart. Mix 1 tablespoon cornstarch and ½ teaspoon salt with ¾ to 1 cup sugar, depending on the sweetness of the peaches. Mix the dry ingredients with the fruit. Add 1 teaspoon almond extract and mix well. Arrange in the pastry shell. Cut the rest of the pastry into ½- to ¾-inch strips and lay over the top of the peaches in lattice fashion. Seal the lattice strips to the rim with cold water. Crimp the ed Bake in a hot oven, 450° F., 10 minutes. duce the heat to 350° F. and bake 50 m utes longer. During the last 10 minut baking you might brush the lattice st with cream, to give a nice brown. If want a nice brown, and I'm sure you

Speaking of cheese. So long as my mir on that tantalizing cheese salad—and I sure you I'm particularly devoted to ch at the moment—I may as well get going not keep you out here fanning yoursel day while I cultivate the lilies. But c what may, those lilies have got to run sm into the early chrysanthemums, or I'll k the reason why.

But come on in. My, it's cool inside. N let me see—yes, I'll give you "the works, young Phil says. And when you serve you might as well invite me. I'm coming a way, especially if you have nut-bread sa wiches with your salad.

ROQUEFORT-SALAD RING

Sprinkle 2 envelopes unflavored gelatin ½ cup cold water. Let it stand 5 minu Drain the sirup from 1 No. 2 can crus pineapple—and be sure it's really drai Takes a while—like dripping jelly, know—drip, drip—my, but it's slow. enough water to the pineapple sirup make 1 cup of liquid. Bring to a boil. solve gelatin in the hot liquid. Ad tablespoon sugar and 6 tablespoons li juice. Chill until it is the consistency unbeaten egg white. Add the gelatin m ture gradually to 1 package cream che blending smoothly. Then add ¼ pou crumbled bleu or Roquefort cheese. F in the drained crushed pineapple, ½ t spoon grated lime rind and 1 cup he cream, whipped stiff. Tint a delicate gr with vegetable coloring. Pour into a 9-i ring mold. Chill until firm—leave in refrigerator overnight. Unmold on a ch plate and fill the center with sliced fr peaches or apricot halves. Garnish w other fresh fruits.

Dressing: Mix together 1 tablesp sugar, 1 tablespoon cornstarch and a pi of salt. Stir into 1 egg, beaten. Comb with ½ cup orange juice, ½ cup pineap juice and 2 tablespoons lemon juice. Ad little grated lemon rind. Cook the mixt over low heat, stirring constantly u thickened. Chill. Put together with ½ c heavy cream, whipped.

NUT BREAD

Sift together 3⅓ cups cake flour, 4½ t spoons baking powder, 1 teaspoon salt a ½ cup sugar. Stir in 1 cup chopped nu Mix 2 eggs, well beaten, with 1 cup milk a ½ cup melted shortening. Add to the fl mixture, stirring only until well mix Turn into a greased loaf-bread pan, a bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., 1 ho Turn over on a rack and let it cool. Bet make this the day before serving. Slice thin and spread. Make into sandwiches

Then and now. A miserable winter was f lowed by a spring so cold it was no spri just weather, any old weather that was l lying around, that nobody wanted, and w put together with some nonwaterpro stuff.

Then summer took over. She of the lo slung chariot and the lace parasol. Sumn waved her magic wand and what has be happening seems to happen every year. F now it is August again. A long, hot, la month, and make the most of it. Already t days are shorter and the evenings have brooding stillness that whispers, "Good-b summer, good-by, summer, good-b good-by."

And, by the way, the sweet peas are goi great guns.

THE E

I feel that foods packed in glass, are better quality!"

says MRS. ALBERT A. ERNST, 6428 N. TROY STREET
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

"Take baby foods—don't you insist that they be packed in glass jars?"

"I want only the best for little Stevie. And when foods are packed in glass I know they must be good—the packer must be proud of them. Naturally, I also like to see exactly what I'm getting."

"So convenient to heat and store baby foods in the same glass jar"

"To heat, you simply pop the jar into a pan of water. To store leftovers, you just put the jar back in the refrigerator. Saves time and bother."

"Why not buy the best for the whole family?"

"It stands to reason that if glass protection is used for baby foods it must be good for all foods. Whenever there's a choice, I always buy in glass."

WHEN YOU BUY IT IN Duraglas JARS YOU CAN SEE HOW GOOD IT IS!

TRADE MARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Owens-Illinois Glass Company, Toledo 1, Ohio

Make Real Ice Cream EASY AS creamy-rich!

full flavored!

FRESH PEACH ICE CREAM

1 can Ten-B-Low
1 cup water
1 cup crushed sweetened Peaches*
2 teaspoons vanilla

A CAN MAKES A QUART

A Set refrigerator controls at coldest temperature. Place Ten-B-Low in mixing bowl and gradually add 1 cup water and 2 teaspoons vanilla. Mix thoroughly. Transfer to freezing tray of refrigerator and freeze until completely frozen.

B Spoon frozen Ten-B-Low into mixing bowl. Whip until slightly softer than creamy mashed potatoes. Stir in crushed, sweetened peaches.* You need add only water and flavoring to Ten-B-Low because each can contains all the sugar, heavier-than-whipping cream, milk and egg yolks you need for extra-rich ice cream.

C Return to freezing tray and freeze. That's all there is to it—nothing to add but flavoring and the water we've removed! Ten-B-Low is NOT a powder, NOT a so-called "mix", NOT a gelatin, but a genuine ice cream in heavy concentrated form. Get several cans of Ten-B-Low today!

*Any fresh, frozen or canned fruit may be substituted for peaches in above recipe.

There are so many wonderful flavor combinations that go with Ten-B-Low. For a free recipe folder, drop a card to Sally Ross, Ten-B-Low Company, Dept. S, Columbus 16, Ohio.

also available in jars in some localities

Ten-B-Low
CONCENTRATED REAL ICE CREAM

KITCHEN ON THE FARM

(Continued from Page 132)

and then she followed the instructions that came with the new one and was delighted with her results.

The Roods have ordered new double windows—wider for more sun and air and to give the cook that lift of the spirit that comes with a view of woods and sky and rolling fields. These windows will be set higher than the old ones so the sill will come above counter height. Next, an electric water heater will be installed in the basement, and a coal-burning room heater will take over the heating of the kitchen in winter in place of the corn-fed stove.

At this point, Mrs. Rood confessed she was confused. She couldn't see just how it would work out in the end. When Margaret Davidson, of the JOURNAL staff, arrived at the Rood farmhouse she unpacked a set of kitchen-planning models and tried several possible arrangements, which Mr. Rood and Mrs. Rood both studied. Now they could see how it would look. They selected the plan which fitted their family life best, and the model kitchen will eventually be a life-size reality in that pleasant farmhouse in Nebraska!

The kitchen plan the Roods liked best is L-shaped, with sink at midpoint under the windows. Their refrigerator with the door hinged on the right will go next to the dining-room door; the range fits beside the sink. Mrs. Rood chose a cabinet to the left of the range in preference to a counter between sink and the range, because she had already found that using a range tucked in next to the wall didn't give her elbowroom. Under the high window opening onto the porch, where [illegible] sink formerly was, the table and chair[s] comfortably, convenient for eating and [out] out of the way of the kitchen work.

Tall storage cupboards will go between [the] room heater and table, one for dishes [and] the table, and cleaning supplies in the ot[her]. No more diving to the back porch when [it's] below zero for the mop and broom. The ir[on]ing board comes down from upstairs, [and] and Mr. Rood's farm records have a spac[e in] the built-to-order storage cabinets.

On the floor, a marbled-tan linoleum [will] be used, so the muddy farm boots won't le[ave] too obvious tracks. Mrs. Rood decided o[n a] good inlaid linoleum "because we have [so] much traffic in the kitchen."

On the kitchen sides of the room, she want[s] easy-to-clean wall linoleum, and straigh[t] hanging washable curtains. But to a[dd] homeyness to the room, she decided on [a] gay colorful wallpaper for the wall behi[nd] the eating table. The painting and paperi[ng] will be a family project, after the ba[sic] changes in the kitchen are completed.

I only wish Aunt Tunie and I could dr[op] in on a summer day and visit Mrs. Rood [in] that new kitchen—chicken and fluffy dum[p]lings on the electric range, fresh peach [pie] chilling in the new refrigerator, and plenty [of] conversation at the eating table while t[he] corn cooks just tender.

"I always said living on a farm was t[he] best in the world," Aunt Tunie would sa[y], "but this is as near to heaven as a woma[n] would want!"

WHAT KIND OF HIGH SCHOOL DO YOU WANT?

(Continued from Page 48)

normal conditions, in good jobs immediately on graduation. Other high schools have given their pupils an exceptional command of the facts of American history, or have made them unusually good at mathematics, or have turned large numbers of them into amateur (and sometimes professional) athletes.

It is important, therefore, to consider whether the educational job our high schools are now doing is the job we most want them to do. The fairest test of that job is the kind of boy or girl the schools produce or help to produce. What kinds of young people are our high schools now producing?

Shortly before the war there were a number of large-scale studies of the results of high-school education. Several were state-wide studies—in Maryland, New York, California, Massachusetts. The war itself provided a crucial test of what the high schools had done and had not done for the boys and girls who had been their pupils. Taken together, the conclusions that may fairly be drawn both from the prewar studies and from the experience of the Army and Navy with the young people who came to them as recruits throw a searching light on the work of our schools.

The studies showed that the boys and girls graduating from our high schools had, in general, a fair command of academic subject matter. The graduates were not equally well educated; the schools had let appreciable numbers slip by who, for example, could not read or spell or use arithmetic as well as they needed to, or as well as they could have been taught to if the high schools had given more painstaking attention to deficiencies in these subjects. For the average pupil finishing high school, however, it could be said that he was reasonably well acquainted with books by standard English and American authors—Shakespeare, Scott, Cooper, Poe, and others; that he was much better versed in the facts of American history and the operations of our national Government than are the great majority of adult citizens; that he knew a good deal about elementary science; that he had learned the rules of personal hygiene. Depending on the special courses he had chosen, he might be expected to have other more or less formal accomplishments to his credit—acquaintance with the rudiments of a foreign language, for example, or some facility [in] mathematics beyond arithmetic, or a sp[e]cialized vocational skill.

In addition, the schools (elementary as we[ll] as secondary) had helped directly or ind[i]rectly to equip their pupils with a conside[r]able number of nonacademic interests an[d] habits. Most high-school graduates ha[d] formed the habit of reading a good dea[l] chiefly in newspapers and the lighter maga[-]zines. At the time they left school, they wer[e] likely to be at least superficially acquainte[d] with current national and internationa[l] events. They had formed reasonably clea[r] notions of the rights and privileges of citizen[s] in a democracy. They had become habitua[l] movie-goers and listeners to the radio. The[y] had developed a great variety of individua[l] hobbies. They had come to the conclusio[n] that the most important thing about schoo[l] work was the help it would give them in get[-]ting a job or going on to a better one, and[d] that they intended to continue with school o[r] college if and when they could. And in the[ir] main they had either become or continued to[o] be good-humored, well adjusted emotionally, pleasant in their relationships with one an-other, and somewhat more democratic in those relationships than most adults outside the schools.

Obviously not all these results came from the work of the schools alone. The nonacademic interests and habits of young people, in particular, had clearly been influenced by their homes, their experience with church and Sunday school, newspapers and magazines, radio and the movies, and their day-by-day association with adults and with one another.

Whether the results which the studies showed had been brought about or merely confirmed by the schools, it is noticeable that many of those results were good. The war provided a four-year test of some of them. We can certainly be proud of schools which gave their pupils the fundamental tools of learning, and the confidence in their ability to learn, that enabled a citizen Army and Navy to master the most complex military machinery the world has ever known. We can be proud of the schools' contribution to the resourcefulness, the initiative, the determination and the willingness to take responsibility that were shown by American soldiers and sailors of every rank. We can be proud of the schools for having encouraged the good humor, friendliness and decent human fellowship that characterized Americans in uniform all over the world.

Nevertheless, beyond the academic knowledge and skills that our high schools have given their pupils, and beyond the nonacademic attitudes and interests that they have produced or encouraged, there are important items of knowledge or skill or point of view which many of our schools have not yet touched. The prewar studies showed some of the lacks in high-school education. Wartime experience brought a number of them into clear relief.

Boys and girls graduating from high school were found, for example, to have no strong sense of their responsibilities as citizens. Faced with peacetime situations that called for some individual sacrifice in behalf of the common good (sacrifice of comfort, or freedom of action, or personal convenience), they preferred to "let George do it," or "not to stick their necks out." For many, the overwhelming challenge of the war obviously overcame these attitudes, but it can hardly have overcome them completely.

Again, the high-school graduates had little notion of how or where they might lend a hand in behalf of any common good. They knew little about the problems facing their own towns and cities—problems growing out of bad housing, for instance, or changes in industrial opportunities, or municipal debt, or a need for improvement in public health. As to state and national problems, though they were familiar with "names in the news" they seldom had any real grasp of the important issues or programs lying behind the names. It was their ignorance on this latter score that led members of the Army and Navy command, and many civilian observers, to doubt that the millions of recruits had any clear idea of what they were fighting for.

Also, the majority of the boys and girls graduating from high school, even of those who were not going on to college, had left school without having acquired any usable vocational skills. The peacetime studies brought out this fact; the wartime need for trained specialists emphasized it heavily. The Army, for example, found most high-school graduates to be what it called "basics"—young people with some general education, able and willing to learn, but having had no sort of training that would equip them any better for one kind of job than for another. The armed forces had to work from the ground up with such youngsters. So must peacetime industry. And the prewar studies showed that for peacetime employment these boys and girls were at a further disadvantage. Not merely had they mastered no marketable vocational skills; they knew little or nothing about working at an adult job. They had had no opportunity to discover the kinds of work at which they were most likely to be successful; they did not know where or how to look for jobs; they had no clear idea of how to get ahead in the jobs they eventually took.

One further fact was underlined during the war: many of the graduates of our high schools are not so healthy as they ought to be. Acquaintance with the rules of personal hygiene obviously does not make up for bad teeth that have not been filled, for the lack of glasses to correct poor vision, for faulty posture, flat feet and plain undernourishment. Few young people possess or need in peacetime the kind of physique that the Army required of its infantry and its paratroopers. Disturbing numbers of young people lack the sound health that is as important for peacetime living as for fighting a war.

This is not the whole of the balance sheet on which the results of our high-school programs need to be added up; other facts have a proper place in any complete accounting. But any such accounting would justify the conclusion which is already sufficiently apparent: Our high schools are for the most part doing only a limited educational job. They are turning out boys and girls who are more or less proficient in academic subject matter, who have learned to get along well with one another, and who think that schooling is a good thing.

In the main this is a bookwork job—one confined to introducing pupils, in appropriate surroundings and with necessary help from a teacher, to the kind of generalized knowledge that can be largely mastered by reading. It is an important job, but as even a brief accounting shows, it leaves too much on the minus side of the ledger.

The ways in which we might take care of some of the important minuses in our present school programs are not matters of mere speculation. There are high schools here and there all over the nation which are already going far beyond proficiency in academic subject matter in the results they achieve with their pupils. What many of these schools have accomplished all our schools can accomplish—if their communities really want them to do so. The methods these schools

Continued on Page 169)

"We have four teen-age daughters."

FOR HOME...OR OFFICE

"Dip pens don't dry up...start instantly" say homemakers who use pen infrequently

$2.00 value . . . only $1.50

New Sanford

DIP PEN DESKETTE

- Iridium tipped Dip Pen
- Inkwell of harmonizing Lustron
- 2 bottles of Penit Ink

Writes a page with a dip

Bargain offer to induce you to try

NEW Penit in INK WELL BOTTLE

New 10c size that holds all the ink you can keep fresh

9 Delicious Colors

- BLUE-BLACK
- WASHABLE BLUE
- ROYAL BLUE
- BLACK
- GREEN
- BROWN
- CARDINAL RED
- DUBONNET
- VIOLET

NOW you can start new with more efficient writing "tools" at a bargain price. We offer the beautiful new $2.00 Sanford Deskette at only $1.50 to induce you to try another Sanford development in writing efficiency—the 100,000-word Ink-Well Bottle. It's the new 10c size that holds ALL THE INK YOU CAN KEEP FRESH.

The Sanford Deskette is designed to start instantly no matter how infrequently used. For home use it saves the "scratch, scratch" with a dry pen point. Even for most office use, management engineers say, "Dip pens save time."

This pen is scientifically balanced and has genuine Iridium tip. The Deskette is streamlined for grace and stability . . . molded of durable, rich walnut-mahogany Lustron. It holds the new Penit Ink-Well bottle bottom up.

Penit Ink writes instantly even after prolonged exposure of the pen. It writes continuously without flooding because it is especially processed to give controlled flow.

Accept bargain price on Sanford Deskette today. Get it for homes and get it for the office . . . at your retailer's.

SANFORD INK COMPANY • Home Office: BELLWOOD, ILL. • New York Office: 500 5th AVE.

Ask for the Sanford Deskette

NEW PINK DREAM AZALEAMUM

600 BLOOMS 1ST YEAR

Amazing, fast-growing plant. Hundreds of blooms August till frost . . . up to 1500, 2nd year . . . 11 other rare colors.

FREE—Garden Book. Write now!

R. M. KELLOGG COMPANY Box 1814, Three Rivers, Mich.

DARWIN 100 TULIPS $3.25 POST PAID IN U.S.

Guaranteed to bloom next Spring.

These are not the usual so-called "Bargain" bulblets. Each bulb about 4-inches around the size of a 50c piece. A choice mixture of all the popular colors. Write for free fall catalog.

Ackerman Nurseries, 17 Lake Street, Bridgman, Mich.

Hamersley WAXED PAPER

THE GREASEPROOF GLASSINE

PROTECTS FOOD!

for Lockers, Freezers, Refrigerators

12 and 20 IN. HOUSEHOLD ROLLS

HAMERSLEY MFG. CO., GARFIELD, N. J.

PULVEX FLEA POWDER

TWO KINDS

WITH 5% DDT . . . for dogs. Kills fleas and lice quick. Keeps fleas off 5-7 days. Many home uses.

OR WITH ROTENONE . . . for cats, dogs. Quickly kills fleas, lice. Kills fleas when put on a single spot. Pre-war formula.

EITHER KIND: 25c & 50c

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

EXTRA CASH! EXTRA CASH!

Arlene HAS MONEY FOR YOU

Sell Arlene's beautiful new California Christmas and Everyday greeting cards. Name imprinted. Lots of profit. Write for free, full-color folder and sample. Don't delay. Send no money.

REAL MONEY NOW!

ARLENE GREETINGS

4618-F Pacific Blvd. Los Angeles, Calif. OR Allendale 12, New Jersey

Solve Your Housing Problem - BUY GLIDER

Glider trailer coaches offer you everything you would want in a home of your own—plus mobility. Every room is equipped with the finest in living comfort. Your Glider dealer has a very liberal time payment plan for your convenience. Write today for the address of your nearest Glider dealer and free literature.

Member TCMA

GRACEFUL AS A BIRD IN FLIGHT

Glider Trailers

GLIDER TRAILER CO.

1826 W. KINZIE • CHICAGO 22, ILL.

MARK EVERYTHING WITH Cash's

12 DOZ. $3.50 6 DOZ. $2.40

WOVEN NAME TAPES

Order from your dealer, or write

CASH'S, South Norwalk 4, Conn.

EARN CASH NOW Sell CHRISTMAS CARDS

Free Samples NAME-IMPRINTED Christmas Cards to show friends. Make quick profits. Five stunning lines, 50 for $1 up, all with name. Sell on sight because richly styled, such big values. No experience. Start making money same day you get free samples.

50 With Name $1

24 Box Assortments, too!

Orders come fast for our Christmas and Everyday Card assortments. Religious, Notes, Humorous, etc. Sensational Gift Wrappings. Amazing values, super-sellers bring you fine profits, up to 50c on $1 easy sale. Full or part time pays. Send for your FREE SAMPLES today.

You Profit Quickly from Big Demand

GENERAL CARD CO., Dept. 210, 1300 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago 7, Ill.

WRITE FOR FREE SAMPLES

Marshall Field, Chicago
Lord & Taylor, New York
J. W. Robinson Co., Los Angeles
L. S. Ayers & Co., Indianapolis
Neiman-Marcus, Dallas
Frederick & Nelson, Seattle
Hartfield's, Kansas City
The Halle Bros. Co., Cleveland
Kaufmann's, Pittsburgh
The Blum Store, Philadelphia
Hutzler Bros., Baltimore
Davison-Paxon Co., Atlanta
John Shillito Co., Cincinnati
Frank R. Jelleff, Inc., Washington
Miller Bros. Co., Chattanooga
R. E. Cox, Ft. Worth
Scruggs-Vandervoort-Barney, St. Louis
The Dayton Co., Minneapolis
H. Liebes & Company, San Francisco
Dickson & Ives, Orlando
Levy Bros. Dry Goods, Houston
Smartwear Emma Lange, Milwaukee
Burger-Phillips Co., Birmingham
Sibley, Lindsay & Curr, Rochester
Blackburn Brothers, Amarillo
Mayer Israel's, New Orleans
James L. Tapp Co., Columbia
M. M. Cohn Co., Little Rock
Lipman Wolfe and Co., Portland
De Jong's, Evansville
Cullum, Inc., Greenville
Capitol Stores, Fayetteville
Carlisle-Allen, Ashtabula
Denver Dry Goods, Denver
Dils Brothers, Parkersburg
J. M. Dyer Company, Corsicanna
Flah & Co., Inc., Syracuse
C. Fox and Company, Hartford
Miller's, Inc., Knoxville
Fowler, Dick & Walker, Wilkes Barre
C. W. Flower Dry Goods Co., Sedalia
Gibson Style Shop, Long Beach
The John Gerber Company, Memphis
Goldwater's, Phoenix
Himelhoch Bros., Detroit
George Innes Co., Wichita
Joske's of Texas, San Antonio
R. E. Kennington Co., Jackson
Kresge's, Newark
Lasalle & Koch Co., Toledo
The Liberty House, Honolulu
Harry S. Manchester, Inc., Madison
Montaldo's, Charlotte
Outlet Company, Providence
Edith Parrish, Rockford
Rodder's Mademoiselle, Fresno
Rothschild's, Oklahoma City
The Style Shop, Kalamazoo
The Union Company, Columbus
Mariss Corporation, Dayton
Flint & Kent, Buffalo
Wolf & Dessauer, Fort Wayne
Younker Brothers, Des Moines
Armstrong's, Cedar Rapids
Erie Dry Goods Company, Erie
Goodman's, Miami Beach
Wears Inc., Hazelton
Gates, Anderson
Wm. Doerflinger Co., LaCrosse
Barnett's Inc., Elgin
Hess Brothers, Allentown
Jordan Marsh, Boston
Kaufman's, Greensburg
Lazarus Inc., Cumberland
Lazarus Inc., Roanoke
Stewart Dry Goods Co., Louisville
Levy's, Jacksonville
C. F. Massey Co., Rochester
John G. Myers Co., Albany
J. S. Martin Co., Sioux City
Livingston's, Bloomington
A. Polsky Company, Akron
F. K. Robeson, Champaign
Linn & Scruggs, Decatur
Marcus the Furrier, San Jose
Lang's Inc., Washington
Makoff, Salt Lake City
Petersen Harned-Von Maur, Davenport
J. S. Schramm Co., Burlington
Bird-Speakman Inc., Wilmington
Thalhimer Bros., Richmond
Helen Michel, East Orange
Brody's, Oil City
Strain Brothers, Great Falls
Cleland Simpson, Scranton
The Wallace Co., Poughkeepsie
Leopold Adler, Savannah
Richmond Palais Royal, Richmond
Wright-Metzler Co., Uniontown
J. C. Prange, Green Bay
White House Dry Goods, Beaumont
Robert Simpson Ltd., Montreal
Weinstock, Lubin & Co., Sacramento
Spokane Dry Goods Co., Spokane
Taylor Furnishing Co., Raleigh

...and other
...stores
...coast

and now...suit dresses tailored by Handmacher at 29.95...at 35.00...at 39.95 fitting companions to renowned handmacher suits

THE Suitmaker DRESS
Tailored by Handmachers

HANDMACHER-VOGEL, INC. • 512 SEVENTH AVENUE • NEW YORK CITY

Superior styling and precision tailoring which made handmacher suits top favorites...now yours in the Suitmaker dress!

(Continued from Page 167)

ed are open to high schools every-ols in general can give first place in ograms, as some schools have already preparing their pupils for active and ble citizenship. This will mean much an seeing that their graduates are ac- d with the facts of United States his- d the structure of our national Gov- .. It will mean giving their pupils a preciation of the natural resources, ls of people, the institutions, the cus- d traditions, and the ways of living ke up the United States—especially ed States of today, in contrast with r major nations of the world. It will inging them face to face with the im- problems for which their towns, their d their nation are seeking a solution, such homely and near-at-hand mat- ow to provide decent houses for ev- who needs them, or how to keep pay in some sort of line with the cost and in such far-distant matters as our with Russia and our responsibilities nited Nations. It will mean giving girls a chance to consider these prob- dults must consider them, and to gain through doing so—not just to read e problems abstractly, but to deal immediate reflections of them in rs and maga- l over the ra- lks with Gov- officials, and nt and debate emselves, es- n controver- s. And it will viding them experience in of democratic p that will be em as adults, ng them re- for managing more of their airs, and by ng them to ctive part— gh they lack in getting de- ings done in nunities.

chools can also, that not graduates but all their pupils have before they leave, the tools of learn- are necessary if they are to go on fectively by themselves. Reading, English and a command of arithme- less important today than they most of the elementary-school was devoted to the three R's. ls will need much more skill than hese subjects. The skill that the l provides for the average boy or ting the eighth grade can fairly be a minimum that all pupils will oo many high-school pupils do not this minimum, in any permanent could do so, if our high schools it beside preparation for citizen- al to be sought for everyone.

high schools can see to it that ev- nd girl—who is not going on to o a specialized vocational school d, by the time he leaves school, tion he will need for beginning to g. Preparation of this kind need tting up highly specialized voca- ing programs. Highly specialized ay, in fact, be wasted for large boys and girls, since the great jobs open to young people just high school do not require skills more than a few weeks or at most s to develop. What these jobs do ough experience with adult work and girls do not have to learn for e on the job what is meant by a ork for a fair day's pay; enough n working with other people so e already accustomed to getting ith adults under working condi- h experience with the basic operations of various kinds of jobs to have given them practice in learning on the job. Experience of this sort can be made available in any school which can equip itself to furnish—either inside the school, or outside in co-operation with local business or industrial establishments—a parallel to the working conditions and the job requirements for beginners in the more common occupations in its own community.

Without describing the further contributions that individual schools are already making to their pupils' readiness to get the best out of life—contributions to their pupils' health, for example, or toward a better use by young people of their leisure time, or toward their realistic planning for further education or for jobs—it will be apparent that high schools need not confine themselves to the limited educational job that most of them are now doing.

THE decision as to the kind of job that high schools are to be expected to do rests primarily with the public which supports the schools. To get a broader job done will obviously require a high degree of imagination, resourcefulness and technical skill on the part of teachers and school administrators. But the broader job can and will be done if the public wants it done. The issue which the public must face can therefore be very simply stated: What kind of high schools do we want?

Dean Gauss has pointed out that the proper aim of education is to make it possible for each boy and girl "to get the best out of life for himself, and to make the greatest contribution within his power to his country and his time." That aim is wholly achievable. To accomplish it, however, certain major changes in public thinking will be necessary.

Perhaps first and most important, the public will have to become accustomed to judging the work of the schools in terms of ends, not just of means. School marks, or the ability to pass school examinations, or even the subjects which pupils study as a part of their schoolwork, are significant only as they have a bearing on what boys and girls are likely to do when they come up against the real test for which the schools ought to be preparing all their pupils—the test of living outside of school. And in that real test the passing mark is set not by what these boys and girls can do if they are obliged to, but by what they do do of their own accord. The soundest measure of a high school's effectiveness, in other words, is an accounting of how its pupils behave outside of school as citizens, workers on jobs, members of families and decent, self-respecting people. Such an accounting ought properly to be asked for from every high school. It deserves far greater weight in the public's judgment of a school's success than does any record merely of college entrance examinations passed, or scholastic honors achieved, or games won on the athletic field.

Second, the public will need to give its support to other kinds of teaching than the kind that consists chiefly of studying books. For high-school boys and girls to learn how to live in the world of today means becoming acquainted with much that can be found in books, but it also means becoming acquainted with many things that one cannot master merely by reading. The ability to deal with contemporary issues, as high-school pupils will be obliged to deal with them almost as soon as they leave school, cannot be acquired solely from books, or from the history of issues that have stirred people in the past. It must be based on experience in facing issues that are colored by the controversy of the moment. The ability to succeed on an adult job cannot be gained without direct experi-

COSMETIC

The origin of the modern term cosmetic, which in Greek meant "skill in decorating," is the word kosmos, meaning "world, order." Thus cosmetics are aids to put one in order. They were not always acceptable, as witness the bishop who advised a communicant that he was neither for nor against cosmetics, but would take a middle-of-the-road course and permit her to rouge one cheek. In 1770 a bill was introduced in Parliament "That all women . . . that shall . . . seduce . . . into matrimony any of His Majesty's subjects by the scents, paints, cosmetic washes . . . shall incur the penalty of the Law in force against Witchcraft."

—DAVID T. ARMSTRONG.

Flowers-by-Wire help speed recovery

They're just the thing for that convalescent friend of yours. Fragrant and refreshing, they brighten up the sickroom, ease the tedium of dragging hours, and help rally flagging spirits.

Easy... Quick... and not expensive!

Your Flowers-by-Wire can be sped anywhere in the world within a few hours! You can send a beautiful bouquet or potted plant from New York (including wire cost) to Cleveland for $5.53 and up. See your own F. T. D. florist or choose one from the telephone directory yellow pages. The Winged Mercury seal on their shop windows means satisfaction is guaranteed. Remember . . . In Any Event—Wire Flowers.

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY · Send Flowers Worldwide · INTERFLORA

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY ASSOCIATION, 149 Michigan Ave., Detroit 26, Mich.

Marshall Field, Chicago
Lord & Taylor, New York
J W Robinson Co., Los Angeles
L. S. Ayers & Co., Indianapolis
Neiman-Marcus, Dallas
Frederick & Nelson, Seattle
Hanfeld's, Kansas City
The Halle Bros Co., Cleveland
Kaufmann's, Pittsburgh
The Blum Store, Philadelphia
Hutzler Bros., Baltimore
Davison Paxon Co., Atlanta
John Shillito Co., Cincinnati
Frank R Jelleff, Inc., Washington
Miller Bros Co., Chattanooga
R E Cox, Ft. Worth
Scruggs Vandervoort Barney, St. Louis
The Dayton Co., Minneapolis
H Liebes & Company, San Francisco
Dickson & Ives, Orlando
Levy Bros Dry Goods, Houston
Smartwear Emma Lange, Milwaukee
Burger-Phillips Co., Birmingham
Sibley, Lindsay & Curr, Rochester
Blackburn Brothers, Amarillo
Mayer Israel's, New Orleans
James L Tapp Co., Columb
M M Cohn Co., Little
Lipman Wolfe and Co., Po
De Jong's, Evansville
Cullum, Inc., Greenvil
Capitol Stores, Fayett
Carlisle Allen, Ashtab
Denver Dry Goods, D
Dils Brothers, Parke
J M Dyer Compa
Flah & Co., Inc
G Fox and Co
Miller's, Inc
Fowler, Di
C W Fl
Gibson
The J Gol
H
C

This plan got a great big hand

Tens of thousands of girls and women who work for the Telephone Companies are buying telephone stock — in accordance with a special company offer.

They represent a substantial part of the 250,000 employees who are taking advantage of the plan to purchase American Telephone and Telegraph stock through regular payments out of wages.

They are acquiring a stake in the business.

This is a good thing for telephone users as well as telephone employees.

BELL TELEPHONE SYSTEM

ence with that kind of job. Reading from Cooper, Hawthorne and Poe can hardly be expected alone to provide an adequate background for a boy or girl who is to get the most out of the newspapers, magazines and radio programs of 1948. In much of its work, in short, the school must have opportunity to go far beyond conventional academic methods and materials of teaching, if it is to do more than a conventional academic job.

Third, the public which supports the schools will need to recognize that every hard-and-fast requirement imposed on the schools will lessen by just so much the flexibility that the schools may need in doing the best work they are capable of doing. If schools must spend a prescribed amount of time in "covering" a fixed list of English classics with their pupils, they will have that much less time in which to give those same pupils some sort of acquaintance with the books and magazines they are likely to encounter outside of school today. If schools must require pupils to memorize the names, dates and life stories of all the persons who have at one time or another been prominent in American history, they will have that much less opportunity to deal with the problems which face America at the present time. The demands on the high school of today are extraordinary in their scope and variety. They can be met if the schools are permitted to readjust their programs. But no school can be expected to meet them if, in addition to teaching what is most needed now, it teach also everything it once used to t

Finally, the public will need to reco that the effectiveness of the schools wi pend, in the last analysis, on the quali their teachers and on the appropriaten the equipment which these teachers ha their command. So much has been sai written in recent months on this matter it hardly needs elaboration here. But it be well to emphasize that to help boy girls get the best out of life and give thei to it is a task which calls for teachers a as the ablest we now have, and for m more of them. It may be well also to out that even very able teachers cann that task well without the unconven teaching materials—the visual aids, th cational-training equipment, the cu books and magazines and recordings— are needed to transform a school into s thing else than a place in which chie read, write and recite.

If we truly want our high schools to fu boys and girls with a major share o preparation they will need for gettin best out of life and contributing as mu possible to it, it is clear that the work schools must be radically changed. It seem equally clear that a necessary con for that change must be a change in t sults demanded of the schools, and th given them, by the public to whor schools belong.

Bringing up Parents

DR. BARBARA BIBER, CONSULTANT
Child Psychologist, Bank Street Schools, New York

One time or another in their young lives, most children have frightening dreams. That's natural—for in the life of even a happy child, there are many things that disturb him. For example, a youngster dominated by an older brother may have a dream that he is being run over by a car. Thus, what a child accepts as a matter of course in waking life is translated into something terrifying in the world of dreams. It may take a child longer than an adult to dismiss his nightmare as "just a dream," because only repeated experience can teach him that he won't be hurt by what he is dreaming. It's a good idea to try to understand what's behind a bad dream—but not in the middle of the night. At the moment of waking from a nightmare, what the child needs most is his parents' comfort and reassurance.

"Daddy said mommy looks like a dream but I think she looks very nice."

ES' HOME

THE MAGAZINE WOMEN BELIEVE IN · SEPTEMBER, 1948 · 25c

Journal

BURLINGAME PUBLIC LIBRARY
Burlingame, Calif.

Journal's Complete Novel

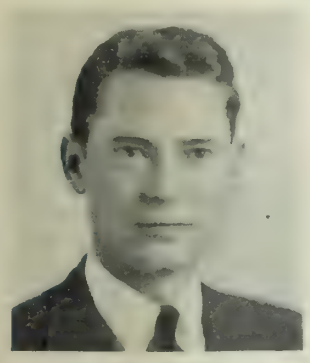
A Revealing Autobiography

FAMILY CIRCLE • BY CORNELIA OTIS SKINNER

MAGAZINE BINDER
Manufactured by
GAYLORD BROS. Inc.
Syracuse, N. Y.
Stockton, Calif.

ROSIE RAY

JOEL EARNEST



"I was born and raised in Pennsylvania, and my grandparents were obviously the progenitors not only of me, but of my Grandmother and Grandfather Ruddyfuddy stories. (Now showing: The Ninety and Nine.) Grandfather Earnest looked like Santa Claus and liked to tinker. Grandmother, while perhaps not quite the six feet two and one half inches of Grandmother Ruddyfuddy, certainly looked that tall when she was racing me for the funny papers, as she often did."

DOROTHY WILDING

CORNELIA OTIS SKINNER

Cornelia Otis Skinner leads a life busy enough for three people. Entertaining audiences across the nation with her monologues, she often is three people. She has starred in Broadway plays and on radio. She has written several books. Perhaps most well known is the collaboration with Emily Kimbrough, Our Hearts Were Young and Gay. Reasons for Miss Skinner's prolific talent can be found in Family Circle (page 36), the story of her family life before her debut on Broadway.

LIONEL WIGGAM

"When I was thirteen a pulp magazine bought my first story, Thick Ankles, about a tragic burlesque queen. New Man in Town, which the JOURNAL is publishing, is one of many that have since appeared, as well as a volume of poems, Landscape with Figures. After graduating from Princeton I went to Hollywood for screen tests. But I couldn't get used to the dental caps they made me wear: during love scenes my teeth kept falling out. So I became a screen writer, for whom teeth are not so important."

JOURNAL CONTENTS

SEPTEMBER, 1948

Vol. LXV, No. 9

NOVEL COMPLETE IN THIS ISSUE

PAGE

THE PUMPKIN SHELL . . . . . Charlotte Armstrong 34

FICTION

NEW MAN IN TOWN . . . . . Lionel Wiggam 38
THE NINETY AND NINE . . . . . Joel Earnest 42
WEDDING PRESENT . . . . . Newlin B. Wildes 54
HOW HE CAME BACK . . . . . E. R. Stuart 61

SPECIAL FEATURES

THE CLIMATE OF A FREE PRESS . . . . . Dorothy Thompson 11
PROPOSED HOME FOR JEWS 11
EVERYBODY GETS IT . . . . . Irene McDermott 31
FAMILY CIRCLE . . . . . Cornelia Otis Skinner 36
SHOULD RELIGION BE TAUGHT IN OUR SCHOOLS? . . Christian Gauss 40
FRENCH ART . . . . . John Walker 41
HOW WELL ARE YOU? . . . . . Dr. Herman N. Bundesen and Gladys Denny Shultz 44
IF YOU ASK ME . . . . . Eleanor Roosevelt 52
WILL THEY COUNT YOUR VOTE? . . . Tom Sweeney with Robert Cruise McManus 53
PEOPLE ARE PEOPLE THE WORLD OVER . . . . John Godfrey Morris 68
HOW AMERICA LIVES: SENDING THREE GIRLS TO COLLEGE . Jan Weyl 205
BREAKING APRON STRINGS—AND HEART STRINGS . . . . . Gladys Denny Shultz 212
HOW ROMANTIC ARE YOU? . . . . . Marguerite Barze 251

GENERAL FEATURES

OUR READERS WRITE US 5
UNDER-COVER STUFF . . . . . Bernardine Kielty 14
HOT SCHOOL LUNCHES . . . IDAHO PROVIDES 23
FOR HUNGRY SCHOOL CHILDREN . . . . . Margaret Hickey 23
REFERENCE LIBRARY 24
MAKING MARRIAGE WORK . . . . . Clifford R. Adams 26
WHAT'S NEW—AND WHAT'S NEWS (The Sub-Deb) . . . . . Edited by Maureen Daly 28
FIFTY YEARS AGO IN THE JOURNAL • JOURNAL ABOUT TOWN 33
BRINGING UP PARENTS . . . . . Dr. Barbara Biber 86
ASK ANY WOMAN . . . . . Marcelene Cox 100
DIARY OF DOMESTICITY . . . . . Gladys Taber 121
A HAPPY CONVALESCENCE FOR YOUR CHILD Dr. Herman N. Bundesen 247
THIS IS A TOOTHBRUSH CHEATER . . . Munro Leaf 255

FASHIONS AND BEAUTY

THE LADY AND THE TIGER . . . . . R. M. P. 57
MOVEMENT INTO FALL . . . . . Wilhela Cushman 58
THE HAT . . . . . Wilhela Cushman 62
PLAID AND PRETTY . . . . . Marion Plummer 203
COLLEGE GIRL'S CHOICE . . . . . Nora O'Leary 214
PASSPORT TO POPULARITY . . . . . Dawn Crowell Norman 216

ARCHITECTURE, GARDENING, INTERIOR DECORATION

WOODSTOCK, VERMONT . . . . . Richard Pratt 46
REFLECTING GARDEN . . . . . Richard Pratt 66
MAKE LIGHT OF IT . . . . . H. T. Williams 258
CAREER-GIRL APARTMENT . . . . . Henrietta Murdock 261

FOOD AND HOMEMAKING

SWAPPER'S LUCK . . . . . Ann Batchelder 70
LINE A DAY . . . . . Ann Batchelder 72
KITCHEN REVIVAL . . . . . Gladys Taber 124
CONVERSATION PIECE . . . . . Ruth Mills Teague 135
QUICK AND EASYS FOR TWO . . . . . Louella G. Shouer 110
"EVERYBODY WORKS IN OUR HOUSE" . . . . . Judy Barry Dee 218
WEEK-END COOK-OFF . . . . . Louella G. Shouer 220
COME INTO MY KITCHEN . . . . . Kingsley Kahler Hubby 231

POETRY

FOR CHILDREN COMING HOME, Virginia Scott Miner 79 • AUTUMN LEAVES, Elizabeth-Ellen Long 85 • PLAIN SONNETS FROM THE DISHPAN, Miriam Hemmendinger 99 • MONOCHROME, Sara King Carleton 110 • RENEGADES, Sjanna Solum 126 • DAYS I HAVE LOVED, Isabelle Bryans Longfellow 131 VALLEY TRAIN, Lori Petri 139 • SONNET, E. V. Griffith 148 • CRISIS, Eleanor Alletta Chaffee 158 • JEALOUSY, Rhina P. Espaillat 170 • EARLY RISER, Elizabeth McFarland 188 • CAREER, Catherine Haydon Jacobs 228 FOR ROBERT, OUT-OF-DOORS, Marjorie Lederer Lee 232 • THE RETURN, Vesta Nickerson Lukei 236 • TEN YARDS OF BOYS, Robert P. Tristram Coffin 263

Cover Design by Meade-Maddick

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, copyright 1948 by The Curtis Publishing Company in U. S. and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Title registered in U. S. Patent Office and foreign countries.

Published on last Friday of month preceding date by The Curtis Publishing Company, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa. Entered as Second Class Matter May 6, 1911, at the Post Office at Philadelphia under the Act of March 3, 1879. Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, Canada, by Curtis Distributing Company, Ltd., Toronto, Ont., Canada.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICES: U. S. and Possessions, Canada, Newfoundland, Labrador, Costa Rica, Cuba, Nicaragua, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Mexico, Panama, Philippine Islands, Republic of Honduras, Salvador, Spain and South America except the Guianas, 1 yr., $3; 2 yrs., $5; 3 yrs., $7; 4 yrs., $9. Other countries 1 yr., $6. Remit by money order or draft on a bank in the U. S. payable in U. S. funds. All prices subject to change without notice. All subscriptions must be paid for in advance.

UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTY. We agree, upon request direct from subscribers to the Philadelphia office, to refund the full amount paid for any copy of Curtis publications not previously mailed.

The Curtis Publishing Company, Walter D. Fuller, President; Arthur W. Kohler, Vice-President and Advertising Director; Mary Curtis Zimbalist, Vice-President; Cary W. Bok, Vice-President and Treasurer; Lewis W. Trayser, Vice-President and Director of Manufacturing; Benjamin Allen, Vice-President and Director of Circulation; Robert E. MacNeal, Secretary; Richard Ziesing, Jr., Manager of Ladies' Home Journal. The Company also publishes The Saturday Evening Post, Country Gentleman, Jack and Jill, and Holiday.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS: Send your Journal change of address to
LADIES' HOME JOURNAL
Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pa.

at least 30 days before the date of the issue with which it is to take effect. Send old address with the new, enclosing if possible your address label. The post office will not forward copies unless you provide extra postage. Duplicate copies cannot be sent.

The names of characters in all stories are fictitious. Any resemblance to living person is a coincidence

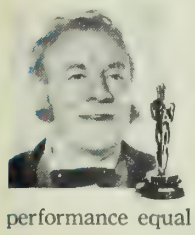
The LION'S ROAR

Published here monthly . . . Column No. 110

The greatest star of the screen!

When "The Green Years" appeared on the screen a few years ago, it was hard to imagine there could be another story so wonderful.

★ ★ ★ ★



But M-G-M found such a narrative in "Hills of Home" and has now dramatized it magnificently in Technicolor.

The story was fashioned from the well-known sketches by Ian Maclaren, called "Doctor Of The Old School". William Ludwig did a screen play that really tugs at the heart, and the director Fred M. Wilcox wielded his megaphone superbly. Robert Sisk, the producer, had the guiding hand in the production.

★ ★ ★ ★

It has been cast with skill. No one but Edmund Gwenn could play so brilliantly the beloved Dr. MacLure who shared the joys and heartaches of his people. It is another Academy Award performance equal to his well-remembered "Miracle on 34th Street."

★ ★ ★ ★

Only Lassie could portray so intelligently the dog who at first outrages the Scottish homeland with his cowardice and ineptness in the stern tasks of the hillside. His attachment for the old doctor, played by Gwenn, leads to what in human terms would be called regeneration.

★ ★ ★ ★

For the character of the Highland youth whose courage overcame great obstacles —the natural selection was Tom Drake, young hero of "The Green Years". His sweetheart, and most attractive, is talented Janet Leigh.

★ ★ ★ ★

Nor can one fail to mention the performance of Donald Crisp, an actor noted among actors and the public alike.

★ ★ ★ ★

You will want to visit the "Hills of Home" because, as Tom Drake whispers to his sweetheart in the picture: "The very hills of the Glen are special hills. The sweetest hills of all. The hills of home."

★ ★ ★ ★

M-G-M is proud of this motion picture because it lifts the screen a notch. It is important because it is good.

—Leo

Very personally yours

The cares of problem days fade with the shoreline . . and you're happy-go-lucky . . . completely at ease, with the new, softer Kotex. For you see . .

New Kotex is a marvel of comfort. Of cushioned softness that holds its shape, for safety such as you've always wanted. Yes . . .

Softer than ever before, Kotex is made to stay soft while you wear it. Gives you special, flat pressed ends that prevent revealing outlines. And adds an exclusive safety center, for your extra protection. Moreover . .

Kotex provides you with the napkin best for you, because you may choose from Regular, Junior and Super Kotex: each designed for greater comfort, confidence very personally yours.

More women choose Kotex* than all other sanitary napkins

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Our Readers Write Us

Saved Her Marriage

Eugene, Oregon.

Dear Editor: For the first six years of our marriage my husband was unbearable. He ridiculed me, laughed at my confidences, accused me of spending money on things I couldn't have done. My face became a smiling mask to hide my inner fear and instability.

After my husband was in bed, I would read or write letters. I began making up things, writing poems, short stories and articles. I was actually mentally sick. And without quite realizing, I began writing about situations like mine, studying my husband and wondering if his attitude toward me was a reflection of someone's attitude toward him before I knew him.

We are a happy, loving family now due to that discovery. I did not let it hurt me when he said sarcastic things. Instead, I laughed and agreed with him. I found many honest things about which to compliment him, and never missed a chance to let him know that I thought he was wonderful! My husband's feeling for me has grown into a sincere love. He no longer "belittles" me. He's glad I have an interesting "hobby," and proud when I receive notice for my writing.

So, I agree with Jane Allen that "true love is love at first sight—strengthened by second sight." Second sight being in my case "insight!" Sincerely yours,

ALPHA SAMPLE.

Matter of Life or Death

Orlando, Florida.

Dear Editor: Would you chop down a fruit-bearing tree because the tree, itself, was not edible? Let's not criticize nurses who give time and energy training more nurses, and acquiring more education themselves. Good nursing often means the difference between life and death—and prospective nurses should be given the best training possible. Sincerely,

BEATRICE C. BARNETT, R.N.

We love nurses. We just want them to be superhuman is all. ED.

Veteran Remembers England

Highland Park, Illinois.

Dear Mr. Kahler: Five years ago I was in England flying B-17's in the middle of a war. That was the summer of 1943, when the American Eighth Air Force was just beginning to push the air war deep into the heart of occupied Europe. A lot has happened since that summer—both to me and to England.

I would like to go back to London, to Rule's, the restaurant in Maiden Lane, to Kempinski's where a fellow named George used to play the piano for a lot of homesick American fliers. I'd like to go back to Odinino's, just off Piccadilly, where the "men under stress" used to forget about their friends who had been shot down the day before—or try to forget about them.

I'd like to take a train from London up to Peterborough, to see the old cathedral where a lot of us went to church on Easter Sunday, the first Easter Sunday, that one in 1943, since the beginning of the war that they rang the church bells, and then I'd like to take a bus, if they're still running to the air base where I was stationed. Polebrook, it was called, because it was near a little cluster of red brick houses that went by that name. Not much of a town. Not even a village. But there was a pub there and a barmaid who, if she's still there, would remember a lot of the guys that the rest of us have been trying for five years to forget.

There are a lot of other things I'd do too. I would take a train, as I did once before (right after three rough missions in three awful days), up to Nottingham. Nottingham is where Robin Hood used to hang out, and five years ago it was where a lot of Americans used to hang out too. I'd stay again at the Black Boy Hotel and have another drink in the American Bar. Only it would be different. A lot different. Because the last time I was there, the bar was crowded with people in uniform—men and women in uniforms of all kinds. And also because I wouldn't be wondering this time how many days I had left on earth.

There's a pub in Nottingham that they say is the oldest pub in England. It had its grand opening sometime in the year of 1189. They called it "Ye Olde Trip to Jerusalem" in those days, because a lot of people were going off to the crusades. They called it the same thing in the summer of 1943 when I was there. And it was still a pub, too, though you'd have thought it would at least have become a museum by that time.

Five years ago the people I talked to in that pub were glad to have us over there helping them. They thought that we were a brave lot, going out to bomb the Germans in the broad daylight. We let them think that, most of us. But secretly, we were glad we didn't have to go out at night the way their RAF boys did.

Five years ago there was a family in Peterborough that thought they would like to have a labor government. I'd like to look them up again and find out what they think now.

Last time—five years ago—I didn't know anything about England. There's still a lot I don't know. But there is one thing I do know, and that's about the people in England. I like them. During the war, when I was over there, the English were a lot of things, and, to me, most of them were good.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM E. PETERS, JR.

Corn is Where You Find It

San Francisco, California.

Dear Editor: I suggest that a part of each movie theater be enclosed in soundproof glass and reserved solely for those patrons who feel the need of cracking popcorn through the picture. Sincerely,

JEAN VERCHER.

Personally, we'd hate to give up popcorn—if it's hot, well buttered and salted. Have some? ED.

God Blessed America

Voorburg, Netherlands.

Dear Sir: I renewed my subscription the very first day after the war, when American periodicals again became available in Holland.

I am very interested in the housewives' department. I read all the articles which give me an insight into the way of living in America, and naturally I compare. You can scarcely sufficiently realize how fortunate you are. You can get whatever you need whenever you are able to spend some money. You have a large choice. I do not know how long it will take before we are as far as that over here, but this is not meant as a grumble.

My colleagues in America surely will not think it presumptuous if I advise them to value the fact that they live in America and all it means for their homes.

Truly yours,

MRS. L. TRIENCKENS.

It must be remembered, too, that it was Americans who made America what it is—it wasn't all an accident. ED.

Protect Those Eyes!

New York City.

Dear Editors: Contact lenses have already proved their worth, but the public, educated to accepting and wearing these lenses, is not yet educated to the danger of entrusting their fitting to amateurs. There is no Federal legislation specifying definite training for the fitting of contact lenses. Because of this, money-hungry persons have taken to making nation-wide tours annually during which time they train "experts" in two days. At the end of "training," these teacher-salesmen arm their newly created technicians with blank sets of lenses of the teacher's own manufacture. The two-day experts open shop and another pair of eyes is in danger. They use a trial-and-error method of fitting.

But to do its job correctly, the contact lens must fit the eye as though it were a part of it; it must move with the eye's every motion, it must lie evenly over the sclera (white portion), and must give

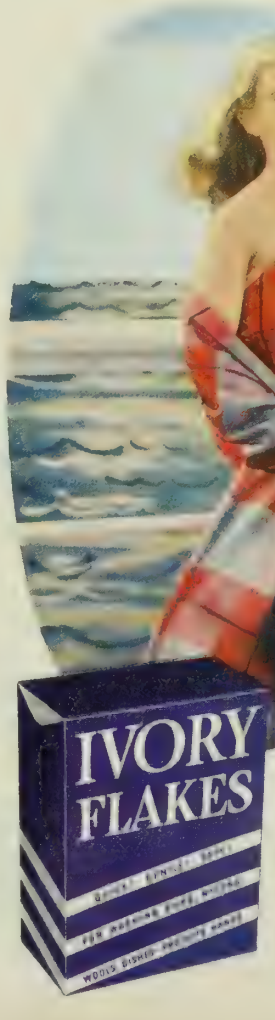
Keep your color forecast bright and sunny

You're fashion-right if you're color-bright . . . so give gay summer clothes the care they deserve. Keep them far away from strong soaps and rough handling. Remember—one wrong washing can fade and shrink them. Instead, wash nice clothes the right way with pure, mild Ivory Flakes. Then you know they'll come out dazzle-bright . . . fitting right.

Keep your washables lovelier with this special care

GO TO TOWN in a dress of pure silk shantung—give it Ivory Flakes care to help preserve its glowing colors. Ivory Flakes is one soap that fashion experts advise for all nice washables.

YOUR SUNDAY BEST slips need Ivory Flakes care to help 'em stay blossom-fresh. No soap gives nice washables finer care than pure, mild Ivory Flakes.



WANT LONGER WEAR from your nylons? Then suds them nightly in Ivory Flakes! You'll find, too, that Ivory Flakes care keeps stocking colors newer-looking up to twice as long!

Dress by Maria Krum

Sun dress by Frances Sidel

YOUR BALLERINA sun dress needs Ivory Flakes care to help keep its colors dancing. Colors perk up when you suds them in Ivory Flakes.

If it's lovely to wear...It's worth

Ivory Flakes care

The fast flake form of baby's pure, mild Ivory . . . 99 44/100 % Pure

plenty of room for all corneal movements so that the cornea never touches the plastic lens. Looseness or tightness over the sclera causes irritations and blurrings. A too-small corneal hollow will cause erosion, scarring and even blindness.

Reputable lens technicians insist that their patients first see an ophthalmologist who, by training, is also a medical doctor. Certain types of ailments absolutely prohibit the use of contact lenses (i.e., all systemic illnesses such as TB and diabetes) and only a medical doctor can detect the presence of these. The person then visits a technician who, in the presence of a doctor, anesthetizes the eye and makes a mold or casting. The procedure is painless and takes but a few minutes. Castings are shipped off to a laboratory together with the ophthalmologist's prescription. In the laboratory the mold is translated into plastic lenses—unbreakable, feather-light, carefully ground and shaped for an individual pair of eyes. Returned to the technician, they are fitted on the patient. A few drops of fluorescin are slipped behind the lens and studied under a cobalt-blue light. Loose areas show up a brilliant yellow-green. Tight areas can be detected in the daylight. Competent, reputable technicians, using a series of fine, power-driven instruments of varying abrasive quality and delicate polishing disks, make whatever adjustments are required.

WARNING: Never have eyes fitted without seeing an ophthalmologist (oculist) first.

Never permit lenses to be fitted unless they have been made of a mold or casting made specifically for your eyes. Buying ready-made lenses is as foolish as buying eyeglasses over the counter, and far more dangerous.

If lenses do not feel comfortable, bring them back immediately. A slight deviation may make the difference between good sight and blurriness.

Contact lenses are used by three types of people:

1. For cosmetic or occupational convenience (actors, actresses, speakers appearing before groups; divers, professional athletes, aviators, boxers.)

2. Those who have a neurosis about wearing eyeglasses. (These make up the largest group and include people who, because of extremely poor sight, need thick lenses in eyeglasses, those who have scarred eyes, albinos, and so on. For albinos, corneal portion of contact lens is tinted to give iris color.)

3. Those who can see only with contact lenses (persons with conical corneas; those with irregular astigmatism which may be the result of an accident or wound, corneal ulcers, malformation in the development of the cornea; those who've had one eye operated on for cataract while retaining perfect vision in the other eye).

Sincerely yours,
MURIEL PATCHEN.

Paging the Lorimers

Springfield, Missouri.

Dear Editors: Whatever became of Maudie Mason? I grew up with Maudie and Davey and shared all their trials. Now I'd enjoy reading again of Maudie's efforts to cope with housing problems, food bills and mischievous children. Sincerely,
E.G.H.

At the height of Maudie's popularity the Lorimers, who created her, decided not to write any more Maudie stories. Fans say the stories reread amazingly well. ED.

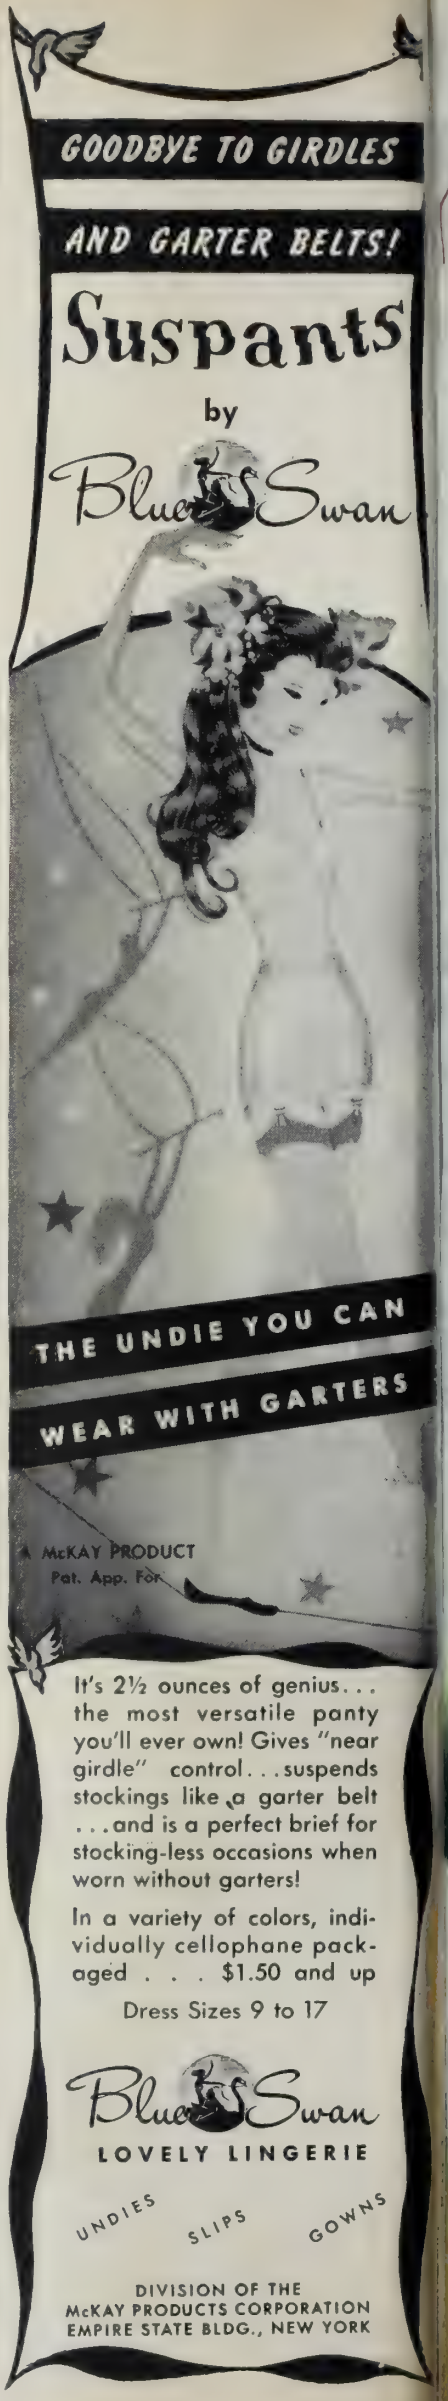
Sirs, Our Mountain...

Tacoma, Washington.

Dear Editor: I am wondering, and so are thousands of others of our glorious state, what meanness or ignorance was back of your publishing that picture of a messy cloud and labeling it Mt. Rainier. Mt. Rainier is the outstanding peak of the whole coast and does have clouds over the peak part of the time, as do all our coast peaks, but there are so many gorgeous views of it that there is no excuse for such a miserable attempt at being funny.
Sincerely,
ETHEL C. McCUNE.

We, too, have seen Mt. Rainier on a clear day and happily attest to its stunning beauty. ED.

(Continued on Page 8)



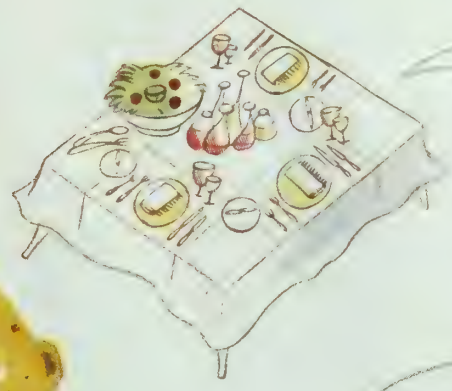


Table talk... about these

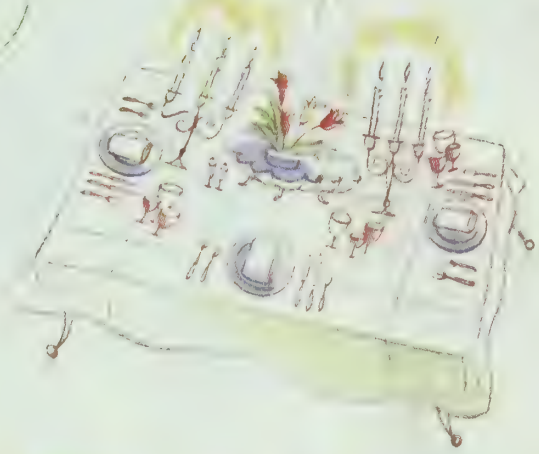


"What a beautiful table am I. How my spoons and forks sparkle! They're Holmes & Edwards, you know . . . the kind with these"

"They do things for a table. This silverplate is invisibly INLAID with two blocks of sterling silver at backs of bowls and handles of the most used spoons and forks."

"Only Holmes & Edwards is good enough for me. It stays lovelier longer because it's Sterling Inlaid silverplate . . . a far cry from the kinds that are only extra-plated (overplated)."

HOLMES & EDWARDS

STERLING INLAID° SILVERPLATE

HERE AND HERE
It's Sterling Inlaid

WHICH PATTERN? Three to choose from. Danish Princess, Youth and Lovely Lady, all made in the U. S. A. by The International Silver Company.

HOW MUCH? Surprise! Unlike so many other things price of Holmes & Edwards has not gone up! Still only $68.50 for 52 pieces, service for eight with chest. (No Federal Tax.)

WHERE TO BUY? At jewelry and department store silverware counters.

Danish Princess Youth Lovely Lady

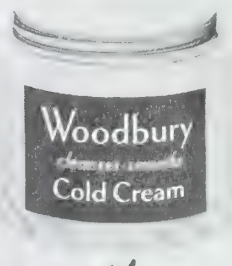
Copyright 1948, The International Silver Co., Holmes & Edwards Div., Meriden, Conn. Sold in Canada by: The T. Eaton Co., Ltd. °Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

FOR YOU...FOR ROMANCE...

that Always-Fresh Look

LIZABETH SCOTT
Starring in
"PITFALL"
a United Artists Release

Try Lizabeth Scott's DEEP-CLEANSE FACIALS



Cuddly armful! Early play hour—and Lizabeth's skin is a-sparkle! "Easy," says she, "a quick Deep-Cleanse with Woodbury rouses my skin, wakes beauty-fresh glow!"

"You're lovelier—in seconds," promises Lizabeth. "Just smooth on Woodbury Cold Cream . . . its rich oils cleanse deep to the pores. Your tissue whisks away grime, make-up. Then comes more Woodbury—to smooth dryness with four special softening ingredients. Tissue again. Add a cold water splash for rosy color. Just see . . . the clear-clean silken look of your skin. It's Woodbury-wonderful!"

Delightful eyeful! . . . to make you stop, look and LOOK! "Film day done," says Lizabeth. "I first date Woodbury – rich and soothing. Leaves skin soft, simply velvet!"

Woodbury Cold Cream

(Continued from Page 6)

Permission to Live

The Duke's Cottage,
Rudgwick, England.

Dear June: Mary gets home next Saturday, with two coal black little children. But she assures me it comes off in the wash. Apparently the water soon gives out on the Families Train.

I do wonder what you'd make of England now, and whether you realize how fortunate you are to be out of it. You might keep your eyes open for a nice little farm in Virginia, for me, for I too long to be gone! I have just had a nice instance of the sort of afflictions we all suffer. One Government Department has refused over and over to give me a permit to mend a broken drain—meanwhile another writes me that I shall be prosecuted if I don't.

With no time to enter endless correspondence, and get, or be refused permits to do up Mary's cottage, I up and did it myself. Do you remember how I learned to paint years ago, when we took the lodge over at Knightons—and how Snelling, who had been in the navy, put me through it good and proper. It has turned out to be one of the most useful lessons I ever learned, for now I can hold a brush without getting painters' arthritis, and do a ceiling without getting distemper in my hair. Lots of love, darling,

MOTHER
(Dorothy Black).

Children Forgetting War

The Duke's Cottage,
Rudgwick, England.

My dear Bruce and Beatrice: I am sending you a picture of the little girl, Monica Long, who went shopping one Christmas here, and was hit by a bomb. She has grown into such a pretty little girl, bright as a new penny, but as you see, she must still wear the patch and the very uncomfortable headband, for her brain is practically exposed. When she is older, the doctors rather hope to do some sort of operation, I believe. A prospect that seems to daunt Monica very little. She goes to school and leads quite an ordinary life, playing with other children.

Monica Long . . . she may have to wear the patch all her life.

It is rather wonderful how little effect the war has had on these children. The horror is all forgotten, and I am interested to note that little boys playing battles round haystacks have all gone back to bows and arrows. What a good idea. If only we could sell it to their elders!

I have just learned to make cheese by means of trial and error. (Some of the errors were pretty sinister!) Now, hanging in rows on a line in a secluded spot, are what look rather like decapitated heads! They are dripping—stage one. After which we have to press them in curious homemade presses because it's impossible to buy proper ones. They are all, so my friend in the Farm Stores tells me, going for export. A queer idea, when we are the ones who need the food. My love to you both,

DOROTHY BLACK.

TRADE MARK REG. ©1948 MOJUD HOSIERY CO., INC.,

A Darling goes to her Doom

It is the party of the year . . . her night-of-nights Down below are dozens of girls who will envy her looks . . . dozens of men who will cut in endlessly . . . and one in particular who will press her close when the lights are low and whisper "Darling!" . . . So she thinks. Unfortunately, it isn't going to be that way. There's a fly in the ointment as big as a blackbird. Instead of eagerness and attention she will meet indifference and neglect. Tonight will be one of the grimmest nights of her life . . . one that it will take a long time to live down. And she won't know why*!

All too often it happens that way; on the very night you wish to be at your best you may be at your worst without realizing it. Unfortunately, halitosis* (unpleasant breath) doesn't always announce itself to the victim, but it invariably shouts its presence to others. They are likely to hold it against you for a long time.

Isn't it foolish to risk putting yourself in the worst possible light when Listerine Antiseptic is such an easy, quick and wholly delightful precaution against simple, non-systemic bad breath? You merely rinse your mouth with it and instantly your breath becomes sweeter, fresher, less likely to offend. So . . . when you want to be at your best, never, never omit Listerine Antiseptic before any date . . . it's an extra-careful precaution against offending. Lambert Pharmacal Company, St. Louis, Missouri.

HOW THE WORLD
A LOVELIER SKIN!

BIGGER—LOTS BIGGER!

MORE LUXURY!
MORE LATHER!

SAME FINE, SMOOTH TEXTURE!

DELICATE,
FLOWER-LIKE PERFUME!

BE LOVELIER—
HEAD TO TOE!

OF BEAUTIES
NG RAISES!

CAMAY

aking a Sensational Splash!

Everybody's talking about the new Bath-Size Camay.
Buying it. Trying it. Praising it to the skies! Because this bigger Camay makes every bath a luxurious beauty treatment. Bathe with it every day of your life—and your skin will be lovelier from head to toe.
And you'll rise from your bath just touched with the delicate, flower-like fragrance of Camay, the Soap of Beautiful Women!

CAMAY
IN 2 SIZES!
e Regular Camay for your plexion—the new Bath-Size

Bath-Size Camay

FOR YOUR AMAY BEAUTY BATH

LADIES' HOME Journal

BRUCE GOULD

AND BEATRICE BLACKMAR GOULD, Editors

MARY BASS, Executive Editor

LAURA LOU BROOKMAN, Managing Editor

Associate Editors: HUGH MACNAIR KAHLER, BERNARDINE KIELTY, ANN BATCHELDER, WILHELA CUSHMAN, FRANK ELTONHEAD, ALICE BLINN, RICHARD PRATT, HENRIETTA MURDOCK, LOUELLA G. SHOUER, MARY LEA PAGE, MAUREEN DALY, DAWN CROWELL NORMAN, JOHN GODFREY MORRIS, JOAN YOUNGER, LONNIE COLEMAN, MARGARET DAVIDSON, NORA O'LEARY. Contributing Editors: GLADYS TABER, LOUISE PAINE BENJAMIN, GLADYS DENNY SHULTZ, BARBARA BENSON, MARGARET HICKEY. Assistant Editors: JOHN WERNER, CHARLOTTE JOHNSON, ROBERT C. ATHERTON, DONALD STUART, RUTH MARY PACKARD, RUTH MATTHEWS, ALICE CONKLING, JUDY BARRY DEE, JUNE TORREY, LILY GLENDINNING, DOROTHY COUNSELMAN SELBY, JOSEPH DI PIETRO, ANNE EINSELEN, GLENN MATTHEW WHITE, BETTY NILES GRAY, JAN WEYL. Editorial Assistants: SELMA RUTHERFORD BURGESS, ALICE KASTBERG, IRIS WILKEN, BETTY COE, JEANNE LENTON TRACEY, MARGARET ARCHER, CYNTHIA McADOO, JEANNE SCRIBNER, ELEANOR POWNALL SIMMONS, ADRINA CASPARIAN, VIRGINIA PRICE, MARION PLUMMER, MARY JEAN STRAIN, LOIS WITHERSPOON, ALEXA CARROLL, PHILIPPA HERMAN, JEANNE STILES.

Proposed Home for Jews

THE young Jew from Lodz, Poland, said, "What we want is to live like other human beings." . . . "What we need," another said, "is a chance to be productive on new soil under new skies . . ."

Among the homeless of Europe, cast adrift in the backwash of World War II, are 1,250,000 Jews. And of these, 250,000 live in displaced-persons camps in Germany, Austria and Italy. These people belong to no place on earth; no place on earth belongs to them.

"What we need is a small corner of God's earth . . ."

Pleas like these pour into the Freeland League's New York headquarters at 1819 Broadway. All these people could not go to Palestine if that were possible. They want to get out of the D. P. camps and far away from Europe.

The Freeland League, through the efforts of Dr. I. N. Steinberg, has found a place for 30,000 homeless European Jews. The new land is Surinam (Netherlands Guiana), with an area of 55,000 square miles, approximately halfway between the Panama Canal and South America's easternmost bulge. The Dutch government welcomes the homeless Jews to this sparsely populated territory, which has a climate similar to Miami's.

EWING GALLOWAY

Homeless Jews in D P camp breadline.

The land that the Freeland League proposes to colonize has been a haven for Jewish refugees for nearly 300 years. About the year 1660, hundreds of Jewish families, exiled from Spain and Portugal and later driven from Brazil and Cayenne, found haven at last in Paramaribo. Their descendants live in Surinam.

(Continued on Page 222)

The Climate of a Free Press

By Dorothy Thompson

VARIOUS polls taken in various parts of the world reveal that the freedom men most cherish is freedom of speech. Closely allied with this is freedom of the press: freedom to publish both information and opinion; freedom to enlarge the audience for speech, whether by the written or the broadcast word. Here we come into a more complicated field, where there are rival interpretations of what freedom is.

In communist ideology there is no "free" press, for it is the instrument of "capitalist ownership and interests." Many besides communists have taken up this cry. I remember discussing press freedom on the air some years ago with the late Mayor La Guardia, of New York, who expressed the view that the American press was entirely dominated by the advertisers; and "the kept and corrupt capitalist press" is a favorite slogan of the followers of Henry Wallace.

In Britain, too, there is such widespread discontent with the press that a commission is engaged in investigating its ownership and control, and particularly the influence exerted by the great chains.

There are reasons for the prevalent doubt and discontent. There seems to be a law by which as civilizations grow and progress they tend toward centralization. While anyone in this country still may set up a hand press and publish his ideas, it takes vast amounts of money to produce a newspaper or a magazine in any great center of population. It also takes a great deal of money to maintain staffs of reporters, editorial writers and foreign correspondents throughout the globe; the tendency, therefore, is to make these workers serve more than one publication, so everywhere we have seen the growth of news services, serving hundreds of subscribers; of syndicated columnists, feature writers and cartoonists; and the consolidation of newspapers, to an ever-decreasing number.

TODAY there are cities of over a hundred thousand population in America which have, in effect, only one newspaper, since the same interests own what, to the casual observer, may seem like rival publications, one appearing in the morning, the other in the afternoon.

It was also true that during President Roosevelt's administrations the press was editorially out of line with public opinion. Editorially, the daily press was in large majority against a President who won despite it, and this naturally gave rise to the question whether so many editorial writers were expressing their own untrammeled opinions or those of the ownership.

Now, I have been engaged for twenty-eight years in journalism in the United States, and working for American newspapers and magazines abroad, and I have tried to ask myself with honesty and candor to what extent these doubts and criticisms are justified. The centralization that has so light . . .

Chiffon Cake

so rich . . .
so delicious

made with MAZOLA* salad oil

YES, it really is the "cake of the century". . . and it's baked to perfection when you use pure, golden MAZOLA* Salad Oil as the shortening. MAZOLA makes it richer in color, richer in flavor . . . with a divine texture.

For perfect results when you make Chiffon Cake, make it with MAZOLA—America's finest oil for shortenings, as well as salads and cooking.

MAZOLA is sold in both bottles and tins...at all grocers.

© C. P. R. Co., 1948

CHIFFON CAKE

- 1⅛ cups sifted cake flour (1 cup plus 2 tablespoons)
- ¾ cup sugar
- 1½ teaspoons double-acting baking powder
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ¼ cup MAZOLA Salad Oil
- ⅜ cup water (¼ cup plus 2 tablespoons)
- 2 egg yolks
- ½ teaspoon each, vanilla and lemon extract
- ¼ teaspoon cream of tartar
- ½ cup egg whites (about 4)

Mix and sift first four ingredients. Make a well and add MAZOLA, water, egg yolks and flavoring. Beat until smooth. Add cream of tartar to egg whites. Beat until egg whites form very stiff peaks. Gently fold first mixture into egg whites until well blended. Fold, do not stir. Turn batter into ungreased 9-inch tube pan. Bake in moderate oven (325° F.) about 1 hour or until cake springs back when touched lightly with finger. Immediately turn pan upside down, placing tube over neck of bottle. Let hang, free of table until cold. To remove from pan, loosen with spatula.

Berry or Peach Icing: To 2 cups sifted confectioners' sugar add ⅛ teaspoon salt and 3½ tablespoons crushed berry juice or mashed peaches. Mix until smooth. Spread on cake.

Orange Icing: Substitute orange juice for berry juice in above recipe. Add 1 teaspoon grated orange rind.

NOTE: Use the two leftover egg yolks for custard sauce, or in making your favorite mayonnaise with MAZOLA Salad Oil.

* A registered trade mark of the Corn Products Refining Co., New York, N. Y.

taken place in the press has occurred everywhere else—in government, industry and labor unions. But the American press is by no means uniform, and syndicated editorialists compete with one another and differ radically.

And we should ask, it seems to me, "What is the function of the press?"

Its function is, first, within the limits of its means, accurately to report the important facts about the world we live in. It cannot possibly do this except on some collective or partially collective basis.

Its second function is to interpret those facts and draw conclusions from them, which is the work of the editorial writer.

Beyond these functions the press seeks to gauge the interest of the public and amuse, entertain or otherwise engage its attention in order to sell the paper.

The cost of printing and distributing newspapers and other publications does not begin to be met by what the consumer pays for them, whether it is a nickel for a newspaper or fifteen to fifty cents for a national magazine.

But do the advertisers "control" them?

From my own experience I think this is perhaps the least justified of the charges against our press.

The advertiser is quite as dependent on the press as the press on the advertiser. And the advertiser, as a businessman, is not interested in the public views of the newspaper or magazine. He may abhor the editorial policy and general contents of the latter, but what he wants to know is: How many and what kind of people do you reach? Department stores, which advertise heavily in the daily press, want to sell dishes, linen, clothes, furniture and all sorts of things in every price range, and are quite uninterested in whether the customers—or the advertising medium—lean right or left.

Luxury goods—sellers of diamonds, mink coats, the more expensive motorcars, and the signatures of famous couturiers—favor the publications preferred by the rich, which are likely to be conservative. But the economy of America does not rest on luxury goods.

Producers of household products wish to reach large numbers of women readers and favor the publications these prefer; producers of durable goods do not want their advertisement thrown out with the daily newspaper and prefer publications that will lie on the sitting-room table for a week or a month; and a fall or shift in circulation influences them far more than any opinion expressed in the contents.

It is true that there is an unwritten law of newspapers and periodicals not to attack the products of advertisers. But is that their function? The prevention of misleading or untruthful advertising and the protection of the public from harmful or adulterated products are the functions of government.

Actually the press has taken the lead in pressing for the raising of standards and for pure-food-and-drug acts. A number of women's magazines have established their own tests and standards and producers have been eager to meet them.

ADVERTISERS do not, therefore, control the content of publications. I doubt whether any other form of financing would exert as little pressure. In twenty-eight years of active journalism I have had exactly one conflict with an advertiser, when my publisher supported me good-temperedly—and did not lose the advertiser, either.

And what is the aim of the publisher?

Like the advertiser, he wishes to sell his paper, for he is primarily in business. If he doesn't get circulation he won't get advertising, and if he doesn't please the public he won't get circulation. So, actually, it is chiefly the readers who control the press.

In my experience, it is often the readers, especially organized claques among them, who exercise the greatest intolerance ward opinions they do not like. Often very people who are most suspicious "control" by advertisers or "capitalist terests" are most actively set on stopp the typewriters of those writers with wh they disagree, organizing letter-writ campaigns to the editor, threatening boycott the paper if this or that writer is dropped.

Now, what is the proper attitude of writer under these conditions? Is it to his cloth to please the public?

I do not think so. Indeed, I believe journalism, no writing on public affair of any value whatever if it is exercised der any pressure, whether from public from private interests. Unpopularity is occupational hazard and the journal whose goal is anything other than truth, so far as he is able to discern it, is not, in opinion, worth his salt.

Now, that doesn't mean that the jou nalist, however much fidelity he may ha to this ideal, is always going to tell t truth, or make correct deductions fro established facts, or wise interpretations them. In the realm of ideas, error perpet ally contends with truth, and in the realm events, facts are often obscured. Furthe more, there is no such creature as an utter unbiased individual, and there is therefo no such thing as purely objective journa ism.

I can say with absolute truthfulness th in the ten years I worked as a foreig correspondent for two American newsp pers, the only instructions I ever receiv were to get the fac straight, and if possib before anyone else; countercheck source when there was an doubt; to keep my ow opinions out of the re porting of facts; and—c course—never to cabl what could be sent b mail.

Doing an injury puts you below your enemy; revenging one makes you but even with him; forgiving it sets you above him.

—B. FRANKLIN.

That was not characteristic then, and i not now, of all American newspapers. know two organizations whose reporter must rig even their news reports to suit th policy and prejudices of their publishers Neither organization was—or is—popula with the best journalists.

But it was—and is—more characteristi of the American press than of any other The British press—the best of it—is more literate than ours. But the British reporter in my experience, is more closely tied to the policies of his paper or government than ours, and less individually free.

As for the European continental press it has always been almost exclusively a party press. In totalitarian countries, whether Fascist or Communist, it is purely a public-relations outlet for the party and clique in power. A journalist may, out of conviction, propagandize for a candidate or a policy, but a propagandist, committed to any person or policy his masters may promote, is not a journalist.

But even in continental European countries where there are numerous political parties, most newspapers are party organs, supported and subsidized by political parties and engaged in promoting party policies, from news columns to editorials. Under such conditions you are bound to get a minimum of objectivity and a maximum of prejudice.

When I was a correspondent abroad, I made a game of clipping and pasting side by side news items—reports, presumably of facts—as they appeared in the Social Democratic Labor press, the nationalist conservative, and the bourgeois middle-of-the-road paper. When I would read in one paper that thousands of men had demonstrated in the streets, and in another that two hundred had participated, in one that the police had been forced to interfere, and in the third that they had dispersed quietly, I wondered what the business of the reporter was, since anyone not deaf and blind could with a pineapple lei! Two wonderful treats merge their glorious flavors here . . . savory, smoked ham and the new crisp-cut Dole Crushed. Just sear an inch-thick slice of ham on both sides, then bake slowly until done. Place on hot platter and encircle the ham with drained Dole Crushed heated in a little of the ham fat.

(Continued on Page 222)

★BAKED HAM SLICE

It's golden – it's glorious – it's the new

★PINEAPPLE-GOLD ICE CREAM

It's yours to enjoy in a matter of minutes. On top of snowy mounds of vanilla or coconut ice cream heap spoonfuls of the new Dole Crushed. That's all there is to it—except to marvel with each taste at the exquisite combination of the ice cream and those flavor-rich, crisp-cut pineapple morsels that Dole alone brings you.

crisp-cut DOLE crushed!

★SUPER STAND-BY DESSERT

. . . or breakfast fruit. Reach for a can of the new crisp-cut Dole Crushed. Spoon out those sparkling tender pineapple morsels into dishes that are appropriate for the occasion. Then watch those first-taste smiles expand into genuine delight at each spoonful of this tropic treat.

★By Patricia Collier
DOLE HOME ECONOMIST
Hawaiian Pineapple Company, Ltd.
215 Market Street, San Francisco 6, California

Test your wax paper 3 ways

1. AFTER 3 DAYS SEE WHICH KEEPS BREAD FRESHER! Cut-Rite is waxed through and through—not just surface-waxed—to protect expensive foods. Wrap good dinner leftovers in extra-heavy Cut-Rite the moment you clear the table. Cut-Rite keeps air out . . . fresh, moist food flavor in. You'll have more delicious dishes all week long.

2. SEE HOW CUT-RITE FOLDS WITHOUT SPLITTING! Fold it, twist it—pliable Cut-Rite doesn't crack or split. Wrap small things small and tuck in corners to save ice box space and extra dishes. Wrap flavor-strong foods—onion, cucumber, fish, cheese. Odor won't smell through, moisture won't soak through extra-heavy Cut-Rite.

3. SEE HOW CUT-RITE TEARS OFF QUICK AND CLEAN!

...'s famous ...dge makes ...onvenient ... to use. A ...per Product.

...

INTERNATIONAL NEWS PHOTO

One way of looking at a picture. Three-year-old takes upside-down view of painting at sidewalk art exhibit.

UNDER-COVER STUFF

By Bernardine Kielty

HOW is a painter going to show his pictures if he's poor? And if no one sees his pictures, what is the use of painting? One gallery in New York has an answer to this age-old question, and there is no reason why other large cities shouldn't look into it. On 57th Street, New York's famous Art Boulevard, lined with galleries where art and furniture and antiques from all over the world are sold at fabulous prices, this one modest gallery is there to remind us that artists still live and paint in unheated garrets, and that most of them are men whose names we have never heard. This is The Artists' Gallery, recently moved up from Greenwich Village.

One of its contentions is that most art today is sold not for its intrinsic merit or for the pleasure it gives, but for the name of the artist, the price commensurate with his fame. As a test, this gallery once held an exhibition of drawings by famous artists from all over the world with the name of each artist covered up, the idea being that you should buy what you liked and not what critics and salesmen have been telling you to buy. In line with this theory, The Artists' Gallery exhibits the work of men practically unknown, exhibits without any cost to the artist, and takes no commission for the pictures sold—contrary to the custom of practically all other galleries.

It's a small gallery and doesn't advertise, but the news has got round. Museums and collectors feel that they can't afford to miss any of its shows, and besides individual buyers, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Chicago Art Institute, the Whitney Museum, the Museum of Modern Art, the Barnes Foundation, and many well-known smaller museums, have all bought pictures. The Artists' Gallery is supported entirely by individual contributions and is a nonprofit enterprise.

"Art," as a Chinese once said, "is what one might call an essential luxury. A rich man with no appreciation of art becomes unbearably poor: while a poor man, with an inner delight in art and the outward ability to express beauty, becomes immeasurably rich."

If you are interested in modern art and what it is trying to say, we recommend BEST IN ART, by Emily Genauer, art critic, who has chosen 50 out of the 50,000 pictures she looked at last season in various galleries, reproduced them, and discussed the artist's intention, his method of painting and his place in the art scheme. Miss Genauer insists that every artist represented is a serious, sensitive person who paints because he has something to say, and not, as so many seem to think, just to irritate the public.

If, on the other hand, you want a close-up of an old master, there is JOHN SINGLETON COPLEY, by James Thomas Flexner, a biography of the early American painter illustrated by many of his masterly portraits—the aura of the Founding Fathers. Practically all that an artist of Copley's day could paint was portraits. He couldn't do religious pictures because the Protestants in those days objected to religious art; landscape painting suffered because "the early American God did not express Himself through nature, but stood back and judged nature, usually to its disadvantage." Genre painting, such as the Flemish were doing, was out of order in a country where social symbols were changing so constantly. But portraits were in perfect accord with Puritan thinking, which laid such stress upon the individual. To perpetuate themselves, in the absence of photographers, ministers and merchants and statesmen had to call upon the painters. Hence Copley, and Gilbert Stuart, and the Peales—Charles, Rembrandt and Raphael.

Everyone knows how American tourists used to fan out over Europe before the war, bent for all the art galleries. But do these same art enthusiasts ever think of going across their own country to look in at the many and very good art

(Continued on Page 16)

HARVEST GOLD HAM

Here's how to reap a harvest of applause! Glaze a Swift's Premium Ham with brown sugar and honey (do make sure it is Swift's Premium, America's traditional favorite). Surround with these tangy poached orange "flowers": Cut 4 oranges in half; cut down part way into 10 petal-like sections; remove cores. Heat 1½ c. light corn syrup in large skillet; arrange flowers in it, filling center with mincemeat. Cover; cook over mod. heat 15 to 20 min. (or bake in mod. hot—400° F.—oven) till rind pierces easily with fork. Serve hot. To bring out all Swift's Premium's mellow flavor, follow the easy cooking directions on the tag that comes with every ham. Then count on pleasure in full measure, for Swift's Premium Ham is truly the best-liked ham in all America!

BRIGHT IDEAS FOR THE DAY AFTER

Martha Logan's Ham Stuffed Apples: Add a stick of cinnamon broken into small pieces to syrup left from poaching oranges. Core apples and bake in syrup, basting occasionally. Fill cavities with minced baked ham 15 minutes before end of baking.

Ham Biscuits: Mix ½ to 1 c. minced ham with dry ingredients in your favorite baking powder biscuit recipe calling for 2 c. flour. Small biscuits are delicious teamed with fruit or vegetable salad. Or bake in shortcake layer for creamed vegetables.

Matchless flavor, mild yet zestful...
America's traditional favorite is

Swift's Premium Ham

2 STYLES! The Red Label brings you ham that's fully cooked—ready to eat. For easy cooking at home, look for the Blue Label. Both kinds are Brown Sugar Cured and smoked Swift's special way over genuine hardwood fires.

ose who think they can't afford a Norge freezer, we'd like to say this:

aps you can't afford to be without a Norge freezer."

Norge freezer pays for itself! It pays back its initial cost in a surgly short time. Then it goes on "paying"—by saving you money year of its life. Look at it this way:

certain perishable foods are plentiful and at the peak of perfechey are least expensive. That's the time to buy 'em. That's the time epare 'em and pop 'em into the freezer. Other foods are always ostly in wholesale quantities—meats and poultry, for instance—and where the real saving comes in!

ERTICAL FREEZER - Roomy compartments ehind individual doors—each with card older. Refrigerated shelves for constant emperature in each compartment. Storge: approximately 210 pounds.

HEST TYPE FREEZERS — For storage of arger quantities of food. Refrigerated alls and bottom; counterbalanced lids vith lockable latches. Three sizes: 10½-, 8-, and 26-cubic foot capacities.

Buy In Quantity When Prices Are Lowest

Your freezer can be the difference between ordinary meals and selected meals—between ordinary living and luxury living. For with a freezer in the home your daily menu knows no season: summer-picked fruits and vegetables all winter . . . fall-killed game all the year 'round. You'll set a table that will be the envy of your friends. You'll be known as the family who "really knows how to live"!

So—why deny yourself any longer? Why not make a date with friend husband to meet you at the Norge dealer's? "The best dealer in town sells Norge" and he's listed in your classified telephone directory. It won't take long to convince yourself that you really can afford a Norge freezer! Norge Division, Borg-Warner Corporation, Detroit 26, Michigan. In Canada: Addison Industries, Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

A BORG-WARNER INDUSTRY

SEE NORGE BEFORE YOU BUY

...ranges • ...ers • ...Freezers
... • ... Coolers

(Continued from Page 14)

galleries on the way? Not a bit of it. THE ENJOYMENT OF ART IN AMERICA, by Regina Shoolman and Charles E. Slatin, covers the work of the permanent collections in America and Canada. It is a fine job. You can put your finger on just what city contains what picture, you get the history of art from Egypt on down, and reproductions of the best in each period that can be found in this country's museums. It is a big book and expensive, but for the student of art who has a car it is a wonderful short cut to a course in art appreciation, and as such a real money saver.

• • •

CATALINA, Somerset Maugham's latest novel, is, in this department's estimation, one of his best. It takes place in Spain during the Inquisition, and is concerned with a miracle. It is a sort of about-face Bernadette. Catalina Perez is a young girl, crippled by an accident. Her lover has turned from her and she is deeply unhappy. Before the altar of the Virgin she prays for help, and lo! the Virgin appears and tells her that she will be healed—that by "the son of Juan Suarez de Valero who has best served God," a miracle will be performed. In those terrifying days, when Jews and Moors in self-defense sometimes turned Christian, when chance words by even the truest sons of the Church could be misinterpreted, when the torture chamber shadowed every home, Catalina's family begged the girl not to tell what had happened. But the secret burned in her breast, and before she knew what had happened the story was out and she found herself a cause célèbre.

MORGOLI-PIX

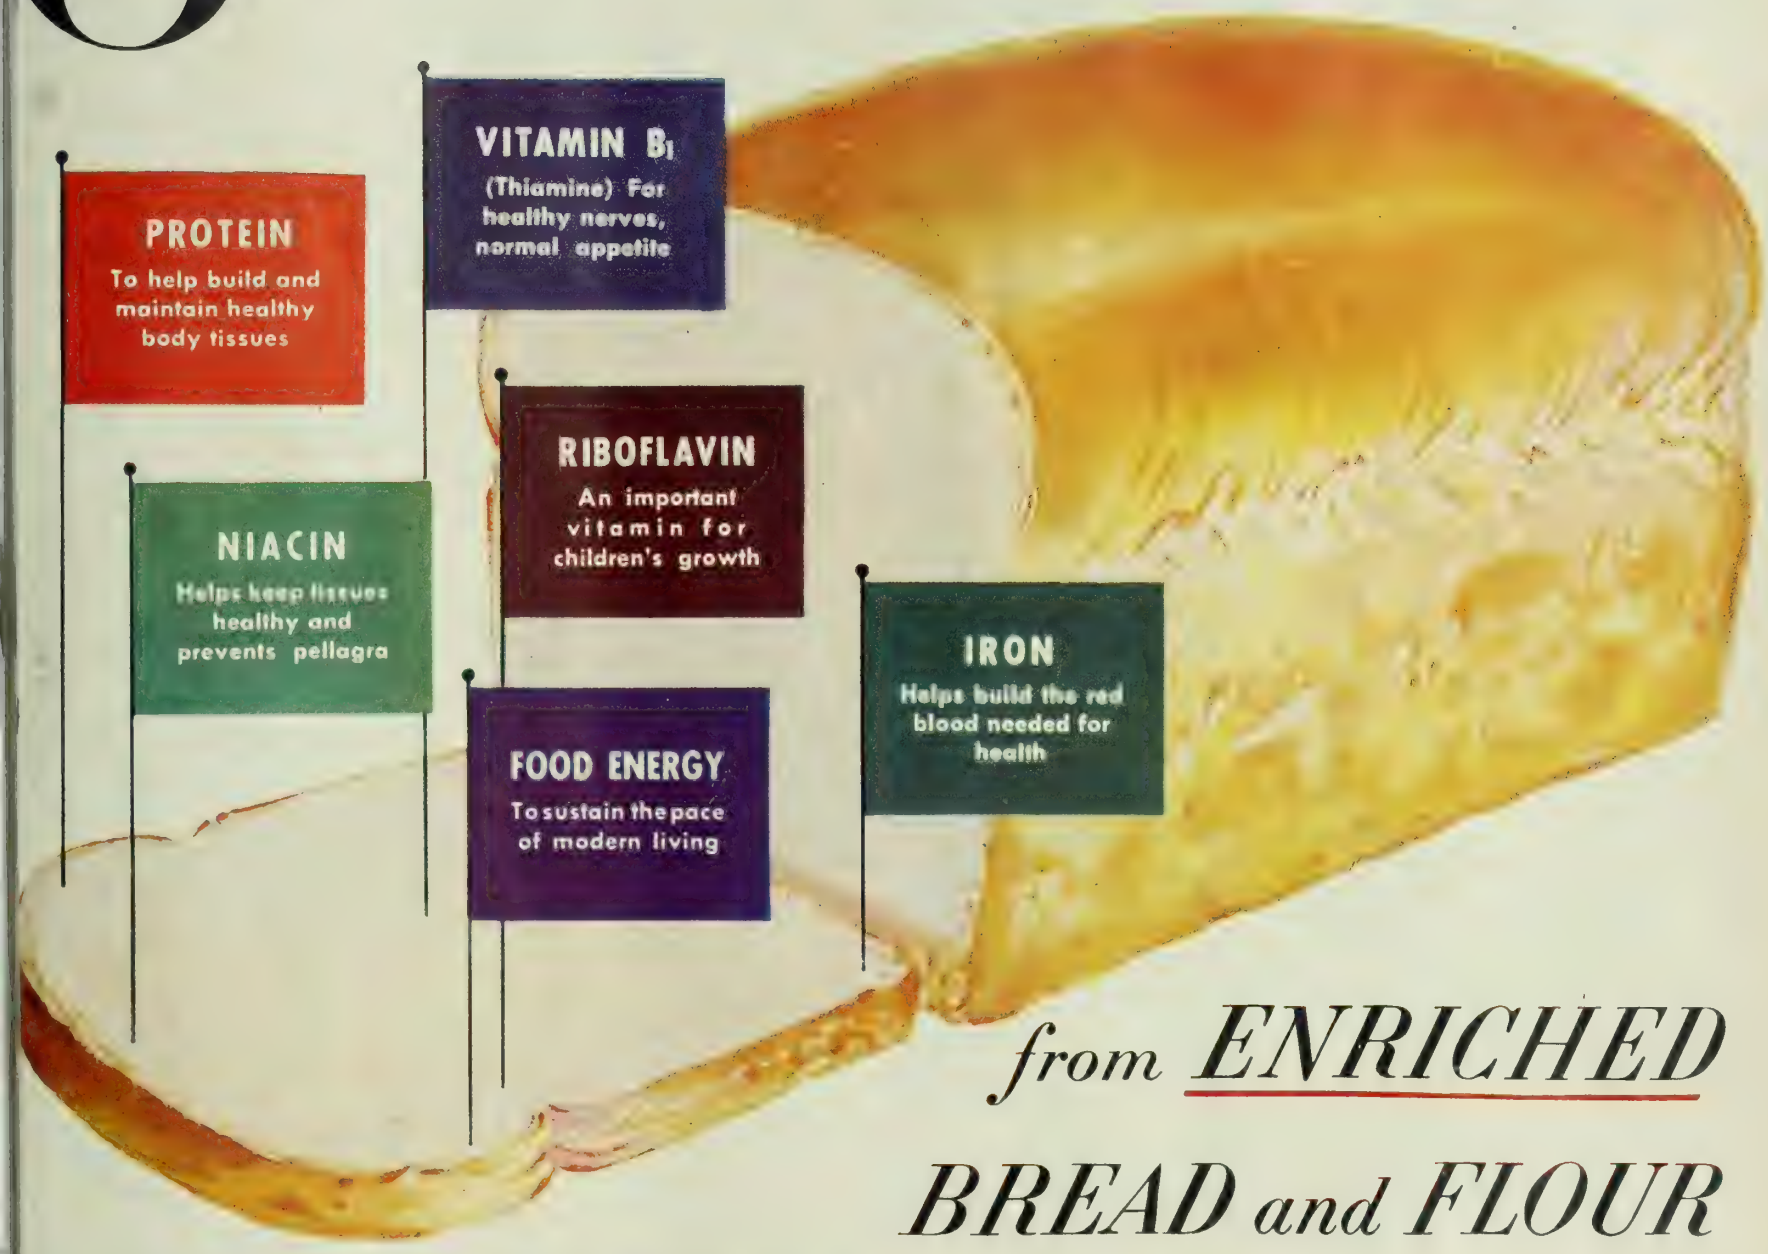
Somerset Maugham

The three sons of the de Valeros were the Friar Blasco, Bishop of Segovia; Don Manuel, captain in the King's army fighting infidels; and Martin, a baker. It is a perfect Maugham situation. The satire is flawless, the story-telling pure and simple and direct. Nowhere, outside of possibly CAKES AND ALE, do we have two personalities of such power and skill facing each other as the Bishop, who wants above all to serve his God, and the Prioress Doña Beatriz, who wants Catalina for her Carmelites. The fact that Doña Beatriz once loved the Bishop, before either he or she had entered the Church, adds a stiletto sharpness to her plotting.

Which son, if any, heals Catalina, and what, if anything, is the course of her own true love, is the story itself. But the overtones of ecclesiastical reasoning, the rivalry and ambitions among the religious, the contrast between simple people and mighty people, the unexpected clear vision of one unfrocked priest, and the direct rightness

(Continued on Page 18)

Heart's Delight



WHOLE FRUIT NECTARS
APRICOT · PEACH · PEAR

Whole fruit goodness! Whole fruit healthfulness! It's the original, irresistible "Juicidrink" for your whole family—bringing the zest of fresh, ripe whole apricots specially selected for nectar use.

Discover Heart's Delight Peach and Pear Nectars, too! Same tempting whole fruit quality! In a flavor-class by themselves, not only as a beverage, but also in alluring sherbets, salads, dressings, sauces, punches, desserts! Try the tested recipes on the back of every Nectar label.

6-way nourishment

from ENRICHED BREAD and FLOUR

What delicious variety you can have in breads...from the stores . . . or from your oven! Make your menus more interesting as well as more nutritious.

OUR MODERN BREAD! Think of it no longer as just an inexpensive way to get food energy . . . important though that is when we're living at so fast a pace. Read those flags! They tell you what enriched bread and flour really do contribute to the all-round balanced diet you and your family need.

From modern enriched bread and baked foods made with enriched flour you get 6-way nourishment! Remember that . . . every day at meal time, at snack time.

"IS BREAD FATTENING?" No; nutritionists tell us breads are no more fattening than any other food of equal energy content. The carbohydrates of bread are readily and easily converted into energy which is then used by the body as needed.

Copyright 1948 by Wheat Flour Institute

WHEAT FLOUR INSTITUTE

The nutritional statements in this advertisement are acceptable to the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

L&H Automatic ELECTRIC RANGE

Monotube hinged surface units, faster and easiest to clean.

Super "5000" Oven, extra large, recessed broiler and bake units.

Duo-Cook combination deep well cooker and surface unit.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

The range that makes good cooks better!

Your best recipes will be more temptingly delicious — your favorite pies and cakes even more luscious, every kind of cooking easier, faster, more fun — with an L&H! Its automatic wizardry is a boon to busy days. Its perfect performance a delight to jaded appetites. The most difficult dishes, the biggest family meals become suddenly easy under the magic of modern, high-speed units, and accurate time and temperature controls. You can bake, cook, fry, roast, broil faster and better than ever before. Flip a switch and it's all done automatically, while you do other things. Here truly is a range for luxurious living, for convenient, dependable meal preparation at its very best. See your L&H dealer. Write now for illustrated literature.

LINDEMANN & HOVERSON CO., MILWAUKEE 7, WISCONSIN

Also manufacturers of L&H Electric Water Heaters and L&H KEROGAS Oil Ranges

©1948

(Continued from Page 16)

of the Virgin over and above political machinations, are the strong fibers that bind the story together. The last third of the book will be a disappointment to some readers, and because of it—to our mind— CATALINA just misses being Maugham's greatest novel.

• • •

WE GATHER TOGETHER, by Sara Jenkins, is a good, sound, family novel that will be dearly loved by many readers. Sara Jenkins is daughter and granddaughter of Methodist ministers, and in her novel of three generations the six sons of the second generation are all Methodist preachers. "I wouldn't choose anything but a parsonage to grow up in," says Miss Jenkins, "because I got to know tramps, and prostitutes, and bankers and bishops, and once a dope fiend, right under my own vine and fig tree." The vine and fig tree of the novel are in a small Georgia town.

• • •

Another woman's book, this time not a novel, is Val Teal's IT WAS NOT WHAT I EXPECTED—about the joys and tribulations of having children and

REPRINTED FROM JOURNAL AMERICAN

COPR. 1947, KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC., WORLD RIGHTS RESERVED

"Don't ask for a drink of water yet. They're still awake!"

running a house. Hilarious in spots, and true as diapers, high chairs and bloody noses.

• • •

Reviewing books gives you a wanderlust. You read a book on the Far North and you dream of fjords and the land of the midnight sun; you read about Africa and you feel there is nature in the raw, and you must see it before you die. But the book that really got us was THE HEALTHY HUNZAS, by J. I. Rodale.

There is a land! Hunza is a remote country of Northern India rarely penetrated by travelers. It lies at an elevation of five or six hundred feet from the bottom of a deep cleft between two towering mountain ranges, the average height of which is 20,000 feet. In summer and winter one is never out of sight of snow, but in spring, when the miraculous awakening takes place, the whole countryside is studded with the sparkling blossoms of apricot trees, pastel-tinted in pink and white in the radiance of bright sunshine and pure blue sky.

In this enchanting land live the healthiest people in the world. According to Sir Robert McCarrison, a doctor who worked in Hunza for many years, the people are "fertile and long-lived, and endowed with nervous systems of notable stability." He never found a case of asthenic dyspepsia, of gastric or duodenal ulcer, of appendicitis, mucous colitis or cancer. Cases of oversensitivity of

(Continued on Page 21)

EASY DOES IT!

FEATHER TOUCH "BEST" EGG BEATER

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

PERFECT GIFT for yourself . . . for friends

$3.95 at good stores, everywhere.

SAVES WORK—stands steady, without sliding around, in any size bowl. No arm fatigue with the Ekco "Best" Egg Beater.

SAVES TIME—whizzes with a light feather-touch. Gives mixer results by hand.

EKCO "BEST" EGG BEATER

ANOTHER GREAT PRODUCT BY EKCO

EKCO PRODUCTS CO., CHICAGO 39, ILL.

Youngstown Kitchens of white-enameled steel fit every kitchen plan—old home or new. You'll marvel at the low price!

Dream kitchens cost less than you'd think the 48" twin-bowl Kitchenaider—a kitchen . Drainboard is sliding-removable. Second tra deep—11". Sink top of acid-resisting por- enamel. Doors and drawers sound-deadened. still greater utility with the new Mullinaider, tic waste-disposer unit. Fits all Kitchenaiders. optional equipment. Free home demonstration.

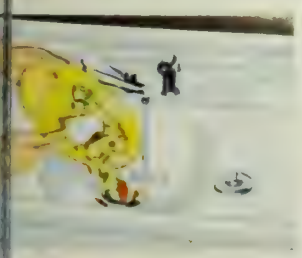
LOVELY, these Youngstown Kitchens.

But there's more to admire than their gleaming, efficient beauty. Just wait until you see the price!

The kitchen illustrated gives you an idea of what you can do with Youngstown Kitchenaider cabinet sinks, base and wall cabinets and accessories.



The 66" twin-bowl Kitchenaider speeds kitchen chores from food preparation to dishwashing. Like loads of work surfaces? You'll have them. How about storage space? Swing open the cabinet doors—open the smooth-sliding drawers. Indeed, here's a kitchen that only the leader, Youngstown, could build.

Best of all, this Youngstown Kitchen costs only about $16.00 a month (complete installation)—financing through dealer or bank. Others are equally low.

Your Youngstown dealer is the man with kitchen ideas—get acquainted! If you're building, specify a Youngstown Kitchen.

MULLINS MANUFACTURING CORPORATION
WARREN, OHIO
World's Largest Makers of Steel Kitchens

Youngstown Kitchens
BY MULLINS

agic! Mullinaider automatic sposer grinds away food scraps. n on cold water, flip Mullin- itch, scrape waste down drain . Sold as extra equipment.

See the swinging mixing-faucet and speedy rinse spray. Spray reaches all parts of sink top. Great for dishwashing and cleaning vegetables. Typical Youngstown value. See your dealer.

SEND COUPON TODAY!

GET THIS EXCITING BOOKLET!
20 pages featuring beautiful Youngstown Kitchens in color. Full details on Youngstown units and tips on arranging a new kitchen. Enclose 10c in cash. No stamps, please.

Please send me your Youngstown Kitchen booklet. I enclose 10c in cash.

I plan to remodel ☐
I plan to build ☐
I want Free Home Demonstration of Mullinaider ☐

Youngstown Kitchens
Mullins Manufacturing Corporation
Dept. L-948, Warren, Ohio

NAME _____ (PLEASE PRINT)

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ ZONE _____

COUNTY _____ STATE _____

What happens to LOVE on Monday?

On Sunday it was wonderful . . . her dearest love of a dress!

But then came Monday's wash-tub, and the love of a dress was gone! Nothing left but a sad and shrunken ruin.

But such a sad story need never happen! Get a dress with "Sanforized" on the label—and it CAN'T shrink out of fit, out of style!

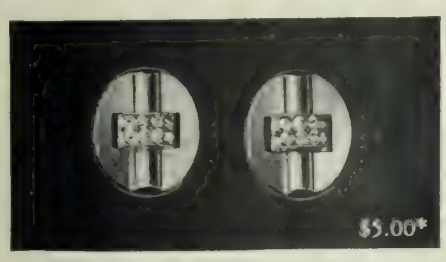
Whether you're paying $3 or $30, look for the "Sanforized" trade-mark and live happily ever after with every cotton dress!

The style will never shrink away from the dress with "Sanforized" on the label.

•SANFORIZED•
TRADE ® MARK

. Peabody & Co., Inc. permits use of its trade-mark "Sanforized," adopted in 1930, only on fabrics which meet this company's rigid shrinkage requirements. Fabrics bearing the trade-mark "Sanforized" will not shrink more than 1% by the Government's standard test.

Park Avenue
by Trifari



Jewels of inimitable chic, capturing the "400" air of New York's Park Avenue in their fashion-perfection.

Heavy links of gold-plated Trifanium pave their way to a magnificent medallion studded with rhinestones.

The wide bracelet repeats the same design, combining simplicity with elegance, good taste with richness.

"Park Avenue" by Trifari is typical of the exquisite workmanship and fashion flavor for which this house is famous. You'll wear this superb set with your most important Fall costumes. You'll find it at all fine stores.

Jewels by TRIFARI

design patent pending

*Tax Extra.

(Continued from Page 18)

the abdomen to nerve impressions, fatigue, anxiety or colds were completely unknown.

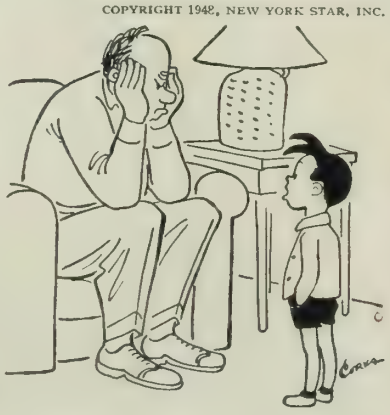
The Hunzas live right. They think nothing of walking sixty miles at a stretch, up and down the face of precipices. In midwinter one of their games is to make two holes in an ice pond, and dive repeatedly into one and come out the other. One Hunza made a two-hundred-mile trip by foot, which included crossing a mountain as high as Mont Blanc. He did the trip in seven days and returned fresh and untired. Their food is what Nature provides—milk, eggs, grains, fruits and vegetables. (In fact, it is the way their food is grown that started the whole thing: Mr. Rodale is the editor of Organic Gardening and author of PAY DIRT.)

To make his point about the relationship of food to health, Doctor McCarrison made a fascinating experiment: three groups of rats were fed on three different diets. The first group was fed the diet upon which the Hunzas live; the second group was fed the poor diet of the Southern Indians—Bengali and Madrasi—which is chiefly rice; the third group was given the diet of the lower classes of England (before the war)—white bread, margarine, sweetened tea, a little boiled milk, cabbage and potatoes, tinned meats and jam.

The results were terrific: at the end of two and a quarter years, among the Hunza rats there had been no case of illness; the Bengali rats suffered a variety of diseases which involved every organ of the body—nose, eyes, ears, heart, stomach, lungs, bladder, kidneys, intestines, blood glands, nerves and reproductive organs, also loss of hair, crooked spines, poor teeth, ulcers and boils; the English rats also developed most of these troubles, and in addition were nervous and apt to bite their attendants—they lived unhappily together, and by the sixtieth day began to kill and eat weaker ones among them!

• • •

We once produced some statistics about the size and shape of models' legs which, interestingly enough, brought in a stream of letters asking for further figures. The only additional fact we can produce right now is that seventeen of the Conover models stand six feet in their stocking feet.



• • •

Did you know that Cary Grant once did stilt walking? Why, we wouldn't know.

• • •

The American Indians solved the mother-in-law problem. To show respect for her, the Indian bridegroom never talked to his mother-in-law or met her face to face.

COPYRIGHT 1942, NEW YORK STAR, INC.

"Then don't think of her as your mother-in-law. Think of her as my grandmother."

This Is

OUR OTHER LIVING ROOM

Every woman's instinct of refinement responds to the taste and quality of Dodge interior appointments. They are rich and spacious, designed for complete living comfort.

Contrasting texture and color are beautifully blended. Windows, appointments and instruments quietly merge with upholstery and carpet into a refreshing excellence of ensemble.

Never has there been a greater pride in Dodge ownership than women are showing today as they acquaint themselves and all their friends with this new woman's world of automobile experience.

• • •

It is all-fluid driven for your ease and comfort. Its brakes are extra powered for your security. Its style and trim are as rich and fine as your own good taste.

Dodge

SMOOTHEST CAR "AFLOAT"

Lowest Priced Car with Fluid Drive

HOT SCHOOL LUNCHES... Idaho Provides

FOR HUNGRY SCHOOL CHILDREN

by MARGARET HICKEY

SCHOOL lunch is not a new problem for parents and teachers. Since schools began mothers have packed food into lunch boxes or paper bags for the noonday snack. Poor children came with little or no lunch at all, often eating it in secret so that none could see their meager fare. Little children often spilled theirs. Teachers shared their own cold meals with many a hungry child.

When children return to school this month, at least six million will be assured a hot lunch every day at nominal cost to parents—and without charge if they cannot pay. Public funds from state and Federal appropriations have made this possible under the National School Lunch Act of 1946, "a measure of national security, to safeguard the health and well-being of the nation's children." An additional million and a half children will benefit from free commodities purchased by the U. S. Department of Agriculture to support farm prices. Federal funds amounting to $75,000,000 will be divided among the states according to the number of school-age children and the per-capita income of the state. Until 1951 these Federal funds must be matched locally; after that states must put in $1.50 for every Federal dollar.

But the listless, tired child with a skimpy, cold lunch to eat will continue to dawdle over his lessons in thousands of schools. Two thirds of the children who live too far from school to return home at noon will still bring their lunches. Even though lunch programs have won general acceptance on both health and economy counts, communities that have them are still in the minority. So the cold lunch pail, which should have disappeared along with the dipper and water bucket and out-of-door plumbing, is still a part of the American school scene.

Nutrition studies made by the National Research Council in the past fifteen years have revealed that millions of our children are growing up with diet inadequacies. In a survey of over 2000 high-school pupils of low-income families in New York City, 74 per cent had a daily caloric intake below their energy needs. Other studies show that school lunches are a health aid for children from higher-income homes who spend too much on pop and candy bars. A canvass of one-day diet samplings in each of the 48 states showed that 45 per cent had no citrus fruits or tomatoes; 34 per cent had no dairy products; 25 per cent had no leafy or yellow vegetables; 12 per cent had no fish or poultry; 3 per cent had no whole-grain or enriched products.

Much credit is due the National Congress of Parents and Teachers for planning many of the best school-lunch projects. At their insistence officials have provided space, equipment, labor, supervision, with parents often helping out and also raising money to pay a part of the food costs. To state agencies and Federal government they have turned for the balance.

If your school is among the two thirds without hot lunches, there is work ahead for your local service club or women's group. Begin by making your community aware of the need. Organize a community nutrition council with representatives of schools, Red Cross, welfare, dental and prenatal clinics. Hot school lunches should be the concern of everyone.

Community groups may also work together to improve existing programs. With inflated food costs, the children most in need of a well-balanced meal will suffer if lunch prices are increased or the quality of the meals goes down. Since 42 state legislatures will meet in January, 1949, state programs can be expanded to give more assistance. Congress should be informed by interested citizens that it would be false economy to cut Federal funds for school lunches and risk impairment of the health of the nation's children.

THE END

IT is seven o'clock at night when Dorothy's father and mother return from a day's work at the laundry to their four-room shack near Fruitland, Idaho. Dorothy, who is 12, with eyes magnified to owl size by glasses on her pretty, pallid face, has supper waiting for them.

Her two younger brothers clamor for hamburgers. Dorothy shushes them angrily. "You know we don't have any meat—stupes!" She pours half a cup of fat into the pan, mixes it with flour and milk and pours it over boiled potatoes. She opens a can of peas and a can of peaches, piles a plate high with bread, and the Halsteads sit down to their usual meatless main meal, although this farm region is famous for its rich truck farms, superior cattle and fine orchards.

The Halstead children fix their own breakfast in the morning after their parents depart for work. Dorothy eats only cereal. She complains of a nervous stomach and says that she often loses her food.

Luckily for the Halsteads, they are among the 26 per cent of American school children who get a full-course, Government-subsidized lunch at school each day for the price of a drugstore hamburg. For 22 cents they have a meat dish, vegetable, dessert, all the bread-and-butter sandwiches they want and a half a pint of milk.

"When I went to school," a Fruitland farmer's wife recalls, "and times were bad, we took sandwiches of bread and lard." She grimaces at the recollection.

"Before the hot lunch was started here, some of my children brought plain bread, nothing else," quietly put in a teacher. "Now one child from a homesteader's family who gets lunch free eats 8 or 9 extra slices of bread a day."

Even in Fruitland's wealthiest homes, where home freezers bulge with luscious garden vegetables and prime beef the year round, the hot lunch at school has made a difference.

"My boy, now, he's the stringy type who always had sore throats and colds all winter," says a leader of the local P.T.A. "He hated cold sandwiches and I couldn't even fix a hot drink for his lunch box

(Continued on Page 253)

PHOTO BY HAROLD RHODENBAUGH—FPG

Lunchtime at Fruitland school. Young faces beam in anticipation of this tasty midday meal of hamburgers, potato salad, string beans, bread and butter, milk. A daily hot lunch provides each child with one third his daily food requirement.

there's a landslide to

TUSSY'S

CAMPAIGN COLORS

They're your winning make-up colors! They make glowing promises to every woman. And these promises are kept. Tussy's famous texture—that shimmering smoothness—lasts so long. These beautiful Tussy shades (Contraband and Midnight are the ones shown above) win admiration and bring you luck. Choose these or any pair of vibrant Tussy lipsticks and wear them proudly as your own campaign colors! Other Tussy Lipsticks—Garden Party, Raspberry, Blueblood, Merry Red. Each $1. Match them in Tussy Creme or Compact Rouge, $1. And Nail Polish, 60¢.

ALL PRICES PLUS TAX

REFERENCE LIBRARY

Hints for the Hostess

A LOVELY hostess, an attractive home, a party that is interesting and different—put them all together and you have the perfect combination for a successful year of club meetings and entertaining. September brings the beginning of these meetings and get-togethers, and the JOURNAL offers you booklets that will help make you one of the most popular hostesses in town! Use these suggestions to plan your entertaining schedule.

ENTERTAINING

2271. BANQUETS TO GIVE. Here are suggestions for a mother-daughter, candlelight, initiation banquet and nine others. Menu and decorating hints included. 10c.

2210. LET'S HAVE A PARTY. A novelty party is always fun! Here are nine ideas for parties that are different—also ideas for the menu and entertaining. 5c.

1783. THE HOSPITALITY OF YOUR HOME. The perfect hostess makes sure everything is correct. All the "do's" and "don't's" on entertaining. 15c.

1670. BREAKING THE NEWS. Of course you want to have a party when there is an engagement to be announced. 5c.

1531. SHOWERS. Maybe it is for the bride, maybe it is for the new baby. Here are suggestions for planning either shower. 5c.

1512. THE BRIDE. Planning a wedding presents countless problems—and each one needs the correct solution. Includes forms for invitations and announcements; hints for all weddings. 15c.

1530. PARTIES FOR YOUNGSTERS. All sorts of ideas for the under-twelve group. 5c.

1533. CIRCUS PLACE CARDS. A pattern sheet with instructions for making six different animals from colored paper. 5c.

1500. PARTY PUFFETS. Powder puffs, pipe cleaners, ribbon and matchsticks transform bits of cardboard into whimsical animal place cards. 5c.

1377. GAMES TO PLAY. Keep this handy when you want to play games—games for just two or for a crowd. 10c.

1168. FORTUNE TELLING. Fortunes are always fun, and for variety learn how to tell them with cards, tea leaves and palms. 10c.

BEAUTY

2274. DOUBLE DIETS. Food lists are included to help you plan a diet to reduce or a diet for vitality. 5c.

1536. LOOK ALIVE! HOW TO CULTIVATE YOUR OWN GOOD LOOKS. Check up on your skin, your figure, your hair style and make-up. Make sure that you are wearing the colors most becoming to you. 10c.

1295. ABOUT YOUR MOUTH. Inside and out, your mouth demands good grooming habits. For added fun, character-reading secrets are included. 5c.

1262. BANISHING BULGES. If you added extra pounds this summer, now is the time to get rid of them with a few simple exercises to be taken daily. Keep your figure trim! 5c.

1240. INVITATION TO YOUTH. Written especially for women past 35. Helpful hints on keeping young. 5c.

1234. HAND CARE AND CHARACTER. Perhaps you can't afford a weekly manicure at the beauty shop. Learn to do a professional job at home. 5c.

1230. PORE PROBLEMS. Beauty begins with a lovely complexion. Don't tolerate minor skin problems. Treat them effectively in your spare moments. 5c.

FOODS

1152. SANDWICHES FOR ALL OCCASIONS. Fancy sandwiches for your next tea; substantial sandwiches for your next outdoor meal. 5c.

1785. DAILY FOOD GUIDE. Planning meals, including necessary foods and preparing these foods most advantageously is mother's important job. Here is a guide to help you. 10c.

1781. ALL YOU NEED TO KNOW ABOUT VITAMINS. Be vitamin-conscious when planning your meals. Food sources are listed. 10c.

HOMEMAKING

139. THE BRIDE EQUIPS HER KITCHEN. Efficient planning is a help to every bride. Pointers on how to select equipment and what to buy. 5c.

1347. MOUNT VERNON ROOMS. If you are planning to redecorate in the Colonial manner, why not do it authentically? 25c.

1348. SPOTS AND STAINS. Instructions for removing over fifty stains safely and effectively. Keep this booklet handy. 5c.

1502. HANDBOOK OF SLIP COVERS. Making your own isn't impossible—especially with diagrams for cutting, fitting and sewing. Trimming ideas included. 10c.

1753. A PLAN FOR HOUSEWORK. Attending club meetings and parties necessitates an efficient schedule for your housework. 5c.

1810. DIRECTIONS FOR BLEACHING FURNITURE WOODS. Transform your old mission oak into modern-style furniture. 5c.

GARDENING

2209. AFRICAN VIOLETS AS A HOBBY. If you are having trouble with your plants, here are the answers to your problems. 10c.

2099. GERANIUMS AS A HOBBY. Information on soil, watering, humidity, fertilizing, summer salvage and pests. Also gives the history and description of popular varieties. 10c.

1667. PLANNING AND BUILDING THE GARDEN. A really lovely garden means forethought and planning. Everything you want to know about laying paths, building steps, walls, a lily pond or fences. 10c.

1666. SHRUBS AND TREES FOR THE GARDEN. Make sure your trees and shrubs get off to a good start with proper planting. Also information on when and where to plant them. 5c.

1665. YOUR INDOOR GARDEN. If house plants are your hobby, you will want this information on growing and caring for them. 5c.

1664. YOUR GARDEN OF PERENNIALS. Important information on preparing the beds, planting the seeds and caring for the growing plants. 5c.

1663. HOW TO PREPARE YOUR GARDEN SOIL. If your garden has been a disappointment, check your soil for better results. 5c.

1662. YOUR GARDEN OF ANNUAL FLOWERS. Successful annuals aren't just luck. 5c.

1605. BULBS BEFORE TULIPS. Everything you want to know about preparing the beds. 5c.

OTHER FEATURES

Lists are sent free on request. They give title, number and price of all our booklets and patterns.

2008. LIST OF DEPARTMENTAL BOOKLETS. About the home, the garden, child care and training, beauty, entertaining.

1695. SUB-DEB BOOKLET LIBRARY.

1660. LIST OF JOURNAL HAT AND BAG PATTERNS.

2333. CHILDREN'S PATTERNS LIST.

2076. THINGS-TO-WEAR PATTERNS. Aprons, blouses, accessories.

1571. CHECK LIST OF PATTERNS FOR JOURNAL KNITTED AND CROCHETED ARTICLES.

1752. MAKE-IT-YOURSELF PATTERNS. Handicraft for your home, your children, yourself.

We will gladly send any of these booklets and patterns if you'll order by name and number. They will be mailed anywhere in the United States and Canada upon receipt of stamps, cash, check or money order. Do not send stamped, addressed envelopes or Savings Stamps. Readers in all foreign countries should send International Reply Coupons, purchased at their post office. Please address all requests to the Reference Library, Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia 5, Penna.

The New

Age of Elegance

in stocking fashions and colors by Berkshire

Costume by Maurice Rentner, Hat by Lilly Dache for Frederick & Nelson*, Seattle*

Gently echoing the lavish look of rich fabrics . . .
sheer, sheer Berkshire stockings that are a fastidious accompaniment to a new, tasteful, polished manner of dress . . . a true Age of Elegance!

sheer . . . sheer . . . Berkshire stockings for the loveliest legs in the world . . . by the world's largest manufacturers of full-fashioned stockings © 1948 Berkshire Knitting Mills Reading Pa.

Making Marriage Work

Expecting too little of marriage is as bad as expecting too much

BY CLIFFORD R. ADAMS
Ph.D., The Pennsylvania State College, Department of Psychology

YOUR PARENTS' MARRIAGE

OF all the factors influencing your chances of happiness in marriage, one of the most significant is the character of your parents' marriage. If your parents were happily married, then by precept and example you have been trained to have a happy marriage. Having enjoyed a happy family life as a child, you expect it as an adult—and are prepared to work for it.

The importance of this factor can be indicated in numbers. Suppose John asked us to forecast his chances of married happiness. If we disregarded the factor of his parents' marriage, we would estimate his chances of married happiness at 54 in 100. But, since John's parents' marriage was unhappy, we must reduce our estimate from 54 in 100 to 30 in 100. Similarly, by the factor of her parents' unhappy marriage alone, Jane's chances are reduced from 52 in 100 to 37.

These statistics are the first published results of a research project begun ten years ago, and unique in that the individuals involved were first interviewed before marriage. Subsequent contacts have traced the progress of their married lives, and investigated factors affecting their degree of happiness. The complete findings will enable us not only to appraise an individual's chances of married happiness, but also to advise him—or her—on the most suitable type of partner.

In what ways can your parents' marriage a generation ago so strongly affect your marriage today?

- First of all, by a process of unconscious imitation, you learned attitudes and habits from your parents which you will carry with you into your own home. If your parents talked things over, settled differences by compromise or persuasion, if they trusted each other, this will be your standard of normal behavior, and you will try to act the same way. On the other hand, if your parents attempted to settle differences by quarreling, if each was constantly trying to dominate the other, if the atmosphere was one of suspicion and distrust, these things will seem to you, if not desirable, at least normal, and your behavior is likely to mirror theirs.

- If you came from a happy home, you value your parents' opinion, and you are likely to choose a mate of whom they will approve. And this factor, too—parental approval of a match—is shown by the research described earlier to improve significantly chances of married happiness.

- If your parents achieved a happy marriage, they want and expect similar happiness for you. Since you value their opinion, you do not want to disappoint them. This single fact is a powerful deterrent to divorce. You go into marriage, not with the feeling that you have an easy out if things don't go to suit you, but with a powerful determination to make it work.

Children of unhappy homes are likely to develop one of two attitudes toward marriage. At one extreme, you feel your marriage must be successful, in order to compensate for your unhappy childhood. You expect much, you try too hard, and you are doomed to disappointment, if not divorce.

At the other extreme, you assume that because your marriage was unhappy, yours will be too. You are so bitter you decide not to marry at all. Or if you do, you reserve a mental rain check, so that you can go back to single life. Since you feel that your marriage will probably fail anyway, you make no special effort to make it succeed.

Neither attitude provides a favorable basis for married happiness. That is why it is so important for a person who has had an unhappy home background to select a mate whose parents were happily married. At least one of the two people involved will then possess many of the attitudes that go with successful marriage; perhaps, with patience and tolerance on both sides, the other can acquire them.

If you are already married, do your best to achieve a successful marriage, not only for your own sake, but for the sake of your children. If you set them the example of a happy family life, you are passing on to them a heritage far more likely to ensure their happiness than any material estate.

ASKING TOO MUCH

A WIFE'S demanding attitude is easy to recognize if big issues are involved. But a steady procession of little demands can be equally troublesome, and can gradually destroy the happiness of a marriage. Unfortunately, many wives ask too much of their husbands without realizing it. Here are some of the "little ways" of asking too much:

Household chores, a source of relaxation to some husbands, are irritating and burdensome to others. Though any good husband will help out in an emergency, you should adapt your routine requirements to his attitude. If your husband detests mowing the lawn, fixing the faucet, painting the porch furniture, don't fill his evenings and week ends with too many such chores, or he may look for excuses for not coming home.

Evening checkup. Though it's desirable for a wife to be interested in her husband's activities, she should avoid subjecting him to a nightly catechism concerning details—whom he saw, where he lunched, how much money he spent, and why he was fifteen minutes late.

Complaint by comparison. Mrs. Jones has a new automatic washer, the Smiths have a new car, the Browns are planning a trip. The wife who dwells on other women's possessions may not criticize her husband in words, but her attitude implies an unfavorable comparison with other husbands.

Public Disparagement. A wife's criticism of her husband, in the presence of outsiders, is an upsetting performance to all concerned. Yet many a wife who deplores such behavior will humiliate her own husband by little efforts to "improve" him in public—correcting his grammar, jesting about his table manners, or supplying the punch line to his joke.

Little jabs like these, if continued, can rob a marriage of its sweetness. If too much is asked, in big ways or little, accomplishment is likely to fall short of expectations, and disappointment results. But if expectations are reasonable, both partners share the thrill of every achievement. Check yourself on these five points:

- What have you to offer? Are you sure you are giving as much as you expect from your husband?

- Do you praise your husband in some way, at least once a day? When he does something specifically for you, do you show your appreciation?

- Think of the men your close friends married. All things considered—income, ability, personality and disposition—doesn't your husband show up pretty well?

- How about you—how do you compare with the wives you know, as a cook, as a housekeeper, as a companion? Do you honestly show up better than they—or as well?

- How often do you admit that you are wrong, and that you sometimes fall short of perfection?

It is easy for all of us to project our failings upon the other. Maybe a little careful reflection will show you that you are asking too much. It's worth going over the list a second time, for this form of selfishness is one of the hardest faults to recognize in ourselves.

Is your home happy?

A happy home depends upon many things. If possible, both you and your husband should independently answer these questions with an honest "yes" or "no."

1. Is mealtime a pleasant occasion for all?
2. Do installment payments exceed 10 per cent of total income?
3. Is your home comfortable and satisfying?
4. Do you lack essential laborsaving conveniences?
5. Are birthdays and other important dates usually celebrated?
6. Does either mate drink or gamble too much?
7. Are over half of any misunderstandings largely your fault?
8. Is your home shared by friends or relatives?
9. Can you make a compromise on a "principle"?
10. Are there overdue bills that are difficult to pay?
11. Are both proud of the appearance of the home?
12. Is any member of the family in poor health?
13. Does the family usually attend church together?
14. Does your mate's lack of co-operation worry you?
15. Are both of you glad to have friends visit you?
16. Does your mate's attitude toward the opposite sex bother you?
17. Are you two good "matches" for each other?
18. Do you have many arguments about the children?
19. Do you two take time to talk things over?
20. Do you have a "problem" child?

Credit one point for each odd-numbered question answered yes and for each even-numbered item answered no. Your home is probably quite happy if your score totals 16 or more (or if the total for both of you is 33 or more). With a score of 13 or less (27 or less if paired) see if some improvement cannot be made.

DO YOU AGREE?

My wife admits I have been a good husband, but is walking out on our marriage of five years to pursue a career (and a man), possibly to remarry. She is leaving me the children. If I remarry a few years hence, could she regain their custody?

Since you are seeking the divorce, consult your attorney on how to keep the children. Under the circumstances you describe, she has no claim on them. The mere fact of having given birth to children does not guarantee a woman their custody.

As new as Tomorrow's Home...

The Ironer that Folds Away

Now you can choose the room in which you iron

KITCHEN

UTILITY ROOM

SEWING ROOM

The Peak of Quality

FOR MORE THAN THIRTY-FIVE YEARS

Apex

CLEANERS WASHERS
IRONERS

The newest and finest in convenient hour-saving Automatic Ironing

A new day in ironing is here! For the first time, here is a full-size ironer that you can place wherever in your home you prefer to iron . . . an ironer that folds away into a compact "table top" cabinet that offers valuable extra work surface when the ironer is not in use. Here is the only ironer with the patented Apex "floating roll" that makes ironing so much easier and faster.

Your local Apex dealer either has or soon will have the new FOLD•A•MATIC ironer ready for delivery. Ask him to show you how you can sit down in comfort, press a simple control with your knee or finger, and let the FOLD•A•MATIC do the work. You've seen ironers before, but none so easy to use, so easy to place conveniently in your home as the new FOLD•A•MATIC.

THE APEX ELECTRICAL MANUFACTURING COMPANY · CLEVELAND 10, OHIO

For more details on "The Ironer that Folds Away", write for beautifully illustrated new folder.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

What's New—and What's News!

Look who's talking. . . . it's Sub-Debs reporting in a round-the-country, just-for-fun survey on the newest slanguage—what teen-agers say they're saying these days. These colorful new additions to the high-school dictionary range from variations on the familiar jive-talk oldies to an original and amusing kind of corner-casbah chitchat called the "few" language.

Slang expressions vary greatly from the East Coast to way out in the cactus country (and many fellows and girls still prefer to have their says in straight English); but just for instance, out in Wyoming a "buzz boy" might pick up his "neat deal" or "cream cutie" for a "rocky-doo" evening, unless he's too "bushed" or "feeling watery" and would rather just spend the time with the boys.

A girl from Wisconsin (according to her favorite fella) is a "cutie," and if she's had a good date, she'll tell you it was "hmmmmmmmm" or "rah-tee-dah." In Arkansas only a "knot-head" (that's a character from the carnival) would turn down a date with a "creampuff" when the chances are the evening would be "something to boing about."

And down in the magnolia country—Alabama, that is—any "steady Freddy" wants a "sweet sue" for his date so they can pool their fun in planning a "swoonful time."

And "ruff and ragged" Arizona is the state with a teen-talk all its own. It's called the "few" language and it has "few" rules—just one, to be exact. That rule states that the only adjectives allowed in teen-age conversation are "few" and "very." So if a local hombre out Arizona way happens to ask you, "How's the weather, bub?" the only possible answer is "It's raining 'few'" or "The sun is shining 'very.'" Sounds confusing at first, but it's just amusing—"very"!

And now for some miscellaneous translations to help your eavesdropping round any high-school hangout from coast to coast. In other words, "everybody's saying it!" and here are some of the newest, favorite slang terms: the opposite of B.T.O. (you remember—"big-time operator") is now T.W.O. ("teeny-weeny operator"); W.O.W. means "worn-out wolf"; and D.D.T., of the high-school variety, means just what you think it does—"drop dead twice."

That thirty-five cents an hour smart gals get for baby sitting is known as "hush money"; students begin to worry when their scholastic average drops "below C level"; a tightwad on a date is dubbed a "slow dough"; the family car is the "woo wagon"; to "rack up" means to keep quiet; a new love in your life is a "happy heart attack"; and any girl whose favorite subject is "boyology" will add "rugged," "royal," "sharp 'n' shrewd" or "peachee-keen" to her vocabulary to describe her favorite beau boy.

And for favorite make-it-mean-anything phrases, "For crying out soft!", "Dig a hole, mole" and "Bless your little pointed head!" lead the list. And if you're still just "crawling with curiosity" to know more of the newest slanguage language, keep your ears open round the local Cokery till you hear a Sub-Deb talking!

What's doing after dark? . . . With most teen-agers, the favorite dating pastime is still dancing—any kind of dancing from swing-your-partner numbers in the gym to a little sweet-and-slow waltzing at a school prom with such all-time favorites as Smoke Gets in Your Eyes, Embraceable You and Stardust setting the background music.

But for a casual date, without the fancy trimmings, our Sub-Debs suggest two new smarty parties to give at home, with little work for the hostess, but extra fun for the guests. Make your plans around a serve-it-yourself menu for a "soda fountain" or a "Dagwood sandwich" party. For the No. 1 shindig put up a soda fountain made from a long table set with ice cream plus bowls of trimmings—everything from chopped nuts to maraschino cherries, pineapple cubes and plenty of chocolate and marshmallow sauce. Each guest gets a generous dish of vanilla ice cream and a crepe-paper apron as a starter, and then he's on his own to go wild in creating an individual super-sized double-whammy sundae! Only rule at the party: each guest must eat his own concoction. And don't worry about anyone's wanting seconds!

For even heartier appetites, how about starting this party in the kitchen, à la Dagwood, with all the makings on hand for giant three-inch Dagwood sandwiches? Each fellow and gal turns chef to make his own sandwich (have plenty of meat spreads, peanut butter, cheeses, and so on, ready), and no one is allowed to taste a bite until the sandwich has reached three inches by measurement! (To keep the cost down, cut the bread in three-quarter-inch slices to start with.) This is one party too many cooks can't spoil.

Fashion is funny. . . . Round the country, teen-age girls still have that look-alike pattern when turned out in their Sunday best. For schooltime, sweaters and skirts or full skirts with Gibson-girl blouses are rated tops, and it's still "dem golden slippers" that brighten up a date dress any evening. But as added fancy-nancy wardrobe touches, many Sub-Debs have fads of their own.

The Philadelphia gals pin their initials in gold on their wool socks, one letter to each sock (try any novelty shop), or wear two pairs of socks at once—one pair in each of the school's colors. With the tops of one turned down over the other, you have the school colors "from head to foot." The same crowd wears a double-ribbon bow tie, also in school colors, on tailored white school-day blouses.

Out in Arizona, when a girl is going steady she lets the world in on her secret by lacing her shoes upside down, and in Alabama a girl puts her heart on her sleeve by wearing a big bright bow tied at the back of her hair. The West Virginia peaches report that all the smoother honeychiles are wearing shorter hair-dos, and even the muscle men round school have taken to peroxiding "lucky streaks" in their hair. From Wisconsin comes a new friendship trick for girls—you wear one fancy earring and who wears the other? Why, your best girl friend, of course—just to show you are best friends.

Shirts and blue jeans (or Levis, if you live west of the Rockies) are still the favorite rompin' and relaxin' outfits for girls round the country, and the same blue jeans, worn with sport shirts or cashmere sweaters, are standard wear for many high-school fellows.

Along the West Coast, boys like Levis teamed with leather flying jackets, or well-pressed khaki trousers and shirts (picked up at war-surplus centers) for casual school wear. In Arizona, a smooth operator may pair his Levis with a gaudy shirt and high boots; in Los Angeles he paints them with the names of girl friends in bright paint; in Arkansas he rolls them up above the ankle and wears a striped T shirt or a gay tropical print; and in West Virginia no Levi combo is complete unless supported by bright-red suspenders!

Around Seattle, some of the gayer lads have sewed bits of lace on the cuffs of their cords to imitate the girls' ruffled petticoats; in Arkansas the boys go all out for that "bold look" by tying their ties in extra large knots and wearing old saddle shoes painted red, green and orange. In San Francisco and out that-away, the well-dressed chaps dye their shoes a deep, dark brown and shine them till they catch the sun; and down South black shoes, brightened with strips of colored celluose tape, are all the rage.

Around the Midwest (or so the Sub-Debs say!) all the boys like the school-sweater-and-corduroy-slacks combination for every-day wear, while an occasional character sports a sequined necktie and a bright-banded Panama hat, crown pushed in and brim turned up all the way around. Well, maybe fashion is funny—but in high school, it's part of the fun too.

Two's Company! Three's a Crowd!

. . . but four or more can be a Sub-Deb Club, a club that's fun for everyone! First get your best gal pals together to map plans, then write to Maureen Daly, LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Independence Square, Philadelphia 5, Pennsylvania, and ask for all the information on forming a Sub-Deb Club all your own. We'll send you a membership blank, membership cards, club charter and Sub-Deb Club Handbook—everything you need to start the fun. And remember—everyone can be a Sub-Deb! Let's hear from you.

THE SUB-DEB . . . EDITED BY MAUREEN DALY

IN AS LITTLE AS 3 MINUTES!

PRELL Removes Dandruff · Leaves Hair Radiant!

New! Exciting!

YOU'LL LOVE THIS AMAZING
Radiant-Creme SHAMPOO

Procter & Gamble's Shampoo Sensation! Prell's exclusive Radiant-Creme formula leaves your hair more radiant than any soap shampoo, cream or liquid! And doctors' examinations proved that Prell removes unsightly dandruff in as little as 3 minutes. Think of it, hair shiningly radiant and free of ugly dandruff—just by shampooing with this wonderful new emerald-clear Radiant-Creme!

Concentrated for economy!

Yes, Prell goes farther than any other known shampoo . . . one trial will prove it! Prell's so handy too, no drip or spill from that streamlined tube—no messy jars, no slippery bottles to break! The whole family goes for Prell . . . get a supply of this new Radiant-Creme shampoo in the handy tube for your whole family today!

MADE BY
PROCTER & GAMBLE

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

That handy Prell tube makes shampooing fun! No liquid to run down into your eyes.

For radiant hair—this Radiant-Creme. Leaves hair smooth, soft, shining, lovelier!

No embarrassing dandruff when you use Prell—regular Prell shampoos control it!

IT'S A NAUTICAL KNOCKOUT! That space-wasting "jog" is now a shipshape "study-cabin" for your young skipper. The "masts" dividing it from the "stateroom" are plywood pillars . . . the window curtain a discarded sail. But the ship's deck floor? That's the secret of this wonderful room! It's actually a Sloane random-plank effect in Inlaid Linoleum, pattern 1610, trimmed with Koroseal Cove base, pattern 4014.

IT'S A PLAY ROOM, it's a bedroom, for a lucky little girl! The lattice? That's 10-cent store ribbon. The lovely new rugs? They're not costly Axminsters. They're Sloane Resilient Enamel Rugs, No. 3196. Buy yours in sizes to fit your rooms. They cost so little and you just unroll them on your floors.

WASTE SPACE BECOMES A SEWING ROOM. Second-hand shut- ost 50 cents screen it from sleeping area. And easily afford the luxury of that beautiful wall-to-wall floor covering. It's inexpensive Sloane Resilient Enamel, 5257, a new Chinese matting effect with floral ed with Koroseal* Cove base, pattern 4008.

We do a Problem room 3 ways

Each one becomes a double-duty beauty with Sloane Quality Linoleum Products . . . famous for better design and truer color.

HAVE you a "space-waster" in your home? A room-with-a-jog like this? Here are three happy answers to show you how easy—how little it costs—to turn waste space into useful room—pleasingly decorated, color-perfect. Just do as decorators do—start with the floor—a new Sloane floor to inspire you. Try it! You can't go wrong!

See your Sloane-Blabon dealer. You'll find the perfect floor to please your taste and suit your home and your personality—Inlaid and Marbletone Linoleum with matchless, permanent colors . . . Koroseal,* the new, miracle plastic in Tile, Cove Base and Minicove—jewel-brilliant, mirror-bright—never grows old, never needs waxing . . . Asphalt Tile that wears and wears and costs so little . . . Resilient Enamel Rugs, Floor Covering and Wall Covering in stunning new patterns and designs. You've never seen anything like them!

*® B. F. Goodrich Co.

Keep your floors bright and new with Sloane Quality Linoleum Wax.

SLOANE Quality
LINOLEUM PRODUCTS

SLOANE-BLABON CORPORATION
295 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

EVERYBODY GETS IT

By Irene McDermott

HAVE you ever had adolescence? Well, if you haven't, you're either under twelve or you're a parent. It's infectious or contagious or something. Practically everybody gets it. Except parents. It seems they never had it when they were young.

It keeps you in a sort of dither most of the time, like not knowing whether to go all out for pigtails, bobby socks and pop's plaid shirt, or slink around in a tucked-in sweater and mother's nylon stockings, your hair on top of your head. Of course it's practically impossible for me to express my personality (even if I knew which way I wanted to express it) with mother around being helpful all the time and wearing that "wringing her hands" look on her face.

It's the same way with Frank Sinatra and Butch Parker. I can't tell where Frankie leaves off and Butch begins. And Butch doesn't seem to know the score either. One time you'd think I was Betty Grable and Lana Turner rolled into one; the next time he sees me, I'm practically Cass Daley minus. But Butch is zingy! He panics me—but absolutely!

But to get back to adolescence; perhaps I can explain it better this way: convalescence is that time in between being sick and getting well; adolescence is that time in between being a child and an adult.

And I've got it. I don't hurt anyplace and I feel fine, but I've got it just the same. I wouldn't even have known it if I hadn't overheard mother tell Mrs. Curtis.

Janet Curtis, my best friend, has it too. She's all broken out with it. I'm not broken out any. I did have two bumps, but mother rushed me down to Doctor Adler. He shook his head and told mother, "Don't give her any more chocolate!" So mother clamped down, as only mother can. I had to depend entirely on outside sources for every bite of chocolate I got! But it worked. I didn't have any more bumps.

And adolescence is not being able to decide whether to go to the Dan Dailey movie at the Bijou or stay home and do your homework—when you practically know you'll have to do your homework, parents being what they are, always around in the ointment and all.

And you never know when it's going to hit you. Adolescence, I mean. Like the other night when I couldn't eat my dinner, mother simply let me go upstairs without a word about cleaning up my plate. I heard her whisper to father, "It's just adolescence." And all the time I thought it was the two double chocolate malteds Janet and I had after school, or maybe the bag of potato chips Butch gave me.

And the other day I got mad at Dody Chalmers and called her a low-down two-faced chiseler over the telephone just as mother came into the hall. When I ran upstairs bawling, mother just looked frustrated and mumbled something about adolescence. Any other time she would have given me a smack and made me apologize to Dody.

Then the next day she tried to draw me out v-e-r-y tactfully, as to what the rumpus was about. Said we should confide in each other and some more mother-and-daughter stuff. Why, sure, I tell my mother everything. Why not, for goodness' sakes? But do you think I'd let her, or anybody, know that sneaking Dody Chalmers had practically bribed Butch Parker to ask her for a date? Not me. That'll die with me. He'll suffer, too, you'll see. She can't write his English compositions for him!

But to get back to my adolescence. The other evening I came in and flopped in a chair and fairly groaned, I was so tired. Mother patted me on the shoulder and said it was natural for me to be tired—adolescence—and that I needn't help with the dishes. Sacred guppies, was I surprised! I thought I was tired from the baseball game Janet and I played with the Grim Reapers.

I'm not the rugged type, and ordinarily I wouldn't be drip enough to go out for baseball—but there's a new man in school, and he was catching. Ping (Rhodes is his name), he's a riot—actually.

But the very next night when I was just as tired—tennis that time (and can that man play tennis! I can see where he gets his nickname). He kept saying "love" all the time whether it was a love game or not. He's zingy! He panics me—but absolutely.

Where was I? Oh, yes, adolescence—and I was tired and I groaned like Bette Davis and gasped, "It's—my—adolescence again!" Mother just snapped her eyes and shut her lips tight and said, "Young lady, you get right out there and do those dishes!" So you see you can't even tell yourself when it's adolescence or something else.

My brother George tried it too—after he saw me get out of the dishes that night. He's eight. George, I mean. When father told him to rake up the leaves in the front yard, he made an awful face and said he had a pain in his back. He said he felt like he was getting adolescence from me. Father got his little stick (which he never uses, it's just for effect) and he said loud, "You rake the leaves young man, in the front yard and the back!" George gave me a dirty look, but I couldn't help it because he wasn't old enough to get adolescence.

BUT what curdles me is the attitude parents take about such things. You'd think I was still a child. The other night I was on the porch crunched down in the swing thinking about Mike Casey. He's simply zingy. He panics me—absolutely. But the folks thought I was over at Janet's and they were talking me over. Before I could cough or anything, father had practically blown a gasket about Mike hanging around so much—so then I had to keep still. Father was saying, but strenuously, "Week before last it was Butch Parker, last week it was that new Rhodes boy, and now it's—Mike Casey!" I heard mother shushing him with, "Don't get so wrought up, dear; she'll get over it—it's only adolescence."

Ye sacred guppies! So it's only that again. And I thought sure I was in love this time! THE END

Set No. 3462/5. Table size 34 x 62" extended, 34 x 50" closed. Choice of colors: Table: white or canary. Chairs: seats and form-fitting backs richly upholstered in canary, red or black; seat and back panels in gleaming white Arvinite.

Exclusive new features—make Arvin the set you'll be happiest to own!

DE LUXE ARVIN Metal Chrome DINETTE SETS

FIRST, there's the new "Miracle" slide-away extension leaf, self-storing, that slips into place as easily as you'd open a door! Just as thrilling is the new long-life Arvinite finish, with its brilliant, enduring luster, that resists chipping, cracking, acids, alcohol and boiling water. The deep-cushion upholstered chairs, covered with scuff-proof Vinyl fabric, will produce sighs of comfort from your family or guests — and there's room for eight with the table extended. You'll take pride in the exquisite styling and beauty of the semi-oval table, with its distinctive curved legs that increase knee and leg room — and the equally graceful chairs. The tasteful color combinations, the gleaming chrome, so easy to keep bright, and the durability that goes with Arvin quality, will give you life-long satisfaction.

NOBLITT-SPARKS INDUSTRIES, INC.

Columbus, Indiana

Arvin Metal Chrome Dinette Sets • Arvin Metal Outdoor Furniture • Arvin All-Metal Ironing Table

IT'S TERRIFIC

THIS Bargain Offer TO ACQUAINT YOU WITH

NEW 4-WAY IMPROVED DREFT

1. MORE SUDS THAN ANY PRODUCT KNOWN!

You've never seen such suds! Ounce for ounce in hardest water, improved Dreft makes more suds than any product known. Grease-cutting suds that make dishes shine—even without wiping!

2. MILDEST EVER TO YOUR HANDS!

Clean!—that's how your hands feel. There's no greasy, slippery feeling after using improved Dreft. And gentle Dreft does not contain alkali the way all soaps do!

3. DELIGHTFULLY "SNEEZE-FREE"!

That's really good news for your nose! Improved Dreft contains less irritating "dust" than any other leading dishwashing product of its kind!

4. WASHES ¼ MORE DISHES!

Save money while you save time. A package of improved Dreft weighs more, much more. Washes one-quarter more dishes than before!

MORE WOMEN USE DREFT FOR DISHES AND FINE WASHABLES THAN ANY OTHER BRAND!

NEW DREFT OFFERS YOU

4 CHIP-PROOF REFRIGERATOR DISHES WITH LIDS

MADE OF GENUINE STYRON PLASTIC

2 PINT SIZE · 1 QUART SIZE · 1 BUTTER DISH

$1.50 VALUE FOR ONLY 75¢ AND ONE DREFT BOX TOP!

SUPPLY LIMITED— Mail This Order Blank Now!

DREFT, Dept. A, Box 2178, Cincinnati 1, Ohio.

Please send me . . . sets of Chip Proof Refrigerator Dishes. Enclosed find 75c and 1 Dreft box top for each set ordered, (no stamps accepted)

NAME

ADDRESS

ZONE

CITY

STATE

... to place sufficient postage on your envelope. Please allow ... 21 days for your dishes to reach you. This offer expires ... 1, 1949. Offer good in continental United States (except ... and), and Hawaii

DREFT MAKES DISHES SHINE —even without wiping!

® A HYMOSOL PRODUCT

PROCTER & GAMBLE'S AMAZING SUDS DISCOVERY

Fifty Years Ago in the Journal

In September, 1898, Wilhelmina began her fifty-year reign over the Netherlands. Fresh from its victories over Spain, the U. S. fleet steamed up the Hudson amid wild acclaim. Teddy Roosevelt was running for governor of New York and Barnum's fat lady (500 pounds) expired at the age of 44.

Writes Editor Bok on the subject of women's clubs in the September, 1898, JOURNAL: "As long as a women's club does not take up political questions, in which it can do no good, but effect much harm, it deserves a mighty purpose."

Etiquette: "Fruit stones may be removed from the mouth by the assistance of the fork, but it is in better taste to use one's napkin to conceal this act."

"The United States is often quoted as the land where a woman may travel alone without protection." Assures the writer of When Country Women Come to Town. She adds that rooms at the New York Y.W.C.A. cost 50 cents a night.

"I visit a great deal," says The Helpful Visitor. "I am not brilliant, but I can make good buttonholes."

"Queen Wilhelmina has been given a weekly allowance," announces the JOURNAL, "for all of which she must render an account. When it does not suffice for Christmas presents, she purchases the materials and makes the gifts with her own fingers."

Advises Ruth Ashmore in a piece for Business Girls' Evenings: "Now, my dear girl, while I do not disapprove of a simple dance in a real home, I must advise you never to go to a public ball."

Fashion note: "Little boys' bathing suits are made of black alpaca with sailor collar, short sleeves, and reaching to the knee."

"A red nose comes sometimes from indigestion, but more frequently from lack of circulation. Loosen your corsets or take them off entirely," proposes the fashion editor.

ACME PHOTO

Journal About Town

Gossip about people you know, editors you like and what goes on in New York.

WHAT with quite a few of the largest colleges in the country right here in town, and of course more public schools than any other city in the world, not to mention nearly 900 privately run schools of every known variety—from where you learn how to be a policeman to where you can become a hypnotist—over 2,000,000 students, or pupils, will be returning to their studies here in a few days from the time this issue appears. About 250 of them will be returning to the Professional Children's School, over on Broadway, a probably unique institution. Only kids who are working or studying in the theater, movies, radio or music go there, as you can just about tell from the picture. School starts at 10 and closes at 2:15, so the pupils who work at night can sleep late, and those with matinees can leave in time to catch a curtain. Only conventional school studies, no professional training. They're getting that outside—most of them in regular jobs.

Ten-o'clock scholars—only for them it's legal. They're pupils of the Professional Children's School.

Somebody has taken the slogan made famous by the JOURNAL*—Never Underestimate the Power of a Woman—and used it as the title of a song. You can get it on records.*

There's a little restaurant across town that Louella Shouer likes, where they give the waiters and kitchen help an extra night off once a week and let the regular customers come in for a pantry-raid evening. The bartender keeps an eye on things up front, the proprietor on things in back; four to five people are allowed at one time in the kitchen, and only long enough to whip up quick things like hamburgers, steaks, eggs and sandwiches, and clean up; then another batch moves in. Getting pretty popular with West Pointers, who are handy in the kitchen and like to make their spending money last. They're pretty popular with the proprietor—they're so neat!

ROY STEVENS

Where the patron cooks her own.

Hugh Kahler received a post card that read, "Please send me your formula for short stories." Hugh answered with what he claims is the only formula he knows: "They'd better be good."

George E. Vigouroux, Jr., a friend of Bruce Gould's, was telling him about all the articles of castoff clothing he and his wife had been saving in suitcases to be packaged for Europe, and how, arriving at a large country house for the week end, and opening his bag to dress for dinner, they found they'd brought—you guessed it—the suitcases with the castoff clothing.*

Both men and women are getting taller. The average height of draftees increased two thirds of an inch between World Wars. Older women today average five feet, three inches; college girls, five feet, five inches. . . . The ideal homemaker in the U. S., according to one survey, is between 40 and 49 years of age, a college graduate, and a person with a comfortable, medium income. In her premarriage days she was a librarian, teacher or nurse. . . . Each nickel costs the U. S. Government half a cent to make. . . . In A.D. 301 the Roman Emperor Diocletian issued a price-control edict which covered not only necessities and commodities of life and the wages of laborers, artisans and schoolmasters—but also those of orators. . . . In most fields of endeavor, women's greatest triumphs have come after the age of 40—George Eliot wrote Mill on the Floss at 41; Madame Curie won the Nobel Prize at 44; Clara Barton founded the American Red Cross at 59. . . . Overweight after the age of 25 shortens lives by adding burdens to the heart and circulation; 28 per cent of all Americans are 10 per cent overweight, while only 12.8 per cent are underweight.

When Alice Blinn dispatched a boy for a centerpiece of chrysanthemums for a color food picture, the clerk at the florist told the messenger they'd have to send out for them. "Chrysanthemums are one flower we don't carry," she informed the young man. "Our manager is allergic to them."

Louise Benjamin had an appointment with John Kieran at his home, which happens to be way, way uptown, at the far upper tip of the city. She phoned to ask him how to get there, saying that she planned to take a taxi from the Workshop, a plan which the famous answer man deplored as highly extravagant, urging her to take the subway instead, even though they'd raised the fare. "Why, do you realize," he told Mrs. B., whose magazine must spend half a million a year on travel expenses, "a taxi would cost you $2.85—and would the JOURNAL stand for that?"

EUROPEAN

Economy-minded John Kieran.

A colleague came upon John Werner, our copy editor, behind his high wall of reference books, as he was making a final checkup on the manuscript of Cornelia Otis Skinner's Family Circle, which you'll find on page 36. Seems in verifying statements of fact in the manuscript he'd used almost thirty books, including Who's Who in America, Who's Who (international), Who's Who in the Theatre, Encyclopaedia Britannica, World Almanac, Postal Guide, Shakespeare, the Bible, Dictionary of American Biography, Century Cyclopedia of Names, Cumulative Book Index, Webster's International Dictionary and a French dictionary. Asked how many serious errors he found in the copy, John replied, "Only two. But when Miss Skinner was queried about them, she dug back into her father's scrapbook, and what do you think? . . . We found the reference books were wrong."

"He's bringing the wherewithal to get to Reno," Willie gloate

THE PUMPKIN SHELL

In Willie's world there was only one way to do things—the easy way.

The Journal's Complete-in-one-issue Novel By Charlotte Armstrong

ILLUSTRATED BY AL PARKER

IT was deep summer. The great window, the wall of glass, caught and framed its picture. Far off, the soft Connecticut hills rolled in a heat haze. Nearer, the old meadows, the weed-grown fields, baked and burned yellow. And asymmetrically across the foreground the pin oak on the terrace threw a lacy drapery of cut green leaves.

Inside, the room was both bright and cool. A flower-and-vine border, painted in naïve blues and reds and yellows, ran whimsically under the rafters on the white plaster walls. Yet the straw-colored matting on the floor, the whitewashed fireplace, the large and artful simplicity of the furniture seemed to invite cool air and encourage it to move.

Must have had the house insulated, thought Roger Lane, shifting his knees.

Willie said, "Gin!"

Willie had on a beautiful pair of pale green slacks. She was wearing her harlequin glasses with the Kelly-green frames today. Her narrow square-shouldered body was tossed into the chair any old way, Willie's way, and one long, slim, attractive leg was thrown over a chair arm and off the bare, unblemished foot her fantastic play shoe dangled.

"Gol fling it, Willie," said Roger, "you're too smart!" He drank down what was left in his glass and looked vaguely back of him toward the bar.

"Yes, I know," said Willie Peterson, yawning. "Too smart. Too smart." She leaned her head on the chair and seemed to doze, suddenly.

Roger looked at her narrow, clever face, her thin hands lying in her lap, and he thought that even with her eyes closed the mischief wasn't entirely gone out of her. Willie, he told himself again, must be forty. Or close to it. Her daughter, Jan, was seventeen. He thought, vaguely, But it's Saturday afternoon. He hadn't meant to find himself sitting indoors in Pete Peterson's fancy farmhouse, playing gin rummy with Willie. Not that it wasn't wonderfully pleasant . . . cool . . . lazy.

Roger shook his pale head. He rose and drifted with his customary slow and weary air to the bar.

"Am I keeping you up, Mrs. Peterson, ma'am?" he said amiably. "Just for that you can whistle for your fifty cents I owe you."

Willie, with her eyes closed, whistled. So he dug a fifty-cent piece from his pocket and threw it at her and she lifted her lids at the last possible moment and caught it. She bit it. She said, "Thanks." She put it somewhere in the green pants. She reached for a snarl of yellow yarn.

Roger mixed a drink, grinning to himself. Willie Peterson was something. He admired her. She was all the time so darned amusing. "Say," he asked, "what's that thing you're all the time knitting?"

"Crocheting, my ignorant pet. Known as a fascinator." She put the yellow stuff over her head and her green eyes, behind the glasses, mocked at herself and everything.

"Who you going to fascinate in that thing?"

"Myself, darling. It's all done with mirrors. . . . Mix me one, Roger."

He peered into the ice bucket. "No more ice. Shall I ring a bell, or what?"

"Dingle the dangle." She made her hand wag on a limp wrist.

"The h'm? Oh." Roger found the little bell and rang it. "What happens now?"

"A genie appears," said Willie.

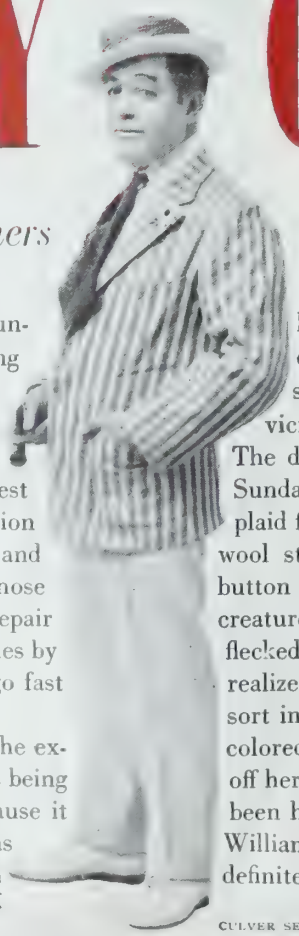
Roger's mouth—Willie was always just a little too swift for him—fell gently open. The woman who came from the kitchen to answer the bell was big-boned, flat-chested, long-lipped. Everything about her—her skin, her graying hair, her decent cotton dress, everything except her bright blue eyes—seemed to have faded in many washings, as if a fierce cleanliness had left her immaculate and pale.

"Rang the bell, didn't you?" she said in a flat, accusing twang.

"Oh, yes, Mrs. Hall. May we have more ice, please?"

Mrs. Hall looked skeptically into the ice bucket. "Guess so." She picked it up. "I'd like to know how many's going to be for supper." (Continued on Page 162)

"Sorry. Very sorry," said Pete, in a miasma of shame.



WIDE WORLD PHOTO

After watching Cornelia in a children's play, Otis Skinner turned to her mother. "Well, Maud, she has no talent—thank God!" Later he led Cornelia to the footlights for a bow on Broadway.

FAMILY CIRCLE

A successful theatrical family, the Skinners grew rich in everything but money.

CULVER SERVICE

Otis Skinner in Cock o' the Walk.

THE tracks of the Northern Missouri sprawl across the sun-baked surface of that midmost of Midwestern states, reaching out in one direction for the borders of Iowa and in another venturing onto the prairies of Kansas. Some fifty miles north of Jefferson City the roadbed branches apart at a junction in the heart of Daniel Boone's old territory and just west of the country of Mark Twain's boyhood. And at this junction there has grown up a town named Moberly. During the '70's and '80's it was little more than an overgrown railroad settlement whose chief activities centered about roundhouses and clanging repair shops. Life was regulated by whistles and people set their watches by the thundering passage of the St. Louis express or the Chicago fast [illegible]t.

In 1876, a very young couple stood inspecting with pride the ex[illegible]ation and rough superstructure of a frame house which was being [illegible]ted on one of the town's choice sites. It was choice because it bordered on the tracks, an elegant advantage. The back yard was walled at one end by the cinder bank of the roadbed, and a path led directly into the side door of the station. All this was to be of considerable convenience for the young man, who was stationmaster and chief train dispatcher for Moberly and the vicinity.

The day the young couple went to inspect the excavation was a Sunday. Trotting beside them was two-year-old Maud, in her best plaid frock trimmed with rows of white rickrack, her legs in red-wool stockings bulging out over the patent-leather tops of high button shoes recently arrived from Kansas City. Even as a tiny creature, she had the quality of loveliness. Her bright eyes were flecked with so many pigments, one had to be at a fair distance to realize they were lightish brown. Her skin was clear and fair, the sort in which color came and went easily. Her hair was chestnut-colored. At this period, the back portion had been pulled painfully off her small shell-like ears in two stiff pigtails, while the front had been home-clipped in a fashionable "fringe."

William Durbin, my grandfather, was tall, handsome and of a definite distinction, accentuated by the fact that he walked with a cane. For a long time very few people, including his children, knew that he had a wooden leg. He was a native son, his grandfather having been one of the early pioneers to set forth from Maryland and settle in the wilderness. William Durbin was a smart young man, witty, charming and clever. When he was nineteen, he got a job with the railroad and was sent to Moberly, where his popularity was instantaneous. In no time at all he was elected mayor.

Copyright, 1948, by Cornelia Skinner Blodget. This is a condensation of the book soon to be published by Houghton Mifflin Co.

With him to Moberly had come my grandmother, barely sixteen when he married her. She was a gentle person, shy, plump and pretty. She always called my grandfather "Mr. Durbin," not "Will" or even "William," and certainly never anything so shameless as "dear." It was only in later years, when the birth of eight children had given her ample excuse for such audacity, that she made so bold as to call him "Dad."

The frame house beside the railroad tracks was regarded by the community as a triumph of taste. The front door, made distinguished by a panel of ground glass, led into a vestibule through which one emerged into a hallway tiled with black-and-white linoleum squares meant to be a dead ringer for marble. The parlor was so elegant it was used only for gala events—Christmas, New Year's or funerals.

The family moved in and began the business of filling the homestead at the rate of a new baby almost every twelve months. From her earliest school days Maud was a leader—although that word is misleading because it implies aggressiveness. For she led, she conquered and she ruled through charm. She simply and completely enchanted her companions so that they were only too pleased to submit to whatever she might suggest. Moreover, she could make up all manner of original and lovely games. The flair for acting was in her veins and she got up private theatricals: sketches she wrote herself based on historical incidents out of McGuffey's Reader, or dramatizations of Marmion and Excelsior, which she and her playmates acted out. Performances took place in the Durbin barn. The hayloft was the undisputed Lodge House for the leading grammar-school set, and Maud was Grand Master.

Wonderful things happened in that hayloft, pointing to a time when my mother's talent was to be recognized by more mature admirers. One of the first to appreciate her qualities was her cousin, May Franklin. She it was who paid for Maud to go to St. Louis for a number of months, live with relatives and study "elocution, deportment and oratory" with a certain Professor McDowell.

By then, she was a girl of seventeen, full of youthful and earnest ambition. Avid to know all she could about literature, history and drama, she haunted museums and libraries. And of course she bought gallery seats for every show that came during those weeks to St. Louis, for she knew beyond the shadow of a doubt that she wanted to go on the stage.

Those intoxicating days came to a close and Maud returned to Moberly and the family situation, which was critical. William Durbin had lost his position with the railroad and there had followed uneasy times of going from place to place, from job to job, none of which ever lasted for more than a few months. But something unusually promising had turned up in La Grande, Oregon, and out they journeyed, bag and baggage in a cluttered day coach, to a bleak land where they knew no living soul. This was the worst year of all. The winter was one of the coldest on record for the Northwest. There were days when the family had little fuel and no food. It was during this winter in Oregon that Maud started taking matters into her own young hands. The father had disappeared, leaving them stranded, and something had to be done. Maud was shy to a degree, but she was also desperate. She became a sort of professional social organizer. For modest fees, she arranged parties, dances and charity benefits, and whenever she could, hired herself out as professional entertainer to oblige with an evening of recitation in the plush homes of wealthy lumber folk. Off the pittances she made, the family was able to eke out a year's existence.

In the spring, William Durbin sent word that he had found work in Denver, where his sister lived. Once again the family packed up their dwindling belongings and made another long and miserably uncomfortable trip to settle in an unfamiliar locale.

WIDE WORLD PHOTO

BY CORNELIA OTIS SKINNER

"Say, ma," the little boy asked, "what's an Otis Skinner?" "I dunno, son," his mother serenely replied. "Probably it is some new kind of farm machinery."

In the early '90's, "The Queen City of the Plains" was a town of elegance. Italian villas and brownstone mansions rose beside ramshackle cassino cribs and gaudy saloons with silver dollars embedded in tiled floors.

Life for the Durbins was pleasantly exciting. Their father's moderately well-to-do and highly respectable sister, Aunt Mag, saw to it that they met the right people, and Maud, through winning a number of scholarships, was able to attend Wolf Hall, a fashionable establishment which specialized in "finishing" young ladies. She still dreamed of going on the stage.

In 1893 Helena Modjeska brought her repertory company to the Tabor Grand. Maud scrimped enough to pay for a gallery seat for As You Like It, and absorbed with breathless eagerness every word and gesture of the lovely Pole's joyous and poetic Rosalind. She also managed to pay for standing room for a matinee of Camille, although she kept quiet about that. The Dumas classic was still looked upon as extremely daring, and Modjeska had received considerable criticism for portraying that alluring creature.

Maud was carried away by the beauty and perfection of Modjeska's artistry. She hung about the stage door and haunted the pavement outside the Windsor, hoping for a glimpse of her idol. One afternoon she took her courage in hand, walked into the hotel and bravely asked the clerk to send up to Modjeska her calling card, on which was scribbled a palpitating request for an interview. Possibly there was something about the earnestness of the message that appealed to the woman's gracious nature; possibly it was because the weather was stormy and she could not go out for her customary long walk. Scarcely able to believe her ears, Maud heard the bellboy say that Madame would receive her. With racing heart she walked down the carpeted corridor. Her knees nearly buckled completely beneath her when a maid let her into a room and she got her first glimpse of the diva. Dressed in a lacy tea gown, the great lady was reclining on a chaise longue, smoking a cigarette!

Modjeska noticed the girl's astonishment, smiled and said in her beguiling accent, "You have never before seen a lady with a cigarette?"

"I've never even seen a cigarette!" came the blurted reply.

"So now you have," said Modjeska. "In my country we have the saying, 'One breaks bread with an Arab and

(Continued on Page 74)

New Man in Town

By LIONEL WIGGAM

TED CHARTERIS was happy. A good, warm glow expanded pleasurably inside him, nor was he drunk. The fact was he liked everything. He liked his job, he liked this town, and he liked these people—even the ones who were getting a little plastered and talking too loud.

Only one thing was missing, and that was love. In time, Ted supposed, that would come too. Meanwhile, he wasn't worrying.

It was his first dance at the country club, and he'd thought this would probably be the letdown, the disillusion. In two weeks the place had charmed him more and more. There had never been such kind people, nor such engaging ones. They all seemed determined to sell him both on their community and on themselves, to put at his disposal their good will, their business, even their wives and daughters—in a nice way, of course.

So God bless suburbia, Ted thought happily. And whoever thought he'd turn out a provincial? Well, it's growing up, he assured himself; the war and then knocking about New York makes you appreciate simple things. Happy people and well-fed people; smug people, too, maybe, but kind and friendly. Ted liked them.

"What are you looking so cheerful about?"

"Counting my blessings." Ted looked at the girl beside him and smiled. "You're one, you know."

"A blessing?" the girl asked. "Lovely! How come, Ted?"

"Well, because you've got shoulders like that and let people see them. It's awfully nice of you."

Polly Morrison returned his gaze skeptically and said, "Are you making fun of my freckles again?"

"No."

She grimaced, but her homely little face shone with pleasure. "Then I should have blushed and simpered and said, 'How you go on.' On my tombstone they'll put, 'Here lies Polly Morrison, who always missed her cue.' Are you getting tight, by any chance?"

"And please," implored Ted, "don't ever blush and simper." He stood up. "Will you risk this rumba with me? As a matter of fact, one thing I can do with my bad leg is rumba."

"I know; I saw you with Mrs. Riley. It gives you a very complex rhythm. Sort of sensuous."

He'd been touchy about that leg for a while. And he'd never been swimming with it, even after all this time; he still couldn't bring himself to expose the thing, to have people look and then look quickly away. But here in Arden he felt he'd even be doing that, come summer. And Polly Morrison, whose instincts were unfailing, would probably gaze right at it and observe, "Well, it's nice that shrapnel

(Continued on Page 148)

TED COULD READ ALL THE SIGNS, EXCEPT

THE ONE THAT SAID "STOP!"

ILLUSTRATED BY JON WHITCOMB

The first time he kissed her he was awed at himself for daring, astonished at Carol for permitting

Should Religion be Taught in Our Schools?

The most important question in public education was placed before the people when the Supreme Court decided in favor of an atheistic plaintiff. ★ By Christian Gauss

WHAT place, if any, should the teaching of religion have in our public schools? This problem has been forced upon us in an acute form by the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the now famous suit brought by Vashti McCollum against the board of education in Champaign, Illinois.

We must review briefly what the board of education in Champaign had been doing and the reasons why Mrs. McCollum sued to have it discontinued. In 1940 the board of education had approved the so-called "released-time" program for teaching religion in public schools. Released-time programs had been inaugurated in 1914 in Gary, Indiana, as part of the Gary Plan, and had spread to school systems throughout the country until by 1948 they had been adopted by 2200 communities and involved 2,000,000 pupils. "Released time" is a plan by which the school co-operates with a voluntary association of the various religious groups in a community. At the request of the parents of any pupil he is "released," usually for one period a week, during which he receives instruction from a qualified teacher of his own religion at no cost to the school.

Vashti McCollum is an avowed atheist, as she has every right to be. Her complaints against the Champaign schools were many and varied. She not only asked the Court to end "released time"; she asked it to bar every form of teaching that recognizes that there is a God. She alleged as an invasion of her rights having pupils recite such statements as "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want." She objected, among other things, to having the Bible called the word of God.

All the Justices probably agreed that her complaints "demanded more than the plaintiff was entitled to have granted." They failed, however, to indicate the nature of the grievances which the Court could consider, and granted Vashti McCollum's petition that they order the board of education to prohibit "all instruction in, and teaching of, all religious education in Champaign District No. 71."

When we ask how will this affect the schools, there is an incidental consequence which should be mentioned. Most Americans realize that our public-school system is decentralized; that it has allowed states and communities considerable freedom to meet their own local needs. It is true that the relative poverty of some of our states has made it impossible for them to offer adequate opportunities to their young people. Nearly all educators agree that the Federal Government should step in here and correct such inequalities by means of Federal grants. Unlike most European governments, however, we have never had a Ministry of Public Instruction which fixes courses of study, sets examinations and determines our country's educational policy. We do have a Federal Commissioner of Education whose functions are advisory. There are zealots in education as there are in religion and in politics. Occasionally one of them feels that a certain textbook or method of teaching is perfect and that there "ought to be a law" to impose it upon every school. To such zealots our former commissioner, genial John W. Studebaker, was in the habit of replying, "In this country we have only a commissioner, not a commissar of education." We are, of course, very far from the commissar stage.

It is, however, true that for the past twenty-five years, in a series of decisions, the Court has extended Federal control into fields (Continued on Page 266)

JEAN BAPTISTE CAMILLE COROT

1796–1875

Corot's feeling for landscape was almost religious in its intensity. He was an impassioned observer of the lakes and forests surrounding Paris; and when during the Franco-Prussian War the advancing Germans drove him back into the capital, he gave much of his fortune to buy cannons to chase the invaders out of the forests of Ville-d'Avray and Fontainebleau. War became real to him when it entered his beloved domain.

But even Corot's alertness of vision was corrupted by the bad taste of the time. People were not interested in the honesty and intensity of observation of a picture like the Forest of Fontainebleau. They wanted instead the romantic sentiments evoked by twilight glimpses of misty valleys. And so the firmly drawn and clearly articulated compositions of Corot's youth gradually dissolved into hazy scenes, with a ubiquitous boatman in a red cap forever embarking on a gray lake. As such paintings became more popular, Corot's style became more nebulous, his artistic personality dimmer, until finally any forger of ability could paint the same scenes equally well. Hence the hundreds of spurious Corots, imitations often almost impossible to tell from the worst of the originals.

Yet Corot knew that he would be remembered for a different type of picture, for the paintings he did for his own pleasure and sold rarely and with difficulty. The Forest of Fontainebleau, painted between 1830 and 1833, is such a picture; but in one respect it is exceptional—it is one of the few early paintings to have been bought during the artist's life. Ironically enough, when Corot, in his old age, tried to buy back this landscape to present it to the Louvre as one of his major achievements, the owner would not sell. A collector's stubbornness, therefore, has resulted in Corot's being represented in the National Gallery of the United States by a painting he had intended for the National Gallery of France.

—JOHN WALKER, Chief Curator, National Gallery of Art.

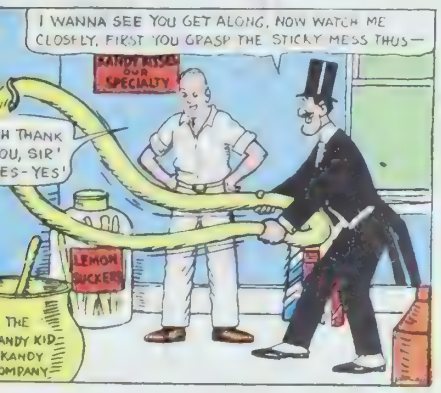
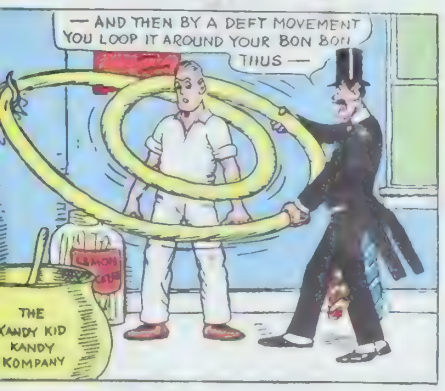
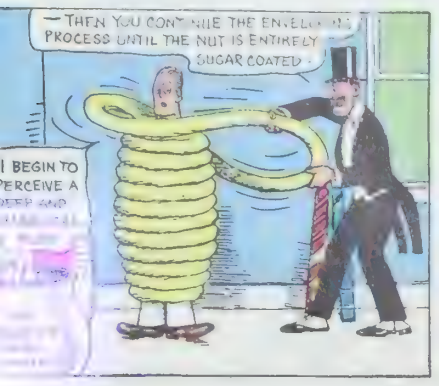
REPRODUCED COURTESY CHESTER DALE COLLECTION, NATIONAL GALLERY, WASHINGTON, D. C.

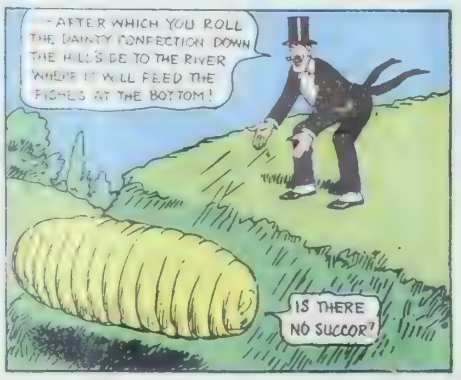


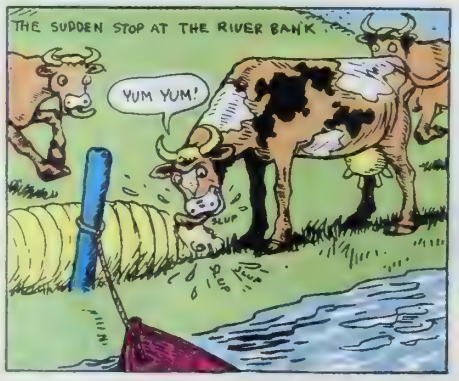
Forest of Fontainebleau, by Corot

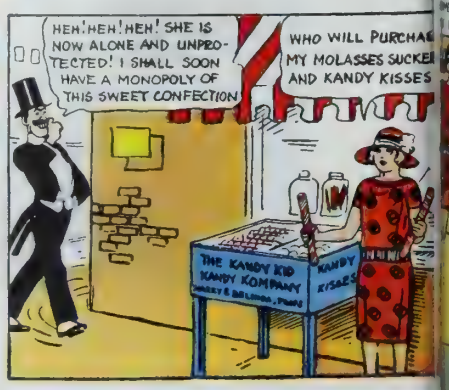


REPRODUCED COURTESY MR. C. W. KAHLES









The Ninety and Nine

ANYBODY WITH HALF AN EYE COULD SEE THE STRANGER WAS WICKED. THAT WAS WHY GRANDMOTHER ASKED HIM IN. • BY JOEL EARNEST

GRANDMOTHER RUDDYFUDDY never quite forgave the Philadelphia Ledger after it purchased the old North American and discontinued publishing Hairbreadth Harry and Belinda, the Beautiful Boiler Maker. There had been times when Grandmother was very annoyed with Hairbreadth Harry in spite of his manly chest and his carefully brushed blond pompadour, but every Sunday she would turn to the funny papers before she looked at anything else.

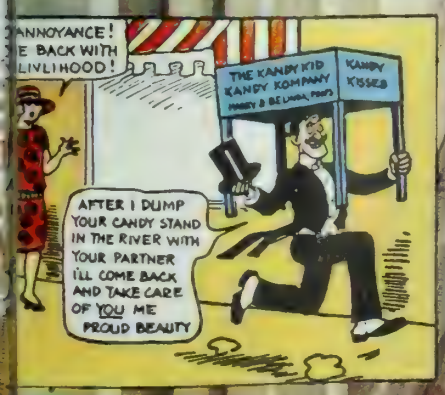
Invariably Belinda, bound hand and foot, was lying in front of an onrushing railroad train, or, gagged and blindfolded, was inexorably drawn toward a huge buzz saw, while the villain, Rudolph Rassendale, toyed with his black mustache and demanded, "Marry me or else." Rudolph was tall and impeccably clothed in top hat and swallow-tailed coat. He had a high-bridged, imperious nose and large white teeth that showed when he smiled.

At the last moment Harry always saved Belinda, but Grandmother felt Harry was pretty dumb to let her get into the mess in the first place. Besides, Harry never paid any attention to Belinda except when she needed saving.

Rudolph Rassendale certainly had more gumption than Harry, and sometimes Grandmother was half sorry he never got the girl. However, that would have been vice triumphing over virtue, and she realized they couldn't do that because it wouldn't be true to life.

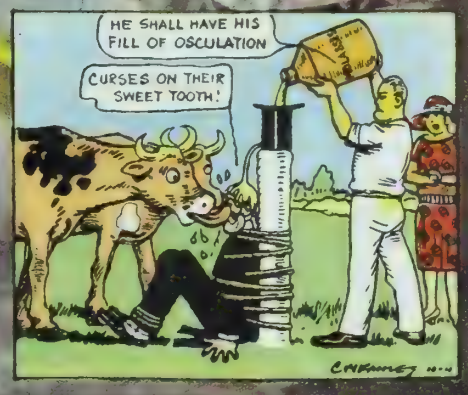
After the passing of Harry and Belinda, Grandmother tried Mutt and Jeff for a time, but gave them up because she couldn't stand the women they were always chasing. Later, Orphan Annie held her interest until Annie's perpetual righteousness became too strong. Besides, she didn't approve of Daddy Warbucks' continually wandering off to odd parts of the world without providing for Annie, especially when Daddy had so much money. Then came the Martians and the rockets and the space ships, and Grandmother's interest in the funny papers revived.

Grandmother finished washing the supper dishes and went into the parlor with the evening paper. In the west great thunderclouds boiled and rose over the setting sun. Heat lightning flickered, and from time to time distant thunder roared. Grandfather and Jacob Schusslich, the hired man, were out closing up the barn and putting the chickens in the coop.



Grandmother sat and watched the approaching storm. She was in a bad humor. Tomorrow the Ladies' Aid Society was holding a cake sale and bazaar to raise money for a new church window, and the storm didn't look as if it would blow itself out by then. She lifted the paper from her knees and turned to Brick Bradford and the Space Ship.

Without much enthusiasm she saw Brick was heading for Uranus in a race with the Martians. Grandmother sighed. While she knew very well the stars and planets were other worlds and that space wasn't just filled by heaven with its glittering buildings and golden gates, she couldn't get used to the idea of Martians. It wasn't like the old days of Hairbreadth Harry and the Beautiful Belinda.



Grandmother let the paper fall on her knees and stared out the window. Angry yellow light lay flat across the land. The two tall pines in the front yard were etched in stark and (Continued on Page 223)

ILLUSTRATED BY HARRY ANDERSON

"Why," she thought with a start, "if he had on a dress suit, he'd look just like Rudolph Rassendale."

How Well are YOU?

By Dr. Herman N. Bundesen and Gladys Denny Shultz

MEDICAL science of late years has accomplished wonders in keeping ailing people alive, so that your expectancy and mine is considerably longer than it would have been a generation ago. But we are learning that just to hold death off a few years more is not enough. For too many, the extra span is spent in illness and suffering. Already chronic disease has taken top place in our list of health enemies. It is tying up more and more hospital beds, mortgaging the lives of more and more of the healthy and strong to care for men and women who, at best, can hope only to linger on painfully—because their condition was discovered too late to effect a cure.

The best time to see your doctor is when you're not sick.

A large part of the blame for the above lies in the fact that many of us do not consult a physician until symptoms become marked—by which time organs may be irreparably damaged, or a malignant growth may have progressed beyond control.

But another reason is that the "complete physical" of yesteryear, the annual routine going-over which was considered at that time, and rightly, the best insurance against development of disease or other abnormal conditions, did not reveal many such conditions until they had reached a point where actual damage had been done, damage which in some instances could not be undone. This is a situation the medical profession is doing its utmost to set right. Your doctor isn't content today merely to add years to your life—years which may be a burden to you as well as to your loved ones. He wants to put life into those extra years his skill can give you, vigor, effectiveness, the capacity to enjoy yourself and to be a useful member of society.

How? By heading off disease before it can do lasting harm, or even before it can make its appearance. And the wonderfully hopeful side of the picture, of which many lay persons are not aware, is that the past few years have put at his disposal a host of new tests, apparatus and techniques which equip him, as doctors were never equipped before, to do just that.

The study of blood alone has become a science of its own. Besides the discovery of the Rh factor, important to know about in pregnancy and in giving or receiving blood transfusions, one's blood in many instances can be made to reveal a great deal about the heart, kidneys, liver and pancreas (the gland whose malfunctioning causes diabetes), and the beginnings of various disease processes, before the organs themselves are visibly affected or have caused much discomfort.

There are new ways of analyzing the vaginal secretions, which not only help give an accurate check on the way the reproductive organs are functioning—a matter very important to feminine mental state and efficiency—but may also now and then reveal the presence of unsuspected malignant growths. (It's interesting to note, in this connection, that research experts are trying to discover a test for pre-cancerous conditions, so that the first cell changes may be detected and dealt with before actual malignancy has developed at all.)

Knowledge has increased as to familial tendencies of certain diseases and of the part worry or unhappiness can play in producing bodily disorders—the psychosomatics we are hearing so much about. Much more is known about the handicaps imposed upon various organs by faulty diet.

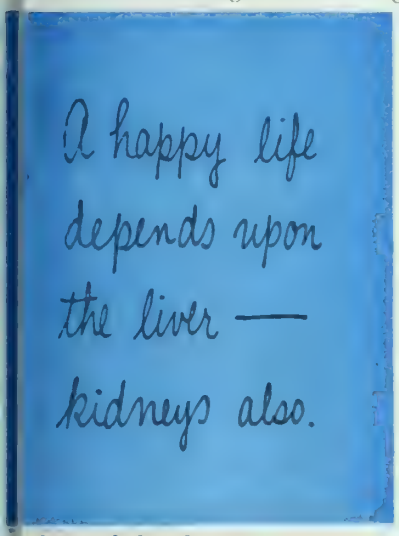
There is little excuse today, therefore, for letting any avoidable physical condition reach a point where it causes acute misery and disablement, and requires drastic medical measures for relief. Give your doctor a chance to help you when symptoms first appear. And better yet, establish the habit now of a periodical health audit, not to find out if there is something wrong with you, but to keep something from getting wrong.

One of the country's best-known doctors takes a week out of his busy schedule each year to go to a famous clinic and submit to every test the specialists there consider advisable. He feels he owes largely to this precaution the fact that in his middle sixties he can work as hard and efficiently as he ever did, outdoing and outlasting most younger men.

The important point is that a "complete physical" today, whether at a clinic or given by the family doctor, is something very different from what it was even as little as ten years ago. One physician, with a notable record for clearing up baffling conditions, gives a full half day to the examination of each new patient, and will not prescribe without this.

She makes a full family record with regard to length of life and diseases from which parents or other close relatives have suffered; a complete health history of the patient. Then she inquires into every detail of the patient's daily life, including such seemingly trivial items as what foods and how much of each are eaten at every meal, amount of milk, tea and coffee consumed in a day and amount of cream and sugar used in each cup of beverage; amount of smoking; average number of alcoholic drinks indulged in; sleep habits; hours and conditions of work. Next she probes into the domestic situation and emotional life, to see if there is present any of the kind of mental turmoil which sometimes shows itself in psychosomatic ways.

To avoid divorce: see a doctor—not a lawyer.



By the time she begins the physical examination, therefore, this doctor is armed with a whole battery of clues as to what might be amiss, and better yet, with exact methods for finding out whether the clues are true or false. By applying the appropriate techniques, she has been able to solve many a long-standing medical mystery.

One man came to her because, in spite of long medication and a series of operations, he was feeling increasingly run-down and tired, and was the victim of constantly recurring boils, so serious that they required hospitalization and surgery. His family history revealed that his mother was a diabetic who had been on insulin for twenty-five years; the probe of his diet disclosed that he went in heavily for sweets, sugars and fats—not the best idea for anyone with a family history of diabetes. The urine was free of sugar—it always had been, the patient explained, in the numerous physical examinations he had had up to that point.

"Let's do a blood sugar," said the doctor.

Analysis of the blood, taken from a vein—the blood-sugar test—showed far too high a level of sugar for safety, but as yet not so high as to require insulin. By forgoing starches and sugars and building up his depleted system with a high-protein diet, this man was able to regain health and efficiency with a minimum of medication. Had his doctor been forced to wait until sugar showed up in the urine before definitely diagnosing the threat of diabetes, he would have been well on his way toward chronic invalidism.

The skilled, conscientious doctor will guide his examination of each patient according to the condition he finds. However, it is well to know that there are various things that should be looked into beyond the glance into eyes, ears, throat and nostrils, listening to heart and lungs, "palpating," or feeling, the outlines of vital organs with skilled fingers, rectal examination, taking the blood pressure, a blood count and testing urine—the usual "complete physical" of not so many years ago.

A number of tests have been added to the former routine health audit, whether you have symptoms or whether you haven't. These are:

1. More complete and detailed family and personal history.

2. More thorough blood examination, covering red-cell count, white-cell count, differential-cell count and hemoglobin, serological test for syphilis, type of blood or blood group and presence or absence of Rh factor.

3. Blood chemistry—a complete chemical examination of the blood. Deficiency or oversupply of some constituent or other often gives a clue to malfunctioning of a gland or organ which seems to be sound.

4. Test of heart function, by taking pulse rates before and after standard exercise.

5. Fluoroscope of heart, to see its outlines and dimensions; or an X ray, taken at some distance so the heart size will be shown correctly.

6. Basal metabolism, which checks the working of the thyroid gland, one of the important body regulators.

7 and 8. Last, but far from least, liver-function test and kidney-function test. Among the newer techniques, these are an invaluable help to the doctor in warding off conditions that lower vitality and interfere with enjoyment of life.

Until recently, the liver has received little attention until it started making serious trouble. Yet it is one of the most important organs of the body, with more duties to perform than any other. Since it is a great manufacturing center and storehouse, any defection on its part is felt quickly by the rest of the organism. To name just a few of its jobs: it regulates the level of sugar in the blood; forms fibrinogen, the substance which causes the blood to clot; renders various toxic substances harmless; governs the secretion of bile, important to digestion; breaks down amino acids for use by the body; stores the elements which govern formation of blood; aids in the building of hemoglobin; and destroys excess sex hormones and worn-out red blood corpuscles.

As one doctor puts it, "Let your liver go on the blink, and all h—— breaks loose."

Would you like to possess a good, firm skin, healthy color, sparkling eyes, not only throughout youth but far into the later decades? Then keep tab on your liver, and let your doctor help if it begins to fail. The Bronsulphaleine test tells him how your liver is working. A dye is injected into the blood stream, and the degree to which it is eliminated by the liver is an indication either that your liver is hitting on all cylinders, or of the extent to which it is impaired.

Everyone knows the important part played by the kidneys in excreting poisons from the body, and the suffering and general debility that follow when they fail to do their work. The kidney-function test, which measures the amount of urea (a waste substance) in the urine against the amount in the blood, now tells the doctor early and accurately if the kidneys need help, whereas tests of the urine alone may not reveal that there is trouble until it is well advanced. This test should be made at the slightest sign of trouble.

If everyone had these two tests (liver function and kidney function), plus X-ray or fluoroscope examination of the heart before any symptoms are felt, unnecessary deaths and chronic illness could be cut inestimably. (One leading physician puts the figure at 50 per cent.)

For what if your doctor discovers that there is malfunctioning in one of these vital organs? Medical science has reached such a point that, caught early enough, most heart, liver and kidney conditions can be cured entirely, or at least controlled so that the patient can lead a normal life.

The old bromide still holds good: that nothing insures long life like mild heart trouble, which forces its possessor to eschew the strain and overdoing that lead many husky contemporaries to early graves.

If your liver is damaged, your doctor can prescribe a high-protein diet of lean meat, skim milk, dried eggs, cottage cheese, vegetables and fruit, with a minimum of fat and no alcohol until the damage is repaired. Plenty of carbohydrates are also advised. Reinforced with vitamin B in the form of yeast, desiccated liver, Methionine (an amino-acid preparation) and Choline (from vitamin-B complex) in proper quantities, your liver will begin to come back. Each year will find it in a better instead of a worse condition, with a consequent steady improvement in your appearance, health and general outlook.

When the kidneys are impaired, the treatment consists, among other things, in reducing the strain on these organs to as great an extent as possible. This involves the use of a well-balanced diet, a reduction of the salt content, and amounts of fluids your doctor will prescribe. In some types of kidney disease, it is important to supply ample protein because of the loss of albumin, a protein substance, from the blood to the kidneys.

Knowing the weak point in your bodily defenses early enough, and giving it the protection it needs, is the way to "live forever," and to be glad of it too.

(Continued on Page 244)

WOODSTOCK, VERMONT

By Richard Pratt

Architectural Editor of the Journal

Wandering through Woodstock, the enchanted visitor comes to the conclusion that this old town, so clearly well to do, must thrive on its charm and beauty alone, for he looks in vain for any other visible means of support. That is to say, there are no railroads, and, as far as he can see, no factories; the air of the town consequently is clear and quiet, most appropriate to the period quality of the place, whose appealing old houses date from the early part of the past century, when Vermont was catching up architecturally with the rest of the young republic.

There was already a lot of local wealth in Woodstock back in 1786, when it became the county seat of Windsor County, for the marble and granite quarries of Vermont were being opened and Vermont gorges were being dammed for water power; and with the courts and county offices in Woodstock, the town drew in quite a few legal lights and prosperous operators. This, of course, accounts for the substantial character of Woodstock architecture from the start, while the quality of its design, which remained remarkably high until about a hundred years ago, and has been a good influence ever since, can be credited to the carpenter craftsmen who worked their way inland from places like Portsmouth and Boston, where they had learned their trade among a multitude of earlier American masterpieces.

Now, as you amble under the elms of the famous Green, and turn the corner at the end down Elm Street, the past comes pleasantly to life, and you feel it is in safe hands here forever.

EXTERIOR PHOTOS BY RICHARD PRATT—J. R. JOHNSON. INTERIORS BY WESLEY BALZ-JOYCE, INC.

Some of the handsome old houses that add charm to the Woodstock Green.

The early Converse house, built of the beautiful Woodstock-made brick.

...d the Johnson house, of 1809, on Elm Street, with its Ionic porch, you see the lovely tower of the Old White Meeting House.

THE LYMAN MOWER HOUSE

If this is Woodstock's most impressive house today, it must have seemed doubly so when Lyman Mower built it in 1823. Young Lyman picked a fitting location facing the Green for the elegant mansion he had in his mind, then gave the job to superlative workmen who drew on builders' handbooks of the day for the details of its design. There was wood to burn in Vermont, of course, but Mower had his heart set on brick, and brick the house became, of bricks made locally, whose beautiful tawny red color is seldom seen elsewhere. The style is a modified Georgian now known as Federal, and the great end walls, handsomely windowed and chimneyed, give the house an almost monumental appearance.

An episode in the history of the house is part of local lore, for when a native of the town, Frederick Billings, who had gone to California during the gold rush and found himself a multimillionaire almost overnight, heard that his parents had become impoverished and were in debtors' confinement back home, he returned at once and bought them this, the finest house in Woodstock.

It is still the finest, inside as well as out, it having had the good fortune to be acquired recently by Mr. Lee Anderson, who, though not a native of Woodstock, has feelingly restored and furnished it with the distinction it deserves, as you can see.

Lyman Mower in 1823 built himself a house for the ages.

Haydon's painting of young Victoria surveys the drawing room with its Kermanshah rug, satinwood desk, French chairs, and early pine cabinet in the corner.

The Chippendale chair and Chinese Chippendale desk are library features.

Dining chairs are Hepplewhite; table, Sheraton; mirror, Chippendale.

Above the Federal porch, a Palladian window and a scroll-topped dormer.

THE WARREN-KIDDER HOUSE

This house, around the corner from the Green, on Elm Street, was built in 1807 by Simon Warren, descendants of whom have occupied it ever since, through four generations, a record characteristic of Woodstock. It is of frame, with typical New England narrow clapboards, and a porch in the Federal style so popular when the house was put up. Certain fanciful touches, like the scroll of the central dormer and the variturned balusters of the staircase, give the impression that the carpenter craftsmen who worked on these features back in 1807 must have enjoyed their job. And the house has remained to give enjoyment to everyone who passes it and has a chance to look inside; for within, quite apart from the staircase that marches up in three-tone chords, every room contains distinguished pieces of fine old furniture, much of it having been handed down from one generation of the family to the next through the long history of the house.

Sheraton four-poster with oval-topped canopy.

The banquet table will expand from four-person to sixteen-person size.

If You Ask Me

BY ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

BY PERMISSION, COPYRIGHT 1948, THE NEW YORKER MAGAZINE, INC.

Why does a religious sect need a special country? Knowing that you have favored the partition of Palestine, I am asking why.

I favored the partition of Palestine, first, because no better plan than the one suggested by the majority of the United Nations Commission was presented to the General Assembly of the United Nations in the autumn of 1947. Secondly, because it seemed to me that Great Britain and the United States had allowed the Jewish people to make many sacrifices under the impression that they were building up a country of their own.

It must be remembered that the Jews are a race as well as a religion. It is true that many of them have lived in many countries and have become citizens of many countries, but there still is among them a group that has a strong sense of racial solidarity.

At the time of the Balfour Declaration we concurred in it, and it was not only agreed that Palestine should be a national home for the Jews, but negotiations were entered into by Doctor Weizmann and the Arabs, in which they agreed. Therefore it seemed to me that since the British mandate had permitted hundreds of thousands of people to settle there, many of whom in developing the country lost their lives just as some of our early settlers did, and since there had been a number of commissions which had looked into it, and the British had never wished to follow any of the findings, this was a final appeal to the United Nations, so apparently we had to accept it. I still think carrying it out is the only fair thing, and not in any way unfair to the Arabs. They have not developed their country and are a nomadic people who will lose very little territory and who, being of the same race, have lived side by side with the Jews in perfect harmony ever since the original agreement was made. They are not being maltreated, because they have always prospered in the areas where the Jews have lived.

There is, of course, religious sentiment about Jerusalem, and therefore making that an international city and allowing each of us, whether Moslem, Jew or Christian, to retain rights of worship in that city would seem to be completely fair to everyone.

I have the great fortune of being able to go to California for my vacation to some relatives of my mother. These people are Catholic, and I am High Church of England. I would hate to miss church when I am on my vacation. Should I go to the Catholic church with them, and say nothing? I have never visited relatives and don't want to start a feud for nothing. I am twenty-three years old.

If your relatives live in a city, there is no reason why you should not attend your own church which in this country would be the Episcopal Church. If you will be living in some area where churches are difficult to reach, and the rest of the family drives to a Catholic church and there is no way of your getting to your own church, it is purely optional whether you wish to go with them or not to go at all. No one will be offended if you say you prefer to go to your own church. At twenty-three you are a grown person and not a child.

I would like to know the reasons why you are not endorsing Henry Wallace as a third-party candidate for the presidency.

I am not endorsing Henry Wallace because I do not believe he is a good candidate. The third party, as I see it, is made up of a great many good people, but the managing group is influenced very largely by communists. The good people have no understanding of the communist influence or the effect it would have on any party in power. Any candidate for the presidency who publicly states that he does not know what the foreign policy of the Communist Party is is not a person who should be President.

If Mr. Wallace were a Democrat and running on the Democratic ticket, and free from communist influence, I might feel differently about him, since there was a time when I believed strongly in Henry Wallace's intelligence and integrity. This belief has been somewhat shaken by this campaign. I do not see how any American who does not wish to see communist control grow in this country can support this third party.

Letters should be addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt, c/o the LADIES' HOME JOURNAL. It should be understood that Mrs. Roosevelt's answers reflect only her own opinions, and are not necessarily the opinions of the Editors of the JOURNAL.

"Tell me frankly, general, do you think I ought to begin saving tin foil?"

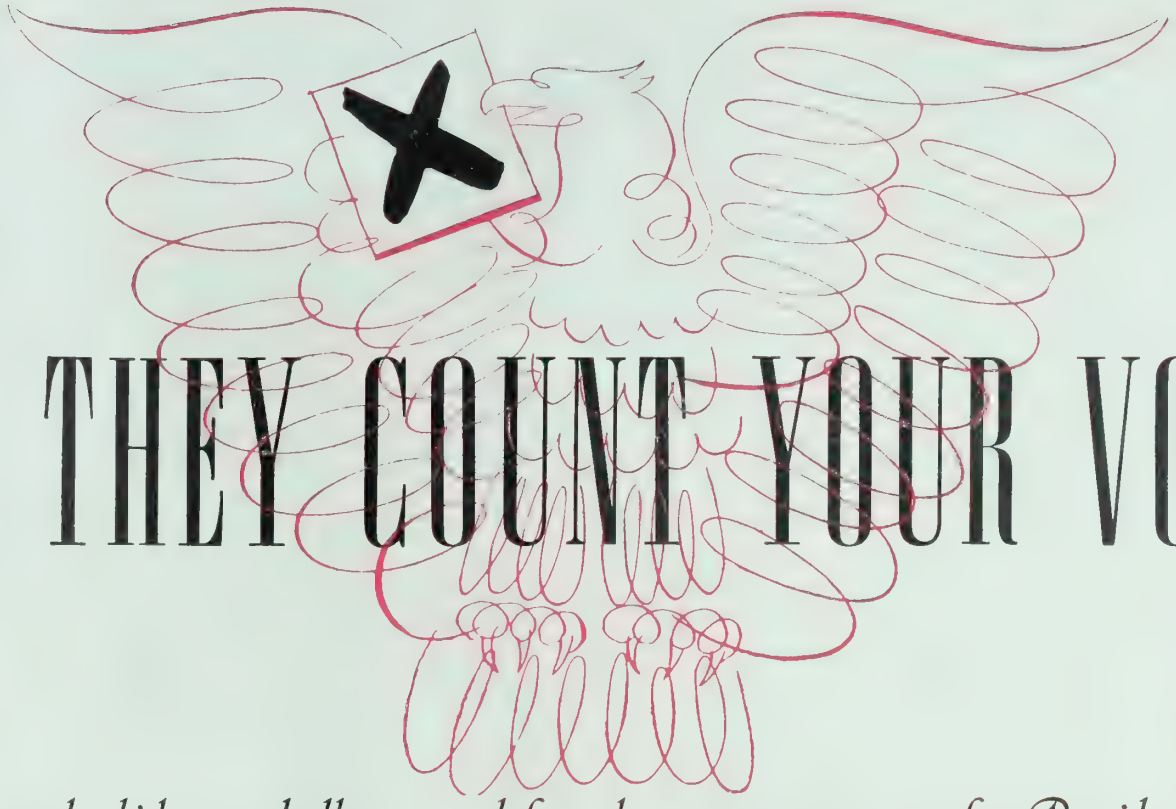
Do you approve of the peacetime draft?

At the present time I do because conditions in the world are so unsettled. I think the knowledge that we are willing to submit to military training for a great number of our young people will undoubtedly have a stabilizing effect in parts of the world where a threat might exist to the peace of the world. I hope very much, however, that we will bend every effort to build up international strength in the United Nations, and that as soon as possible not only the peacetime draft will be dropped, but general disarmament will begin. Joint strength acquired by the United Nations, when it is strong enough to insure the peace of the world, whether a great or a small nation chooses to create trouble, is the only way to bring about national disarmament and leave us free to devote our resources to social developments for the greater happiness of all people.

I read an article by Westbrook Pegler in which he stated that Mr. Roosevelt "signed his name to a property deed at his real-estate promotion at Warm Springs, Georgia, forbidding forever the sale of his land to any Afro, or its rental or occupancy by any such." If the statement is correct, how do you reconcile the inconsistencies of the Roosevelt family in relation to their public utterances and private actions?

I know nothing of the property deeds signed by my husband in Warm Springs. I do realize, however, that in signing a deed he would have been obliged to conform to the laws of the state in which that deed was signed. If the state of Georgia has any such laws as you mention, he would have been obliged to sign in order to obtain the land. Since the property passed out of my husband's hands very soon after he acquired it, as he sold it to the Foundation, I have never heard much about the conditions under which the land was acquired or sold.

My husband and I have been married for seven years and only recently learned that we would not be able to have a family of our own. We both adore children and decided to adopt one. To our great disappointment, after contacting several societies in New York, we were told that because we are of different faiths we cannot adopt a child. We are hoping this law does not exist in every state. Do you know if there is any state where we can adopt a child?



I do not know what the laws are in the various states. I do know that in New York State when children need care outside of their families, they must be placed with persons of their own religious faith. This, however, undoubtedly is not the law in every state, and you could easily find out by writing to the secretary of state in any state where you thought of trying to adopt a child.

I am a girl fifteen, and will be sixteen in January. My nine-year-old brother is all the company I have. There aren't any girls my age living in this community. Therefore, I am quite lonely. There is a boy who will be eighteen next January. We are quite interested in each other. He is a very nice boy. He has asked me to date him after I become sixteen. My grandmother says sixteen is too young. Do you think I should ask my parents to let me have dates with this boy after I am sixteen, or wait until I become eighteen in hopes of finding another boy as nice as he is?

I think your grandmother is right. At sixteen it would be a mistake to date one boy so much that you do not see other boys. Can you see this boy occasionally and go out with other boys too? Sixteen is pretty young to make a decision to associate exclusively with one particular boy.

Do you consider your work with the United Nations as a "sacrifice"? If so, what would you rather do than this?

I cannot remember saying anything which would give the impression that I consider my work with the United Nations a sacrifice. There are times when that work does entail sacrifice of time and comfort, but so does all worth-while work. I consider it an honor to be allowed to work with the United Nations; to have the confidence of those who appoint me and of the majority of the legislative group that has to ratify the appointment. If I am able to keep the respect and good will of those with whom I work, I shall be extremely grateful.

WILL THEY COUNT YOUR VOTE?

Enough dishonest ballots can defeat the man you want for President, and the policies you want America to pursue, unless you protect your vote.

By Tom Sweeney with Robert Cruise McManus

IN 1946, I was the Republican candidate for senator from West Virginia. My opponent was the Democratic incumbent, Senator Harley M. Kilgore. According to the certified returns, I was defeated by a plurality of 3534, or about one half of 1 per cent of all the votes cast.

My friends and I received so many reports of irregularities in the election that we determined to make a trial investigation. Choosing at random a single precinct, we mailed 515 letters, first class, to those who were supposed to have voted there, according to the testimony of the pollbooks. Over 200 letters came back, marked "Unknown at this address." Further investigation revealed that a dozen of these unknowns were registered from a vacant lot. One was dead. Another was the inmate of an asylum. Scores had moved to New York, California and places even more remote.

The result of these and other discoveries was that I filed a claim with the United States Senate, contesting Senator Kilgore's right to his seat. The Senate decided to investigate, but it was not until September, 1947, that its agents arrived in West Virginia. As I write this, nearly a year later, the investigation is only half finished. Memories can grow cold in two years, sometimes with outside assistance.

Meanwhile Senator Kilgore has been casting votes and playing his part in shaping national legislation. If the Federal agents fail to overtake the evidence that was everywhere at hand two years ago, he will remain in Washington. The Republican Senate majority is very narrow—only three. A death or two, plus a couple of Democratic victories in November, could overturn it. That means that if we elect a Republican President, he could be faced with a hostile Senate the day he took office, with every chairmanship of every committee in the hands of the party opposing him. In this crucial moment of world history, that could be tragic.

But it would be quite a triumph, wouldn't it, for the gamblers, the ex-bootleggers and the jovial political gamesters who juggled those West Virginia returns?

Too few people realize that election frauds, even in a few districts, can have the most far-reaching consequences. Too few realize that their honest ballots—your honest ballots—may be canceled completely by dishonest ballots cast hundreds, even thousands of miles away. Enough of them can defeat the man you want for President, and with him the policies you want America to pursue.

There are those who believe that the presidency actually was decided by illegal votes in the Cleveland-Blaine fight of 1884. Cleveland, the Democrat, won that fight by carrying New York State with a plurality of only 1100. Years later a Tammany Democratic leader was convicted of stealing some 10,000 votes in that 1884 election. That was more than enough to put Blaine in the White House.

In my opinion, it is absolutely vital to our democracy that we learn the facts of life about American elections, and then start taking steps to correct what's wrong. That's why I want to tell you my story and give my suggestions as to what should be done. There's nothing unusual in what happened to me. It's happened before to both Republicans and Democrats.

To begin with, there was a politicians' election law, with a loophole in it big enough to lasso an elephant. There were incompetence, negligence and waste of manpower at the polls. There were forgery, bribery and fraud. There was theft of public records. There was intimidation of honest officials. There was intimidation, as well as downright disfranchisement, of honest citizens. There were gunplay and whisky. There was violation of the law by those whose duty it is to see that the law is enforced.

Let's start with West Virginia's ballot itself. It is so arranged that the citizen may vote a whole party ticket by making only one mark at the top of the sheet. This is a very handy arrangement for those who buy and sell votes. The ignorant citizen willing to peddle his birthright has to make only one motion in the poll booth. If he had to seek out each name on the ballot, he and his kind might often vote accidentally for good and independent citizens. That would be very uncomfortable for those who bribed him in the first place.

Now let's consider our permanent registration law, which went into effect in 1941. Why do we—or you—have registration? We have it for one reason, and only one; namely, that those entitled to vote may be enrolled before election day and identified when they go to the polls. If it does not fulfill this purpose, it is worse than useless and becomes an actual aid to fraud, paid for by the taxpayer.

In 1946, that was the kind of registration law we had in West Virginia (it has been amended since). That is the kind they have in many other states, as studies of the National Municipal League amply demonstrate. Our law was an aid to fraud because, while it made ample provision for getting people on the registration lists, it made no provision for periodic checkups to get them off, after they had died or moved away.

Is it any wonder that by November, 1946, our pollbooks were loaded with the dead and the departed? Those were the (Continued on Page 144)

There, in a far corner, was Pandora

Wedding Present

IN ONE WAY, IT WAS A PRESENT FOR CATHY. IT WAS ALSO, FOR EACH OF THEM, THE MOST IMPORTANT GIFT EVER RECEIVED ★ BY NEWLIN B. WILDES

IN her way back to the house she saw the small black car, and went over to it. "Good morning, Mr. Maxwell," she said, smiling at him, and he said, "Mornin', Cathy. Must be some easier gettin' to school, now that spring's here." Mr. Maxwell was the postman and her friend. He had gray hair and his face was very red, with deep weathered lines around the mouth and eyes. He gave her the letters, three or four of them, and the paper.

One of the letters was light blue, very light, and addressed to her mother in a big, long, scrawly writing, with the t's crossed at queer angles and the i's dotted with little circles. It was, she knew, from her older sister Sandra. It was not, usually, good news, getting letters from Sandra. It meant talks about money, and arguments between her mother and father. Not very pleasant arguments sometimes.

She put the mail in the pocket of her sheep-lined coat—it was still cool in the early mornings—and went on up to the house for breakfast. Her dungarees were tight and a little short, because she had outgrown them, really, and her brown hair was in two tight braids down her back. The letter had made her dark eyes bigger, and there were freckles over the stubby button of her nose. Her face was round and she was not, probably, very pretty, but you could not tell, finally, because she was only twelve and, her father said, hadn't settled down to anything yet. He grinned at her when he said it. Her father did not grin a great deal.

It was ten minutes of eight when she got into the house, and her father was just finishing breakfast, his thick shoulders hunched slightly over the table, and he ate without saying anything or looking up. His hair was quite gray just over his ears, and his face was big and massive and getting a little heavy. He had been very handsome once—she knew that from his pictures—and perhaps he had been very gay too. He was smiling differently in his pictures. But that had been long ago. Very long ago.

"You'll have to hurry, Cathy," her mother said, coming in from the kitchen. Her mother said that every school morning. Sometimes she forgot and said it on Saturdays and holidays too. It was just a habit.

"There's a letter from Sandra," Cathy said, giving it to her mother. Her father looked up quickly and then back again. Her mother took the letter and opened it. She forgot everything else.

Her mother was very proud of Sandra. Very proud and very jealous of the chances she must have. Chances to do things, to go places and to meet people. Sandra was twenty-two (Continued on Page 126)

ILLUSTRATED BY R. G. HARRIS

ead turned and nostrils nickering gently.

The TIMELESS DRESS

in gray jersey

PHOTOGRAPH BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

A timeless fashion is one that is not overshadowed by the coming of the new. It is distinguished, seasonless, easy to change with accessories. Timeless fashions are the underpinnings of the best wardrobes. This gray jersey dress with fan pleats, soft shoulders, v-neckline and push-up sleeves is particularly right this season, when all jerseys and gray shades have a special impor-

IE LADY AND THE TIGER

. . . a fable of fashion

Fashion is considerably like the tiger—a noble beast of grace and burning symmetry, but one that needs constant stroking behind the ears by every lady from the age of two on.

Somewhere along the line, some women tame the tiger. Others never do. It isn't easy, nor does once-tamed mean forever-tractable. There will always be the dress you can't have, the color you shouldn't wear, the fashion intended for somebody else. The purely Spartan victory of giving up these things is not enough, and imparts no glow worth mentioning. It's only when you discover that every fashion has its alternative—that a velvet jacket does more for some women than silver foxes—that it's easier to make a reputation on "the way you wear it" than how much you paid for it . . . it's only then that your complexes fold their tents and can't-haves become less disturbing.

Clothes have a lifelong connection with heartthrobs and heartaches, with dollar bills and crying spells and peace of mind. Above all, they have to be dealt with by every Adam's Eve in the world. The women who do it best regard clothes as an ingredient of, but not the formula for, success or happiness. The comings and goings of fashion are a personal interest, one of many, but not a personal ogre.

These women sort the news skillfully, saying "This is for you, this for me." They ignore everything that is unbecoming. They learn to repeat the kind of dress or suit that has given them most pleasure. They develop a personal style with the use of color, scarfs, old jewelry, belts, fresh flowers. They are intrigued with change and variety, but prove again and again that the best wardrobes are small ones. They know that shopping takes time and allow for it. But shopping as a pastime they regard as a silly waste. They are not obsessed, or ridden down. They give the tiger his due and no more. —R. M. P.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY LEOMBRUNO, BO

A LEOPARD COLLAR, Queen of Scots style, the touch of fur for black, brown or beige wools.

SILVER RINGS to clasp a scarf. You can do it with guard rings, loop ear clips, heirloom rings.

CLUSTERS OF STICKPINS, worn in a satin ascot. Collect them from the attic, antique shops.

PLAID AND PIGSKIN, plaid bag bound with pigskin, gloves in pigskin. A travel-perfect pair.

UNTLET WITH A JEWEL

PHOTOGRAPH BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

Feminine hand, gloved in hand-sewn beige doeskin pull-over, a jeweled medallion pin.

We Quote:

Christian Dior:

"I have always liked it when my clients wear my creations through two years; that proves my idea was good."

Alfred Hitchcock:

"All women and most figures have a potential. If women take care enough they can look well. The trouble is that women adopt a fashion because it is the thing to do instead of adapting a fashion to their own figures and to themselves. Restraint is the main thing, in color and line and ornamentation. Black is a framework for the face . . . I always think of faces first."

Dale Carnegie:

"A man is always more interested in a pleasant expression on a woman's face than the beautiful clothes on her back. A worried woman is never an attractive woman. Worry makes a woman haggard, puts lines in her face. I had lunch with three women yesterday and I haven't the remotest idea what they had on, but I can tell you about their personalities."

MOVEMENT INTO FALL

TAUPE comes in—soft-keyed, and basic.

NUTRIA, its kindred fur in the notable small hat.

RUSSET DOESKIN, the significant glove for smoky tones.

AMBER BEADS, BRONZE PEARLS, bronze pumps, suddenly the right thing

PHOTOGRAPHS BY HOYNINGEN—HUENE

HAT BY MME. REI

TWO SILHOUETTES in a single suit—the jacket belted or unbelted and flared, the skirt like a stem.

THE WAISTLINE rises and falls, often shirred rib-high,

Empire style. The dress slender, with a gentle flare.

SMALL TURNOVER collars, dressmaker turn-back cuffs on suit and dress. Both in taupe by Adele Simpson.

COAT AND DRESS trace the body with flowing slimness.

THE ENSEMBLE returns, dark over bright or muted tones.

THE NECKLINE is higher, the sleeve is slimmer.

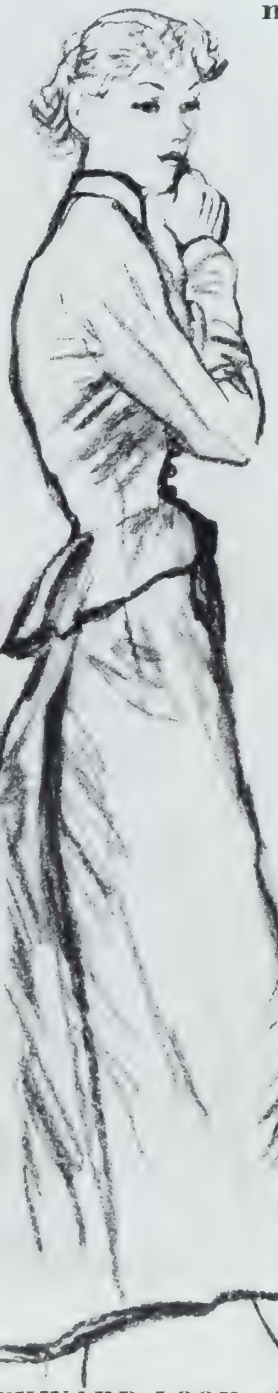
THE SHOULDER sloped or sweetly rounded.

UNADORNED JERSEY, dress of consequence.

SLENDERNESS is the trend, fullness moving to the rear.

DIRECTOIRE coat, terra-cotta dress, by Pauline Trigere.

Fashion moves in many directions this fall. Any woman might look at a dozen new costumes and say, "Fashion can't make up its mind" . . . could look a second time and think triumphantly, "This is the year to make up MY mind, to use my eyes and my wits, to wear what suits me best. This is MY year." Then she will see that plainly existing opposites aren't temperamental contradictions. They're choices. And when change is at the root of fashion, as it is now, the acute choice is the important thing. ★



BY WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

MOVEMENT INTO FALL

It's clearly a coat year. Everywhere you turn there's a beautiful coat. The Directoire that forecasts the future, the profile coat that nips and flares, the sloping greatcoat that accommodates a suit, the belted reefer returned, the coat with wonderful warmth lined with wool jersey or fur. Fur collars come back, and there's a whole collection of disarming separate fur pieces: ascots of nutria, squirrel and ermine, a necklace of silver fox fastened with red velvet. Women who adore dresses will discover a new basic in the unadorned jersey, a wool dress and jacket that doubles for suit and dress, the Victorian silk with a back flare, the crepe with slim accordion pleats. Tweed suits come back with a matching vest, a brilliant jersey blouse, a shoulder fur. Smooth and tweedy wools are often braid-trimmed or have a velvet collar.

GREATCOAT, slope-shouldered, buttoned to the hem. Ben Reig Original by Omar Kiam.

THE BACKWARD LOOK
Victorian suit in claret faille.
by Ceil Chapman.

SHORT-JACKET TWEED suit in blond beige. A nutria capelet rounding the shoulders, a nutria DEEP SQUARE neckline, eternally feminine, a portrait dress in jacquard taffeta, by Fira Benenson.

VESTED TWEED in terra-cotta check, the skirt slim, the jacket boxy, by Bruno.
Velvet hat with a russet quill, by Hattie Carnegie.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY HOYNINGEN-HUENE

Taupes, smoky grays and bronze browns are worn from day suit to evening wrap. Terra cotta is a color for a velvet hat, a blouse, a jersey dress under a black coat. Claret reds come in wools, surah silks, ankle-length taffetas. Almond green and French blue are wool-dress colors, russet a natural for tweeds, winter-navy for chinchilla coats. It's a year for quiet colors: black with brown, taupe with amber . . . bittersweet and scarlet red the sharp accents. ★

BY WILHELA CUSHMAN
Fashion Editor of the Journal

VICTORIAN coat with a windward flare, navy chinchilla worn with mink.

Rep. Reig Original by Omar Kiam

The round hat, revealing a fringe of hair, in lemon-gold velvet, by Hattie Carnegie.

Halo-brimmed Breton, with a closely drawn face veil, gray felt faced with red velvet, by Irene.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY HOYNINGEN-HUENE

Head-hugging drawstring velveteen hood, young hat for casual wools, in three muted colors, designed by Chanda.

the hat...

small

The hat has the last word. This fall it can be defined easily as small and beautiful, never quarreling with the silhouette. It is fur. It is velvet. It is felt with a velvet brim. It's a puff beret, a round pillbox, a cap-calotte, a boat-shaped bicorn, a shallow Breton with a rolled-back brim, a little hood for circlet-cut hair. It matches the costume or not, as you please. The gold, the red, the terra-cotta hat is the bright accent for gray, nutria the soft fur for soft shades, Persian lamb or broadtail the shiny black for black or sharp color. The small hat, as always, is young, easy to wear. ★ BY WILHELA CUSHMAN

Fashion Editor of the Journal

The small fur hat has never been more significant. To wear with coat or suit or wool dress. This face-framing, open-back Persian cap, designed by Pauline Trigere.

pard, fur for browns and beiges. Rolled-brim Breton Hattie Carnegie. Medallion pin. Seaman Schepps.

Back-of-the-head hat in black brushed felt with Victorian braid and tassels, by Hattie Carnegie.

He said, "I've tried to explain to them at home, but they don't seem to understand."

HOW HE CAME BACK

HE HAD A DOOR TO OPEN. IT MEANT, FOR HIM, ENTRANCE INTO LIFE. • BY E. R. STUART

HE sat in his room, so they said, and looked out the window at the birds in the back yard. If he wanted to go out for a walk, he waited until somebody else in the house had the same desire and then followed behind whoever it was, waiting for that person to open the doors, because he had—and nobody knew whence the fear had come—acquired a terrible, haunting dread of opening doors.

Of course he had been sick for a long time in the hospital, but when they heard he was to be released they presumed that he was well. As a matter of fact, they never did actually know what was wrong with him, except that he had gone from combat to an Army hospital in England, and from there had made his way to the States: and because he was soon discharged from the Army, after his return, they never had the opportunity really to learn his illness, whatever it was, but when he got home and refused to open doors, even the bathroom door, they began to feel sorry for him—but not in an angry way, but in a kind of way one feels sorry for an old man, an old man who has lived a full and useful life and was finished—and so they regarded him, although a young man, in the same light, and with compassion, and opened doors for him.

When he wanted a door opened he merely waited in front of the particular door and then when someone from the family would notice his patient waiting he would have the door opened and then closed for him. If he was in the bathroom he would wait inside, behind the door, which had been first opened and then closed for him, and wait until footsteps came, and then he'd call softly, politely, and the door would be opened.

Of course it was a hardship for the family, but that was the way he had come back. I suppose all of us had come back in a way that we had not been before, and I especially, because I, who had never harmed a rabbit in my life, much less a human, had been decorated for killing more of the enemy than any other man in my outfit, and doing it when they, the enemy, were unaware of my being present, so that if one looked at it properly I wasn't very much of a hero, but rather a kind of bold coward because while they were many I came upon them unseen and blew them all to the everlasting glory with three hand grenades and a BAR.

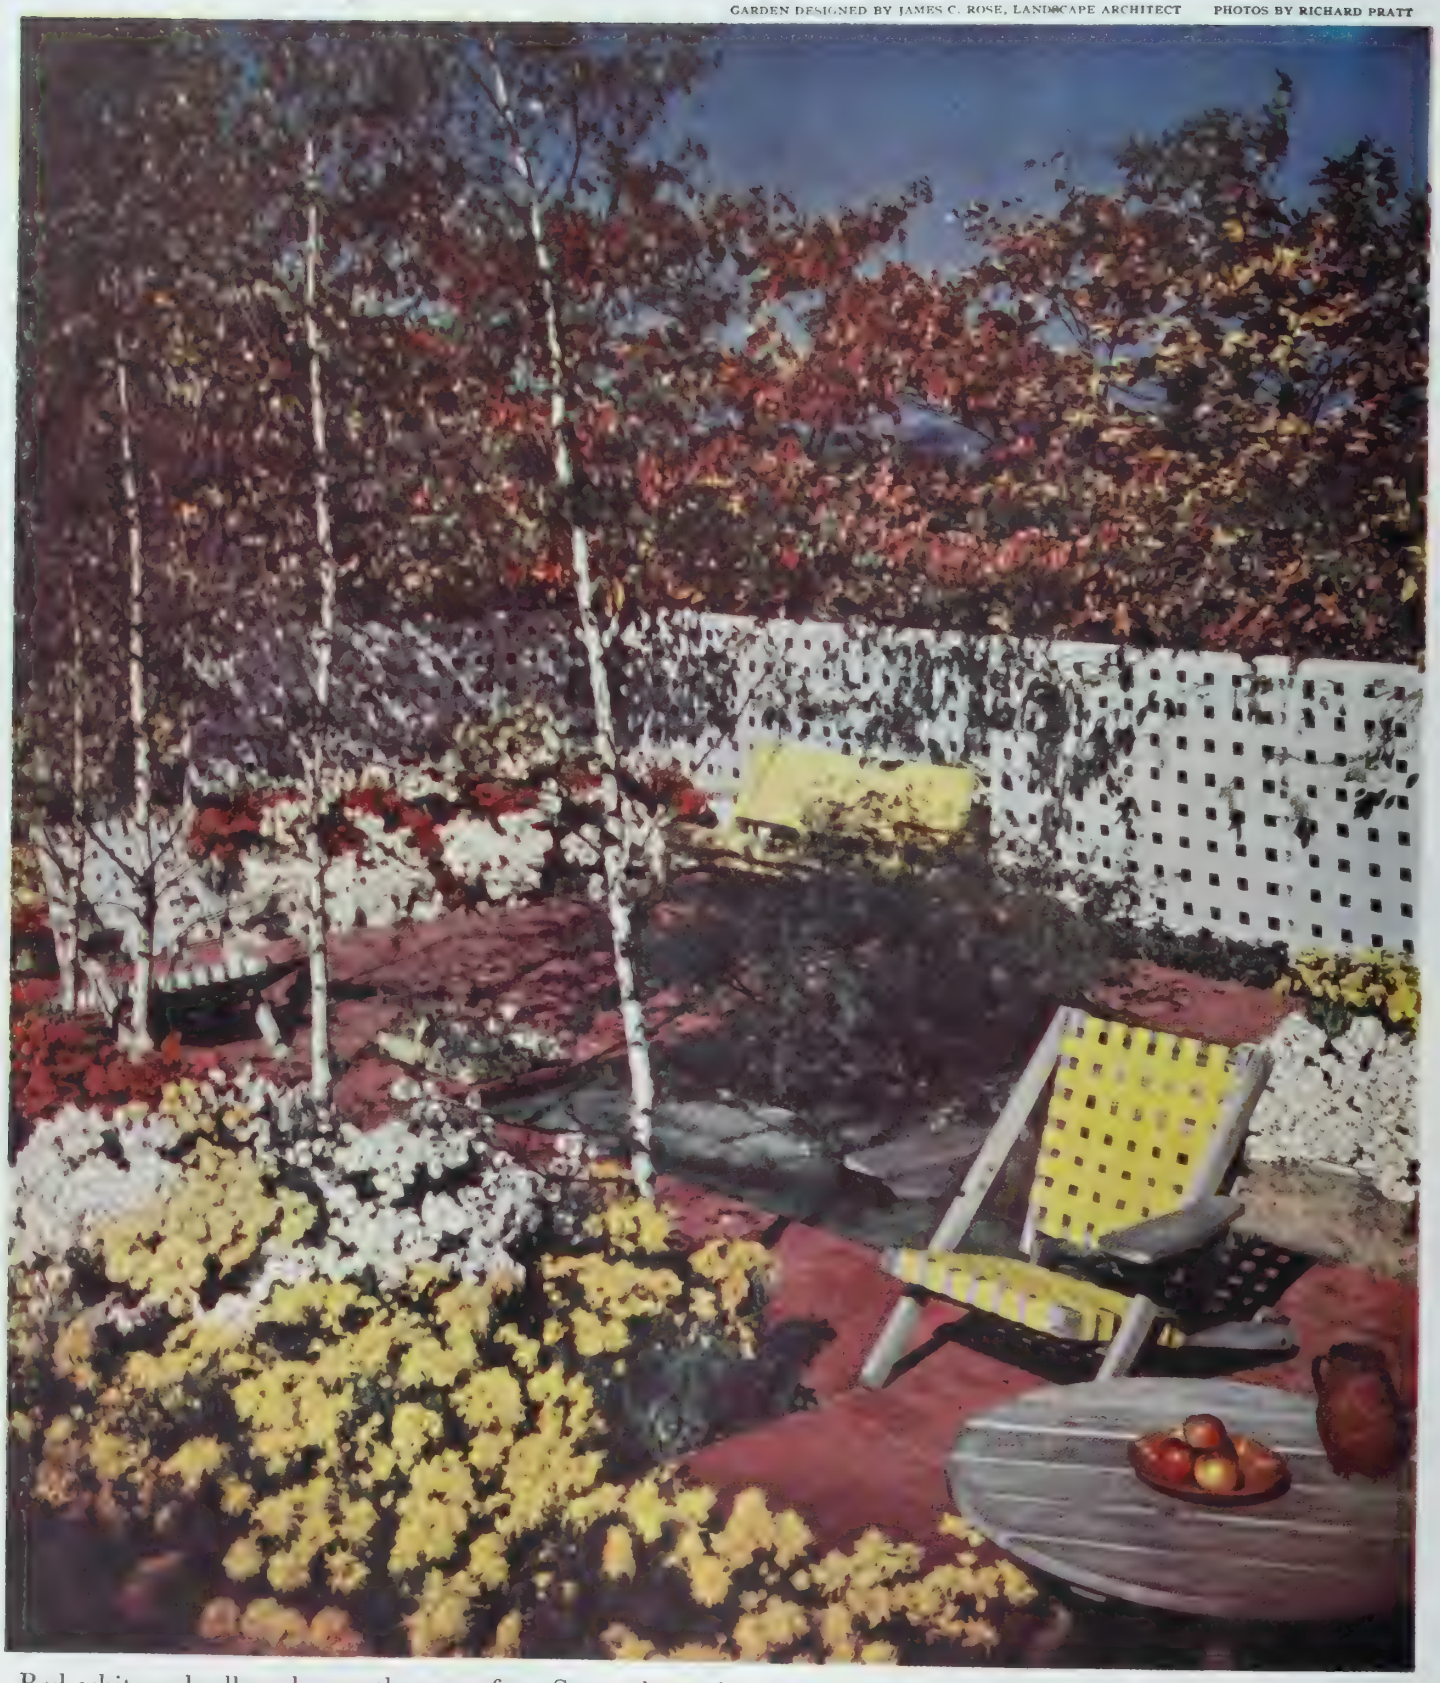
The recollection of my experiences, conflicting with what I thought to be undue praise from the men, and the later undeserved high receptions and awards, and subsequent Army discharge, and the further adulation from the innocent and the ignorant, made me frequent a local bar—something I had not been known to do before getting into the Army but which had now become well known to my family, neighbors and friends as something I did, and that was how I came back.

Anyway, I met him one night when it was raining. I was standing in the doorway of an empty store across the street from Jaeger's café while the rain came down in long, cold lines, bouncing off the gray pavement and sidewalk. I stood there listening disconsolately to the monotonous regularity of the beat of the rain when he came in suddenly out of the rain and the neighboring darkness and stood beside me.

I looked up. "What do you say?" I greeted.

"Yeah," he answered.

Then he took a cigarette from a pack and gave me one, too, and tripped the head of a match into a flame, bent his cigarette over it, drew, and then bore his rounded, cupped hands to me, and inside his curved hands it glowed ruby-red. I hung my head over the flame and dragged. He flipped the dead match out to the rain and shot two sharp jets of smoke from his distended nostrils and stood quietly by me.



Then he said, but not looking at me, "Some rain."

"Rough," I said.

(Continued on Page 201)

ILLUSTRATED BY ANDREW LOOMIS

GARDEN DESIGNED BY JAMES C. ROSE, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT PHOTOS BY RICHARD PRATT

Red, white and yellow chrysanthemums from September to frost compete with the dogwood leaves and garden birches.

Reflecting Garden

BY RICHARD PRATT
Architectural Editor of the Journal

THIS garden as pictured here reflects not only the leaves and flowers and skies of spring and fall, but it reflects as well new ways of garden making. Look at it as a garden of suggestions, from which you pick the ones that please you most. And starting with the floor, there are many reasons why thin slabs of cement, three feet square, are wonderful. They can be made at home, and arranging them on the ground is really the way your garden gets planned. You set them on your carefully leveled garden space, with sand or cinders under them for drainage, just where you want your paths and sitting spots to be. Then the empty spaces left when the paving is laid are used for pools and planting, as the pictures suggest. As you can see, tile red is a good color to paint the paving; blue for the pools. Nor are the pools any particular problem. Made up by the local tinsmith, of galvanized iron, two or three inches deep, and three feet wide by six feet long, one is enough for a panel of water in a little garden, while as many more as you can manage only add, of course, to the effect. The rims come flush with the level paving, and you keep them filled with the hose.

That leaves the planting beds, neatly outlined in front by the paving, and backed by fencing that furnishes wind protection and privacy and frames the picture. As far as flowers are concerned, one effective succession of bloom, out of many, is tulips for spring; taking up the bulbs the end of May and storing dry; then setting out annuals from pots for summer, and in September bringing in your chrysanthemums all ready to bloom until frost, when you lift them out to protect for next year's divisions, and put in your tulips again for another spring.

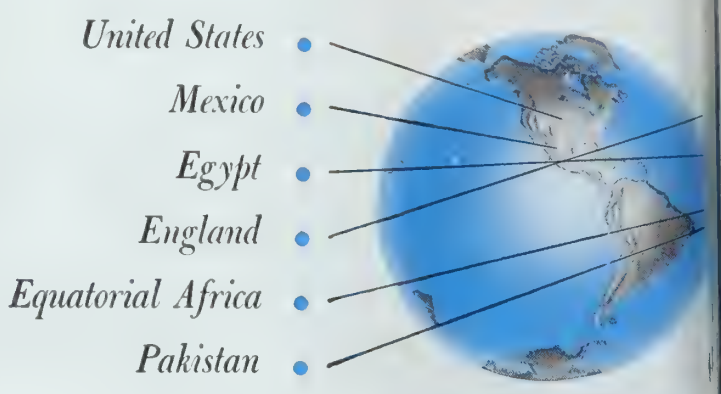
There is naturally some hard work here and there in the course of putting the garden together, before you can play with your plants and sit down to enjoy them; but otherwise it is as simple as it sounds; and any further information may be had for the asking.

For fresh spring effects here are tulips, azaleas and dogwood flowers. The plastic-woven garden chairs repeat the cedar-woven-fence idea.

PEOPLE ARE PEOPLE THE WORLD OVER

MEXICO: While the big-city crowds go to bullfights, cockfighting is the pastime of the peasants. The two guitars lend a festival air. The Gonzalez family vacations by visiting relatives. Father occasionally hunts and fishes. They almost never go to the movies.

GERMANY: For Rolf Stieglitz, born in the midst of war, a ride on a carrousel with his brother and parents is almost too much of a thrill. Life is drab in Germany now, and the Stieglitzes seldom get to dance the Rhinelander. At their wedding in 1933 they danced all night.



EGYPT: Toys are almost unknown to the el Gamel boys, but they [illegible] battered old crystal radio on which they listen to Arabic [illegible]ams from Cairo. Unfortunately, father also likes to listen and has copped one of the earphones. Hassan (right) reads the Koran.

ENGLAND: Tom Hiatt takes annual pleasure in hunting rabbits in the stubble of the harvest. A crack shot, he once bagged 83 in a single afternoon. His son Peter is an enthusiastic assistant. Mrs. Hiatt wishes Tom wouldn't spend so much money on shells. She likes the quieter sport of croquet.

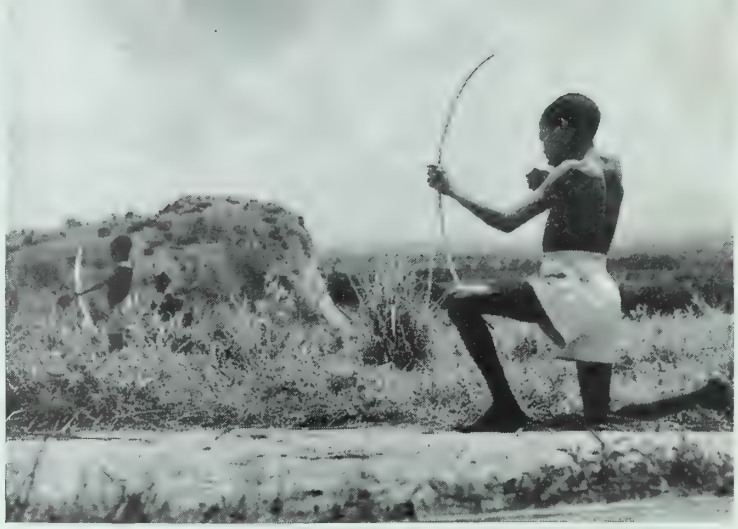
UNITED STATES: On a sul[illegible] afternoon, nothing is so m[illegible] fun in Iowa as to do a little f[illegible] ing from a river bank. Mr.

THIS IS THE WAY

THE world stops work at sundown, and in the twilight pauses to rest and play. In Egypt, the men sit late in the evenings, smoking their water pipes and sipping coffee. In Pakistan, small boys gather in the village street to play kodi-kodi. In the Mexican village of Moravatio there is a cockfight, and the peasants place small bets on the contenders. In rural England there are lights in the pubs until ten o'clock, and Tom Hiatt may be found in The Goose Hangs High. In Greve, Italy, there is dancing on summer nights in the pavilion. The Guercini girls go whenever they can persuade mother to come and chaperon. In Germany, traveling carnivals once more light the market places. In the aftermath of war there is little joy in much of the world, but a smile at least flickers across the face of Europe.

To the farmer, vacations with pay are unknown. To him, a holiday most likely means a chance to get away to hunt or fish. When the crops are in, the Pratts, of Iowa, love to spend a lazy afternoon on the riverbank, or to fish for bullheads after dark. High on the central African plateau, Zamba Aluma and his sons hunt the wild pig, bush buck and buffalo with homemade bows and arrows. In Japan the Okamotos fish for trout, and in Pakistan the Usman youngsters fish the River Indus.

JAPAN: The Okamoto boys, Ichie and Kiyohito, engage in a traditional wrestling match, or ude-sumo. Father claims to be the family champ. The Okamotos go regularly to the movies, enjoy folk dancing, storytelling and native music. They vacation at New Year's, and after the tea harvest.



ITALY: Chaperoned by thei[illegible] mothers, young unmarried girls [illegible] dance on summer evenings in this [illegible] open-air pavilion, constructed [illegible]

ratt are content to let the n watch their lines while retch and read. The Pratts ve card parties, dancing.

EQUATORIAL AFRICA: With homemade bows and arrows, two of Zamba Aluma's seven sons hunt in the African bush. When the hunt is successful, or when there is anything else to celebrate, the tribesmen gather for a bosa dance, to the weird music of zande harps and drums made of elephant ears.

PHOTOGRAPHS for the Journal by Horace Bristol (Japan and China), Larry Burrows (England), Robert Capa (United States and Czechoslovakia), Marie Hansen (Italy), George Rodger (Egypt, Pakistan and Equatorial Africa), Phil Schultz (Mexico), David Seymour (France and Germany).

PAKISTAN: In the sun-scorched village of Patni, only the children have enough energy for sports. This is a game of kodi-kodi, whose rules are difficult to define. There is little leisure for the rice farmers of Pakistan, and their greatest pleasure is to gossip at twilight.

- Germany
- Japan
- Czechoslovakia
- France
- China
- Italy

By JOHN GODFREY MORRIS

THE WORLD PLAYS

With livestock to tend, with crops to watch, there is little chance to get to town for movies. Ho Fu-yuan has seen two in his lifetime; his family none. Yet the art of Disney and of Tarzan is known around the world. The Okamotos recently saw Gaslight, with Ingrid Bergman; the Stieglitzes, an adventure epic, The Jungle is Calling. The Hiatts were understandably proud of the English film Great Expectations.

But it is the simple pleasures which prove most satisfying. Children everywhere have their toys—marbles in France, beanbags in Japan, dolls in Czechoslovakia. Hide-and-seek is a world favorite. For the folks, there is the fun of small talk over a glass of homemade French wine, a mug of English cider, a Coke or cigarette. Pleasure is meant to be shared with friends and visitors, and both the Pratts and the Zamba Alumas will gladly kill a chicken for an unexpected guest.

In weary China there is almost no pleasure except to sit in the shade, fan oneself, and hear the future foretold. There the monotony of work is broken only by the special events of birth, marriage and death. The Ho Fu-yuans, bowed by the toil of centuries, are resigned in the belief that only in heaven will come the rest they have earned so well.

FRANCE: Music is important to the Redouin family, who attended this music festival in the near-by town of Cheverny. They love to dance, and can rumba, waltz and zwaing. The Redouins almost never go to movies, but frequently entertain friends at home.

CHINA: Grandmother Ho consults the village fortuneteller about the marriage of her young grandson, seven-year-old Ho Ch'iang. Grandmother Ho wants to see him well matched, and thinks one cannot begin too early to contract a marriage with a proper girl.

war wreckage. On Saturnights there is a band from nce. Rumba and swing are popular than folk dances.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA: Petticoats—all five of them—fly high in the traditional dance of a Slovakian wedding. The music is by gypsy violinists. Occasionally the girls clasp hands and sing in a circle. This celebration, to which our Slovakian family was invited, continued three days and nights.

SWAPPER'S LUCK

BY ANN BATCHELDER

ONE of the best things about a vacation is getting home from one. I guess it is the best. And if that isn't an old platitude with whiskers on, then I never wrote one. But, after all, the reason they get to be platitudes is that they're good and understandable, so let it stand. When we get home we are tickled to death to see the crisp white curtains at the windows, the garden all trim and sweet, full of early chrysanthemums and late phlox, with the smooth blooming of the heliotrope giving off its ineffable perfume just as you open the garden gate.

A WONDERFUL TRIP. This year the two of us figured that, having put up, along with the rest of the world, with a summer that might have done better, we would set out in the car, no matter what, and go. Just go. No particular goal in sight, stop where we please, stay if we liked it and, if we didn't, move on to better pickings, to hoped-for greener pastures. And it worked. Weather did as well as could be expected, no flat tires. We didn't have to do a thing we didn't want to. I tell you it's a grand feeling, and there's always that lovely feeling that, just about the time we began to wonder if the fence needed painting and the lawn had grown up to hay, we'd be on our (Continued on Page 234)

PHOTO BY STUART-FOWLER

RECIPES

Old Homestead Succotash Supper

Stuffed Clams

Cold Chicken-and-Tongue Loaf

Lime-and-Ginger Fruit Salad

Cottage-Cheese Pancakes with Strawberries

Chocolate Pecan Cake with Sea-Foam Icing

Orange Mousse
in Chocolate Shells

Meringue Ring
with Ice Cream and Peaches

Line a Day

1 The moon comes over the mountain,
In the same old way.
Try and stop it if you know how—
Until the break of day.
That'll stop the moon. Why?
Let the astronomers say.

2 I have some news for you this month about salmon, the kind of news that fits right into these end-of-summer days. Maybe it isn't true, but I have always thought that the colder the water, the better the fish.

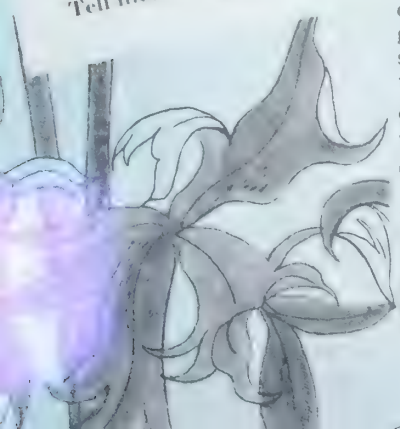
3 Anyway, there's a very special, very elegant pack of Upper Yukon salmon. Chill a can. Turn it out whole on a platter and around it put quartered tomatoes, water cress, cold green peas. In between have plenty of mayonnaise doctored with cream a little, and over it sift a light sifting of Parmesan cheese. Serve with salted, toasted biscuits.

4 "Anything you can do I can do better than you," echoes salmon to his so-called friends and would-be neighbors. It's a big order—it's likely to put any salmon on its mettle unless it's a salmon that doesn't care and is blanketed in conceit.

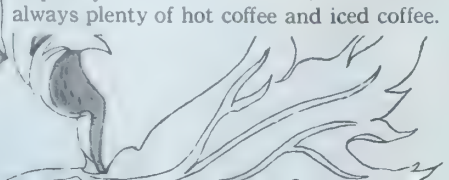
5 Try this: Flake a large can of salmon and put it aside. Make a rich cream sauce, adding a few chopped anchovies, about a cup of purée of peas, and a few leaves of washed, dried and chopped cress. Have this sauce very hot. Pour it over the salmon in a casserole, cover generously with fine buttered crumbs and bake until the sauce and crumbs get together. The casserole ought not to be so deep the contents are lost to the world. Cut your garment according to your cloth.

6 At a very smart house in my home town, dinner rolls, which are nearer heavenly than earthly things, are served, on occasion, in the bright new shiny pans they were baked in. Right out of the oven. Piping hot. Better than a golden bowl is that tin to the roll. And very smart too.

7 There is nothing better to dress broccoli with, to my mind anyway, than plenty of melted butter or margarine and riced, hard-cooked egg. Serve it on individual plates. Don't overcook it. It can stand the knife and fork, likes them better than the implements for eating cereal.



8 Walking down the buffet line, this is what you see. At one end a very large bowl of chicken salad—chicken, not veal. Glass dishes of currant jelly and gooseberry jam, all the olives—plain, stuffed, black and green, in abundance. In the center, a whole lobster in jelly and a bowl of green salad with one of Russian dressing. The salad to be dressed French, the Russian for the lobster.



9 At the other end, plates of hot toast, very brown, very buttered, constantly in and out of the kitchen, and flanking a chafing dish of fresh crab meat à la king. Little hot raised rolls are constantly renewed. The dessert is raspberry sherbet and chocolate cake. And always plenty of hot coffee and iced coffee.

END OF SUMMER

These are the things to forget:
The rose that refused to bloom,
And the closed and shuttered room
Dusty with old regret.

Never remember the cloistered way?
Upland the long path led.
The wind is sour
on the lone pine bed,
Silent the roundelay
Trilled by a bird in September.
Tell me, do you remember?

BY ANN BATCHELDER

10 For lobster in jelly, have at least one lobster for every two or three people. The lobsters must be freshly boiled. The fishman will open and take out the meat if you're busy. But if you are a real cook, you won't let him. Save the shells and clean them well.

11 This one has to be a three-part serial. Worth it too. Take off the head end and chill the shells and the lobster. Be careful to keep the claws whole. Cut lobster into nice pieces. Season it with a little mayonnaise or Russian dressing. Pack in the lobster shells. Decorate it with sliced black and green stuffed olives, little curls of anchovy and celery cut julienne and made crisp.

12 Put the filled lobster shells on a silver platter (or any platter). Coat the surface with clear, fresh, tart lemon jelly made with unflavored gelatin, cooled to the consistency of unbeaten egg white. Chill. When it sets, take the jelly that has run off on the platter and warm a little. Pour back over the lobster. Keep on chilling and coating until the lobster is well coated with jelly.

13 This is right on the dot for your next luncheon party. Make a good batch of well-seasoned chicken hash, chopped fine and done with chicken broth. Cut rounds of rich pastry; spread hash on one half of each round—heaping, of course—then press in five or six thin slices of sausage. Cover with the empty half of pastry, press the edges together, prick, put little pieces of butter on top and bake in a hot oven. If served as appetizers, make your pastry rounds very small.

14 Here's something for you—it's a mushroom purée. This little number is supposed to step right out among the spreads, tackle the sardine setups, hot or cold, and help out a mushroom soup.

15 Maybe you do, maybe you don't know about this hamburger treatment. Wonderful for picnics, for patio or beach parties or anyplace hamburger seems to be indicated.

16 Take two and a half pounds of best top round—no fat, no gristle—chopped fine. Add a chopped onion, salt and pepper, a cup of chili sauce, a beaten egg and a cup of bread crumbs. Mix well. Mold in a loaf. Spread with soft butter or margarine, place in a bread pan, and bake until done—around an hour in a moderate oven, maybe a little longer. Slice and use for sandwiches, hot or cold. Pretty hot stuff.

17 From an old cookbook: "Now the root vegetables are about ready to dig. The pumpkins are ripe. Please pass by that bugaboo, the ripe cucumber, lurking in the corn. Use corn sparingly; health comes before indulgence." It would be a lot worse if I were lurking in the corn.

18 Fish note: Add two teaspoons of grated horse-radish to your regular hollandaise recipe to serve with boiled fish. There's a sauce that wins plenty of friends for fish dinners.

19 Crab meat, chicken, lobster, shrimp—any of these, made into a salad with mayonnaise, is pretty elegant heaped on artichoke bottoms and surrounded with cress and slices of tomatoes.

20 Ever hear of a nut that isn't a nut? It's the new look in nuts—don't say a word, but they are pumpkin seeds! Grown in Mexico. Toasted and salted. Good too.

21 You needn't wait to get hit on the head with a coconut in order to have coconut. You may now sprinkle the next curry with coconut out of the box. But like all good things, use it lightly.

22 Another coconut idea is to add a sparing sprinkle—that's what I mean—a sparing sprinkle of coconut to waffles before closing the iron.

23 Now the word comes for more and better sandwiches. It's a September custom. So take some sliced tongue, spread it generously with horse-radish, put between buttered slices of bread. Dip in beaten egg as for French toast. Sauté on both sides until brown. Serve hot.

24 And sometime when you're having French fried toast and bacon for breakfast, try adding a tablespoon or two of molasses to your egg mixture. Fries a beautiful golden brown.

25 Now to the subject of marmalades. With toast in the morning—that's everyday stuff. But for teatime or anyplace where you want a perfectly delicious toast-and-marmalade combination, look at some of the other marmalade possibilities.

26 Take ginger, for one. Have the toast, cut in broad fingers, very hot, buttered, spread with orange marmalade with which you have combined some very thin bits of crystallized ginger.

27 One more, because I'm all for sharing. Cover the marmalade with very thin slices of very rich, creamy cheese. Run under the broiler until the cheese melts. You'd better be sitting around waiting for this. You know why. And it is a delicious thing.

28 Maybe I've told you this before, but I rediscovered it, so will go ahead. When it's eggplant you're going to have, prepare it as usual, then put the slices in a good French dressing for fifteen minutes before broiling them. You've no idea.

29 Should you wish something a little bit better and considerably different, get some specially fine mushrooms. Grill them and stuff them with deviled ham. Stick a toothpick in each and they will get picked off right away.

30 There's a haze over the mountains where I came from. I know it well. Compounded of air and stillness and burning leaves, it leans on the hills and shuts the world away. It is enough. Summer is bowing out. It wasn't much of a summer here, but next year? Well, maybe.

YOUR ANNIE.

CLASSROOM WORK burns up energy fast and must be restored. Much depends on proper foods.

ORGANIZED GAMES and sports use up much of a child's energy.

IN SCHOOL CAFETERIAS many children eat home-packed lunches.

Somewhere in every school child's day there's a place for GOOD HOT SOUP

LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL

Study, play and just plain romping use up children's energy in jigtime. Mothers know it must be restored by the right food eaten at the right time. Lunch, particularly, they realize should include a substantial hot dish—a dish like Campbell's Vegetable Soup.

Women know this fine vegetable soup of old . . . know what sound nourishment is in its good beef stock, and in its tempting garden vegetables—fifteen different kinds. No wonder they call it "almost a meal in itself". And because they've seen their youngsters go for this homey vegetable soup time after time, they make sure to keep plenty on hand. Do you?

Campbell's VEGETABLE SOUP

HOME TO LUNCH come many school children.

"ON THE GO" from morn till night.

Would you be healthy,
Happy and wise?
Eat well, sleep well
And exercise!

VACUUM BOTTLES often hold good hot soup.

You can say "yes" to Romance

because

Veto says "no" to Offending!

Veto says "no"—to perspiration worry and odor!

Soft as a caress . . . exciting . . . new—Veto is Colgate's wonderful cosmetic deodorant. Always creamy, always smooth, Veto is lovely to use, keeps you lovely all day! Veto stops underarm odor instantly . . . checks perspiration effectively. And Veto lasts and lasts—from bath to bath! You feel confident . . . sure of exquisite daintiness.

Veto says "no"—to harming skin and clothes!

So effective . . . yet so gentle—Colgate's lovely, new cosmetic deodorant, Veto, is harmless to any normal skin. Harmless, too, even to your filmiest, most fragile fabrics. For Veto alone contains Duratex, Colgate's exclusive ingredient to make Veto safer. No other deodorant can be like Veto! So trust always to Veto—if you value your charm!

Trust always to Veto if you value your charm!

FAMILY CIRCLE

(Continued from Page 37)

smokes with a Pole.' But don't be alarmed!" She laughed. "I shan't ask you to join me. Come in, sit down, and tell me all about yourself."

Maud did. Modjeska's lovely manner put her more or less at her ease, and in a breathless torrent she told her of the inspiration her performances had been, of how she loved the theater, loved acting, didn't know whether or not she had any talent but wanted so much to go on the stage. Then, with the temerity of young and burning ambition, she asked if Madame Modjeska would like to have her recite something.

Modjeska politely concealed a wince. She knew all too well what such expressions of dedicated ardor are generally like. But there was something about this girl which arrested attention. She had a charming speaking voice, she had distinction, and she was so desperately in earnest. She told her to go ahead.

Maud stood up, gulped, and plunged headlong into the Potion Scene. At the finish, Modjeska put out her cigarette and told her to recite something else, and by way of contrast the girl complied with excerpts from Mrs. Jarley's Wax Works. The lady laughed spontaneously at the comedy points, then called for a final selection, and the young performer wound up with Isabella's Plea—a risky choice had she known it, for Measure for Measure was part of the Modjeska repertoire.

When she had finished, there was a pause. Then Modjeska rose and said, "Child, you are gifted. At the end of my season you will hear from me." Then she kissed her on both cheeks, opened the door, and gracefully dismissed her.

Maud went home in a happy daze which lasted for the next two months. The interview, the great artist's apparent interest—it all seemed unreal. And when the postman delivered an envelope postmarked New York and bearing on the back a tiny coat of arms, that too seemed unreal. The letter read:

My dear Miss Durbin: We are now making contracts and yours will be sent to you shortly. If you are still decided to go on the stage you will sign it; if not, please let me know at the earliest date, as I shall have to engage someone else in your place.

I will not tell you what parts you have to play, because I want to read them with you before you commit them to memory, so that you may have at once the clear understanding of every line in your part. I do not usually take so much trouble with the young actresses, but I am interested in you, and if you follow my instructions, I hope you may make your way in the profession.

It is the beginning which is the most difficult and not always pleasant part of the career, but if you begin well, the result is bound to be good.

My acting manager will tell you when we begin the rehearsals. I think that you must be prepared to come to New York about September 21st, three weeks before our opening of the season.

With best wishes,
Sincerely yours,
HELENA MODJESKA

MAUD instantly wrote back a joyfully effusive acceptance, then told her family. Her mother was grieved but compliant. Her father was indignant and anything but compliant. A few days later when a letter from Modjeska's manager informed them that Madame was in receipt of Miss Durbin's acceptance, that the season would open October tenth with Henry VIII, and that in this production Miss Durbin would recite the prologue and epilogue, dressed as a boy herald in tunic and tights!, William Durbin went livid. He bellowed his flat refusal and Maud tearfully returned the contract. Miraculously, another letter arrived from Modjeska. That understanding and magnanimous lady had written back:

My dear Miss Durbin: I am afraid my stage manager's letter has discouraged you and, therefore, I write to you to urge you not to give up the opportunity of making your career—maybe the only sure one you have. You may get an engagement in some other companies—but, I assure you, it will not be the same.

CULVER SERVICE

Modjeska was a famous Camille.

As to the parts you have to play, the prologue and epilogue in Henry VIII is the best after Katharine. . . . Anne Boleyn and the other parts are simply walking ladies . . . while here you have an opportunity of being alone on the stage and speaking to the audience. The costume is a very decent one. It is a herald's dress and it may be long to the knees. Besides, you have a charming part in Camille—Nichette—then Phebe in As You Like It, Margarite Curl in Mary Stuart and one of the maids in Much Ado. The only part where you appear as a boy will be in Henry VIII and it is a loose gown and long enough to save you all embarrassment.

You certainly must know that I can get as many young girls as I wish—but I feel my duty to give you all the chances first.

All the costumes I will furnish for you and your hotel bill in New York may be paid from the advance money my husband, Mr. Bozenta, will send you to Denver. I shall also send your ticket or money for your trip to New York. Please answer immediately.

Very sincerely yours,
HELENA MODJESKA CHLAPOWSKA,
COUNTESS BOZENTA

THE addition of her title in the signature was clever and calculated. It was a gesture she almost never made, for she was democratically unassuming and took pains to keep the fact that she was a noblewoman carefully out of her professional life. But she must have figured, and quite correctly, that in this instance the aristocratic touch would be effective.

September finally came round and Maud was ready to start for New York. Her mother decided to go with her, and together they boarded the eastbound train. The management had reserved them a room at the Park Avenue Hotel, and Maud found a note at the desk saying:

Dear Miss Durbin: You will please meet the members of Madame Modjeska's company on the stage of the Garden Theater at 11 A.M. September 19th.

Rehearsal of Henry VIII.

BEAUMONT SMITH,
Stage Director

Maud's hand trembled as she read the instructions over a dozen times. She and her mother consulted a sympathetic doorman as to the exact location of the Garden Theater and just how long it would take to get there by horsecar.

They set out next morning. Maud's heart was pounding wildly. Beaumont Smith, the stage manager, met them at the door, welcomed them with a gentlemanly courtesy that Mrs. Durbin found most reassuring, and asked them to come in. An acetylene rehearsal light cast a weird glare on the bare

(Continued on Page 77)

Just as you picture a duchess to be —— An incandescent, star quality in the beautiful Duchess of Leinster's face sends her loveliness right out to you—makes you feel the warmth and graciousness that is her inmost self.

Your face is the keynote of your inner self. Whether you know it or not it is expressing You every minute—your spirit, your disposition, your habits. Help it then to reveal you clearly—as you want to be.

The Duchess' complexion is radiant, glowing-clear and silken-smooth

"I have an unbreakable rule for fresh, soft skin"— says Rafaelle,

DUCHESS of LEINSTER

"I HAVE an unbreakable rule for fresh, soft skin—Pond's Cold Cream," this lovely Duchess tells you.

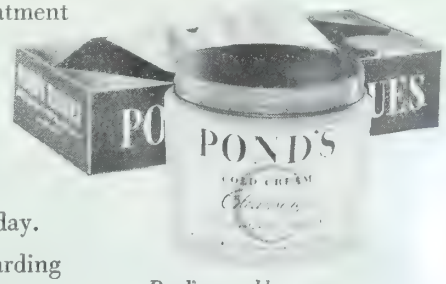
Follow the Duchess' rule—and work magic on your face today. Your face does as you do by it. So—take your luscious Pond's Cold Cream and see how Pond's "Outside-Inside" Face Treatment brings your skin new loveliness. This is the way:

Hot Stimulation—splash face with hot water.

Cream Cleanse—swirl Pond's Cold Cream—lots of it—all over your face. This will soften and sweep dirt and make-up from pore openings. Tissue off well.

Cream Rinse—swirl on a second Pond's creaming. This rinses off last traces of dirt, leaves skin lubricated, immaculate. Tissue off.

Cold Stimulation—give face a tonic cold water splash. Now—see your new face! It's alive! It has a cleanliness that you can feel as well as see. Yes—this is beauty care you'll never want to skip—because it really works.



Rosy! Clean! Soft!

You'll want to give your face this new Pond's treatment every single day (and always at bedtime). It literally works on both sides of your skin.

From the Outside—soft, cool Pond's Cold Cream wraps itself around dirt and make-up, as you massage—sweeps all cleanly away, as you tissue off.

From the Inside—every step of this treatment quickens beauty-giving circulation—speeds up tiny blood vessels in their work of bringing in skin-cell food, and carrying away skin-cell waste.

Skin loveliness takes renewing every day. Bring your skin fresh loveliness this rewarding Pond's way. Don't wait one more day to do it.

Pond's—used by more women than any other face cream

GOWN BY HENRI BENDEL

Admiring thought of a guest of honor

"Sally has such beautiful silverware. When I marry, I'm going to own 1847 Rogers Bros., too. It's the finest and loveliest silverplate I know of. It's so like solid silver in its fine craftsmanship."

FOR more than 100 years, 1847 Rogers Bros. has been America's favorite silverplate.

No other has such a proud tradition of expert craftsmanship. In the four exquisite modern patterns, you'll discover the extra depth of ornament; the fine balance and flawless finish you usually find only in solid silver.

Silverplate with the yearmark "1847" is an exceptional value. The price is the same as in 1942!

52-piece service for eight, $64.75; 76-piece service for twelve, $94.75; 100-piece service for eight, $117.50. (Prices include chests. No Federal tax.)

TUNE IN: "The Silver Summer Revue," Friday, 9:30 P.M., E.D.S.T., CBS.

COPR. 1948, THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER COMPANY, MERIDEN, CONN.

(Continued from Page 74)

t . In a distant corner a group of people chatting. Mr. Smith led them over to h group, the nearest member of which was ung man who was laughing over some dote that a pretty woman was telling He had huge brown eyes and black r hair with romantic gray patches over h ars, and his teeth when he laughed were white. Looking at him, Maud thought astonishingly handsome. Too handsome, be. Her mental speculations were inter- ed by Mr. Smith.

Miss Durbin, let me present Madame's ing man and costar," she heard him say- "Mr. Otis Skinner."

y future father looked at her with total nterest, bowed perfunctorily, and turned to his companion. Maud decided she nitely didn't like him.

he next three weeks were taken up with nuous rehearsal. Modjeska's interest in new protégée increased as she saw with t intelligence and sensitive instinct the attacked her work. The gracious woman special attention to her, frequently ed with her the hot lunch that was ught in during the midday break, and oc- onally drove her back to the hotel in her ate brougham. Maud was in a state of r rapture and her mother, by now con- ced that the stage was not a pitfall into om and Gomorrah, was happy too.

he day of dress rehearsal, a telegram ar- d for Mrs. Durbin saying that her son, k, was desperately ill; she must come e at once. Maud, with an aching heart, mpanied her mother to Jersey City and her onto the train. All the way back to nhattan on the ferry the girl stood by the dy rail and sobbed. In lobby of her hotel she into kind Mr. Bozenta, noticed her red eyes. half an hour a note ved from Madame ask- if Maud would please e around to see her mediately. Maud bathed face in cold water and hastened over to Clarendon, where Madame asked her if d be good enough to help her out by sew- beads onto her Holbein headdress for en Katharine.

eminiscing about it years later, my mother l, "All afternoon I sat in her drawing m, thinking I was helping. I know now t I was no help—it was merely her moth- way of keeping me from sobbing my rt out. It still astonishes me to recall that should have had a thought for anyone the eve of her first performance in New rk in an exacting and untried role! I later s humiliated to find Nascia, her maid, pa- ntly cutting off my beads and resewing m. It was my first lesson in infinite pains. 'hings done well and with care' was a Mo- ska maxim."

n her first part, Maud acquitted herself y well. However, her family's horror over indecency of her appearing in tights had its mark, and after two self-conscious formances she bought herself, at terrific ense, a pair of boots, hip-length and made soft suède.

Modjeska, when she saw them, laughed till tears streamed down her cheeks. She had ver heard of a Tudor herald wearing boots. ut," she added upon seeing the girl's wncast expression, "they really look rather shing and they must have cost you three eks' salary. You may wear them."

FTER a short New York run, the company nt on the road. It was a strenuous tour d with split weeks and one-night stands, d Modjeska lived with her husband and id in the private car with which the man- ement in those elegant days provided them. was considered a "miniature palace on heels." During long railroad jumps, her mpany manager, her leading man and two embers next in importance were daily in- ed to the car for luncheon or dinner. Now d then Maud would be asked to come in . She was always placed at the end of the ble, and her shyness prevented her from ning in general conversation. But she listened avidly to everything that was said, and watched with starry-eyed eagerness. Mr. Otis Skinner always sat at Madame's right. He never by any chance addressed a single word in Maud's direction. She thought him excessively "stuck up."

THE season ended and Modjeska invited Maud to spend the summer at her California ranch, Arden. There was a constant stream of exciting house guests—writers, musicians, artists, actors. A constant visitor was Sienkiewicz, the author of Quo Vadis? Paderewski, when his tours took him to the Pacific Coast, came out for Sundays, as did the DeReszkes; and Joseph Conrad, when he visited America, made Arden an objective.

Guests and family shared alike in the household chores. The day began with a lavish breakfast which Madame served herself at a long table on the lawn in the shade of some ancient live oaks. Luncheons were set out in picnic boxes for people to take where and whenever they chose. Everyone went his own way during the day. Modjeska busied herself with household and garden. She sketched, she played with her small grandson, and spent much time composing and illustrating a fairy story for him. Dinner was a semi-informal affair held in the great library of the ranch house built by Stanford White. There followed a fine evening of good talk augmented with music, impromptu theatricals and sometimes dancing.

Madame was an avid whist player. She attacked a game with the concentration and zest with which she attacked a part, and she had a snorting intolerance for a poor partner. One evening when her nephew carelessly lost an obvious trick, she rose, swept the cards up from the table, flung them in the lad's flushed face, and with a dramatic cry of "You are a dunce, sir!" sailed from the room.

We like a man who comes right out and says what he thinks when he agrees with us.
—ANON.

The great lady's temper was Slavicly inflammable, in spite of the fact that she went on the happily misguided assumption that she always had it under complete control.

"I used to lose my temper very often," she once told a reporter. "So did my husband—but it was not wise for both of us to be excited at once, so we agreed that but one of us should lose his temper on any occasion and the other keep calm."

"And does it work?" the reporter had asked.

"Perfectly!" Modjeska had assured him with a peal of laughter. "You see, Charlie is excited all the time!"

The following fall Modjeska's repertory company went on tour again. Otis Skinner was still the leading man. Maud didn't like him any better than she had the preceding year. She still thought him "stuck up." He kept very much to himself. If she met him in the theater, she scuttled past him, barely murmuring a vague how-do-you-do.

The evening of Halloween, they were playing Henry VIII. Maud, prompted by some inexplicable impulse, bought a pumpkin, carved it into a jack-o'-lantern, and during a scene when Otis Skinner, as Henry, was on the stage, ran into his dressing room, turned off the lights, and left the object grinning on his make-up shelf. No sooner had she come away than she wished she hadn't done it. She wished so even more when the leading man's dresser came to her with an expression of extreme seriousness and said, "Mr. Skinner didn't at all like your playing that joke on him."

She went on for the wedding scene as a lady in waiting, flushed with embarrassment and fury. During a short pavan she and the other extras had to execute, she was suddenly aware that Henry VIII had slipped off his throne and was making his way in her direction. He came right up to her, quietly pushed her partner aside, took her hand in a movement of the dance, grinned broadly and whispered, "Who put that jack-o'-lantern in my dressing room?" squeezed her fingers, bowed elegantly, and returned to his dais. Maud gasped and blushed more crimson than Such Lovely Luxury . . . .

Your day ends, as it began, with luxury. On Pepperell Peeress Sheets, you drift serenely into sleep . . . wake refreshed by their "trousseau" texture. Peeress Sheets are woven of expensive all-combed yarn, 204 threads per square inch, for extra strength. You do pay a bit more for Peeress than for ordinary percales, but we believe extra wear will give you this luxury at no extra cost! See these lovely Pepperell Peeress Percales in white and "personality colors"!

Pepperell Manufacturing Company, Boston, Massachusetts.

PEPPERELL PEERESS

Percale Sheets

FINEST ALL-COMBED-YARN

• Actual delivery-room scene. A nurse gently lowers the newborn infant into his sterile receiving basket.

the heels of her Tudor shoes. Her heart was pounding violently.

Maud, by now, was playing better parts. The critics always paid her special attention, and certain of them said she had the qualities of a young American Ellen Terry. In spite of all this, she had no job for the forthcoming season. Modjeska was going back to Poland and was not touring again and Otis Skinner was planning to strike out as a star actor-manager and was forming his own company. Maud went back to Denver for a month and was about to start for New York to make the rounds of the managers and agents, when a letter arrived from Otis Skinner saying that the actress he had engaged to play opposite him had been forced by illness to cancel her contract, and would Miss Durbin be interested in replacing her, please let him know by return post. Miss Durbin wrote back that she thought she might be interested, a triumph of understatement. Within a week she was engaged as leading lady for the season of 1895–96.

It was not for several months that Maud was to find out that it had been only through the earnest intercession of Modjeska that the young star had been persuaded into taking the risk of engaging her. She never, of course, so much as hinted that she had had a hand in Maud's good fortune. The day before she sailed for Poland she wrote:

My darling Maud: I was so happy when I read of your good news. I think it the wisest thing Mr. Skinner ever did, because the parts in the new plays suit you to perfection. I hope you will miss me a little next season, but I also hope it will be a good season for you in all respects. Study your parts carefully, never be in a hurry to memorize, but rather dwell on the sentences and never stop repeating until you are pleased with yourself. Accept all suggestions, but come to the rehearsal prepared with your own business. Nothing forms an actor better than work with himself. I mean the constant and mental effort, and loud study, no matter what the neighbors may say about it.

And now I take my leave. Good-by until we meet again. God bless you and speed you to fortune. Yours faithfully,

H. Modjeska.

My mother never acted with Modjeska again. But their friendship remained warm and they corresponded at regular intervals until the great lady died. I felt that she was a lovely and intimate acquaintance and that although I met her only once, very briefly, when I was a child of six, I knew exactly what she was like.

The background of Modjeska's handsome jeune premier had been very different from that of the shy young girl he was to marry. Born in Cambridge, the second son of a scholarly Universalist preacher and his quiet wife, my father came of a long line of granite-faced New Englanders.

In comparison with the easygoing spirit of the Durbin family, the atmosphere of the Skinner household was austere. There was no frivolous spending for nonessentials. The boys were never given allowances, although now and then the mother, scraping the bottom of the till, would manage to spare them a few pennies, three-cent paper "shinplasters," with which to purchase a few pickled limes or licorice "shoestrings."

Local gaiety was confined to parish-house evenings when young and old gathered to listen to a lecture or musical program, following which the mature ones exchanged decorous chitchat over a glass of nonalcoholic punch while the juvenile element regaled itself pouring melted maple sugar onto bowls full of packed snow.

Sunday was a day of strenuous devotion. The church was such a distance from the house, they had all to spend the day there. For Otis, a lively, normal child, Sunday was excruciating boredom. He was fidgety and inattentive and, given a chance to sit with any companion his own age, raised a good deal of Cain during the interminable stretches of his father's sermons. Once when he had been behaving particularly badly, his father stopped in the middle of a sentence, fixed

Five minutes old... and all yours!

The months of waiting are over... your baby is born.

Near by, the nurses smile at the beginning-of-life music of his first cry . . . reach out gloved forefingers to touch his fuzzy head, before they whisk him away to the nursery.

In a few hours, you'll be holding up your arms for the small squirming bundle... asking all sorts of questions for the time when your baby will be yours to take care of.

Today, you may be surprised to hear there's a completely new kind of skin care. A better, modern way!

It's smooth, snow-white Johnson's Baby Lotion... preferred by more and more hospitals.

Yes . . . Lotion! Hospital-tested . . . proved to give amazing protection against heat rash; other irritations.

When you take baby home, you'll want to continue this modern, better protection.

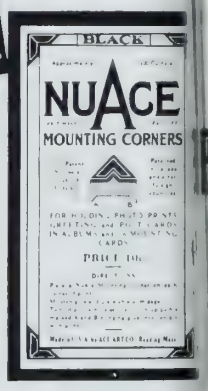
Use Johnson's Baby Lotion exactly like baby oil, after bath, at diaper changes. So pleasant to use!

Leaves baby skin soft and fragrant. Have Johnson's Baby Lotion waiting on baby's tray!

NEW! Hospitals prove it's better!

JOHNSON'S BABY LOTION

Johnson & Johnson



PRECIOUS MEMOR

"Bobbie's first birthday

NEVER LOSE IRREPLACEABLE MEMORIES LIKE THIS!

MOUNT YOUR SNAPSHOTS with..

Sticks quick! Stays stuck! Thanks to NuAce super adhesive! Best for stamp mounting. Best for card mounting. Package of 100 for 10c. 12 colors & transparent. Get NuAce Mounting Corners today! At stores everywhere!

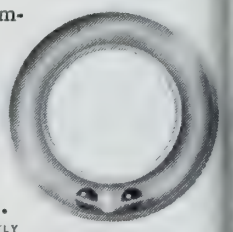
Ace Art Company · Reading, Massachusetts

EARN EXTRA MONEY! Show Christmas Cards

Call on friends, others. Sell Name-Imprinted Christmas Cards at 60 for $1. FREE Samples bring quick profits! Make up to 50c on gorgeous $1 Christmas Card Assortment. Also Gift Wraps, Everyday Greetings, many others. Make money with FREE Personal Samples and Assortments on approval. Write

36 MONEY MAKERS

CARDINAL CRAFTSMEN, Dept. J-71, 117 Pearl St., Cincinnati 1, Ohio



HOLGATE

Infantoys*

a new idea in baby's first toys

DONUT RATTLE is an all-plastic scientifically designed Holgate INFANTOY. Whirling beads in primary colors help baby's eyes to focus. Easy to grip ... chew on ... to pound. Pediatrician-approved. At good stores everywhere...

$1. PRICES SLIGHTLY HIGHER IN WEST

...as carefully made as baby's formula

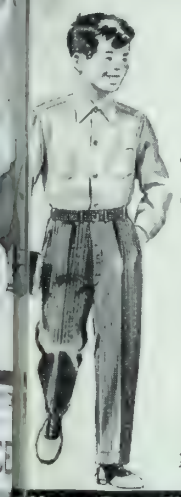
FREE Booklet illustrating all Holgate INFANTOYS sent free on request. If you also wish complete Catalog on all Holgate Toys, enclose 10c.

HOLGATE BROTHERS CO.
Dept. L-98, Kane, Pa.

Name.....

Address.....

City ..... State .....



*REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

holgate toys

Tom SAWYER

PPAREL" For Real Boys

WEARS LONGER!

See these outstanding slacks and longies made of Tufferoy*... TOM SAWYER'S exclusive corduroy. Tufferoy* has 8 extra threads in every square inch for extra wear. Water repellent; spot resistant. Softer, lighter, but tougher. A variety of solid colors and partridge mixtures.

fferoy Prep Slacks – Waist 25 to 32
fferoy Junior Longies – Ages 3 to 12

Here's a longie suit that is typical of TOM SAWYER plus values in boys' clothing. It's a 3-button gabardine that's tailored and rayon-lined just like Dad's. Trousers have Zipper fly, pleats, belt and cuffs. In tan, brown or blue.

ongie Suits–Ages 3 to 12

TOM SAWYER "bold color" shirts in Sanforized flannel plaids, plain or novelty prints are tops with the gang. Of sturdy fast-color cotton flannel. In or outer style.

lannel Shirts–Ages 6 to 20

OM SAWYER Apparel for eal Boys wears and wears! Feaured at fine stores from Coast to oast, it has been the favorite of illions of mothers and boys or over a quarter of a century.

* "Tufferoy" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Tom SAWYER
"APPAREL" For Real Boys

DER MANUFACTURING CO. • ST. LOUIS, MO.

him with an awful eye, and after a terrifying pause said, "If my son Otis would desist from shooting spitballs in the house of the Almighty, I'd continue with my sermon."

Charles, Jr., was the literary hope of the family. He wrote stories and poetry, and his plays were creations of wonder, produced in the cellar with casts made up of his schoolmates, and his mother for an audience. Otis, too, was merely a spectator, because he was considered too young to be reliable in any other role.

The Reverend Charles was offered a new parish in Hartford, and the family left Cambridge when Otis was in his early teens. Charlie had gone to New York to start a career in journalism. Otis was lonely. He became an omnivorous reader and was early initiated into the forbidden delights of the dime novel. He hid the copies at the foot of an apple tree and, when he could, pored over them in a leafy hide-out in the upper branches.

My father's interest in books, however, was no indication of his scholarship, which was extremely poor. He left high school to become a clerk in an insurance company, an occupation for which he was spectacularly unfitted, and he quit to take a job in the shipping department of a wholesale commission house.

* * * * * * * * *

For Children Coming Home

By Virginia Scott Miner

The little song she sings today
Has hardly any tune,
But, like a small clock, ticks away,
"Coming—coming soon!"

So hour by hour she bakes and dusts,
But all the while is humming,
"They are almost, almost here—
Coming—coming—coming!"

* * * * * * * * *

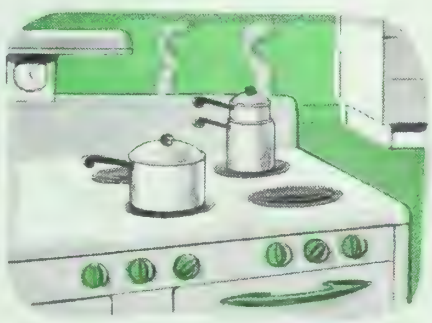
It was at this point that Charlie, working as a cub reporter for the Brooklyn Times, had written him to come to the city for a spree, and the lad had scrimped enough from his salary to purchase a round-trip ticket. Charlie had wangled twenty-four hours' leave to show him around. It was a wonderful day. They journeyed the length and breadth of the island in stages and open horsecars.

The day ended with the crowning wonder of climbing up to gallery seats at the Lyceum Theater to see a performance of The Hunchback of Notre Dame. The boy found himself in a world of poets and priests, cutthroats and troubadours, thieves and gypsies. He sat forward, his body taut, his dark eyes shining. During the entr'actes he sat as if spellbound, neither speaking nor moving. His heart was pounding and his mind was a racing runaway. Charles glanced sideways at him and with wise intuition said nothing.

The play ended. [I quote my father's own words.] The gallery crowd moved slowly down the stairway and out into the cool night air. We walked down the Bowery to Grand Street. We took the Williamsburg ferry and then home to my brother's humble boardinghouse in Brooklyn and to bed. But there was no sleep for me.

I stayed on for two more days. What I did, I don't know and I never shall. It is all a blank. At night I took the train back to Hartford.

I had found my life's work.



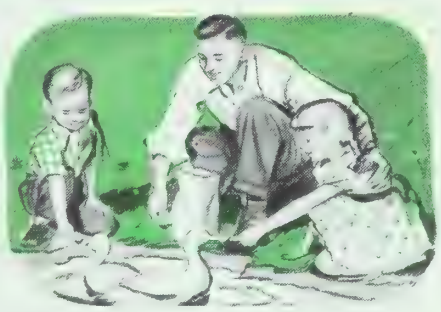
Once home, he kept the momentous decision to himself. Partly because he dreaded his parents' disapproval and more because this discovery seemed too precious to sully it by sharing it with anyone.

Toiling away at the commission-house job, Otis felt the need to act as a race horse feels

HOW SAFE ARE YOUR CHILDREN?

In the past 35 years, the death rate from disease among children 1 to 14 years of age has been reduced more than 80%. Today, accidents, in the home and out, are the leading cause of death in childhood. In addition, thousands of children are temporarily or permanently crippled by accidents each year.

Fortunately, many accidents can be prevented. Parents can do most to guard their children's health and happiness by removing possible causes of accidents, and by establishing common-sense rules of safety.



1. Burns cause most fatal home accidents. So it's wise for parents to turn the handles of pots on a stove so they can't be reached, to keep matches in a safe place, and to place a sturdy screen around a fireplace or unguarded heater.

2. Falls head the list of serious nonfatal accidents. Parents can help prevent falls by providing a storage place for toys, so that they won't be left on the stairs or the floor. Windows should be guarded, and halls well lighted.

3. Safety in the streets is extremely important. Children should learn to cross only at crossings, to obey traffic lights, to look both ways before stepping into the street, and to face traffic if they have to walk on a road.

4. Drowning accounts for many accidental deaths. That's why a grownup should be present whenever children are playing in or near the water. During the winter, parents should check ice conditions where children skate.

Parents can also be helpful in protecting their children by setting a good example and by showing them safe ways to work and play. If, in spite of all your precautions, your child seems to have more than his share of accidents, it may be wise to consult your doctor.

To learn more about protecting your child, send for Metropolitan's free booklet, 98-J, "Help Your Child to Safety."

COPYRIGHT 1948 METROPOLITAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Metropolitan Life Insurance Company

(A MUTUAL COMPANY)

1 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 10, N. Y.

THE LIGHT THAT NEVER FAILS

TO VETERANS—IF YOU HAVE NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE—KEEP IT!

SINCE SHE'S BEEN WEARING
SELBY ARCH PRESERVER SHOES
SHE'S ALWAYS ON THE GO

Don't let their smartness fool you!
Genuine Selby ARCH PRESERVER shoes specialize in comfort first, last and always. Three famous features really work walking wonders.

Kirstin

Tandy

Selby
ARCH PRESERVER
Shoes

- special arch bridge for firm support
- scientifically placed metatarsal pad for comfort
- flat innersole for comfort-plus

Most Styles
$14.95 to $17.95
Slightly higher in Western States and Canada

also—JUNIOR
SELBY ARCH PRESERVER SHOES
for children

Vicki

SELBY FIFTH AVENUE at 38th St., New York City, and your leading Shoe and Department Store. Manufactured for women by THE SELBY SHOE COMPANY, Portsmouth, Ohio . . . for men, E. T. WRIGHT & CO., Rockland, Mass. • In Canada, Murray-Selby, Ltd., London, Ont. • In England, Selby Shoes, Ltd., London • In Australia, Selby Shoes (Aust.), Ltd., Sydney • In New Zealand, Swinton & Oates, Ltd., Auckland • In Argentina, Alberto Grimoldi, Buenos Aires • In Peru, El Aguila Americana, Lima • In South Africa, Goodwear Shoes, Ltd., Johannesburg • In Uruguay, Sassi, S.A., Montevideo

SELBY SHOES THE WORLD OVER—ESTABLISHED 1874

Copr. 1948, The Selby Shoe Company

the need to run. He organized a youthful company of amateurs, among them William Gillette, whom he had known at Brown High School. Gillette allowed the group to put on a couple of their plays in the loft of his family's carriage house. Fired by this whiff of grease paint, Otis screwed up sufficient courage to ask his father if they might give a performance in the vestry basement. To his amazement, his father gave permission and the boys chose for their first production a fearful old comedy called The Honeymoon, which caused considerable headshaking in the community.

His next endeavor was in collaboration with a certain W. L. Cheney, a young friend with musical aspirations and a talent for the harmonica. The two decided to make a professional debut in a joint concert and dramatic show. They found an auditorium in the outskirts of Hartford for $15, and had handbills printed. They spread the ads liberally throughout the town, but fortune favored them with a damp and blustery evening and the box-office receipts totaled $3.75. It was the first of Otis Skinner's professional heartbreaks.

The flop of his initial venture didn't in the least dampen his theatrical ardor. Resigning from the commission house, he got a job as Hartford correspondent for the New York Dramatic News, and for a few months reveled in a delirious orgy of theatergoing, an aisle seat at no cost and a chance to see the leading itinerant stars.

For almost a year he had kept his ambitions secret. To tell his parents that he intended to become an actor, he felt, would be the equivalent of announcing the fact that he was about to take up horse thieving. But the call of the theater became irresistible, and he decided to do it. He chose a Friday for the critical interview, and an hour in which his father was usually engrossed in preparation of next Sunday's sermon. It was hardly the time for announcing a career, but Otis was going to do things up in fine Byronic style. He flung open the door of the sanctum without knocking and stood for a moment speechless and panting, his hands on the knob ready for a quick getaway.

The Reverend Skinner looked up from his writing in quiet surprise. "Yes, Otis?"

"Father," gasped the youth in the voice of Childe Harold, "I'm going to be an actor!"

"What was that?" asked the preacher.

"I'm going on the stage!"

During the ensuing pause, Otis braced himself for a Homeric blowup. His father merely smiled, then cleared his throat and said in a mild tone:

"Well, son, that's quite interesting. I'm very fond of the theater and it will be nice having someone in the family who can get free seats for your mother and myself. But suppose we discuss it later. I have, as you are doubtless aware, a sermon to write."

His mother's reaction to the news was even more baffling. He had counted on her for sympathetic encouragement and, to his wounded amazement, she burst into peals of derisive laughter.

"You an actor!" she howled. "Why, you can't even talk straight!"

It was the only instance he could ever recall of her exhibiting any lack of feeling. But it made him determined to "show her."

He began writing letters to managers and agents, making known the fact that he was ambitious, talented and available. He saved enough money to pay for a trip to New York, where, hat in hand, he cooled his heels in managerial outer rooms, never seeing anyone more important than the office boy.

Finally, miraculously, came an offer from one William Davidge, actor-manager of the Philadelphia Museum. He agreed to engage the professional services of Mr. O. A. Skinner in general utility parts for the season of 1877–78, salary to be $7 a week.

The season started in the fall and there was the whole summer to be lived through, with difficulty. His contract, like all of in those pre-Equity days, called for hi nishing his own wardrobe, and he coll what he could of an array of costume quired a few secondhand and very ill-fi wigs, and purchased enough grease pai make up a battalion.

The summer weeks went by and there no word from Davidge. The "general ity" man grew restive and worried. H ther, of all people, gave him a slight boo suggesting that he put him in touch w certain acquaintance and former parishi who might have connections in "show ness." Connections he had indeed, for parishioner was P. T. Barnum. Reve Skinner gave his son a letter of introduc and Otis journeyed to Bridgeport walked from the station to Waldmere.

As he passed the outer fields of the num estate, Otis was startled to see a wearing a turban guiding a plow which being serenely pulled by an elephant—ar put on daily at the hour the greatest nur of trains was passing along the New Ha tracks, which bordered the showman's p erty. The interior of the mansion was one of the great man's own side-show seums. The halls were cluttered with tro cases, the walls covered with shields, jav and "things."

Barnum received him with the cordi of a heroic barker; his hair, white by r gleamed above a genially florid face. Y of lavish eating and drinking had given h monumental paunch. The prospective a stared at him as he had at the other exhi and exclaimed to himself, "What a mak for Falstaff!" Barn asked him to be sea and listened indulgen to his story. Then he r went to an ebony des a gift, he said casua from the Maharajah Somewhere—picked u fancy mother-of-pearl p dipped it into an inkwe a fantasy fashioned out of a rhino's hor and wrote the following:

> The wise carry their knowledge as they do their watches, not for display, but for their own use.
> —SIR THOMAS BROWNE.

To whom it may concern:

The bearer, O. A. Skinner, esq. is known me. His parents, whom I have known in H ford Conn. for several years, are eminently spectable. Mr. Skinner has an ambition, a ent and a yearning for the stage. I have doubt that he will prove an important acqu tion to any theatrical corps which he may j

P. T. BARNUM

Armed with the letter and new hopes, C hastened back to Hartford. Still no w from Davidge, and it was already Octob He decided to go to Philadelphia anyw and take a chance. He was exactly ninet years old.

My father reached Philadelphia, hurr to the somewhat shabby little theater at and Arch streets, and inquired the way Davidge's office. He was directed up a fli of rickety stairs and waved through a d which gave onto Davidge, at a huge, cl tered desk. With one hand he was signin pile of contracts, with the other he alternat thumbed the pages of a manuscript or pav over some fresh playbills. Now and then took time out for a pull on a chewed-up ci or a frantic ping on a bell to summon a h assed messenger boy.

All too soon Otis was to learn that this w purely an act. Davidge wasn't even a m erately successful impresario, and the f tunes of his theater were precarious. called it the Philadelphia Museum, ap the Boston one even to the extent of hav an exhibition hall of pickled reptiles a some gaudy waxworks. But Philadelp spoke derisively of "Davidge's Snake Sho and attendance at performances was po

Nervously clutching his hat, Otis walk over to the paper-strewn desk, and sh mentioned his name and the fact that he derstood there was a job waiting for h Davidge looked up, shook hands with holl cordiality and began stalling. It was obvi he had no memory of having written to

(Continued on Page 82)

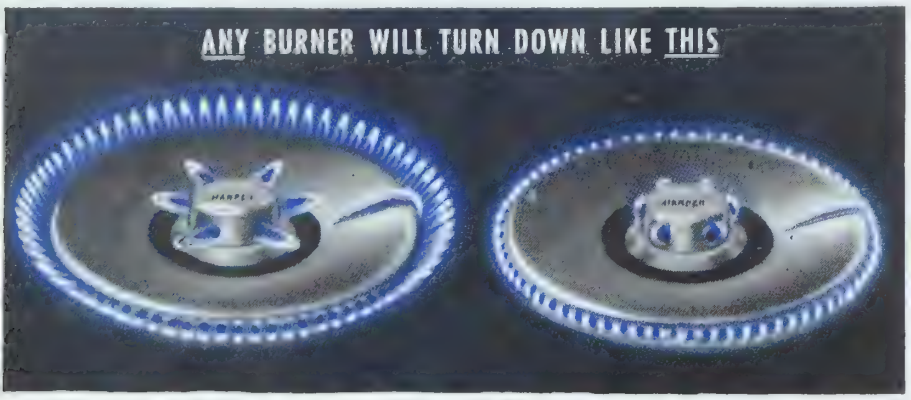
Soft, light, bright...the top-notes for Fall...by Knox of course

Photographs by Placer

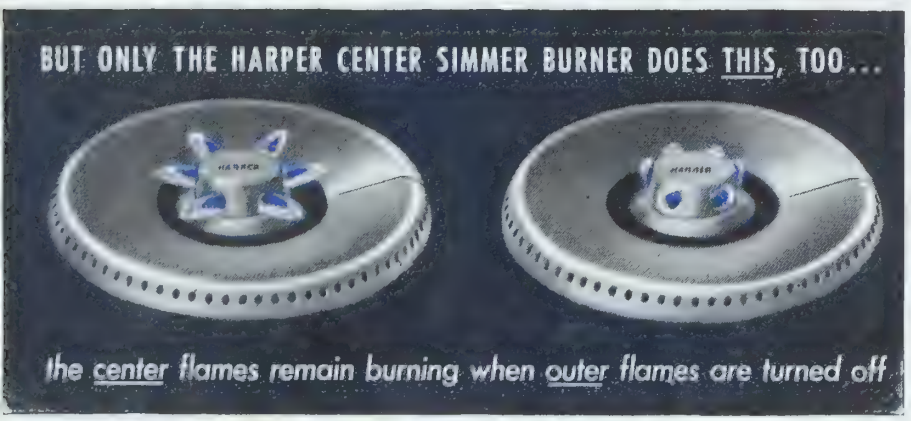
There's sheer genius in what Knox does with felt this fall. Proud little hats . . . soft in your hand, soft against your face. Beautifully manipulated in furry-piled rich velours and in supple felts as fine-finished as the finest man's hat you've ever laid hands on. And the detail, even inside . . . exquisite!
Sketched: Knox does a delightful bonnet, round and soft and gently lifted to frame your face in deep pile velour. The color . . . red port. The magnificently casual coats are Philip Mangone's.

KNOX THE HATTER
452 Fifth Avenue, New York
and fine stores everywhere.

Knox moves the silhouette front and forward in soft green velour.



Glove stitching lightly touches this superb Knox casual in mist-white velour.



"Hats made so fine that all others must be compared to them." Charles Knox, 1838

Make This Test

WHEN BUYING YOUR NEW GAS RANGE

Try the top burners. That's where 80% of your cooking is done. Will the tiny center flames burn alone?

IT MAKES A Big DIFFERENCE!

The Harper Center Simmer burner is really 2 burners in 1. Turn off the big burner and the little burner keeps on burning. You benefit many ways!

1. Saves gas, because the Center Simmer alone keeps a covered vessel boiling.

2. Saves time, saves food, saves boiling dry, saves delicious flavor and color of foods. You can cook with less than a cupful of water, as so little boils away.

3. Keeps foods warm without over-cooking . . . only the Center Simmer can be turned to such a low point.

DO THIS! Insist that your new range has top burners that operate on the Harper Center Simmer principle. Leading makes include A-B, Acorn, Atlantic, Caloric, Copper-Clad, Crown, Detroit-Jewel, Delher, Flamex, Garland, Gurney, Majestic, Moffat, Moore, O'Keefe & Merritt, Oriole, Roper, Universal, Wedgewood.

HARPER CENTER SIMMER

FREE: Send for illustrated color booklet, "Modern Methods of Top Burner Cooking," today. It tells how to make your cooking easier . . . better! Harper-Wyman Company, 8564 Vincennes Ave., Chicago 20, Ill.

(Continued from Page 80)

boy. The season had started, he explained; he was sorry, but all the positions had been filled. Perhaps there'd be an opening next fall. Otis produced the Barnum letter. Davidge glanced at the signature, his jaw dropped for a few stunned seconds, then he hawed and said that on second thought there just might be something for him if he'd come back later in the day. He did and Davidge greeted him with a contract and a hearty "Found a place for you, my lad. You open October thirtieth in Woodleigh—part of Jim, an elderly Negro."

THE first move was to find living quarters on a salary of $7 a week. The theater was in a neighborhood which came under the heading of questionable, but in an adjoining quarter he was able to lease a dingy garret bedroom for the price of $1.50 a week. It was just as well his family didn't know. His mother wrote him the first week warning him to . . . keep good company and keep free from vices to which you will be constantly tempted. I hope you are not one of those that smoke. I don't want you to lose that gold watch on your 21st birthday. As for liquor, shun it as you would sin for it will lead to every sin and it would break my heart to have your young life darkened by one false step now. I expect you will continue to make me a proud and happy mother as you always have. I wish you would join one of our congregations in Philadelphia and attend church and get to know the people.

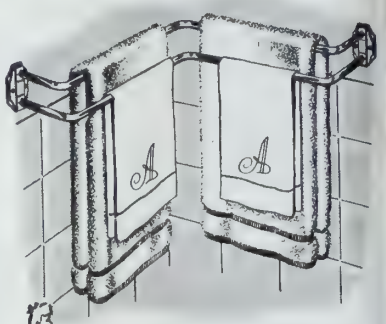
Had she known it, a repertory theater was a far greater safeguard against vice than churchgoing. There was time for nothing but work. The house presented two performances daily, and the bill was changed every week. In addition to this, on Wednesday and Saturday matinees, known for some reason as "off" ones, a different show of short drama and farce was put on. Rehearsals were squeezed in between times, and Otis was cast in almost every show. By the end of the season he had played exactly ninety-two characters.

It was grueling work calling for incessant study and scant sleep. He carried with him wherever he went tattered copies of the plays, muttering aloud as he walked along the street, mumbling into the ten-cent stew, coffee and doughnuts of the shabby restaurants where he snatched his meals. Often as not, he was handed after Saturday night's final curtain three parts to be got by the rising curtain of Monday's matinee. He learned how to ad-lib, and he caught onto the old stock-company trick of "winging," propping pages of the scene on a handy projection of scenery in the wings where they could be consulted at moments of mental blank.



The season at the Museum, while rewarding in experience, was, as far as pay was concerned, anything but. The stipulated weekly salary of $7 was rarely forthcoming and the novice was too shy to ask for it. Recalling that lean season in later years, he used to say that he ate his books. Reluctantly he'd tie up a bundle of the treasured volumes he had brought from home, take them over to Leary's secondhand store and dolefully exchange them for enough to tide him over until the next pinch.

Davidge's fortunes went from bad to worse, and in April he closed his theater twenty-four hours before the sheriff would have done it for him. Otis, still woefully short of cash, picked up a four weeks' engagement at the Chestnut Street Theater with a short-lived but excellent company. It was a lucky break. He had his first opportunity to play decent parts with good actors, his salary was enough to keep body and soul not only together but even plumped up a bit, and best of all, his performance of Malcolm in Macbeth caught the eye of George K. Goodwin, manager of the Walnut Street Theater. He went home for the summer, tired but happy. In his breast pocket was a contract for the following season of 1878–79.

That spring of 1879 he played a week at the Arch Street under the magnificent dictatorship of Mrs. John Drew. That grand old martinet—"The Duchess," as she was called, well behind her back—wound up her every BRIGHTEN THE CORNER!

TWIN corner towel bar

LUSTRE CHROME FINISH

Put those idle bathroom and kitchen corners to good use with this unique space-saver! Double bars hold complete towel ensemble in decorative two-tier arrangement. Compact dryer for light laundry, too. Exclusive fluted design highlights the rich lustre chrome finish.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

You'll want several! About $1.25 each
At Department and Hardware Stores

Autoÿre | ACCESSORIES FOR BATHROOM • KITCHEN
The Autoÿre Company • Oakville, Conn.

MAKE GOOD MONEY SHOWING

THESE LOVELY CARDS

SO LOVELY that they sell on sight to friends, neighbors, co-workers! You make up to 50¢ on each $1 box. Over 30 assortments: Christmas and Greeting cards, stationery, etc. FREE BOOK shows how any beginner can make money. Write for samples on approval. If friends don't snap them up, return at our expense.

HARRY DOEHLA COMPANY, Dept. L23, Fitchburg, Mass

MERCY ME! I DON'T SEE HOW A'BODY CAN KEEP HOUSE WITHOUT 3-IN-ONE!

T M REG U S PAT OFF

REPAIR TOILET SEATS
WITH PLASTIC WOOD

EASY! No skill required. Handles like putty . . . and hardens into wood.

...rings on her fingers

Lady, wear bells on your toes, too—if you want to. Sani-Flush simply won't let you dip hands into scrub-water . . . or get down on your knees, either. Sani-Flush cleans toilet bowls chemically—disinfects, too. All you do is sprinkle Sani-Flush, and toilet bowl stains and film give way to odor-less freshness—perfect cleanliness.

Safe in all toilet systems. Good in hard or soft water.

At grocers' every-where. Two sizes. The Hygienic Products Co., Canton 2, Ohio.

Sani-Flush

GET TWO CANS TODAY

PULVEX FLEA POWDER

TWO KINDS

WITH 5% DDT . . . for dogs. Kills fleas and lice quick. Keeps fleas off 5-7 days. Many home uses

OR WITH ROTENONE . . . for cats, dogs. Quickly kills fleas, lice. Kills fleas when put on a single spot. Pre-war formula

EITHER KIND 25c & 50c

Always ask for Luminall

the paint for all interiors

Redecorate walls and ceilings with Luminall. It makes rooms look better, lighter, more attractive, makes furnishings look their best. Easy to apply. Very economical—one coat covers; dries in 40 minutes.

See classified phone book for your [illegible] dealer—ask for free color card, or write direct. Enclose 10c for [illegible] booklet on interior decorating. LUMINALL PAINTS, 3607 S. May St., Chicago 9.

season with a week of old English comedies: six different plays in six consecutive days, all acted by the same cast, who well-nigh broke under the strain of memorizing and keeping hold of their lines and positions. Her leading man did break and bolted after the first performance. Nothing daunted, the indomitable lady snatched her son John Drew off the road from a tour of Diplomacy. He arrived home at four in the morning to be met by his mother looking as if she were doing the sleepwalking scene. In one hand she held a night lamp, in the other a prompt book, which she gave him along with a perfunctory kiss and the bland announcement, "Don't go to bed, John. You open in this tonight." Otis' lot was a series of eighteenth-century beaus, curly, fluttering imbeciles whose flowery capers he took small pleasure in performing. The week passed in a jumble of wigs, swords, lace handkerchiefs and patched-up lines. The greatest reward of that engagement was the fact that it started his lifelong friendship with that brilliant actor and excellent gentleman, John Drew.

His Philadelphia experience had been a rich one. It was the end of an epoch in the theater. The local star-supporting stock company was passing out of existence. "I am glad," my father wrote, "that I was able to be in at the death before the old system quite passed away; glad that in two years I had had to play over one hundred and forty parts; and glad that my dramatic kindergarten was placed among men and women filled with the knowledge of their trade. The Lord keep their memories green! They possessed distinction and they respected the King's English!"

Taking in hand his courage and the few dollars he had managed to save, he set out to try his luck in New York, and for at least three months he wore out shoe leather along

Men are born with two eyes, but with one tongue, in order that they should see twice as much as they say. —ANON.

Broadway. The young man limited himself to two far from square meals a day, makeshift snacks in cellars, "free and easies," or Bowery concert saloons where for ten cents one could get a Western sandwich, a stein of ale and a chance to lose one's shirt at three-card monte. At the depth of his despondency he stayed out an entire night, wandering about the great indifferent city, mingling with the strange creatures who prowl through its darkness. Suddenly he remembered it was his birthday. He was twenty-one! And what had he to show for himself? The water of the East River looked thick and black and, in his Wertherlike mood, he understood why people might want to find oblivion in it. But our hero decided that instead of effecting his own untimely demise he'd go touch Charlie for some ham and eggs. Charlie was out on an assignment, but, better than ham and eggs, he found awaiting him a notice from an agent. The Kiralfy Brothers had chosen him for their new extravaganza and he was to report the following morning for rehearsal.

Bolossy and Imré Kiralfy had begun their career in Hungary as dancers and gymnasts. Coming to America, they went in for producing. Harbingers of Billy Rose, their shows were lavish spectacles, containing a little bit of everything—ballet, singing, melodrama, clowning, and just as much sex as the law and pink tights would allow. This season they had taken over that palace of beauty and red plush, Niblo's Gardens. They were to open with Enchantment, a large-scale musical extravaganza complete with melodrama plot, trapeze and flying-ring performers, a "grand ballet in the corridors of Babylon" and a sextet of ocarinas. Otis was cast as Maclow, the Beggar of the Mountain. It was a showy part calling for the additional fun of a weird "character" make-up: beetling eyebrows, scraggly whiskers and a sinister hooked nose which he fashioned out of putty. He had to be killed in the last act, his demise being effected by the simple device of a magician

(Continued on Page 85)

So Beautiful... so beautifully made!

GAY! MATCHED! STAINLESS!

Ekcoline

KITCHEN TOOLS

NARROW SPATULA	LADLE	WIDE SPATULA
¼-CUP SCOOP	STRAINERS	PIE OR CAKE SERVER
HAMBURGER TURNER	MASHER	2-TINE FORK
BASTING SPOON	WHIP	3-TINE FORK
MIXING SPOON		CAKE TURNER

Fine stainless steel, bright, mirror-finished. Smart, non-skid, non-roll, hang-up plastic handles. These are quality tools, the kind you want in a matched set, to blend with your kitchen color scheme.

At department, hardware and appliance stores everywhere from 69c to 98c

IDEAL GIFT

every woman hopes to get. 7-piece set includes wall rack in striking new gift box. . . . $4.95

9-Piece Set Includes Wall Rack—in Handsome Gift Box $6.98

11-Piece Set Includes Wall Rack—in Beautiful Tube-Shaped Gift Box . . $8.98

EKCO PRODUCTS COMPANY
CHICAGO 39, ILL.

ANOTHER GREAT PRODUCT BY EKCO

ANNOUNCING THE BRILLIANT NEW Laundromat ... WITH THE DRAMATIC WATER SAVER

You're in for a thrill when you see this wonderful new Laundromat in action. For this completely automatic washer is now even more economical to use. Thanks to a sensational new device . . . the Water Saver . . . you can regulate the amount of water to the amount of clothes to be washed. Small, medium or full-sized loads are laundered in just the right amount of water, automatically. Less water is needed, hot water goes farther, you save soap . . . and you enjoy all the benefits of workless washdays! Your Westinghouse retailer will gladly wash a load of your soiled clothes in the new Laundromat. See for yourself how superbly clean it gets the clothes, how much time, work and money it saves. See, too, the many other members of this famous family of appliances he has on display, now.

Every house needs Westinghouse

Maker of 30 MILLION Electric Home Appliances

WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC CORPORATION
... in 25 Cities • Offices Everywhere
Appliance Division • Mansfield, Ohio

TUNE IN TED MALONE
EVERY MORNING
MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY
A B C NETWORK

(Continued from Page 83)

ng and hurling him over a twelve-foot after which, instead of expiring in-tly, he was to stagger onto the stage and er his own death oration.

he scene went on and the moment came the leap. Two thicknesses of mattress ened his fall, but he landed with his knees in a jolt which all but telescoped him.
ething struck his hand, something clammy, y and quite awful. He glanced down and overed he was clutching his putty nose h, with the whiskers and a portion of the rows still adhering to it, had ripped
e. Frantically he whirled around and ped the thing onto his face again. The ster had unnerved him and in a panic lest nake-up drop off again, he played the render of the scene with his back to the ience. It was just as well he did. In his fusion he had stuck his nose on upside n.

nchantment was a hit and had a long run.
one hundredth performance was celeed as a gala; flowers were presented to ry lady in the audience and the programs e printed on satin, of a lurid but festive de of magenta.

tis Skinner's next serious engagement with Lawrence Barrett. Three years in touring company and Otis had his first e of what for all its hardships and heart-es he was to love his life—The
d. Barrett, who a country-wide owing, played rywhere: big es, small cities,
ionable commu-
es and tank towns.
was rough experi-
e, and at the close he third year the ng actor felt he d a few seasons
Broadway. When was offered a cont with Daly, he his dreams had e true.

Daly's! It's a name summon up a pel, like Delmonico, ie Langtry, Sara-
a and Ward Mcster. In 1885 Augustin Daly and his ed players were at a height of popularity.
y's theater was "the thing." It had style, gance, glamour. Opening nights were like liant receptions which no smart New ker would miss, and Daly himself stood the ticket box to greet his friends.

ALY was a genius, not creative but clever.
knew the secret of catering to public te. He knew also how to select the right t of actor. Of that brilliant corps there s not a weak member. Opposite Ada han, who was in the full bloom of her car, was the young matinee idol, John Drew, ve, polished, entertaining, the best-ssed man in New York. Mrs. Gilbert, one those grand old ladies of the theater, was ely as a grig in the character parts in which sparred with Charles Leclercq or James wis. Daly also was shrewd enough to take a number of stage-struck society girls—Daly's Debutantes" they were called. He s further shrewd enough to cast them only small actor-proof parts. As assets their sole lue lay in luring members of the Four ndred to opening nights.

Daly's productions were in remarkably od taste. The scenery was always fresh, the ops smartly correct, and the women's wns were the talk of the town. Daly him-f supervised every fitting, just as he supersed each detail of everything that went on his playhouse. As a worker he was tireless, d demanded similar industry from his peo-
e. He worked them mercilessly, often rearsing them from ten in the morning till ng after midnight.

Ada Rehan, besides being leading lady, en-yed the offstage role of grande maîtresse— although "enjoyed" is a debatable word. Daly had seen her first in Mrs. Drew's Philadelphia company, and his appraising eye was quick to discern the spark of genius behind her Irish beauty and captivating mannerisms. Deciding she was something he wanted, he had snatched her away and established her in his theater, where he set about turning her into a woman of the world. Daly became her Svengali. She was helpless without his minutest detail of direction. He showed her everything from the stride of her blazing entrance as the Shrew, to the crooking of her little finger over a teacup in a modern scene with John Drew. He treated her very much as his personal chattel. If they appeared together on the street, Daly walked ahead of her, like an Indian, never speaking to her. Offstage she lived alone, on his insistence. Any private life she might have enjoyed was sacrificed to the ambition Daly implanted, forced and nurtured in her.

REHAN was at the zenith of a brilliant career as the queen of high comedy. In the theater, she was the goddess of laughter with a vital magnetism and that asset of the great actress—manner.

For Otis, there was plenty of agreeable companionship at Daly's. He, James Lewis and John Drew were inseparable in the theater and got to be known as the Glue Brothers. Drew was the leader. A good athlete and sportsman, he organized a company baseball team—himself shortstop, Otis second base, Joseph Holland third, and Willie Collier a spectacular pitcher. Practicing avidly on a Central Park diamond, they worked up enough erratic excellence to take on local teams during the course of the annual road tour. In a glass case in the prop room was a cup commemorating their victory over the nine of the Chicago Board of Trade.

After serving his term at Daly's, Otis found that as a popular jeune premier he was very much in demand. He was rapidly booked for a number of scattered engagements, the most important of which was with the Booth-Modjeska repertory company, where he was employed for second leads.

Edwin Booth was soon to be a broken man. The accumulation of personal tribulation that had dogged his life—his father's insanity; his brother Wilkes' crime that had shaken the nation; the death of his first wife, Mary Devlin, whom he worshiped; his miserable existence with his second wife, Mary McVicker, a psychopathic—all this had taken a toll of his sensitive endurance. But in 1881, when my father played with Booth for the first time, he was in his exquisite prime. Playing in his company under his direction, studying his magical technique, my father learned the things he had been denied in the slapdash school of stock company: introspection, subtlety and, above all, pace and the value of a pause. Booth took a flattering interest in young Skinner, and often calling him into his dressing room, "he would suggest different and more effective readings."

My father always claimed it was from Booth he learned the gist of acting, and the fact that any "getting into the mood" is just so much nonsense. This was when he had the chance to play Laertes. That character, as one will recall, is on for two short scenes at the beginning of the play, then doesn't appear again until a good two hours later when he rushes on to avenge the death of his father. The first few nights father had no trouble, being keyed up by excitement, but then the long wait between his first and second appearances seemed to make him go dead. He was trying desperately to "live his part." He would pace

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Autumn Leaves

By Elizabeth-Ellen Long

These are the days when trees conspire
With boys and girls to see
That not a lawn in town is neat
As we would have it be,

By letting colored showers fall
All day and all night, too,
To lie in little rustling pools
For children to scuff through.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

New Rinso with SOLIUM

...the scientific Sunlight Ingredient

puts sunshine in your wash

...even on rainy days!

That's why only New Rinso . . .

1 WASHES WHITE CLOTHES WHITER THAN BRAND NEW

2 MAKES WASHABLE COLORS BRIGHTER THAN BRAND NEW

No other soap can give these results because no other soap contains Solium

JUST THINK! On rainy days or sunny days . . . whether clothes are hung indoors or out . . . new Rinso with Solium, the scientific Sunlight ingredient, puts a new brilliance in your wash—a brilliance never known before! You'll even see yellowed and grayed clothes made whiter than brand new!

And, the oftener you wash clothes with new Rinso containing Solium, THE WHITER AND BRIGHTER THEY GET! You'll see these astounding results no matter how hard the water. Get new Rinso containing Solium today.

SOLIUM . . . the miracle Sunlight ingredient . . . is an exclusive development of wartime scientific research by the world-famous laboratories of Lever Brothers Company.

New Rinso with Solium . . . So Safe for Clothes . . . So Kind to Hands

From test baby to honor student in 14 short years

1. GOOD START. September 1934 was 3-month-old Priscilla Skewis' lucky month. She was chosen to be one of Clapp's very special test babies—to prove that babies thrive on Clapp's Baby Foods. Her first solid food was Clapp's Baby Cereal—full of iron and all that's good for babies.

2. FLYING COLORS. At 6 months, when so many babies lag behind, bonny Priscilla is her mother's pride and joy. Fed Clapp's Baby Foods, she has doubled her weight—as she should. From her eager face you can see that she needs no coaxing at mealtime. She loves Clapp's taste!

3. BIRTHDAY AHEAD. At 9½ months, Priscilla weighs 21 healthy pounds—and she is 5 inches taller than in the last picture! Her flesh is firm, her body straight—thanks to the help of Clapp's Baby Foods. Her mother says: "I'm so grateful to Clapp's!"

4. HONOR STUDENT. 14-year-old Priscilla has kept the promise of her happy, healthy babyhood. She is class president and honor student. Her hobby: Coin and stamp collecting. P.S. to mothers. Don't wait another day to start your baby on Clapp's. You'll always be glad you did it!

CLAPP'S BABY FOODS

THE FIRST BABY FOODS

Product of American Home Foods

the floor of his dressing room, working himself up into an emotional wax. He even reached a point of desperation when he would remove his make-up, change into street clothes and walk frantically about in the night air, evoking inspiration.

Booth, who was as wise as he was gifted, observed his agonies for a few days, then one evening sent for him to come to his dressing room. It was between acts and the great tragedian, clad in the "sable garb" of the Dane, was serenely playing solitaire while he smoked a black cigar.

"Sit down, Skinner," he said, and Skinner perched uneasily on the edge of a chair. "Young man," he said, "I've been watching you and you're killing yourself! You've got some high-toned notion that you're supposed to be Laertes! Relax! During that two-hour wait, read a book, write letters, play pinochle with the stage hands. Don't try to 'work yourself up.' It can't be done. Just wait for your cue, then, when you hear it, go on the stage and act!"

The Booth-Modjeska tour was followed by a brief and profoundly mortifying London engagement at the Globe Theatre as leading man in a production of Romeo and Juliet. It was the private project of a gentleman who made a fortune in the paint business and had married a lady with a burning ambition to play Juliet. And her qualifications for the part stopped right there.

It was a shoddy, vulgar affair and [h]is father, utterly wretched over being ass[o]ciated with such an absurd production, k[ept] miserably to himself during the run, wh[ich] was blessedly short.

He returned to America and after a sea[son] with Margaret Mather signed up for the n[ext] three years as leading man for Mada[me] Modjeska, during which time he met [his] mother.

Skinner had played a full season w[ith] Modjeska before the morning when Ma[dame] walked tremulously into the Garden Thea[tre] for her first rehearsal. During the tour [he] seldom saw her in the theater or out of [it].

Indeed, throughout Miss Durbin's fi[rst] season with the company, the grand you[ng] Mr. Skinner was barely aware of her exi[st]ence. At the beginning of the ensuing o[ne], however, he became slightly more cogniza[nt] of it. The girl's summer at Arden had giv[en] her poise. And as he became aware of h[er] existence, young Skinner at the same tim[e] became aware of the curious fact that s[he] seemed to be avoiding him. The discovery a[n]noyed him. Then came the incident of t[he] jack-o'-lantern and that amused him.

He began to take notice of the fact th[at] Maud Durbin was a charming actress. H[er] Phebe in As You Like It was a creation of p[oe]tic delicacy, and George Hazelton, playi[ng] opposite her the jilted Silvius, uttered h[is] "Oh, Phebe, Phebe!" with such plaintivene[ss]

(Continued on Page 89)

Bringing up Parents

DR. BARBARA BIBER, Consultant
Child Psychologist, Bank Street Schools, New York

No one has yet written a volume called How to Read a Book on Child Development—but here are a few hints on the subject: First, don't try to force your child into the pattern of a book. Books have to be written about children in general—and no one live three-year-old, for example, will ever be exactly like the description of three-year-olds in a book. Second, don't use a book to prove to yourself that your child is superior. (If you have to prove that to yourself, you'll find that your child will have to prove it to you too.) Third, take into account the environment of your children as compared with the environment of the children studied by the author of the book. It would be incorrect to expect a farm child to follow in detail a pattern discovered in city children. Books can give you a broad idea of what many children are like as they grow from stage to stage—and therefore a better understanding of what makes your own children tick. You can gain attitudes—but not recipes for your own child.

"The section on discipline is missing—Junior ate it."

THIS MONTH

FALL CLEANING MUST ROUT GERMS* BY THE BILLIONS

ime for extra care . . . not just in routine spots, but all through our house. Time to fight—as you clean—the dangerous disease erms always present in ordinary house dust. Don't let them ettle in"... menace family health... this Fall and Winter! Fight em now—with "Lysol" brand disinfectant (a powerful, effective germ-killer) in every pail of cleaning water!

* In tests, a single common household article in daily use has revealed an estimated 3,000,000 or more microbes per square inch.

Every Day... Make Cleaning Time Germ-Killing Time ...with "Lysol" Brand Disinfectant

Product of Lehn & Fink REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

ETS—usually dark, unventilated, often —make ideal breeding conditions for se germs. Have "Lysol" in the water scrubbing closet floor, walls, shelves. disease germs, destroys musty odor. k, economical to use.

YOUR CHILD'S ROOM—walls, floor and all furniture—calls for dependable, germ-killing "Lysol" in cleaning water. Don't forget baseboards, window sills and room corners. "Lysol" is so highly concentrated, you need only 2½ tablespoons per gallon.

YOUR BATHROOM should always be kept hygienically clean, with "Lysol" in the cleaning water. This goes for the entire bathroom: basin, tub, toilet, floor, walls, medicine cabinet. (Keep "Lysol" handy in the bathroom, as well as in the kitchen.)

MOP CELLAR FLOOR, shelves, stairs with clean-smelling, germ-killing "Lysol." Do this periodically—and especially now when you are house cleaning. Remember a hygienically clean home is a healthier home. Keep "Lysol" on the job!

IMPORTANT "LYSOL" CLEANING USES: Bathroom tub, toilet, basin, walls, floor—kitchen sink, drainboards, garbage pail. • Laundry tubs and washers—closets, cellars, stairs, storerooms, shelves. • All woodwork. Floors, walls, doorknobs, rails—children's rooms and furniture; diaper pail. • Sickrooms, including bedding, utensils and linen—cleaning rags, mops, brooms, brushes.

New Grand Flavor
New Great Food
TWIN TREAT!

Here's Body-Building Protein

Mother! Never before a cereal like Kellogg's New Corn-Soya! Tops in breakfast cereals for body-building protein! And it's ready to eat! Sweet, rich toasted shreds!

Especially good for children! Corn-Soya is a flavorful blend of high-energy corn with high-protein soya. We all need protein. But children need it even more than adults — to build fine strong bodies!

When mornings grow crisp, send 'em off to school feeling "oh-boya"! Give 'em substantial Corn-Soya! In Family-Size packages.

COME ON! . . . 7 KINDS OF BETTER BREAKFASTS!

In addition to New Corn-Soya, Kellogg's VARIETY PACKAGE offers 6 other "invites" to better school day and workday breakfasts. In wheat, corn, rice. In flakes, shreds, pops. All ready for milk. All taste "just great" . . . and are great nourishment!

Kellogg's
Mother Knows Best!

INCLUDES KELLOGG'S CORN FLAKES, RICE KRISPIES, PEP, SHREDDED WHEAT, BRAN FLAKES, KRUMBLES, CORN-SOYA

(Continued from Page 86)

s all too clear he was in love with her. yet, when the tour ended and Skinner ed making arrangements for the ensuing n in which he planned to venture out as -manager with his own company, it occurred to him to engage the services iss Durbin.

occurred, however, to Modjeska, who aded him to sign up Maud as his leading It probably didn't require much per- ng, although the star felt it necessary otest a little. After all, Miss Durbin had nly two years' experience, and in small ; would she be up to leads? Modjeska ertain that she would be.

e company was to be a touring one. ner was not yet prepared to burst on dway as a star. There would be a reper- of two plays: His Grace de Grammont, nantic comedy by Clyde Fitch with a oration plot, full of lace ruffles, King les spaniels and expletives beginning "'Ods"; the other was The King's Jes- an adaptation of Victor Hugo's Le Roi use (Rigoletto) written by Otis' brother les.

ey opened in Rockford, Illinois, and on to Chicago for a successful short run. they set out on the road and every- e played to starvation business. But outhful actor-manager took it all in his e; and his stride had suddenly become nificently buoyant because of a wonder- ing that had happened to him. He had in love with his leading lady. He had, urse, had his share of amorous adven- . But whatever may gone before, Maud in was the only real of his life, and from start he knew it was e so. However, for a time after this mo- tous realization, he no indications of his ultuous feelings.

aud's feelings in regard to him were ultuous, too, but indefinitely so. The ng increase in her heartbeat that took e whenever the star spoke to her, she set n to professional nervousness. As time on she found, to her annoyance, that was spending a great deal of time think- bout Mr. S., that she looked forward too rly to every encounter with him. It was a notion and she'd get over it soon, she sure. But the notion persisted, and as route carried them on into the balmy h it became a sweet obsession.

Y played a week in that city of visual gastronomic loveliness, New Orleans. star, who had always adored the town, every nook and corner of it. He showed eading lady the cathedral, the French a, the Carré; Antoine's, where the old y-footed waiters served them oysters le and buster crabs; he took her through French market on the levee and they de- ed delicious omelets and red wine at lame Bégué's. The week was magic for both. At the close of Friday night's per- ance, a note was placed on the leading 's dressing table. It read:

'audie: Will you come for a walk with me orrow? I'll stop by your hotel at ten. OTIS.

en A.M. is a fantastic hour for theater peo- to be up, but that Saturday it seemed enough. Neither had slept. Maud was ding waiting for him at the doorway of hotel, and as he bounded up the steps to her hand her cheeks flushed as bright as camellias she had pinned into her belt. two young people had a pretty good idea hat was going to happen, but neither felt able of speech. Finally, Maud timidly ke the tension by asking where they were g, and Otis could think of no better place h the Métairie Cemetery. Redbirds car- in the live oaks and the Spanish moss yed above the quaint graves raised like s above the ground.

t one point they stopped by an ancient ophagus, neither knowing exactly why. A little chameleon with grinning face and pulsating throat skittered into a crack on the side of the crumbling tomb, a church bell chimed the quarter, and Otis asked Maud to be his wife.

The remainder of the tour was a happy blur of love, plans for the future, and bad business. They were together as much as propriety would permit, lunching, taking long walks and having supper after the show, but then always carefully chaperoned by one of the older women of the company. Such afternoons as they had to be apart, there was a happy exchange of notes or flowers to help ease the pangs of separation. One of them reads:

Dear Little Soul: It's just because you are faithful and fond and fanciful and freckled and fair that I love you. That's all.

You'll be lonely while I'm at the ball game unless you listen to what the flowers say.

Rest sweetly with all my love,

OTIS.

Despite the appalling business, Otis managed to keep his company going until April. They closed on Saturday the twentieth in Corning, New York, and next morning they were married by the Rev. Rob Roy Converse in Christ Church.

THE young couple were radiantly happy. They were also completely broke. My mother had no vestige of capital, and what small amount father had been able to save had gone to pay the high cost of his first starring venture. But Otis' nature was one of bland, expansive optimism which lasted his lifetime. That June Tufts College gave him an honorary A.M., and Maud was in a happy flutter over it. It was their first separation and he sent her the first of those daily letters which, whenever they were apart, he never failed to write throughout thirty-five years of married life:

We men and women are all in the same boat, upon a stormy sea. We owe to each other a terrible loyalty.

—G. K. CHESTERTON.

My Dearest Wife: It is done, sweetheart. I am an A.M. and your husband is now one of the immortals.

I have thought of you all day long. Your presence has been constantly with me.

After I left you, last night, I stood on the platform for half an hour waiting for the train, which was late. The night was so silent, yet so full of sounds. The crickets piped busily; the rival bassos of the Black River Opera Company grated out their deep "chugs"; a couple of sleepless whippoorwills had a midnight confab speculating on what d——d idiot could be standing down there on the platform under the red light.

I stood and wondered if you had gone to sleep again. The train slowed up at the red light and took me on for an hour to Bellows Falls, where I waited from 3:15 to 5:30. It was fearfully long, but I thought of you, dear, and my heart kept sending you messages that you would understand.

Father was waiting for me at the station in Boston. His first words were, "Did Maud come?"

I hustled home, changed my clothes and we got to Tufts a little after eleven. The chapel was jammed. I sat on the platform with the president, trustees, Governor Greenhaugh and other notables. The gowned and frightened graduates did their little speeches, the diplomas were given out with accompanying chunks of Latin remarks, and then the honorary degrees were announced. President Chapin spoke my name, read something in Latin, I got up, the audience applauded, then I sat down and was an A.M. And that's all there was to that. But an awful dinner followed at the gymnasium, where everybody made speeches miles long while the guests perspired and were bored. It didn't break up till after four.

Everybody congratulated me and asked after you, my Maudine. Father is bursting with pride. When I got home, I found him sitting in the dark, alone. I haven't a doubt of what he was thinking of.

Your sweet eyes have been haunting me all day, my wife. And you thought I'd be so busy that I'd not miss you. My love, I don't think the time will ever be when business will crowd you from my heart or steal from me the memory of your sweet lips.

Father sends love. I'm going down to the post office with this now so that it'll not delay

FOR BETTER HEALTH + BETTER MARKS

Children love good GOLDEN GUERNSEY Milk. And there are two reasons why you should urge them to drink a lot of it. First, GOLDEN GUERNSEY will help to give them better health. Second, better health means better grades. Actually, it is the finest food they can have, because of the generous supply of butterfat and the extra food solids below the cream line.

GOLDEN GUERNSEY Milk has not advanced in price as much as most other foods. In fact, it gives you more food value for every penny than any other food you can buy.

So . . . ask your milkman today to bring you GOLDEN GUERNSEY Milk regularly. If he doesn't carry it, write us for the name of your local distributor. GOLDEN GUERNSEY, Inc., Peterborough, New Hampshire.

GURGLE! GURGLE! HOW I LOVE MY GOLDEN GUERNSEY MILK

FINE CATTLE PRODUCE FINE MILK
GOLDEN GUERNSEY THAT SPECIAL MILK

LESS THAN 8c A SERVING*

Sparkle Pudding Brazilian

1 package Ann Page Sparkle Mixture for Pudding (Chocolate, Vanilla or Butterscotch)
1 cup White House Milk
1 cup strong coffee
Plain cake

Add undiluted milk and coffee to pudding mix. Cook until thickened, stirring constantly. Cool. Line four individual custard cups with narrow cake strips. Add pudding. Chill thoroughly. Unmold. Serve with whipped cream and maraschino cherries if desired. Serves 4.

Ann Page Sparkle Puddings—Real flavors, blended in carefully. Keep a good supply on hand of all three flavors—Chocolate, Vanilla, and Butterscotch.

HOW TO MAKE YOUR MAN

Dessert Happy!

● A husband will adore a wife who serves these tempting treats for only a few pennies a portion. Ann Page Sparkle Desserts are taste-tempting . . . cost but a little . . . and are prepared in a jiffy. They make a hit with the whole family! Yes, and you keep food costs down when you make the Ann Page family of fine foods your marketing choice. For all the quality-famous Ann Page Foods are made in A&P's own modern Ann Page food factories; then brought directly to you! Thus savings are made and shared with you!

LESS THAN 7c A SERVING*

Sparkle Dessert Treat

1 package Ann Page Strawberry Sparkle Gelatin Dessert
1 cup boiling water
1 cup cold water
8 marshmallows, cut in eighths
6 bananas

Dissolve gelatin in boiling water. Add cold water; marshmallows. Reserve ¼ cup. Chill each until slightly thickened. Cut bananas in slices; arrange in individual serving dish. Add thickened gelatin. Whip reserved gelatin until thick. Pour over gelatin in dish; add maraschino cherry. Serves 6.

Ann Page Sparkle Gelatin Desserts—Six sparkling flavors—choice of strawberry, raspberry, cherry, orange, lemon, and lime. Flavor favorites all!

A&P ANN PAGE

A&P's Finest Foods

Among the quality-famous Ann Page Foods are also such favorites as Salad Dressing, Mayonnaise, French Dressing, Preserves, Jams, Jellies, Pure Extracts, Spices, etc.

Recipe cost based upon average prices of ingredients in A&P Super Markets at time of going to press.

in reaching you. Good night, my Maud. All my heart . . . all my love is yours.

OTIS.

In the fall, my father started his second season as actor-manager. It was again the road, again barnstorming to empty barns.

There followed some five or six appalling years of heartache and disappointment. Season after season of hand-to-mouth trouping. Still no opening in New York. Press notices were invariably good, but the general public seemed not to know him from Adam. One day in Kansas City Maud overheard a small boy who was reading signs pipe out, "Say, ma, what is an Otis Skinner?" and the mother serenely replied, "I dunno, son. Probably some sort of farm implement."

It was a tribute to the star that every member of his company stuck loyally along with him. There were many weeks when he couldn't meet the salary list, there was almost never anything left over for himself and his bride. Any number of times they went quite hungry.

But during those hard years, there were rich compensations. Otis Skinner was slowly but firmly building up for himself the loyal road following which was to endure throughout his entire career. Those were the days when Chicago's Forty Club was at its mellow height, and he was on intimate terms with its members—"Bif" Hall, Melville E. Stone, Eugene Field and George Ade. Ade became a particularly close friend. In a letter written to Maud, who was out of the bill at the time, Otis says:

George Ade called today at the theater and left Artie and Pink Marsh inscribed to you. I find George is childishly fond of his own books—laughs at his own sayings in them, and all that.

Al Ringling invited the members of the company to his show and Ade went with us. The big tent was jammed, money was turned away, but we all had the best seats. Ade, Miss Comstock and I went in state in a carriage placed at our disposal by the affable Ringling. We did the side shows, ate peanuts and were generally gay. Ade was like a kid. He knows all the performers and the secrets of their innermost lives.

There was one happy and profitable interlude between the seasons of stress when Skinner made a short tour in an all-star production of The Rivals, headed by that enchanting character, Joseph Jefferson. The old comedian was a wit, a terrific card player and a wildly enthusiastic painter. He used the company baggage car for a studio. In every town, as soon as the scenery was unloaded and the car shunted off into the yards, he'd climb aboard, set up his easel, get out his paints and work for hours.

Otis' letters to Maud describe the tour:

I wired you from Albany yesterday that everything was successful and that Mr. Jefferson says it is the best first night's performance of The Rivals he ever saw. I think he was sincere. I'm getting the stiffness out of my joints in Captain Absolute and the part goes well.

We travel in a private company car. We are packed in rather thickly, but we live very well. I am commencing to yearn for a bath. Life in the car is extremely cordial. Everyone harmonious and Jefferson is like some funny little good wise fairy. He is a wonder of cheeriness, brightness and entertaining wit. I don't have any privacy, however. The car is always full of people—no place to write. I'm penning this in an obstructed corner with my valise on my knees.

But the Jefferson tour was all too short and again he was back at the old heartbreaking grind—hard work, exhausting trouping, no business and mountainous debts.

During all this period Maud never complained. This was, to be sure, hardly the life she had envisioned, but the man she had married so far surpassed any husband she had ever envisaged, she was content and proud to share his hardships. There was needed only the fulfillment of two lifelong ambitions. One was a child; the other was a trip to Europe. The child seemed an eventual possibility as soon as business improved, but Europe wa magic mirage as unattainable as El Dora She'd gaze at every Cunard poster as thou it were an old master.

At the finish of their most financially d astrous season, Otis, realizing that they w both at the end of their physical and en tional endurance, said that they must away somewhere for a vacation. They cou find an inexpensive place even if it were only a few weeks. Some days later he a nounced that they were going up into Ca ada. He had engaged space on an excursi steamer that was offering a bargain trip the Saguenay. Maud packed her few dress in a steamer trunk, Otis assembled his fishi paraphernalia and they took a train to Mor real.

From the station they drove to the Anch Line dock, where they boarded a trim vess It was almost the departure hour and O insisted they stay up on deck until the bo put off. When it backed out into the S Lawrence and headed downstream, he la his hand over his wife's.

"Maudie," he said, "when you get off th ship you'll be in Liverpool, England."

Maud looked at him for a stunned mome of incredulity. Then she cried out helpless "But Otis, dear love, I can't go to Euro without saying good-by to my family—"

"I've said good-by for you," he reassure her. "They know all about it." And he to her down to their cabin, where she found little stack of bon-voyage messages from h mother, her sisters and h brothers. At that, she co lapsed onto the berth an cried and cried. Ot thought she was havi some sort of emotional co lapse, but she assured hi it was only because s was so happy.

If living conditions don't stop improving in this country, we're going to run out of humble beginnings for our great men.

—RUSSELL PETTIS ASKUE.

The trip, of course, wa the perfect consummatio of what she had so long dreamed of, and whe they got back she knew that her other drean too, was to be realized, for she found sh was with child.

I was born in Chicago. The Durbin famil had by now settled permanently there an my mother wanted to be near her own. M father was off completing a late spring tou and his daily communications to her are fu of a tenderly humorous pampering to h whims, one of which was a craving fo cherries. One of them reads:

Dear Heart: Your brave little letter whic reached me at Cedar Rapids had a note of sa ness which makes me grieve that I can't hel you. You mustn't think how long it is, but ho short it is going to be now. Don't think, swee heart, that I could ever be annoyed at you fo crying.

I looked all over Fargo today for cherries, bu none are in the market here. Enclosed is a bi (a "V"). Send out someone. They are in th Chicago groceries. I saw them.

Tell Cornelia [it was apparently a foregon conclusion that I was to be a girl] that if sh doesn't stop making her mother sad I won' speak to her—and then she'll be sorry.

The day is another of those bright ones, bu there is a fine cool north wind blowing that wi blow my love down to Chicago to you.

His vigorous letters must have been a dail tonic to her. One from Mankato, Minnesota dated April 21, their wedding anniversary begins ridiculously enough:

Merry Christmas, my sweetheart!

It's springtime—the very first day for spring I've just come from a long walk, and have see the early shoots from the trees and have gotte my feet into green grass for the first time thi year. For two days it has been bleak and col with lowering skies, and the mercury had a awful weight on its mind. Today is bright wit a flecked blue sky and the air full of life and th birds full of fat worms.

I did between five and six miles this morning Your husband slowly returning to his Appoll (that's got too many p's or l's or something) lik figure. Don't be jealous! You were along—yo and your little baby. Oh yes, I've seen th Mayflowers. Some boys at a way station wer

(Continued on Page 92)

The "fresh up" family drink!

You like it... it likes you!

COPYRIGHT 1948 BY THE SEVEN-UP COMPANY

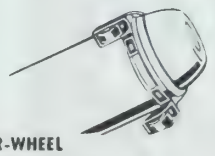
Faster Cleaning... floor to Ceiling!

Here's the all-purpose cleaner. It's fast and thorough on your rugs. And wait till you see how quickly it cleans draperies, upholstery . . . even lamp shades and linoleum!

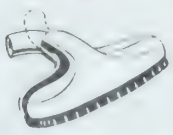
This new Hamilton Beach cylinder model is more powerful than ever. Yet, it's the quietest cleaner we've ever made.

Below are the six features that make Hamilton Beach your best buy. Read them over, see how they save you time and effort. Then, have your dealer demonstrate them and you'll agree that here, actually, is faster cleaning . . . floor to ceiling! Hamilton Beach Company, Division of Scovill Manufacturing Co., Racine, Wis.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

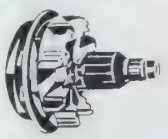


For faster cleaning . . . floor to ceiling . . . it's Hamilton Beach!

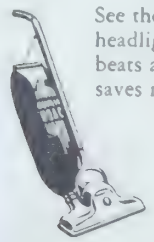


DOUBLE-ACTION FLOOR NOZZLE picks up lint, hair, thread . . . gets embedded dirt, too! Rubber body protects furniture.

SUCTION REGULATOR SLOT reduce suction. Keep delicate fabrics out of nozzle. Thumb over slot restores suction to full volume.



FOUR-WHEEL CARRIAGE rolls easily. Wide-tread, soft rubber wheels prevent rug scuffing. Front wheels lock for safety on stairs.



SWIVEL-NECKED WALL AND FLOOR BRUSH glides under beds, over door casings, anywhere! Gets into all those hard-to-reach places.

TOE-OPERATED SWITCH controls motor. Step on it to start—step on it to stop. Ruggedly built for years of heavy use.

POWERFUL MOTOR with more suction than ever! Gets embedded dirt. It's quiet. It never needs oiling—ball bearings are grease-packed.

See the new Hamilton Beach De Luxe Upright Cleaner. Its big, bright headlight shows up dim-corner dirt . . . its triple-action floor nozzle beats and sweeps in a powerful vacuum. Saves time . . . saves work . . . saves rugs!

HAMILTON BEACH
Vacuum Cleaners

(Continued from Page 90)

selling big bunches of them. I bought one that was full of the perfume of country and freedom. I was going to pack it and send it to you, but there was no train until next day, and the next day the poor little captive woodland things had begun to droop.

My heart of hearts is yours.

OTIS.

To date my start in life by the same device Sterne used for Tristram Shandy, it must have taken place the preceding summer in either France or Holland, for in a letter written late in May my father says:

Cornelia will be true to her nationality. She must wear either the tricolor or the orange and she knows when to come.

I think it isn't far off because I find myself getting horribly nervous and I fancy it is because of a thought or event transference. Last night I dreamed that it had taken place and it was such a wise little thing! I thought it stood up and talked most sagely to me.

God bless you, my dearest wife. May the new life come as a benediction into ours.

FIVE days later I was born. Father used to tell me how he spent agonized hours riding time and time again on streetcars out toward the suburbs where, becoming panic-stricken, he would jump off, leap onto the next returning tram and hurry back to the hospital, only to be told that nothing had happened yet.

After her delivery, mother was desperately ill. She was made to lie immovable for several weeks and I was kept in her room, where I wailed incessantly.

But father's letters overflow with fatuous pride in his new parenthood. One from Washington:

The journey seemed intolerably long because I was going away from the two dearest things I have on earth. My wife and my baby.

How funny it seems to say the two dearest ones. It used to be only one.

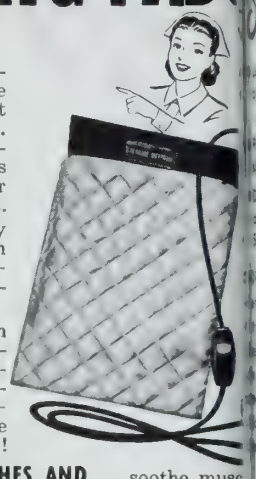
I really didn't think we could have such a beautiful little girl as that which has come to us. [Obviously parenthood had warped his vision. I was anything but beautiful, looking, in fact, rather like an Eskimo.]

Take all my love, dear heart, and when you've taken it, lend it all to Cornelia.



My first few months of existence were passed at the Virginia Hotel. Unable to afford a nurse, mother took care of me; and the care she took was so hysterically meticulous, it very nearly killed me. That was the era when germs had sprung into popular prominence. I was a bottle baby, and she was certain that all Chicago milk must be alive with every virus from the common cold to smallpox. Instead of heating it to just the right temperature, she boiled it until there was neither germ nor nourishment left in it. I pined and lost weight and it was only after I had gone in for a series of convulsions that my grandmother persuaded her I was slowly dying of malnutrition.

Still too frail to wheel the perambulator, mother used to tip one of the hotel bellboys to wheel me up and down the street on sunny days. The bellboy was an exceptionally alert and attractive lad—and that's not to be wondered at, for his name was Frank Buck. In his memoirs, the amiable adventurer blandly states that I was the yellingest baby in the block.

They took me East in a market basket to stay for a time with Grandfather Skinner. He baptized me. It was characteristic of my grandfather's New England reserve that he waited until the ceremony was over and my name permanently set before announcing in ringing tones that there was no name in the world he so despised as that of Cornelia, and that although he had now conferred it upon me with the Almighty as witness, he had no intention of ever calling me by it. "When I was a small boy," he growled, "I shared a school desk with a girl named Cornelia. She was disagreeable and a tattletale. What's more—she smelled!" And he strode from the room.

That was how I came by the coy and somewhat distressing nickname of Bobs, a cognomen which suits me about as patly as would

MORE FAMILIES USE CASCO HEATING PADS

BECAUSE:

Casco gives quicker, steadier, more soothing heat at the flick of a switch. Casco is more economical—costs less than ½¢ per hour—AC-DC, 115 volts. Casco is completely dependable — even with wet packs—approved by Underwriters' Labs. Casco is used in thousands of hospitals—recommended by more doctors and nurses—yet costs no more than ordinary pads!

RELIEVE BACKACHES AND... soothe muscular pains, monthly pains, earaches, headaches, colds, sinus, rheumatism, with the safe heat of a Casco Electric Heating Pad!

Only 4.95 to 7.95 at Drug, Department, Electric and Hardware stores.

CASCO PRODUCTS CORP., BRIDGEPORT 2, CONN.
America's Largest Maker of Electric Heating Pads

YARN FREE SAMPLES and DIRECTIONS
All wool 2-3-4 ply Knitting Yarns. Rug Yarns. Unexcelled quality; lowest prices. Buy Direct—Save Money.
BARTLETT YARN MILLS, Box R, Harmony, Maine

KVP Dusting PAPER

HOW MUCH
Is Your Spare Time Worth?

You can earn up to $1.50 an hour, representing us. For details address a postal to

M. E. Nichols
CURTIS CIRCULATION COMPANY, 771 Independence Sq., Phila. 5, Pa.

FREE TO WOMEN SIZE 38 to 52

SLENDERIZING

"NEW LOOK" FASHION BOOK

Yours absolutely FREE . . . a complete catalog of "New Look" fashions in YOUR SIZE! Youthfully slenderizing coats, suits, dresses, corsets and lingerie GUARANTEED TO FIT . . . and all at surprisingly low prices.

Pictured here is one of many dresses that flatter your figure beautifully. Finest quality rayon crepe, peplum frock with gracefully draped back. Rich sequins and metallic braid applique. Sizes 38 to 52. Only $14.98.

MAIL COUPON TODAY for this fascinating FREE fashion book that has helped thousands of larger women LOOK SIZES SLIMMER and YEARS YOUNGER.

Roaman's

Roaman's, 39 St. at 5th Ave., Dept. L-25, New York 18, N. Y.
Please send me FREE, the complete "New Look Fashion Book"

Name_____

Address_____

Town_____ State_____

Penetrates

mooths Dry Skin!

anolin's most eneficial elements ..refined!

lus four special kin-softeners!

iscourages tiny ry-skin lines.

mooths weather-dried skin!

T YOU—lanolin's softening, beautifying efits! This rich, rich cream penetrates pores of your skin. Brings an immediate of velvet softness. Apply nightly—see dry-skin lines and flaky roughness look other... and you look younger! Get odbury's Special Dry Skin Cream—for olin's benefits, for penetrating softening.

Woodbury
Special Dry Skin Cream

NEY FOR YOU $25 SELLING FIFTY 9¢ BOXES FEATURE

FREE SAMPLES 50 FOR $1 personal CHRISTMAS CARDS AND STATIONERY

as Cards, Candlettes, 35 money-maker ey needed to start. Gift offers, extra bonus. r sample feature box on approval.

CARD, 215 Fox St., Elmira, N. Y.

EYE-GENE

ELY Relieves TIRED, SMARTING S In SECONDS!

erful EYE-GENE! Just ops in your eyes that are or irritated from wind, overwork, lack of sleep oke—will relieve, rest, , clear them in seconds. every day. EYE-GENE and gentle. 25¢, 60¢, and e-dropper es at gists. t on GENE!

Dull morning look...

Snap back with dazzle!

REPLACEMENT OR A REFUND OF MONEY Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Coets

WHENEVER YOU USE HOME PERMANENT WAVE KIT

HANDY COTTON SQUARES

LARGE PACKAGE 29¢

Snooks or Blondie. Bobs was an abbreviation for Bobbles, the reason for this being an inability on my part to hold my head up. It was only after I had committed some heinous misdemeanor that my parents ever called me by my given name.

In the fall, mother took me back to Chicago and father again went on the road. He was not particularly happy on this tour. Business was bad and his letters are sentimentally homesick. From Buffalo and the Iroquois Hotel he writes:

The orchestra that plays during dinner now is a seven-string affair. Thursday night they began in the softest tones to play Schubert's Traumerei. I listened for a moment and then two big tears fell into the stewed tomatoes. I continued to ooze and munch and munch and ooze as long as the selection kept up. I couldn't stop. I kept seeing you and Bobbles. The waiter must have thought I was daft.

My father's next engagement was one which he used to say it made him sad to recall. It was a costarring tour with Ada Rehan in a repertory of The Shrew, The Merchant, and The School for Scandal. Financially it was highly successful, but emotionally it was depressing and nerve-racking. Daly had been dead for some years, and the loss had left Ada Rehan a mere shell of her former self. She was an aging, embittered woman. Her heart was gone, the fire of her acting had died out, and the sparkling charm that had been her greatest quality flashed only at momentary intervals in her Katharine. She had always been a hypochondriac, and now she was genuinely ill in body as well as in spirit. She was able to attend only three of the preliminary rehearsals, her part being read by the stage manager. Frequently she was barely able to stagger through a performance.

Rehan loved only one thing in the whole world, and that was a snuffly little Boston bull named Bobs. If Bobs were ill she'd refuse to play her performance unless an attendant veterinary stayed all the while in her dressing room to watch over the dog basket.

That year I fell seriously ill with colitis and nearly died. It occurred during father's Chicago engagement, and one evening, after I was definitely on my way to recovery, mother, to get an hour's change of scene, had run down to the theater to sit for a while in father's dressing room.

Rehan, having heard of my illness, and seeing her, felt it her duty to say, "Mrs. Skinner, I hope your little Bobs is better."

"Thank you, Miss Rehan, she is," mother answered. "We feel pretty certain she's going to live.

Rehan in a sudden and surprising impulse of sympathy seized mother's hand. "I know

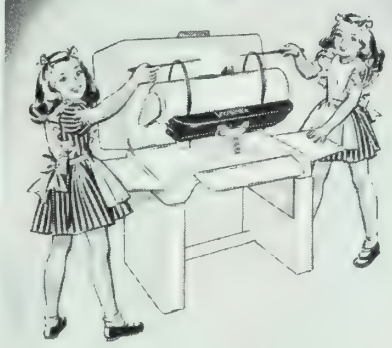
(Continued on Page 95)

Next Month

SHOULD any man dare to hope for happiness in a land where he is alien in mind and color? Dr. Liang Wen Hua was a distinguished Chinese scholar and philosopher. Yet for twenty years of exile he had worried the question.

About him he saw the evidence of his own family's attempt at an answer: he himself involved in a strange love affair; his wife confused but enduring; his children, like nomads, neither at home in the tensions of New York nor at ease in the new China to which they fled.

For him, for all of them, there were to be pain and death, violence and passion, as each sought in his own way—



KINFOLK

A new serial by Pearl S. Buck.
Beginning
In the October JOURNAL

Only Ironrite WITH TWIN-END ROLL

Lets you IRON WIDEST PIECES without CREASES

...TWIN OPEN ENDS! THE REASON WHY MOST WOMEN DECIDE ON IRONRITE

Any ironer saves you time. Any ironer lets you sit as you iron. But there's one automatic ironer that brings you greater ease, finer, faster ironing, more complete satisfaction than ever before.

That's Ironrite!

Here's your chance to compare Ironrite with others! At your dealer's, look at Ironrite's Twin-End roll, with center support, which lets you use simple, natural, unrestricted movements as you iron everything with professional ease and speed.

Talk to long-time Ironrite owners and learn how long-lived this wonderful automatic servant is! The first Ironrite models—now 27 years old—are still ironing beautifully.

Talk to new Ironrite owners. Learn how quickly these women became expert—as you will—(at rhythmic, restful automatic Ironrite ironing), through Ironrite's unique Free Home Instruction Service.

Ironrite, finest automatic ironer, costs a little more, is worth lots more. Your Ironrite dealer (find him in the telephone book yellow pages) can deliver NOW! Budget terms if you wish.

Ironrite
Rhythmic-Restful Automatic Ironing

THE IRONRITE IRONER COMPANY, MOUNT CLEMENS, MICHIGAN

Planning a "company" salad?

It's sure to be successful with

THE ONE AND ONLY

Miracle Whip

SAVE THE PINT AND QUART JARS FOR CANNING!

TOMATO CUP SALAD

Like to take bows at the dinner table? Then serve this Tomato Cup Salad . . . with Miracle Whip. That last is really important, for the dressing makes the salad and Miracle Whip is the one and only of its kind. Made by a secret recipe, mixed in a patented beater, this unique type of dressing combines the qualities of zesty boiled dressing and fine mayonnaise. Millions prefer Miracle Whip Salad Dressing . . . and one taste tells you why.

- 6 large peeled tomatoes
- Lettuce
- ½ cup cooked string beans cut in 1-inch pieces
- ½ cup cooked peas
- ½ cup raw carrot slices
- ½ cup raw cauliflower flowerets
- Salt and pepper
- Miracle Whip Salad Dressing

Cut the tomatoes into 5 sections, leaving them whole at the stem ends. Spread them apart slightly. Place each in a crisp lettuce cup and arrange on a chop plate. Toss the string beans, peas, carrot slices, and cauliflower flowerets together lightly. Season to taste with the salt and pepper. Fill centers of the tomatoes with the mixed vegetables and garnish generously with the Miracle Whip Salad Dressing.

America's favorite! No other like it!

A unique type of salad dressing, Miracle Whip has a zesty flavor all its own . . . a flavor so appealing that the one and only Miracle Whip actually outsells the next 20 brands combined.

(Continued from Page 93)

you feel, my dear," she said. "Just the I do when my little Bobs is ill!"

r one horrified moment my gentle ner wanted to strike her. Then she saw look in the haggard blue eyes and her filled with quick tears of understanding. s, Miss Rehan," she said softly. "Just same way!"

hen I was four I started being yanked t Europe. It was part of mother's cul- l plan to expose me at a tender age to edrals, palaces and art galleries. I don't ve I enjoyed it very much. Of my first I have only the haziest memory of two odes.

ne is of an afternoon while we were tly having tea on the terrace of a small haus in the Austrian mountains. All at there was a burst of terrific excitement: ers rushed about frantically fixing up a ial table with embroidered linen and ous floral arrangements and the local up of professional yodelers hurriedly as- bled. The landlord whispered into fa- 's ear that an archduke and his two sons just driven in for tea. Mother, glowing anticipation, moved my chair to a posi- where I might "get a good look at the e princes." I, of course, caught the pre- ing excitement and sat waiting expect- y for a reproduction of Sir John Millais' ting of the famous lads of the Tower. In e a prosaic party of four: an uncompro- ng British governess, a man who but for Alpine hat and loden might have been one y Missouri cousins, and two dreary little s in sailor suits. A lavish tea, heaped with ries, preserves and sweets, was placed re them. I watched for a few minutes, n suggested we leave.

Why?" mother whispered. "Don't you t to see the little princes?"

No!" I shrilled in a voice that carried tifully. "They're not princes—they're awful boys and they chew with their ths open!"

Mother, flushing scarlet, clapped her hand r my face, but father snorted with amuse- t and said, "The child's right! They do!"

he other episode I can vaguely recall took e in Paris one day when father and I were on a walk near a big cathedral and he all nce asked me if I'd like to see a "wax- ks." Remembering Mme. Tussaud's in don, which I had adored, I fell for the gestion with eager delight. The place we t to was dark and dull and not at all like he. Tussaud's. There were no kings being wned nor any queens being decapitated. t a number of people lying down in a ly uninteresting fashion. I was disap- nted and bored. On returning to the ho- I told mother that I hadn't much liked waxworks my father had taken me to see. ther asked him which waxworks it was, and upon his reply she unaccountably burst into tears. There followed a curious argument between the two, mother asking how he ever came to take me to such a place and father explaining that he'd always wanted to see it himself, and, anyway, it hadn't made any particular impression on me. He was right, it hadn't, for it was years before I learned that the "waxworks" we had visited was the Paris morgue.

One summer father, in search of atmosphere for The Harvester, an adaptation of Richepin's Le Chemineau with the locale changed from the Midi to French Canada, had taken us for a few weeks to Les Eboulements, a tiny village perched precariously on the banks of the St. Lawrence between Murray Bay and Baie St. Paul, and there we ran into a remarkable lady who was to have much influence on our lives. Her name was then Mary Crawford—she later became Mrs. Charles B. Dudley, wife of the chief chemist of the Pennsylvania Railroad; I knew her always as "Miss Mary." She lived near Bryn Mawr, where she taught in one of the preparatory schools. She was vital, brilliant, witty, and at the same time disarmingly lovable, and mother and she immediately cemented a friendship.

Miss Mary persuaded mother to move to Bryn Mawr for the following winter. She lived with her sister, "Miss Bessie," and a brother whom we knew as "Mr. John," on a large pigeon farm halfway between Bryn Mawr and Conshohocken, in a sweep of that gracious Pennsylvania countryside of opulent fields, thick hedgerows and majestic woods tidily cleared of underbrush. Just inside the entrance gates was a love of a pre-Revolutionary cottage. The Crawfords, in more affluent days, had used it as a lodge keeper's house. It was tiny, but ideal for a family such as ours. Father would either be playing in New York or touring somewhere, and mother was loath to be separated from him, but Miss Mary used the persuasive argument that I should soon be starting the process known as education, and we were near that Athens of the Main Line, Bryn Mawr, where was situated not only the college, but any number of excellent preparatory schools.

The prospect of my growing up in a seat of learning was one which decidedly pleased mother. Moreover, Bryn Mawr was near Philadelphia, and another prospect which pleased was that the little nomadic family might at last settle in a community where other roots had taken hold, flourishing into the genus Biddle-Cadwallader and such magnificent family trees.

And so we settled in the lodge keeper's house, which had stone walls three feet thick and made up in quaintness what it lacked in convenience.

Mother, who hitherto had never lived in anything older than Moberly's clapboard

NEW PACK'S READY

Picked and packed at the fleeting moment of perfect flavor . . . sweet, tender peas with that fresh-from-the-vine goodness.

RADIO NOTE FROM FRED WARING: Some of you have asked where we got the Green Giant's "fo-fi-fum-fe" song that we play on our NBC broadcast every Friday morning. Well, it started in a railroad coach, when we were on tour a year ago last spring. We tried to imagine how a whole Glee Club of jolly Green Giants might sound. We got an idea, arranged it, rehearsed it—and it has been the Green Giant's radio trademark ever since.

Minnesota Valley Canning Company, headquarters, Le Sueur, Minnesota; Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ontario. Also packers of Niblets Brand whole kernel corn.

"Green Giant" and "Niblets" Brands Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. ©MVCCo.

Polished Calfskin with flawless fit. Because, like a fine custom dressmaker, Walk-Over tailors every detail with infinite care . . . for lasting smart looks and joyous comfort.

Walk-Over prices from $12.05

Geo. E. Keith Company, Brockton 03, Mass.

bird cages, was charmed by the old doors that wouldn't stay shut, the windows that wouldn't stay open, the undulating floors that made walking a perilous thing. The house boasted not a single knob or modern lock, but the old iron fastenings showing up against the white woodwork added to the character of the place and mother, who had a fondness for the names of country houses, called this "The Latch String."

That year was her first experience in housekeeping, a duty which all her life she thoroughly loathed. The nearest store was four miles away, and four miles by horse and carriage. The house, of course, had no furnace, and a vicious wind sweeping down over the frozen Schuylkill would cut through the cracks in the ill-fitting doorjambs with the keenness of knife blades, blowing out the candles and making the kerosene lamps sputter like fireworks. I even remember seeing the rag carpet strips rise and fall in the drafty hallway. Open fireplaces heated—or, to be more accurate, made tepid—the ground floor, a Franklin stove at the head of the stairs tempered the chill of the two bedrooms, while in the icy bathroom a portable coal-oil stove gave forth less heat than smell.

There was no telephone and no means of communication with the big house where the Crawfords lived, and The Latch String was practically flush with the main road which led from Bryn Mawr to Conshohocken. It was a lonely highway, and at night it was desolately still. If an automobile went by, the occasion was one of eerie suspense. One heard it approaching for minutes before it whizzed past the house (whizzing, in those days, must have been all of 25 m.p.h.), and one listened for more minutes to the sound of the motor dying away in the distance.

To judge by the standards of the average little girl, I suppose I was lonely, but I didn't know it. The fact that there were no other children near us failed to bother me. I had the run of the vast Crawford farm, which had all manner of trees to climb, although I didn't do it very well, and a delight which never palled was the old carriage house. The Crawfords had a handsome collection of runabouts, traps, express wagons and surreys. There was even, back in a dark corner, a Conestoga wagon, the cobwebs heavy as Spanish moss hanging from the venerable shafts.

The place both scared and fascinated me. So I invented a companion. She was a little girl my own age, and of course her eyes were cerulean blue and her hair hung in yellow ringlets practically to the floor. I can't recall that she had any name other than "My Friend." I would clamber up into one of the traps, usually the dogcart because it was the smartest, My Friend beside me, and gathering up imaginary reins and whip, would call out a lusty "giddy-app" to my particular Pegasus, an obliging animal who, with the speed of light, went wherever he was told. Sometimes it would be to New York to see father; sometimes to Chicago, to call on Grandmother Durbin.

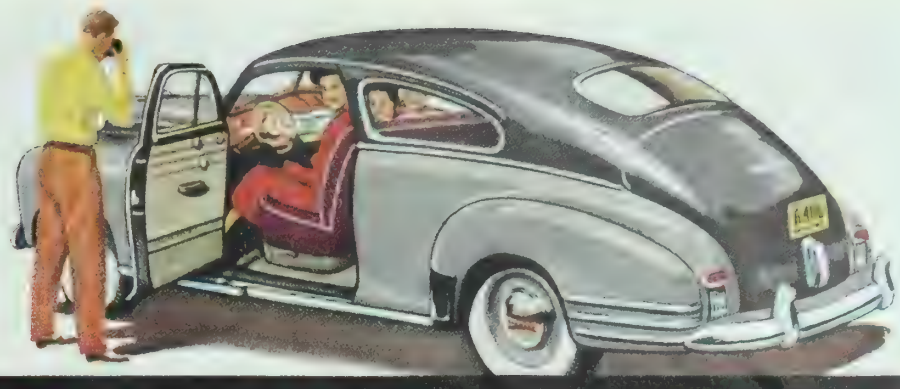
OUR favorite outing was a brisk trot over to Persia to have tea with a potentate I called the "Shawl." This took us farther afield than the carriage house. Once arrived in Persia, I reined in Pegasus—whose name, I believe, was Prince—tied him to a handy Moslem hitching post and proceeded to the "divan of the Shawl," a ceremonial for which one repaired to the Crawford house and tiptoed into a vast and formidable room known as the "big sitting room." The shades were always lowered, but for me the gloom was dissipated by the glorious presence, in a far corner, of a gem of Edwardian horror known as a "cozy corner"—a small, low couch constructed out of Moorish saddlebags, secluded by a festoon of Turkish carpets arranged like the half-open flaps of a tent and embellished by a gallon of chenille balls and a venerable deposit of dust. In front of the sofa was a taboret of teakwood and mother-of-pearl, purchased by some member of the family at the Philadelphia World's Fair of 1876. On this reposed an Oriental after-dinner [illegible] service which I thought the quintesse[nce] of all beauty. In this tasty retreat the "Sh[ah]" held his court. The sofa was his fa[vo]rite "divan" where he sat, tailor fashion w[ith] Friend and I flanking him on either sid[e] drinking tea out of cups the size of eye[s]. The sofa was originally intended for tw[o] sometimes the three of us felt cramped s[o] there. In that event the Shawl, who wa[s] soul of courtesy and refinement, would [do] further honor by electing one of us to [sit] his lap. He invariably chose me, and in [the] position of dignity we exchanged cul[ti]amenities, he telling me all about Persi[a] Ali Baba and I responding with inform[a]concerning Chicago and my uncle who w[as] in a soda fountain.

The secret of youthful looks in an aged face is easy shoes, easy corsets and an easy conscience. —ANON.

THAT was father's first season under management of Charles Frohman. A tra[n]tion of Henri Lavedan's powerful piece, Duel, had reached Broadway and fathe[r] anxious to do it. The play, which dealt a bitter quarrel between two brothers, [one] worldly doctor, the other a fanatical y[ou]priest, had been a furor in Paris. The pa[rt] the Abbé Daniel was right up father' mantic alley and, knowing Frohman [had] trolled the American rights, he wrote th[e] tle Napoleon of the theater asking abou[t] possibilities of securing a script. Frohn[an] reply was terse and characteristic: "If [you] want The Duel, come under my ma[n]ment and I will produce it for you." F[ather] would have liked continuing as an a[ctor]manager, but the magic phrase "Ch[arles] Frohman presents" had already beco[me] byword in the theater. For a day or tw[o] hesitated, then wired back his acceptan[ce] go under the Frohman banner.

He never regretted decision. There was an elegance about the Froh[man] management, the eleg[ance] of good plays and of tinguished actors, of ductions just lavish en[d] yet always in exce[llent] taste. Frohman had uncanny genius for picking out the r[ight] script and the right player. He superv[ised] every word, every gesture, every pro[p] the production. And that his supervi[sion] was so authoritative was amazing, fo[r] was an incoherent and shy little man w[hose] inability to express himself amounted most to vocal impediment. Father that many a time at rehearsal, Frohm[an] would take him aside (he was far too mo[del] to speak out baldly before any cast), say, "Otis . . . er . . . look. That girl in that scene . . . er . . . well, I'd lik[e] see more . . . you know what I mea[n]. And, "By Jove," father would concl[ude] "you did know what he meant!" Frohm[an] was proud of his stars, and with good rea[son] for his galaxy at that time included s[uch] names as Maude Adams, John Drew, B[arry]Burke, Ethel Barrymore—to mention [only] the greater luminaries.

For father and Frohman, The Duel the beginning of a long and happy asso[cia]tion which lasted until that fateful day w[hen] the waters of the Irish Sea closed over head of the gallant little producer who st[ood] by the rail of the foundering Lusitania, fusing to take up room in a lifeboat, quie[tly] speaking his last heroic words which ca[me] from a play by Sir James M. Barrie: "W[hy] fear death? It's life's most beautiful adv[en]ture."



The Duel opened at the Hudson Thea[ter] in New York and ran for a successful seas[on]. This was a godsend for mother, for it me[ant] that father could come home for Sunda[y].

Our only means of conveyance to and fr[om] Bryn Mawr was a runabout and a species tree-climbing horse named Brownie. Brow[nie] was a small mare who, nine tenths of [the] time, behaved with complete docility. I[t] her, however, spy an automobile, a ste[am] roller or a train, and she became a double Mazeppa's maniacal mount. Raising [the] shafts with her, a maneuver which hur[led] the occupants of the runabout backward [at] an angle of thirty-five degrees, she wou[ld]

(Continued on Page 99)

"Take a picture of some Real Bargain Hunters!"

I boasted to my husband. I'd just driven the children all over town to find school clothes — at the right price.

Chevrolet's low cost per mile makes it so easy and worth while to "Shop Around" for bargains

DRESS DESIGNED BY MAD CARPENTIER FOR CONTI.

East side, west side . . . You'll drive all around the town in your thrifty new Chevrolet . . . and beam with pleasure at how little it costs to "make the rounds"!

For you see, your Chevrolet brings you a daily bargain in economical transportation. Its sweet-running Valve-in-Head engine is famed for the way it squeezes extra miles out of every gallon of gas. And oh! What a miser that engine is on oil and upkeep!

Of course, economy is just part of the story. You'll revel in the stylish comfort of Chevrolet's Body by Fisher, the gliding smoothness of its unitized Knee-Action Ride, the driving ease of Vacuum-Shift and Positive-Action Hydraulic Brakes.

But isn't it an added thrill to know that these Big-Car qualities are yours at lower operating cost, lower upkeep cost, lower initial cost?

CHEVROLET MOTOR DIVISION, GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION, DETROIT 2, MICHIGAN

CHEVROLET

CHEVROLET and only Chevrolet IS FIRST!

Lavishly lace-trimmed at top and bottom—Textron's lovely dress-sized slip, about $5

Pretty as a French Porcelain

...NEW LACY DRESS-SIZED SLIPS

Now Textron brings you slips you'll treasure... of richest, smoothest rayon inches deep in elegant lace. New longer length to shadow longer dresses—dress-sized, too, at bust, waist and hips, instead of just at bust alone. Luxurious Alençon-type lace on Porcelain Pink, Black or Snow White, in dress sizes 12 to 20. See the latest Textron collection of dress-sized slips from about $4 to $6 at leading stores throughout the country.

TEXTRON INC., Textron Building, 401 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

TEXTRON

HOSTESS COATS • BLOUSES • MENSWEAR • TRICOT & WOVEN LINGERIE

(Continued from Page 96)

nto her hind legs, after which she would for a brief moment, trembling horand then bolt in any direction her fancied. Sometimes it would be across ordering ditch, sometimes in the direc-of the nearest telephone pole, up which ould attempt to shinny.

was Brownie who took us to the station ay mornings, and our terror at her rear-nd plunging was mitigated by the rap-of knowing that father was arriving by eleven-forty-five local. As the train d into view, I'd hold my breath for fear ight not be on board, followed by a gulp y at the sight of him swinging down out e last car and a catapulting of myself the length of the platform to meet him a hand eagerly extended for the present variably brought me.

ther's presents were simple, but to me were treasures of delight: little dolls ed in European costume, Maillard's ues de Chats in blue boxes with kittens
e lids, books on the Little Black Sambo
. He once brought home a harmonica, another time a xylophone—objects of or me and torture for mother, although ut up with them, thinking they might ken in me some musical talent.

hat was Maude Adams' second season in r Pan, and father, who had a layoff Holy k, took me over to New York to see it. as a lovely spree, just the two of us. I of se adored the play and sobbed bitterly n I thought Tinker Bell might die; then estore him to life and to prove my belief iries, waved my handkerchief like mad—it wasn't my handkerchief. Father had otten to put one in my pocket, so he lent is, which was larger and made more of a
. And like thousands of other children, but broke the springs of my bed that t in my optimistic attempts to fly.

One of the chief joys of that trip was the fact that nobody combed my hair. My coiffure was the popular bob, with a large bow tied firmly onto a tightly twisted wisp at one side. Gentle as mother was, she always pulled and my daily hair-fixing was a painful struggle. Father, on our trip which lasted two days, let me sleep in the bow, which he perked up as best he could each morning while he slicked my short mane down with his hands and let it go at that. His triumphant remark to mother upon our return to Bryn Mawr was, "Maud, look at that bow! It hasn't been off the child since you tied it on two days ago!"

That spring my Grandfather Skinner died and was laid to rest beside his wife and amid his forebears in the little mountain cemetery in Proctorsville. Father had to return to his tour with Frohman, but mother went with the family to Vermont and stayed until the last of the sad duties was accomplished. A letter from Washington reveals something of how father felt:

Dear Heart: My thoughts and love have been with you ever since I left Cambridge.

It seems as if the severing of this tie that held me for so many years to the good and tender man, my father, had brought me nearer to you. It is only in the past three days that it has come to me with a realizing sense, what it all meant.

Death's mystery has had its glory for me. That glory has been shed on my love for you.

Father's next route took him out to the Coast. With this sorrow fresh in his heart, it must have been a trying tour for him. But to waste any minutes of being alive in self-pity or regret was not in his scheme of things. He busied himself with the interests which the road always afforded him: good books, good scenery, good friends. During fifty years of intermittent trouping, he never lost his

Plain Sonnets From the Dishpan

BY MIRIAM HEMMENDINGER

Each school day as they dress I almost see
That imperceptible but widening space Between their growing little selves and me;
Each morning I examine either
face
And wonder if they feel that growth at all.
How independently they think and stand!
In build and years so relatively small,
Yet leaning less and less toward my hand.
The less they lean, the better proof have I
That our hopes for them have some reality;
Lost in their plans, gaily they call good-by,
Each day a step toward maturity.

I measure growth not inches from the floor
But how a child goes out and shuts a door.

Our weekly trusted helper comes to take
The house and children for the solid day,
These hours planned entirely for my sake,
So I can walk an unencumbered way.
No Cinderella rushed off to the ball.
As eagerly as I dress to depart,
Only to find, once I am free of all,
Though I took cash and keys I left my heart.

Now half ashamed I primp and dine and shop,
Shut off my worries, say I'm having fun,
Until time shows that my pretense can stop,
Then, turning tail, I head for home and run!

Each week the same! Thankfully I return,
Met by a happy "Hi!" and un-concern.

I hear so much of perfect motherhood
In terms too delicate to seem quite true,
What is it then that makes a mother
"good,"
Or, for that matter, makes a father too?
A parent needs an ear as quick as light,
And keen to catalogue what sounds portend,
Not only sudden whimpers in the night,
But tones in voices warning
temper's end.
A parent should not hover, yet be there,
Not law, but arbitration on the spot;
Speed; yet speed with a casual air,
Nor act till sure, apologize when not!

A mother's "good" when she leaves beds undone
To join her children's frolic in the sun!

Lithe-Line Waists!

The little middle is big fashion and your biggest problem. So Munsingwear cinches it with the specially designed high-line waist of this girdle and pantie girdle. It whittles you to a hand-span... stays up...breathes with you! You'll find satin and elastic leno in these Foundettes*... a new comfort and freedom...and, naturally, a new-looking figure! And look at Munsingwear's proud-bosom bra in blue, nude, black, and white. All reasonably priced.

At fine stores everywhere.

MUNSINGWEAR

Foundettes

zest for new places or for old places revisited. New Orleans, of course, was one of his loves. From there he wrote:

Your city and mine, dear heart.

I made my pilgrimage to Métairie yesterday. It is always a bright and beautiful day when I go there. The little chameleons are still chasing each other about the tombs of our trysting place. They are no older. Neither is Métairie. Neither is our love.

I had your sweet letter when I returned in the late afternoon.

Did Bobs get all the postal cards? You must tell her about Métairie and about the chameleons and about father and mother.

I went out St. Charles Avenue yesterday to an insistent photographer. As we went along, we passed a series of streets all named after the Muses—there must have been nine of them, I suppose: Thalia, Clio, Euterpe, Terpsichore, etc. Where but in New Orleans could one find such street naming?

He had his fiftieth birthday there that year and he wrote:

It was half a century ago that I came into the world. That is a most terrible state of affairs. I am supposed by popular belief to commence the journey that goes down the mountain, but I am so d——d perverse that I am still looking up. There are heights still above me and I never could be content to look away from them.

The crown of my fifty years is you, dear wife, and that crown too will go on gathering glory . . . for not being a sensible crown it will never know that time dims and tarnishes.

We spent the ensuing summer back in French Canada at Les Eboulements. That was the summer father taught me to read. Our textbook was a little yellow volume called The Land of Song, Book 1, a simple collection of children's verses. I considered it all highly entertaining. Father, as a teacher, was gay and funny and, from a standpoint of scientific education, thoroughly unsound. He taught me to read as he read—slowly, painstakingly and never missing a word. To him, a good book was like a good bottle of wine, its flavor to be relished slowly and respectfully in order not to miss a drop of enjoyment. As a result, he could quote whole passages from his favorite writers—Dickens, Trollope, Mark Twain and, of course, Shakespeare. I learned to spell out the words of A Midsummer Night's Dream. Thanks to heaven and my wise parents, I always had my Shakespeare "neat." No short cuts, no popularized synopses for little folk. A friend of mother's had given me a "de luxe" edition of Lamb's Tales, a gesture which father took as an insult to the Bard and to his child. I was allowed to look at the illustrations, but then, lest I be contaminated by the text, the book was snatched from me and hidden away as carefully as if it had been an advance copy of Lady C terley's Lover.

Remembering that summer, I can st the pine-dark Laurentian hills sharply lined against the clear Canadian sky sloping grainfields clinging to the steep of slopes which tumbled down into the majestic St. Lawrence. But most clear the remembered images of that far-off mer is father, his shirt open at the throa manuscript of next season's play rolled his pocket (he always memorized his outdoors, tramping about some open ing). Father striding home through a w deep wheat field, carrying the great bun wild flowers he always pulled for moth was too young to know the meaning o word "romantic," but at the sight of gay, handsome, often singing in wha thought was French, my heart would p with pride and delight. "That's my fat I would say to mother. in case she d know.

Next winter we returned to The L String. But things were very differen me, because I started in on that lap in circuit known as School. Miss Mary selected the one I was to attend, the E win School, where she herself had taugh Never did child look forward to any perience as much as I to going to school. prospect of making friends with a whole of little girls my own age was intoxica indeed. But instead of finding them frie I found them unaccountably belligerent begin with, they all lived near one ano and had already gotten together in a gr formation, which proved to be a tiny t equivalent of the more ruthless of the C cago gangs. I was "new." Also, I "queer." From constant association v grownups, I used long words. I didn't k how to play games.

I might, possibly, have managed to m one friend had it not been for a girl I'll Elise Murphy. She took one searching l and then seized upon me as her victim. teased me, she made faces at me, she pu my hair when Miss Knapp, our teac wasn't looking. My name filled her with risive amusement, and she called me Cha leon Ogre Skinny, an inspirational epit which her cohorts took up like a chant.

One day, which still remains in my me ory as "the calico-dress and express-wag day," was the most miserable of that n too carefree year. Mother had made m dress, a pretty calico, darkish blue, with enchanting pattern of tiny stars and cr cent moons. For model, she copied a fr from a Kate Greenaway illustration, w puffed sleeves and an Empirelike high wa

(Continued on Page 102)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Ask Any Woman

BY MARCELENE COX

THE illusions of childhood are necessary experiences: a child should not be denied a balloon just because an adult knows that sooner or later it will burst.

When a small boy spilled half a bottle of ink on a brand-new rug and then proceeded to drink the other half, his mother didn't know whether to spank him for ruining the rug or hug him for fear he would die the next moment.

I envied the past when, in going over the required-clothing list for two daughters at boarding school, I remembered the only provision Matthew Vassar had made for taking care of the girls' clothes in his endowed college was three nails on the wall: one for a day dress, one to hold a Sunday frock, and one to hang a nightgown on.

Compliment from a daughter: "Anyway, mother, you're a good fast cooker, aren't you?"

A child should hear 90 per cent about l and 10 per cent about himself, but in t conversation of the average parent the exa opposite is true.

When a friend's house burned dow Stevenson telegraphed congratulations; t author knew his friend's wife was killing he self keeping the big house clean.

In order not to come out at the little en of the horn a family should remember th the size of money is always distorted— looms larger coming toward you.

When Thoreau discovered that a fe pieces of bright rocks on the table in h cabin had to be dusted daily, while the fu niture of his mind was undusted still, I threw away the rocks in disgust.

"Just think, mother," splurged daughte "in six weeks and two days plus two yea I'll be eighteen."

"I'll always Love the RIVIERA"

I thought as he Kissed My Hand

It was at Menton. Tom said, "Hey—take my picture kissing her hand, the way they do here in Europe." He was joking; but just the same, I was glad I'd used Jergens Lotion, so my hands felt nice and soft. Because...

At Eden Rock, next day, Tom put his hand over mine. "So soft," he said. "If I kiss your hand again, I'll mean it." And then...

One starry night, "Let's not wait... let's get married," Tom said. "I want everyone to know these darling hands are mine." So—do you wonder I use Jergens Lotion faithfully... and always will. I want my hands to be soft for him... always.

This is the way you, too, can win—and keep—romance. With Jergens-soft hands.

It's surer than ever today. Thanks to new knowledge of skin care, today's Jergens Lotion makes your hands feel deliciously smoother and softer than ever. Protects even longer, too, against depressing roughness.

Who knows more about beauty-care than the Hollywood Stars? The Stars use Jergens Lotion, seven to one, over any other hand care.

And doctors. Many doctors help smooth-soften the skin with two fine ingredients which are both in Jergens Lotion. Never oily; no stickiness. Still 10¢ to $1.00 (plus tax) for today's even-finer Jergens Lotion—the care your hands should have.

USED BY MORE WOMEN THAN ANY OTHER HAND CARE IN THE WORLD

For the Softest, Adorable Hands, use Jergens Lotion

SHIONS THAT FLATTER!

VALUES THAT MATTER!

Jacqueline

designed by [illegible]

7.95 to 9.95

e mood of the moment! Utterly feminine styles that look like a fortune cost but a fraction of what you'd planned to pay for your Autumn [illegible] opened or closed backs . . . soaring or sensible heels . . . platformed
. They're all so glamorous . . . all such wonderful values. In polished calf . . blacks, browns, greens, wines, all the newest colors.

(Continued from Page 100)

I thought it was just lovely, and the first time I put it on, the admiring Crawfords said I was a "picture." But the picture I presented to my Comanche schoolmates was something, apparently, to be equaled in humor only by something out of the funny papers. They nudged one another, they tittered and Elise passed an ultimate verdict on my frock by calling it "poor-folksy"!

The morning passed for me in complete misery and I counted the minutes until Johnnie, the coachman, would call for me in the runabout. Eventually the final bell sounded, and I was called for, not by Johnnie, in the runabout, but by Alan in the express wagon. The express wagon was a battered vehicle used for transporting pigeon crates, and Alan was a farm hand equally battered. Today he looked worse than usual; his ragged blue jeans were spotted with bird lime, and his chin was furry with a three days' growth of beard.

Ordinarily I welcomed a chance to ride in the express wagon. One could sit beside Alan on the driver's seat and feel vastly important, or one could sit back amid the pigeon crates, on one's own seat, and feel vastly uncomfortable but adventuresome. But today, I hoped with my soul that I might be able to slink away without being seen. Quick as a ferret, Elise spotted the wagon and guessed—from my expression—that it was there for me.

"Look!" she squealed with delight. "Cinderella's coach has called for her! See what Chameleon's family send her to school in!" Then her black, malicious eye fell upon Alan and with mock politeness she said, "Is that your father driving it?"

ONE day, however, at recess Elise, searching about for new methods of tormenting me, and seeing the janitor's ancient bowler hat lying on the gymnasium window sill, called out to me, in her most jeering tones, to put it on. A sudden, curious urge to show off got the better of my timidity; I grabbed the hat, put it on at a jaunty angle and went into a comedy routine to the tune of Rufus Rastus Johnson Brown. Strange to say, the girls gathered around and called upon me to do it over and over, until the sudden appearance of a teacher put an end to the silly act. Laying aside the somewhat dirty bowler, I returned to the classroom, flushed with success. For once, I almost felt I "belonged."

My triumph was short-lived. That evening as I was doing my homework by the light of a bright student lamp, mother began curiously leaning over me with an air of horrified concentration. Slowly she reached for my head and drew a thumb and forefinger down a strand of my hair. For what seemed a very long time she examined what she had found, then she burst into a flood of tears. I followed suit without the slightest idea of the reason for such lamentation. Mother went after me with a fine-tooth comb, and if God had slipped up on numbering the hairs of my head, mother made up for the oversight, for she took each and every one, in turn, scanned it carefully, then ran her fingers down it two or three times. The process took up a large portion of the night. Apparently there had been only "one," but, she said in a quavering voice, you couldn't tell about—and she lowered her voice to the tone of a fugitive from justice—"nits." Thereupon she soaked my painfully overworked head with kerosene. We both cried some more and by midnight I went reeking to bed. For three days I was kept home from school. The kerosene was applied regularly, until I became a liability for the family fire insurance. It was a sorry interlude.

During the next year, we lived on the Bryn Mawr campus in one of the little houses in "Faculty Row." Daily life was less picturesque than it had been at The Latch String, but the presence of a furnace, a telephone and electric light made it decidedly more comfortable. Also, we were near the station where trains ran every thirty minutes to Philadelphia, and, for mother, Philadelphia meant civilization in the way of art exhibitions, matinees and the Philadelphia Or-

FIRST SHOW ME

Betty Rose

COATS AND SUITS

Empire Coat

See how the name Betty Rose opens the gates of Paris for you! Here is the star coat of the French collections in an inspired Betty Rose version ...lavish fullness ...rich cording ...dramatic new "highboy" collar.

Pure virgin wool Triomphe in Regency Black, Empress Brown, Sherwood Green, Bordeaux Wine, Coquette Kelly. Sizes 9 to 15. About $40.

For a supply of Betty Rose Lipstick Tissues and name of the one Betty Rose store in your town, write

STERN-SLEGMAN-PRINS
715 Armour Rd. • N. Kansas City 16, Mo.

THE Coolest THING ON TWO FEET

You feel results instantly when you rub frosty-white medicated Ice-Mint over tired, burning feet. Nothing like its wonderfully cooling, soothing touch to drive out fiery sting and relax weary aching muscles into blissful comfort. Grand for easing discomfort of sunburn, too. Don't delay. Get Ice-Mint today at drug and department stores. Also sold in Canada.

chestra, for which she had bought a subscription seat far up in the gallery. The height made her dizzy, but she looked, she said, only at the conductor.

She found life on a college campus delightful. It was pleasant to stroll about the grounds, to pause and chat with the young girls or to browse in the library to which she had access. She attended the weekly lectures held in Taylor Hall for the students and faculty, but what fascinated and even staggered her a little that winter was the local appearance of two eminent suffragettes.

The votes-for-women question was shaking the country at the time and Bryn Mawr, with the great feminist, M. Carey Thomas, at its head, took what was considered the revolutionary stand. The presence on the former Quaker rostrum of Mrs. Cobden-Sanderson explaining "Why I Went to Prison" and of Mrs. Pankhurst, all the more eloquent for a few weeks' regimen of forcible feeding, shocked a few conservative parents, but mother found the controversy most exciting. She herself was not a devotee of causes, although she admired those who were. She probably would never have taken any active part in the issue if her many friends who were "militants" hadn't persuaded her to join their crusade. The most warlike deed she ever perpetrated for The Cause was to help stage an evening of Tableaux of Heroic Women in the ballroom of the Bellevue-Stratford. She thought equal suffrage was very splendid and right, but her desire for the ballot never conflicted with the infinite tact with which she managed to keep as her devoted friends the "anti's" whom she knew.

When women cease to meddle the world will become a stagnant pool, tideless and windless, with the ship of humanity rotting idly on its shore. —C. LEE.

Just about this time mother also decided to do something about religion. We became parishioners at the Church of the Redeemer, and though mother went to the house of worship in spasmodic surges of piety, she saw to it that my attendance was regular. This weekly duty I neither minded nor particularly liked. The rector was unfortunately quite deaf and he conducted the service at a pace which gave every indication that he wanted to get the whole thing over with as quickly as possible. Being unable to hear the responses, and having a highly accelerated sense of timing, he would interrupt his congregation in the middle of their every answering sentence. By way of diversion, I invented a little mental game of chance, challenging myself that I couldn't get out all the words of a response before Doctor C. cut me short. It was an amicable form of gambling, as either I or myself was bound to win.

For a time, my spiritual growth was furthered—or, to be truthful, stunted—by a brief term at Sunday school. I was assigned to a fidgety little division which was one step up from the kindergarten but had not yet matriculated into adult chairs. Ours were the sort of coy midget schools nursery-minded grownups select for children "because they're cute." Being a creature of beanstalk growth, I resented having to squat, my hands dangling to the floor and my knees all but reaching to my chin. I resented, too, the namby-pambinesses we were taught—hymns such as Little Lives May be Divine when what really caught my fancy was The Son of God Goes Forth to War with that delectable verse about the martyrs meeting "the tyrant's brandished steel, the lion's gory mane."

Things took on a more encouraging aspect when it was announced that a play would be given. I imagined it would be something lovely, dealing with fairies and a prince and perhaps a few well-intentioned dwarfs. It didn't turn out quite that way. An inspired little drama whipped up by one of the teachers, it concerned two Chinese children, brother and sister, who had been existing in a lamentable state of heathen darkness until

One Permanent Cost $15...the TONI only $2

So soft, so smooth, so natural-looking. You'll say your Toni is the loveliest permanent you've ever had. But, before giving yourself a Toni you will want to know—

Will TONI give me a loose or tight wave?

With Toni you can have just the amount of curl that suits you best—from a loose, natural-looking wave to a halo of tight ringlets. Just follow the simple directions for timing.

Will TONI work on my hair?

Yes, Toni waves any kind of hair that will take a permanent, including gray, dyed, bleached or baby-fine hair.

Is it easy to do?

Easy as rolling your hair up on curlers. No wonder Toni is used by more than a million women a month.

Will TONI save me time?

Definitely. The actual waving time is only 2 to 3 hours. And during that time you are free to do whatever you want.

Why is TONI a Creme?

Because Toni Creme Waving Lotion waves the hair gently—leaves it soft as silk with no frizziness, no dried-out brittleness even on the first day.

How long will my TONI wave last?

Your Toni wave is guaranteed to last just as long as a $15 beauty shop permanent—or your money back.

How about having a TONI party?

Grand idea! Invite your friends next Saturday afternoon—and have each bring along a Toni kit. While your permanents are taking have fun—listen to the radio or enjoy your favorite records.

Which twin has the TONI?

"My Toni-savings paid for a new hat," remarks Eileen Mary Skillings. "No wonder Edith Ann says, after this we'll be Toni Twins." Eileen Mary, the twin at the left, has the Toni.

Where can I buy TONI?

At all drug, notions or cosmetic counters. Try Toni today.

Tune in "Give and Take" 2 P. M., Eastern Time, Saturday, C B S Network redemption was suddenly revealed to them by the appearance, one at a time, of a series of allegorical figures representing the more important sections of the prayer book, Morning and Evening Prayer, Baptism, Visitation of the Sick, and so on, each delivering a short but moving speech. One would think that such a series of exhortations would have sent the children hotfooting it back to the nearest temple; but no, they renounced the faith of their ancestors, entered a mission and lived piously ever after.

I had a fatuous idea that I would be selected to play the little Chinese girl, not because of any histrionic ability, but because I was dark-haired and sallow and my eyes even slanted a bit. But that fat part went to the daughter of a wealthy parishioner. I had to content myself with the role of Holy Matrimony, a severe disappointment. Spruced up in my own best white dress, with somebody's lace curtain cascading down from a wreath of limp flowers snipped off somebody else's picture hat, I delivered my lines with the same decorous lack of expression as the rest of the cast.

My next theatrical appearance that season was at Baldwin, in the lower-school play, and it gave me more of a chance than had Holy Matrimony, for I made off with the part of Puck – but not, unfortunately, in Shakespeare's pleasant fantasy. Ours was the brain child of a disciple of the Montessori method. The mise en scène was a toy shop, the characters were toys and, of course, Puck; the time, midnight.

The curtain rose to disclose a darkened stage around which was dimly visible a line-up of little girls dressed as dolls, in fiberboard constructions meant to represent doll boxes, but bearing a slight similarity to coffins. Offstage a clock struck midnight; the lights flashed on and Puck flew in at the window, resplendent in a jerkin of cloth leaves and a pair of brown tights which, on my skinny legs, seemed to lend their name. My particular form of light gave every indication that Puck hadn't eaten much at -peed. The gay elf, after landing with a hastened to the footlights and with on lips said "Sh-h-h!" to the audience was already quite silent, then mad rounds of the dolls, waking each with

When they had come to life Puck ga them in a circle and, again with finger for reasons never exactly clear, said, time for our revels." The revels, whi bodied a morris dance, some barely a songs and a pas seul on the part of the doll, were blessedly short-lived. The now chimed five. Puck said "List!"
dolls listed and Puck with some sorr nounced that 'twas dawn and at th lights went out. The dolls returned t coffins and Puck flew out the windo the soaring grace of a young ostrich.

An interested and somewhat ag spectator of this extravaganza was m ther, who happened to be home for a end. When the play was ended and t tains had done their best to close, a n of spectators hovered near at hand ea catch any comment the distinguished might let fall. The comment fell with delicacy of a load of bricks. He stretched, turned to mother, and in voice which could spread through t most gallery clarioned forth, "Well, she certainly has no talent—thank G

Frohman that spring sent father
Potter's adaptation of a colorful scr
Emile Fabre, based on Balzac's Le M du Garçon. It had been Gémier's g success at the Odéon in Paris and Kismet, The Honour of the Family to be father's greatest success in A
The part might have been made to or him and his enthusiasm overflowed in ter to mother:

This is by far the best proposition I encountered. It is suspensive, intense and man.

The man is a picturesque, swaggering
Caesar sort of fellow, a soldier out of mont after Waterloo—about 1820 and

More Fun

IN YOUR KITCHEN . . .

Enjoy your home as you've always wished you could!
Brighten your workroom . . . lighten your kitchen duties

LIBBEY·OWENS·FORD GLASS

...rtis one of absolute colloquialism. The play ...esn't at all resemble the lurid old French ...ce" of the Monte Cristo-Musqueteers ...d...

"This swings me back into the romantic a bit, ...t's that a healthful swing! A chance for the ...eedom of expression which belongs to me, but ...within reason and normalcy.

"NO SOCIAL PROBLEMS (THANK GOD!!!) NO ONE SET FOR 4 ACTS.

"I don't know what awaits me in New York, ...but I can get everything settled and a sailing ...opportunity, will you run away to Europe with ...me on Saturday? This next Saturday. The ...Caledonia, of the Anchor Line, sails for Glasgow ...Saturday.

...Leaving me with friends, they went off to ...Paris, where father paid reverent visits to ...those places sacred to the memory of the ...little Corporal, haunted the tough districts ...of St. Antoine and Montmartre, and studied ...the "sans culotte" types in ...the portable bistros which ...clustered romantically to ...cover "thieves' dens." ...It was as in London, how-...ever, while sitting on top ...of a bus watching a red-...coated cabby in Piccadilly, ...that he found the model for the pose ...which remains in the memory of all who ...have seen the play. The cabby was standing with ...his whip held in the crook of his arm in the ...manner of a cavalry officer holding his sword ...in review, while his swaggering body was ...thrown backward until it curved like a letter S. ...Father copied the posture, using the cane as the ...cabby had used his whip, and found the at-...titude tremendously effective. So did George ...Luks who painted him in that pose in a por-...trait which is in the Phillips Collection in ...Washington; and so, too, an artist named ...Rudolph Hecht, whose canvas still hangs in ...the lobby of the Empire Theater.

"The Honor of the Family opened in New ...Rochelle. The audience greeted father's en-...trance with a perfunctory hand, sat spell-...bound during a whirlwind scene, and after the ...fall of the curtain remained silent and mo-tionless for several seconds. Father thought, of course, that it was all a miserable fiasco, and was slinking off to his dressing room when he was stopped by the sound of a roar of great, glorious, unbridled laughter coming from every soul in the audience in one spontaneous yell. They laughed, they howled, they whooped. Father listened in blank amazement, then, in the voice of a flabbergasted child, said aloud to the air, "Dear gentle God! I guess I'm funny." The shadowy figure of a little man stepped out from behind a piece of scenery. "I guess you are, Otis," said Frohman. And so Philippe Brideau swept onto the stage like a young tornado to become one of the immortal comedy characterizations of the American stage.

Reassuring as the New Rochelle opening had been, Frohman was not for risking New York before any play had had a workout of at least two months on tour. Moreover, with his new star, a road tour meant good business, for Otis Skinner had a loyal and adoring following in those regions New Yorkers dismiss as "the hinterland."

> Make every bed as if you were to rest on it.
> BULGARIAN PROVERB.

His letters to my mother brimmed over with his current interests, joys and sorrows. In Green Bay, Wisconsin, his afflictions were of a homely nature:

I had my corns attended to in Fond du Lac by Professor Ewer, the "Corn King."

I had to have someone, so I sought the palace of the King. His office was in a business block, back of his kitchen and living room where the Corn Queen could be heard conversing with her "gossip." A little later the Queen came into the presence of the throne and asked for 25 cents for "them potatoes."

I thought at first the King was a policeman, for he had brass buttons and a coffinplate pinned on his vest that looked like a detective's badge, but which on inspection revealed the inscription "Professor Ewer. The Corn King."

The King was very dirty and so were his methods and his instruments. After heating some awful-looking salve on an old knife blade

LESTER Betsy Ross Spinet

lasting satisfaction

True musical excellence plus superb furniture styling assures you lasting satisfaction with the genuine Lester Betsy Ross Spinet.

This quality instrument will bring musical happiness to every member of your family; will encourage children and adults to play.

Compactly sized; available in modern and traditional designs to grace every room.

See the Betsy Ross Spinet at your dealer . . . who will gladly arrange convenient budget terms.

Guaranteed for ten years; made ONLY by the Lester Piano Manufacturing Company Inc., builders of fine pianos since 1888.

a beautiful piano with a magnificent tone

sold by America's foremost piano dealers

ONE name quality price

MAIL THIS COUPON FOR ILLUSTRATED BOOKLET 2-U

LESTER PIANO MANUFACTURING CO., Inc., LESTER 13, PA.

Send me your 24-page illustrated book showing piano arrangement in the home. (Enclose 10c for postage.)

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ Zone No._____ State_____

Foreign Sales Representatives: H. A. ASTLETT & CO., 27 William Street, New York 5, N. Y.

Let America's Most Desired Colors

beautify your home!

The floor makes the room—and Pabco makes the floor in colors voted loveliest by thousands of women who comprise the nation-wide board of Pabco style advisors!

Buy either Pabco linoleum or printed floor covering—and get the "whitest white," "truest blue," and many other outstanding colors! Plus long wear and easy cleaning*!

Luxurious Pabco Linoleums (Patterns No. 8564 and 8503 above) are Soil-Sealed to resist dirt. Pabco Printed Floor Coverings—in rugs and wall-to-wall (Pattern No. 3700 below) styles—have the famous "Stainless Sheen" surface!

Send ten cents in coin for "Decorate With Pabco"—sixteen full-color pages—Dept 738 L nearest office!

*Doubly Easy With Pabco Linoleum Cleaner and Pabco Floor Wax

THE PARAFFINE COMPANIES, INC. · New York 16 · Chicago 54 · San Francisco 19

PABCO

Pabco Inlaid Linoleums and Printed Floor Coverings

Styled in California Approved by all America!

with a match, and daubing the charred mess on my toe, he bound up my wounds, charged me a dollar and said, "Leave that on there for three or four days till you have to wash your feet again!"

I bowed myself out of the Presence and hurried home to wash my foot. I don't know whether this last deed is lèse-majesté or high treason.

Some of the letters are of an intimate nature and refer to the ups and downs, the minor misunderstandings of married life:

Yes, wife of mine, we've gone through our various love epidemics, measles, croup, chicken pox and mumps of matrimonial life, and like lusty children we've come out all right in the end.

We could not be dearer to each other, if we tried. And after all, to understand each other is not so very wonderful—we only have to love each other and we understand. For many, many years I think I've understood you. Perhaps for more than you've understood me, for you put me too high at first and life to you was one long ecstasy. Then you found out one bright morning that sometimes your husband was a grumpy thing—that he didn't always stand up in his halo and beautiful make-up. Then desolation yawned before you till you discovered that grumpiness did not necessarily end in the divorce court, and now you can view it with comparative calm; and I, on my side, have learned that grumpiness is not pretty manners.

But then God doesn't do these things very much better Himself. For two days it has been wet and wild—but something sang a low song down somewhere in my life and lo! today is bright and beautiful!

It is life, dear—and in the calm that comes with assured sympathy and confidence and understanding lies the secret of happiness. It takes us a few years to learn to wholly respect Darby and Joan. But how many times Darby and Joan must smile at us.

And let me tell you a secret, dear. Darby and Joan never grow old.

OTIS.

And always he found time in which to write to me. The following was in response to the information that for the first time in my school career I had received a report card marked "passing," also that I had started to study botany, a pleasant class because we were given window boxes in which to plant whatever we liked, my choice being a combination of petunias and radishes:

My Accomplished Child: It is very awful for your poor, ignorant, old father to realize that his daughter is so wondrous wise—that she has no failures in her report and that she knows all about botany and stamens and things.

Why, bless your heart! I don't know anything about botany. Isn't that a sad state to be in?

I climbed a mountain near here. I got so high (6100 feet above the sea) that the clouds were at my feet and I knew what it must be like to be an angel.

When I came down I met a snake stretched across the road—and he looked at me and I looked at him. And I said, "Mr. Snake, you must die!" So I got some rocks and smashed him to smithereens. Do you know what smithereens are? I don't, but I think they look like baked beans. And Mr. Snake was over 5 feet long—that's longer than you. And the joke is, I don't know whether he was a Mr. Snake or a Mrs. Snake.

When I come home, I shall eat nothing but radishes and shall wear petunias in my hat.

Your loving

FATHER

The Honor of the Family reached New York in February at the Hudson Theatre and the press went overboard. Otis Skinner took the Gotham public by storm and overnight he found himself in the "idol" bracket. Sentimental ladies sent him "mash" notes or wrote him original poems. He was pronounced "too stunning" and "utterly Masfieldian" by worshiping "matinee girls" who lay in wait for him outside the stage door armed with memory books. He learned to avoid them by escaping through the front of the house. He learned, too, to avoid the swarm of invitations which, the moment a play is an established hit, descend upon the star. Such attempted encroachments upon his free time he tossed aside with good-tempered exasperation.

Because I'm an actor I'm asked to all sorts of nontheatrical affairs. Bless me, if I were to accept one tenth of 'em, I'd have no time to be an actor! Will I speak at an Anti-Trust rally? Will I sit on a platform, while certain indignant citizens lay bare the evils of Yellow Journalism? Will I go to a tea to raise funds for combating hookworm in the Tennessee mountains? I WILL NOT! An actor's place is in the theater, not squandering his energies on a lot of things about which he really knows very little.

He looked forward to the end of each busy week, and a quiet Sunday at home. That year I had "started piano," and a dubious amenity to father's Sunday was hearing me play my "piece." The piece for several months never varied, being an example of juvenile virtuosity entitled The Goblin Frolic. Toward spring, I managed to get through a few bars of a Mendelssohn Song Without Words, a title father said was apt as no words could possibly conform to the noises I produced from the tortured little upright.

Sunday and the playing of my piece—or rather, the not playing of it—might, with less understanding parents, have led to a highly emotional situation.

I must preface this by saying that during that winter, I had become an omnivorous reader, and my delights were that honeychild of the Old South, The Little Colonel, and a series known as The Automobile Girls. These I read and reread until a schoolmate started lending me books from her aunt's library. Then, as Chapman's Homer burst upon Keats, Elsie Dinsmore swam into my ken

(Continued on Page 108)

"I'd like to compliment you, Mrs. Mavery. Your Albert has certainly been a wonderful host."

"Ummm! Looks Like Tapestry!"
"And See How Lastex Yarn Makes Them Fit!"

READY-MADE Slip Covers WITH LASTEX YARN FIT LIKE GLOVES—

Ask your favorite store to show you their exciting new Ready-Made Slip Covers with Lastex Yarn. They're all boxed and ready to take home—ready to adorn your furniture. No cutting or fitting—no waiting. They're woven and knitted of Lastex into textures with unique tapestry effect. They pull right back into tailored smoothness when you get up. Take your choice of beautiful decorator colors—florals, stripes, and in woven or knitted fabrics. And thrill to see how they smooth right on—thanks to the Miracle Yarn.

Lastex
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
the miracle yarn that makes things fit

Lastex is an elastic yarn manufactured exclusively by UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY 1230 Avenue of the Americas, New York 20, N. Y.

In Children's Shoes, Top Quality Is Wise Economy!

Poll-Parrot Style 8046

Your money's worth in fit and wear and looks—that's what you want in shoes for your child, isn't it? And that's what you get with Poll-Parrots, the pre-tested shoes. Actually worn for weeks by hard-playing boys and girls like yours. Pre-tested to make sure arches are right, toes have room to grow, materials will last! Pre-tested to make sure you get real value—unmatched by ordinary shoes. Compare them...buy them . . . Poll-Parrot Shoes.

ROBERTS, JOHNSON & RAND
Division of INTERNATIONAL SHOE COMPANY
St. Louis 3, Missouri

Buy

Poll Parrot

SHOES FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

Pre-Tested
TO GIVE REAL VALUE!

Also Star ★ Brand Shoes . . . at Lower Prices!

Poll-Parrot Style 9644

Poll-Parrot Style 8029

Tested and Commended by Parents' Magazine
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

For nearest Poll-Parrot dealer see Classified Phone Directory or write us.

SEE WHAT PRE-TESTING MEANS TO YOU!

Room to Grow

Different Lasts for Boys and Girls

Extra Reinforcements at All Vital Points

(Continued from Page 106)

As I recall it, the arch villain of those edifying volumes was Elsie's father, whose chief offense lay in an understandable lack of sympathy with his daughter. He went to church only once on Sunday, and he wasn't much for letting a meal get cold while his child invoked a long-winded blessing. Although his attitude was a grievance to Elsie, she always forgave him with a sweet "he-knows-not-what-he-doth" expression, which must have been considerably galling to the poor man.

The temperamental clash between father and daughter reaches a heart-rending climax when, on a certain Sunday, Mr. Dinsmore asks his daughter to entertain their luncheon guests by playing the piano. Elsie, her blue eyes full of pious reproach, says she's sorry, father, but it's the Sabbath. Dinsmore père, with increasing annoyance, demands that she play and Dinsmore fille meekly insists she can't. His patience at an end, the harsh parent orders her to sit at the piano until she gets over the silly notion. All afternoon she remains on the piano stool, as stubborn a little example of exhibitionism as one could hope to find. Finally, at dusk, she keels onto the floor in a dead faint. Mr. Dinsmore, shaken with remorse, picks up her limp body, undergoes a change of heart and upon Elsie's recovery promises to join her on the sawdust trail.

It occurred to me that I might work up a similar family drama. When father came home the ensuing Sunday, I met him at the station with a sad, distant smile. The trip back to the house was a scanty half mile, and together we always made it on foot, walking, singing, occasionally skipping and making pleasant idiots of ourselves. That Sunday I trod beside him with dragging feet and downcast eyes, like a dismal acolyte burdened by the sins of the world. The instant we reached home, I made a dash for the piano stool, where I sat with folded hands and an expression of meek suffering. Mother and father, full of the week's news, had much to tell each other, and for at least half an hour neither paid me the slightest heed. By now I had succeeded in working myself into a state of trembling tension. It was hard to see in my amiable father a counterpart of the tyrannical Mr. Dinsmore, but I managed to lash myself into a feeling of righteous resentment mingled with pity over his soul, which I decided was definitely damned. The colored lady-of-all-work announced the fact that soup was on, and father, who was hungry, turned to me with an eager "Ready, miss?" Still clamped to the stool which, by now, I was clutching with bloodless hands, I looked up at him and, my voice shaking with emotion, said, "Father, I'm not going to play you my piece today." For a moment father regarded me with good-humored bewilderment, then emitted a hearty, "Well, thank God for that! And now can we go eat?" And that ended my devotional career.

Imagination was given a man to compensate him for what he is not, and a sense of humor was provided to console him for what he is.
—ANON.

MOTHER'S circle of friends had widened out beyond the Bryn Mawr College group, and gradually Philadelphia began to take her to its cautious bosom. She was invited to attend the meetings of the Browning Society and was made a member of the Contemporary Club. She was even asked to speak at one of the large and formal gatherings of the latter organization. The meeting was to be a discussion on the age-old topic "Is the Theater Dead?", the speakers being Agnes Repplier; Metcalfe, the critic of Life; John Luther Long, the creator of Madame Butterfly, and herself. The prospect delighted and terrified her. For two weeks prior to the event, she went about her daily household chores muttering snatches of what she intended to say. Her appearance on the platform of the Contemporary Club was a succès fou. She could not refrain from writing Otis-dear-love all about it, that very night after she came home:

My darling husband: I hope you had a great success tonight—and dear, dear love, may I confess that I believe I had! It all seem strange, so unlike me, but I felt please grateful.

I was introduced as the newest member Contemporary Club and then, dear love, up, trembled a bit but read my paper an an ovation! Otis dear, my gown was so pr it was white and I think I looked like a la tried to read my paper as convincingly could and I tried to say the drama is not Everybody heard me and one man got u mentioned my "silvery voice." Don't that vain, Otis dear, for it did seem good t so long dead as I feel I have been. My voice sounded so strange to me for it wa first time I had spoken out in years.

Otis dear, do love me because I feel ple It isn't for myself. It is because of you. cause I stay on here in this conventiona agreeable community—proud of my little cess because it shows where you stand i estimation of the world. I am your wife. T all I want to be!

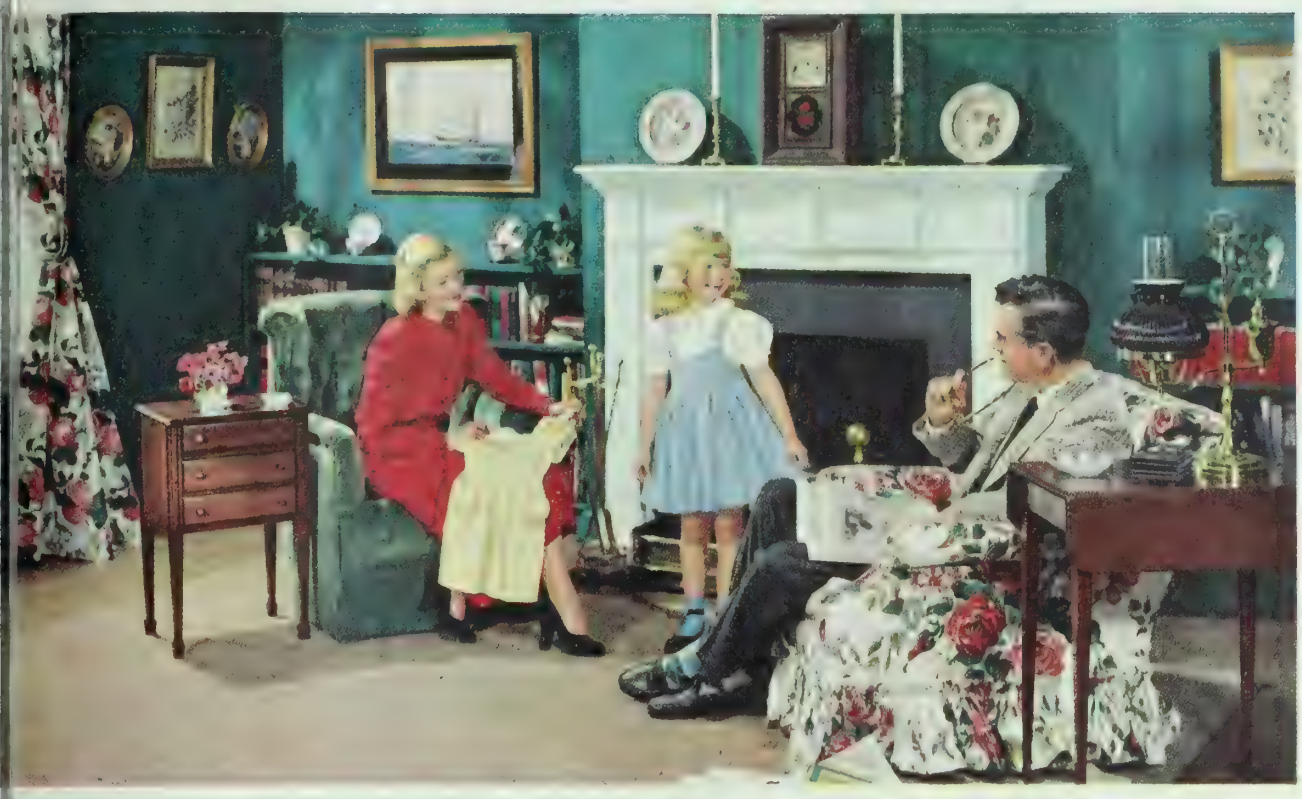
Oh, I haven't told you what a grand ho dined in first. At the Jaynes'—a mansio Locust and 12th Streets. We were twelve Biddles, or Wisters or some stately old P delphia names. And a dinner for the gods was great.

Well I must go to bed, 'tis late and I come down to earth tomorrow and break i new maid. She is so pretty but she looks stupid.

I had your Sacramento letter today. dear, dear love. You are so far away.

All my heart!

MAU



ONE proof that nobody can predict the tential success or failure of a play merely reading the manuscript is the fact that w Klaw and Erlanger approached father with script of Kismet he tur it down. Just as he about to wire a final fusal, mother, whose ju ment was at times unc nily correct, stepped She knew Kismet wa good play. She knew H the Beggar was a p which might have been written to order Otis Skinner and she made up her mi he must do it. They talked it over he edly and the discussion lasted all one nig Next morning father telegraphed Klaw a Erlanger he'd do the part. His faith in t play was still wobbly. With Frohman he h always gone into every theatrical venture a percentage basis. This time, deciding would be too great a risk, he signed a co tract for a set salary. And that was a other slip-up in judgment. Kismet was o of the smash hits of the American theat and during its run, which lasted over thr years, father played for a nominal week stipend.

The part of Hajj the Beggar, a wily rasc who in a single day goes from rags to riche stabs and drowns the grand vizier, makes attempt on the life of the young caliph whom he eventually marries off his daughte strangles his old enemy, and winds up th day of considerable activity back in ra again and sentenced to banishment in Mecc was the most spectacular one of his caree The lavish production was like an Arabia Nights pageant and the play was Edwa Knoblock's finest.

Kismet was considered very daring, n the least startling innovation being the hare scene. At the rise of the curtain the vizie favorite wife and a number of less favori ones were discovered lying about on silk cushions while a group of five or more od lisques stood beside a bathing pool. At a giv moment these last flung off cloaks a walked down into the water presumabl naked, although actually they were covere in pink "fleshings," as all-encasing as suits Munsingwear. Audiences always gasped a the scene, and a few members of the Com stock League wrote letters to the pape about it, which of course helped the bo office.

Mother tried very hard to be modern an broad-minded in regard to the episode. Sh admitted it was necessary for purposes o plot to establish the pool in which Hajj ha later to drown the vizier, and that it woul

(Continued on Page 110)

● In SINGER classes you learn by making a dress for yourself. Complete course—8 lessons, only $10. SINGER* Molded Dress Form makes perfect fitting easy and sure.

● To help you at home, use a SINGER Dressmaking Guide. 52 pages. Diagrams, directions, how to fit collars, finish pockets, etc. 25¢ at your SINGER SEWING CENTER.

"She'll be the best-dressed youngster in class—thanks to you and the SINGER SEWING CENTER!"

EVEN if you do have to keep your eye on the budget—it's no reason to skimp on a back-to-school wardrobe!

You can make a whole closetful of pretties—make them for just about half what they'd cost to buy—if you learn to sew at your SINGER SEWING CENTER.

And you don't have to be a genius with a needle. In 8 sew-as-you-go lessons, Singer experts will teach you every step from pattern-fitting to final pressing.

They'll even do the fancy finishing for you. And they have the best-stocked notion counters in town.

Stop in today. Let the SINGER SEWING CENTER help you send your daughter back to school in style!

ght notions! Rick-rack, lace, peasant nding, animal appliqués—what a choice u'll find at your SINGER SEWING CEN-R! Buttons, thread, and zippers, too ● Newest SINGER attachment—the Multi-slotted Binder. Makes quick work of sewing on binding, wide or narrow, folded or unfolded, in straight lines or curves.

● For easier pressing—new SINGER* Electric Iron. Large surface for extra speed. Light weight. Right-and-left thumb rests. Accurate Fabric Dial. Stay-cool handle.

● Finishing touches are no problem. Your SINGER SEWING CENTER will make buttonholes. Cover buttons, belts. Do picoting, hemstitching. Prices tiny, service fast.

aceful cabinet model adds charm to any om. Holds a smooth-stitching SINGER* wing Machine. Walnut finish. Matching ol with notion compartment.

FOR YOUR PROTECTION!

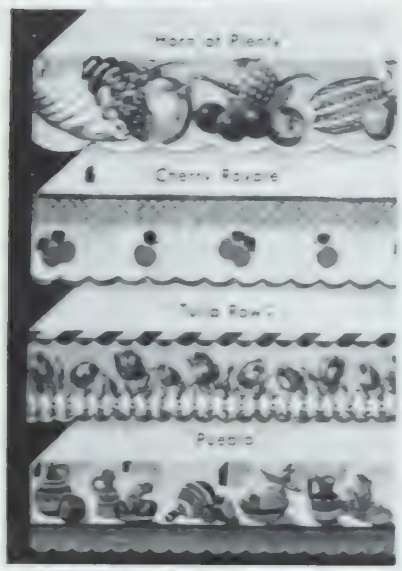
SINGER sells its sewing machines and other products only through SINGER SEWING CENTERS, identified by the Red "S" on the window, and never through department stores or other outlets.

See classified telephone directory for address of your local SINGER SEWING CENTER. SINGER SEWING MACHINE COMPANY.

Here's the SINGER SEWING CENTER at 103 Public Square, Watertown, New York.

Hundreds more from coast to coast. There's one near you!

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.



SINGER SEWING CENTERS

THERE'S ONE NEAR YOU TO SERVE YOU

Copyright, U. S. A., 1948 by THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO. All rights reserved for all countries.

Tips on Kitchen Decoration

1. Make your kitchen "dance" with color by decorating all shelves with Royledge reds, greens, blues, etc., in gay designs that cheer you up—avoid drab, blank look!
2. Change kitchen color schemes monthly—only a few pennies with Royledge. No tacks, place Royledge on shelf, fold down gay edge.
3. "Touch up" closets, open shelves, etc. in every room with gorgeous Royledge. Double-duty shelving. See new Royledge designs at 5 & 10's, supermarket, hardware, dept. stores.

Royledge

Shelving Paper and Edging all-in-one

9 ft. 8¢

Trade Mark Registered U. S. Pat. Off.

The HARDWICK CHALLENGER

AUTOMATIC GAS RANGE

DESIGNED FOR THOSE who prefer Upper Level Cooking

COOK, BAKE, BROIL!

Without bending or lifting

COOK on floodlighted cooking top, hinged to lift up for easy cleaning. Stainless steel burner grates fit firmly, hold any vessel steady. Four lifetime Efflex burners (two of giant size) have simmer-set valves, click to simmer heat.

BAKE in convenient Rite-Hite oven with balanced heat design which allows baking to brown evenly anywhere in oven, front to back, top to bottom. 18 inches wide, holds four cakes or pies at any one time. Light on, Mirro-Magic Oven Door is a window, lets you watch your baking. Light off, it becomes a mirror, hides inside of oven.

BROIL in Rite-Hite Roll-A-Door patented broiler which glides out at a touch while you stand erect. Adjustable, feather-weight aluminum broiler grid.

You'll like, too, the concealed full sized drip pan to catch top of range boilovers; big storage cabinet and drawers (305% more storage space than ordinary gas range); automatic time clock, optional on deluxe models, which lets you cook while you're far away. The Challenger operates perfectly on natural, manufactured or bottled gas. Sold throughout the U. S. Write for name of your nearest dealer.

HARDWICK STOVE COMPANY

DEPT. L-1, CLEVELAND, TENNESSEE

MAKERS OF FINE STOVES SINCE 1879

(Continued from Page 109)

be slightly anachronistic for the maidens of a harem to step out in black Annette Kellermanns. Moreover, as she'd explain to whoever was with her, the girls were all such nice girls, and their figures were young and very pretty—but still ——

After a year on Broadway, Kismet played the road for two more seasons. The spectacle required five scenery cars, and as the cast numbered some seventy-five members, they traveled like the circus in a special train. It was tough touring. One of the most serious problems was the pool, and not the least to bear the brunt were the girls who had to bathe and Hamilton Ravelle who had to be drowned in it nightly. It was a metal tank contrivance lowered so that its rim came flush with the level of the stage. The water was heated by a system of steampipes which worked or not, according to local facilities. Except during the harem scene, the aperture was covered over with wooden lids built solidly to form part of the floor.

At one matinee in Chicago the lids were removed and a cloud of steam hissed up like a gush of Old Faithful. Someone had left the pipes on overnight and the water was at a temperature correct for cooking a lobster. The curtain was supposed to rise immediately following a short musical interlude. There was a moment of panic. The girls who were lined up for their cue had the expressions of early Christians suddenly confronted with the stake, and Hamilton Ravelle told everybody what he thought of them in no unblasphemous terms. But stagehands are persons of resource in all emergencies. One group dashed next door to a saloon, another waylaid a passing ice wagon. Cakes and barrels of ice were dumped into the scalding tank, only to melt like butter in an oven. The wait was growing critical and the audience was applauding impatiently. More ice was procured. The stage manager tested the water and gave the bathers the consoling information that at any rate it wouldn't kill them. He was right: it didn't. But it parboiled them to the degree that they emerged a bright cerise which showed angrily through their pink fleshings. Hamilton Ravelle, whose state of cerise was equal to that of his fury, swore he'd never play the part again. He was always swearing that. But of course he did play it and the next night, the steam pipes having been turned off completely and the water having on the surface a delicate skim of ice, he had to be revived with hot blankets, slugs of whisky and a salary raise.

THE company toured the West. A letter scribbled on the Overland Limited says:

We are speeding across the plains, dear heart, and it's chill and snowy. There is nothing quite so desolate and forlorn that some moment of the day cannot add a little loftiness and glory to. Charlie's hour was night—mine I think always has been the late mellow afternoon before the land becomes red with sunset. The vastness of this Nebraskan and Wyoming stretch is so like the ocean always to me, and this afternoon brought our sea days back. Immensity always brings you near to me.

I had three hours' hard and furious sleep last night. Then I woke in my berth at two o'clock and stayed awake. Dawn was quite glor... the desert. The tumble of eroded cliffs ... jewels in the sunrise. I watched them out ... window. I find staying awake at night ... bad if you don't fight it. Worry can tire ... much in the daytime as it does at night. The trouble is we generally carry our worries ... with us and in the waking hours we reach ... and grab them to our bosoms.

The tour swung South. In a letter ... marked New Orleans and still contain ... small, dried rose he says:

This rosebud was ravished from a cem... lot at Métairie. Some old French citizen ... tilized it, no doubt. I didn't look to see wh... was. The blossom was fragrant and bright ... I took it, and no one saw me but an obser... chameleon.

The iron chairs by the walk are gro... shabby and perhaps ours has succumbed to ... and decrepitude. The lineal descendants o... chameleons who listened to our vows are g... ing scarcer. But it is still a sweet spot. The ... ladies and gentlemen are very quiet, but ... were most hospitable and remember us ...

My love—my ... love to you, brid... the long ago. Or...

* * * * * * * * *

Monochrome

By Sara King Carleton

The sky leans close above the glimmering lake
And the dark spindles of the pointed pines
Stand sharply out against the evening, break
Against the green, clear afterlight that shines
Now that the day is gone, the last bird flown,
The last faint ripple lost along the shore,
Where shapes and shadows step from stone to stone;
And merge and disappear. This is the core
Of silence where phantasmally we float
Between two worlds of water and of air,
The leaf-thin shell of our intangible boat
Drifting through mists that rise and hover, where
From far away a veery calls, and when
He hears his own soft answer, calls again.

* * * * * * * * *

As the tiring se... wore on, he fo... himself victim of ... of those emoti... snarls which at s... time or another ... nearly every ac... Suddenly, for no ... parent reason, ... started either g... blank or mixing ... speeches into se... less jargon. Before ... show he'd go over ... text flawlessly; t... with determined ... fidence, he'd make ... entrance and soo... or later the hide... moment of obliv... would hit him lik... knockout blow. ... had to work out ... solution for him... and he did. I rat... think a certa... amount of quiet, ... sensational religi... entered into his so... ing of the proble... He wrote to moth... of his fears and hop...

We certainly ne... some sort of belief. ... it does nothing furth... it saves us from o... own weaknesses a... cowardice. And ... don't have to hypnoti... ourselves or lash ourselves for it to accompli... its purpose.

I had become afflicted with a hideous sel... consciousness of my lines and action. I foun... myself thinking ahead for a line or two wo... dering what I said in such and such a speec... and when that particular speech arrived, I g... cold and panicky.

Then it began to occur to me I have bee... merely putting my faith and belief in fear, an... not in the power of good which must be the gov... erning power of everything human, physica... and spiritual. To believe that there is more in... tangible but potent good than active evil bear... ing upon our lives is a simple start and an eas... one which needs no monstrous exertion of wi... power.

I find it works. That is a sort of primer.

Now if a word or two gets twisted, I don'... bother about it. The most significant part of th... whole affair is, nothing awful really ever hap... pened! But the number of bridges I crossed wa... astounding. Strange this groundless apprehen... sion that comes through the separation of men... tal activity from the work in hand. The cease... less turning of the wheel is hypnotizing. Do bu... see that the wheel turns, however, and the in... fluence of its turning vanishes.

One word haunts me—LAW. Summer succeeds winter, the planets keep their rhythmic course about the sun. The seed bursts its shell and becomes a tree. The bird sits upon its egg...

(Continued on Page 112)

Feel the creamier suds... and you'll know why Super-Creamed SWAN protects your hands!

See SWAN'S Super-Creamed suds whiz dishes clean without wiping!

Another fine product of Lever Brothers Company

FEEL the magic of Swan's super-creamed blend in your dishpan suds . . . You can actually feel the extra richness and creaminess that protect your hands!

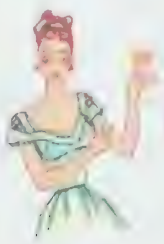
SEE the magic of Swan's super-creamed blend at work in the abundant suds that whiz dishes clean . . . yet the suds are so gentle they keep your hands soft and white.

SEE the way Swan's super-creamed blend causes the suds to rinse away so thoroughly, that dishes need no wiping! . . . Best of all, Swan leaves your hands with a smooth young look!

FEEL the creamier suds from Swan's Super-Creamed Blend

Compare!

FOR APPETIZING APPEAL



In appearance, Hi Ho Crackers invite comparison with any other cracker. Note the golden-brown color . . . the uniformity of each and every Hi Ho.

Compare!

FOR FINER FLAVOR

Taste Hi Ho . . . try them on your family and guests. No other cracker has the distinctive flavor that belongs only to Hi Ho!

Compare!

FOR FLAKINESS

Turn a Hi Ho cracker edgewise. Note the crisp flakiness, the delicate texture . . . sure sign of expert baking.

Quality Sunshine Product

..it's Hi Ho for Finer Flavor!

(Continued from Page 110)

and produces life. There is the great mystery of death and the profounder mystery of birth. I am an integral part of this LAW, and so long as I am in harmony with it, nothing of ill consequence can befall me.

I'm afraid my creed is either too simple or too complicated to become a cult.

My heart is more quiet and it is all yours,

OTIS.

During World War One I was at the callous age when Belleau Wood and Château-Thierry seemed distantly dreadful but far less real than the election of our class president or the annual visit of the Hill School Glee Club.

Father tried his best to go overseas with some of the entertainment units, but he was turned down as being overage. He did the best he could for the returned men this side of the water. From Winnipeg he wrote:

Yesterday was a day of much emotion for me. I invited about 300 invalided Canadian soldiers to my matinee. They were there with stiff legs, bandaged limbs, missing members, bound heads, lost fingers, and four sat in boxes in pillowed wheel chairs. I never felt greater exaltation than I did in playing for those lads. Had it been a trial for my professional existence, I couldn't have felt more the urgent call for all my art. At the end of each act, I looked through a peephole in the curtain to see the effect. After Act I, they were rather immobile, but evidently interested; Act 2 left a happy smile on all their faces and after the third act they looked as if they were having the time of their lives.

I wish I could do something real, true and wonderful for those boys! When I look at these men who have seen and lived through things I shall never even conceive of, I know I am the meanest worm that crawls. I want to go to France! I want to serve our lads. I want to bring a smile and a moment of forgetfulness to men who are holding back the floodgates of hell. I want to know service and sacrifice. What use is a successful play when my nights are full of self-reproach?

THE successful play was Mister Antonio, written for father by his intimate friend Booth Tarkington. That excellent gentleman had said to him, some years previously, "Otis, I want to write you a play. I don't know what the character will be—peasant, sea captain, tinker, tailor—but he's going to be a beautiful man." The result was Mister Antonio. It was not a great play—the plot was obvious and it bordered dangerously on the sentimental—but the part of the joyous Italian hurdy-gurdy man, "Antonio Camaradonio, padrone, that's-a me," who every spring set forth from Third Avenue to spend the summer months vagabonding about the countryside with faithful Joe, an amiable halfwit, for an assistant and Capitano, a little donkey, to pull the music wagon, was certainly a "beautiful" man.

Capitano, the small donkey who pulled the hurdy-gurdy, was always an object of great interest to myself, particularly as he had an unfortunate way of doing a bit of realistic performing of his own on the grass mats during dramatically intense scenes. But he was a sweet little beast and much loved by the company.

From Dubuque father wrote:

Just now I beheld one of the most charming sights imaginable. I heard the familiar hurdy-gurdy strains of Rigoletto and saw heads sticking out of the machine-shop windows across the way. Looking out, I saw Capitano in dress parade hitched to his shafts and Flynn [the company manager] turning the handle in front of this proud new hotel! Our stage crew was grouped about, hats in hand, staring up at my window and grinning from ear to ear. Then they started off up the street, the electrician leading Capitano, Flynn carrying the barroom-scene cash register, and William following, wheeling the second-act baby carriage. I laughed till I wept.

The reason for this spring madness is a teamsters' strike. The ruffians won't allow our scenery to be hauled. They have agreed to allow the taxicab company to transport our trunks and that's all. Exactly what we are going to do I don't know. There is some old scenery at the theater. The evening promises to be rich in episode.

And from Omaha father wrote—this time to me:

Chained to a crust pan?

Don't tie yourself up in knots over stubborn grease-crusted pans! Drop that namby-pamby dishrag, and let a sturdy metal-fiber Brillo pad do the work!

Shine 'em quick with BRILLO

Just swirl off greasy scorch and baked-on crust! Quick as a flash—a square Brillo pad-with-soap whisks grimy pots and pans clean and shining! Fast! Neat! Easy! Wonderful for your aluminums. Use Brillo every day to keep pans gleaming!

There's jeweler's polish in BRILLO!

Brillo's a joy! Brillo makes your pots and pans sparkle like silver! And there's a good reason why—Brillo's special-formula soap contains polishing ingredients that jewelers use to shine their precious metals!

★ RED box—soap-filled pads
★ GREEN box—pads and cake soap

Shines aluminum fast!

vered Personal Cherub: Poor little Cappy is ore! In his stead is a trim, smooth, sand- red beast with a little dark stripe running his tail to the whisk broom on the end. asn't even those things sticking out of his that look like our fireplace brush.

ch a sporty, sophisticated creature is this Capitano, you wonder how he can associate a Dago and a Nut, or how he could be in- d to enter the gateway of so jay a town as onia. I expect at any moment to see him enly sit up and play a cornet or turn the y-gurdy handle or converse like Baalam's And yet if you look in his eyes you will see as the same expression as the old Cappy. it is Capitano, only shaved!

e had bugs! Not the nimble flea. Bugs, il ones! When the cast found out, they all menced scratching in unison. He's like a is horse now, and he's horribly set up and .

My mother once remarked that all girls veen the ages of fourteen and eighteen ild be chloroformed, to which drastic position my father countered no, that it their parents who should be granted such et oblivion. They spoke with the bitter- of firsthand experience, for I was ex- hely awful. My aim was to be as suave Clara Kimball Young, as risquée as Gaby lys, as lovely as Dolores and as wicked heda Bara. It was an ambitious project. at I dreamed of wearing were the sort of gs Erté drew for Harper's Bazaar— ble-skirted evening gowns with rhine- ne shoulder straps, kolinsky-banded es, lamé turbans and ich-feather fans. at I actually wore the regulation ol Peter Thomp- uniform—middy se with a sailor and anchor-em- dered dickey, tai- d skirt with a jaunty tical lacing down center of the rump. d my best to aug- t this firm foun- on with accessories nature I regarded slinky," long black e-store earrings, an nense ring of imita- jade on my forefinger and, for footgear, an-heeled pumps of patent leather glor- d by white spats which I laundered nightly. ther forbade either rouge or face powder, I got around that injunction by calci- ing my nose with vanishing cream and r-Kiss talcum and rubbing my cheeks n a Roger Gallet pomade stick.

used to go in town for as many of father's inees as school and the suburban train ice would permit, striding in through lobby with the grand manner of the star's ghter who is certain of free admittance. I always allowed one theater party to ch to take a few of my buddies. We ld go five or ten strong (in inverse ratio box-office receipts) and after the per- nance would troop behind onto the stage, re mother had arranged a "treat" of ice m and cake. It was served on the set always came in the nature of a great prise. My long-suffering father would e out in his dressing gown and politely ke the grubby hand of each giggling girl, the leading lady and juvenile would feel y had to stop by to meet the star's ghter and say, "Isn't she just like her er!"—which I wasn't. These occasions d me with a sense of bland magnanimity. ted as if I had written the play, produced directed it and had invented father.

spite of mother's often-repeated refrain o indeed her daughter was never going the stage, I always knew, privately and ply, that I was. I entertained no belief t my emergence into the theatrical arena ld cause Ethel Barrymore or Mrs. Fiske great uneasiness. I merely knew that I nted to act.

My only chance for venting the urge was h the Baldwin School Dramatic Club, ich proved its earnest worth by giving one kespearean play a year. Mother was always asked to stage the annual production. She did it, of course, beautifully, cutting the text, designing the costumes, directing the performance and generally reducing herself to a bundle of nerves. Because I was tall and angularly shapeless and had access to father's costume trunks, I was usually the leading man. As Petruchio I strutted in father's boots, periodically walking out of them. As Orlando, a leather jerkin which had once belonged to Booth was apprehensively placed upon me with strict instructions I was to take it off during the ice-cream party after the show.

THE selection of the play each year was made at the close of spring term by the forthcoming president. When I had been elected to that position of distinction, I settled on Macbeth. It seemed a quaint project for a girls' school, what with Lady Macbeth the only good female part in the piece, Lady Macduff being usually cut and the sex of the three witches being doubtful. But such obstacles in no way daunted me.

We spent that summer in Colorado at Enos Mills' Longs Peak Inn. The Skinners went Western in a manner all their own, riding daily and with an enthusiasm as boundless as our knowledge of horsemanship was limited. I rode a pinto named Pet who sweated a lot. When his lather had reached a fly-attracting stage, I'd hitch him to our cabin porch and humanely wash him down with warm water, a rubber sponge and Maxine Elliott soap, a process which convulsed the cowboys and mildly astonished Pet.

That was the era before the smart Eastern visitor went in for blue jeans and plaid shirts, and my riding attire was a symphony of my own devising. Feeling that a regulation tailored habit would jar with my sultry personality, I wore a divided linen skirt, low black shoes which distantly adjoined brown puttees, and shirtwaists of sheer batiste with hemstitched collars and cuffs edged with filet lace.

Days I was not riding, I studied Lady Macbeth, still clad in my exotic equestrienne costume. Father helped coach me. For purposes of privacy we'd go a short distance from the inn to a small steep hill on the summit of which was an ideal hide-out, a flat space, boulder-encircled, where there was no one to see or hear you. Father had told me that a part must always be studied aloud, at full tone.

One afternoon the divine fire was, it seemed to me, unusually well kindled and I was tackling full tilt the scene in which Lady Macbeth urges her vacillating husband on to the murder. A party of tourists had parked their open T-model a short distance away and decided to explore the beauties of Nature's near-by wonderland. Led on by the sound of my voice over rock and fallen tree, they toiled up the little hill and peered over into my private sanctuary. The apparition which must have met their eyes was that of a gangly sixteen-year-old girl in dazzling unorthodox riding clothes, clutching at a skinny chest which flatly denied the words she was in the process of shouting, which were, "I have given suck, and know how tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me." After whooping forth this bit of gratuitous information, I became slowly aware of the presence of the line of heads above the encircling rocks. For a moment we all froze into stunned immobility. Then, as at a word of command, they ducked and fled down the steep slope in full rout, scrambled into their battered jitney and raced down the highway.

Macbeth was the big event of the following school year. It looked at one time as though the performance would have to be called off, due to the fact that, twenty-four hours beforehand, the girl playing Macduff came down with mumps. But the day was saved

No woman is ready for a dance until she feels sure that she looks, if not better than everybody else, at least different from everybody else. In contrast with this unbridled egotism the terrible humility of men is beautiful to contemplate. A man in dress clothes does not want to look different. He wants to look like one of the herd, and his sober, standardized outfit proclaims his belief in the basic equality of all rational beings.

—JOHN D. SHERIDAN: I Can't Help Laughing (Talbot Press).

Prem takes to th

WITH A CHOICE OF THREE DELICIOUS N

Martha Logan

Swift's Prem

A SWIFT QUALITY FOOD

Bakes in 20 minutes!

Look what we have here—a bright garden of summery vegetables nestled around savory slices of Swift's Prem. Here's a satisfying summer main dish that "fixes fast." And wait'll you taste that special blend that gives Prem its distinctive two-meat flavor. For Prem, you know, is different. It's the one that's both juicy pork and tender beef.

Martha Logan's PREM GARDEN PLATTER

Out of the oven and ready to serve in a cool matter of minutes

(4 servings)

- 1 can Prem cut in 8 slices
- Cooked new potatoes
- Tiny or sliced carrots (cooked)
- Cooked broccoli
- *Toppings—(choice of three)

Arrange slices of Prem on shallow baking dish with cooked vegetables. (Prem really does things for all vegetables.) Pour melted butter or margarine over vegetables.

*Top Prem with one of these: (1) Mayonnaise, ⅔ cup, mixed with 2 tablespoons each prepared mustard and minced sweet pickle; (2) Sour cream, 1 cup, with chopped chives (pictured); (3) Blue cheese, ⅔ cup, crumbled; mixed with 2 tablespoons prepared mustard.

Bake in moderately quick oven (375°) for 20 minutes. Whichever topping you choose, you'll find this a tempting, nutritious way to serve THAT DELICIOUS COMBINATION OF PORK AND TENDER BEEF . . . Swift's Prem by the young thing cast as the Bleeding Sergeant who rushed forth with the news that she knew the lines of Macduff and if anyone could take her place on the gory army cot, she'd go on in the part. The girl was short, plump and pretty. Her eyes were a clear blue and her hair a shimmering mane of genuine platinum blond. She was hardly the ideal of a Highland war lord, but we camouflaged her as best we could with a horn-trimmed helmet, a bearskin hearthrug and a Viking mustache. She was not only letter perfect in the lines, but she gave evidence of great talent. One extraordinary thing about her was her voice, which she could turn from a tone soft, gentle and low into a basso-profundo bellow. That night she unleashed its full diapason, her impersonation was remarkable, and she saved the situation. But she strained a vocal cord and claims it was the cause of a certain throatiness which is still one of her most attractive characteristics. The name of that girl is Ann Harding.

Those happy amateur days. And that delirious amateur confidence! My Lady Macbeth must have been terrible, but at the time I was completely charmed with it. Julia Marlowe, I felt, had better start looking to her laurels and I had better start preparing for the stage. I had yet to broach the family about it, but Within the Law, with Helen Ware, gave me the impulse to write father about my ambitions. This was his reply:

Maiden Mine: I rejoice that your week end brought you such joys as marshmallow breakfasts and Within the Law. Your question regarding Helen Ware startled me a little. Are you going to be an actress? I was hoping you wouldn't. But if you are there is a long time yet; and the one thing that will put you ahead of others on the stage will be the soundness of a good education, and the mental training your studies will give you. I have often regretted deeply that my own schooling was not more thorough: it would have made things much easier for me.

You speak of Helen Ware. She was a school teacher before she became an actress. The road from the bottom where she started up to her stellar position in Within the Law was a long and hard one.

If that is the road you are thinking to take, you must prepare yourself for it in these present years. Every bit of good work you do now will be of inestimable help. Your knowledge of languages will refine and render beautiful your use of English. Your history will enable you to estimate the subtleties of characters that have been transferred to the literature of the drama; even your abhorred algebra will give you a grip and a poise in your mental ability to meet the tough situations of character portrayal. It all helps beyond words.

Above everything, don't neglect your voice. Start in just as soon as you read this and listen to every word you speak. Let your vocal teacher tell you where your voice comes from and how your tones are produced. If I had known these things in the beginning of my career it would have saved me thousands of dollars in doctors' bills. I have had to find out through the years, alone and unaided. I know now, but think what I could have saved by an early knowledge of vocalization.

And sing! Sing your little head off!!! You cannot realize, daughter mine, what wealth will be added to your speaking voice by a complete knowledge of singing, even though your profession doesn't require you to sing a note. And know the best in music—not the cheapest—know the best in literature. That is the sort of training the great ones of the French stage have gone through and the French are the greatest actors in the world today.

The voix d'or of Sarah Bernhardt gave her the mightiest asset of her career. Your voice, first, last and always. YOUR VOICE!!

Your daddy's love, dearest daughter.

So, reluctantly, I resigned myself to tryi a year of college, God willing and pushing r through the entrance exams. It would pleasant to be able to say that I sailed in Bryn Mawr with flying colors. But when finally managed to squeeze in, the only col I exhibited was a red failure mark in algeb a subject which got to be known among r friends as "Cornelia's interesting condition

I AM glad that I went to college, and gl that I stayed for only two years. My br career was not brilliant. I was not the sple did all-round type. I avoided most rah-r activities and savagely loathed all organiz exercise, a certain amount of which was cor pulsory. But Bryn Mawr offered plenty other advantages far more agreeable tha those of an Atlantean nature. I found a nur ber of amusing and stimulating acquain ances and made a few warm friendships whi have lasted a lifetime. And best of all, the was, for me, a gradual coming to life in r gard to matters of the mind. I discover that a world I had hitherto dismissed as p dantic and dull could be rich and excitin Browsing amid the stacks in the library, sitting comfortably in the great dim Goth reading room, with a pile of books beside m I realized the amenities of research. Havi no intentions of graduating, I had postpon all required courses I considered unsymp thetic until a junior year which I knew wou never materialize, and went in solely for th studies I liked.

And college offered opportunity for ven ing my yearning to act. There were cla shows and varsity dramatics, and one sprin the May Day Fete was staged by my mothe

I spent my sophomore year on bounds punishment for having cut all classes the la few weeks of freshman term. It was a per ance in which I rather gloried, for I had take the cuts in order to fill my first theatrical e gagement. It was only a four-week engag ment, but it gave me an excuse for callin myself an actress. George Tyler had take the National Theater in Washington in a experimental stock venture for trying out number of new plays. As it was his intentio to bring them into New York the followin season, they were all pretty well-finished pr ductions with top-notch casts. A nucleus c competent actors was kept as a permanen company for supporting parts, while the lead were played by a series of visiting stars— Helen Hayes, Emily Stevens, and other The Lunts came there too. Only they weren the Lunts then. It was at this engagemen that Miss Fontanne and Mr. Lunt met. The appeared in two of the tryouts in which I too, was to be seen— if one looked quickly

(Continued on Page 116)

"I don't have to worry about my budget any more. After we pay the rent and buy the food there isn't anything left!"

A New American Favorite

DELRICH E-Z COLOR PAK MARGARINE

ENDS MIXING BOWL MESS!

Finest Flavor You Ever Tasted—
SEALED IN at the Peak of Freshness!

Something new in luscious flavor! Just taste creamy, golden Delrich! Discover its delicate, fresh goodness. The day Delrich is made—all the goodness and freshness is sealed in!

Thousands Switching to Delrich E-Z Color Pak Margarine!

Delrich ends mixing bowl mess and dishwashing.

Turns golden inside the sealed bag. No mold needed. It's easy to make neat quarters or patties for the table. A new American favorite!

Enjoy Delrich now! No tax on your time, energy or budget! And every pound is packed with natural food energy—enriched with 15,000 units of Vitamin A.

Delrich and E-Z Color Pak are the trademarks of The Cudahy Packing Co. for its margarine. Whether you ask for "Delrich" or "E-Z Color Pak"—they both mean America's Finest Margarine.

The CUDAHY Packing Co., Chicago, Illinois

CUDAHY Plus Product VALUE TESTED AND PROVED

© T. C. P. Co., 1948

We've ACTIVATED Seismotite in New Postwar Old Dutch Cleanser to give you Faster-Easier Cleaning than any other cleanser you've ever used... and it's SAFE!

It breaks all records for fast and easy cleaning . . . and it is safe. Yes . . . scientific tests have PROVED that amazing New Postwar Old Dutch Cleanser . . . so safe and so kind to hands . . . actually cleans faster and easier than all other leading cleansers.

Try it today and see how it zips through your toughest cleaning jobs, polishing while it cleans . . . with far less work for you! It's something altogether NEW, this remarkable "Absorbing-Cleaning" action provided by ACTIVATED Seismotite . . . and ONLY Old Dutch has it.

Snow white New Postwar Old Dutch rinses away quickly. Makes rich, active lasting suds . . . in hard or soft water. Cuts grease on contact, too . . . thanks to a new super-efficient grease-dissolver. Kind to hands . . . economical. Try it now for faster, easier cleaning than any other cleanser ever gave you! ACTIVATING Seismotite is an exclusive process, patent applied for.

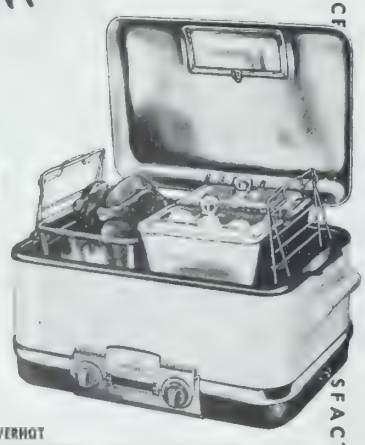
WORK-SAVING TIP FOR CLEANING ROASTERS
Cover bottom of roaster with hot water, add two tablespoons of Old Dutch and let soak. Old Dutch dissolves grease, loosens burned-on food . . . then you wash roaster sparkling clean in a jiffy!

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

THE FIRST MAJOR CLEANSER IMPROVEMENT SINCE THE INTRODUCTION OF SEISMOTITE!

Something spilled? Quick—a ScotTowel . . . to soak up the moisture—fast. Throw the ScotTowel away after use. No messy cloth to wash out.

Want to save laundering? ScotTowels do it . . . you use them for drying hands, wiping pots and percolator, draining lettuce, and dozens of other uses. 150 ScotTowels to a roll. Made of thirsty cellulose. Scott Paper Co., Chester, Pa.



MADE STRONG TO WORK HARD!

Trade Mark "ScotTowels" Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

How EVERHOT Automatic Cooking Gives Women More Freedom . . .

EVERHOT AUTOMATIC ROASTERETTE. A 5-quart capacity roaster with removable inset pan and automatic heat control. Gives Roaster Oven performance in a table service unit

EVERHOT ROASTER OVEN. Cooks a balanced meal for up to ten persons in one operation, roasts a 20-24 pound turkey, or cooks 18 quarts of soup, chili or stew. Two models to choose from.

EVERHOT CASSEROLE ROASTERETTE. A 3½ quart roaster with two-heat control. Cook and serve from the same unit on dining table. Great for picnics.

Everhot squarely meets the problem of meal preparation faced by countless thousands of modern women who work, women living in restricted quarters, women with a multiplicity of household duties, career women, handicapped women and women who want more leisure. Ask your appliance dealer to show you the Everhot Roaster Oven, the Everhot Automatic Roasterette, and the Everhot Casserole Roasterette.

Everhot Automatic Cooking saves food, avoids meat shrinkage, retains full flavor and food value—cuts food bills. Exclusive design and construction features save you time, trouble and worry—be sure to see them.

See it at your dealers or write

THE SWARTZBAUGH MFG. CO.
TOLEDO 6, OHIO

EVERHOT APPLIANCE SATISFACTION IN USE SINCE 1884 . . . EVERHOT APPLIANCES HAVE BEEN GIVING SATISFACTION IN USE SINCE 1884 . . . EVERHOT APPLIANCES HAVE BEEN GIVI

EVERHOT ELECTRIC BLANKET
Double Control. Each half of blanket separately regulated. 72 x 90 inches. 75% wool, 25% cotton. Plastic bag included at no extra cost

EVERHOT ELECTRIC BLANKET
Same as above with single control for entire blanket. All Everhot Blankets are equipped with Everhot Comfortrol, a new unique control device with many convenience features.

EVERHOT RAYVECTOR HEATER
The portable fire place. Adjustable for circulating or direct heat of infra-red rays.

EVERHOT AIR FLO COMBINATION
Heater or fan as desired, for both heating or cooling.

EVERHOT AIR FLO HEATER
A fan type unit of very smart styling. Quick, light, efficient.

EVERHOT RANGETTE
Occupies less than 2½ sq. ft. Broils, frys, toasts. Oven for baking and roasting, extra.

(Continued from Page 114)

In Richard Washburn Child's Made of Money, I was discovered at the rise of the first-act curtain, arranging some roses in a vase. A comedy butler, excellently done by Sidney Toler, entered looking glum, and I spoke my only line, which was, "What's the matter now?" He made some sort of reply, after which I said "Oh," turned and exited up-back-left. The "oh" was my own gratuitous padding of the part. This opening bit, of course, was over before half the audience had settled into their seats, but to judge by the earnestness with which I approached it, it might have been the big scene from Za-Za. I put my all into that single speech, elaborating it by preceding it with a humorous "Ho-Hum!" and winding it up with a curious sound I endeavored to make into a ripple of laughter. I worked up fancy bits of business, such as burying my nose in one of the roses and sniffing ecstatically. The dye in the cloth petals gave forth a vile smell and a deposit of property-room dust made me have to struggle not to sneeze, but, in the service of Art, such slight discomforts were to be ignored.

In an ensuing act, laid in a beauty parlor, I came on as a manicurist and worked industriously on Lynn Fontanne's fingernails, while a hairdresser, a real one, gave her a genuine marcel. The only person to be impressed with my characterization was the hairdresser, who offered me a job in his salon across the street.

My salary was $35 a week. I was barely eighteen and mother considered it necessary to go along with me. We took a minimum-rate room, but my pay hardly sufficed, and father, who was in California at the time, sent mother a check "to defray the expense of our daughter earning her own living. Never fear," he went on, "father will stand the gaff! It is all very funny and too good to keep, so to the dozens of inquirers out here who daily ask me 'How is Mrs. Skinner and what is the daughter doing?' I reply, 'Doing? Why, doing father, of course!'"

THE silent-screen version of Kismet was produced the following summer in Hollywood, and my next professional disappearance was in that. Father had asked the producer if he could manage to find a part for me, and he did, at the heady salary of $75 a week. The producer must have been prompted by motives of courtesy to the star. Hollow-cheeked and still wearing a partial band on my upper teeth, I was hardly a coming rival for Clara Bow. But they got around my problem by costuming me in voluminous veils and a thick yashmak. I was down in the cast list as "A Handmaiden." The part was really that of general messenger and door opener. Whenever the vizier paid his harem a visit of the utmost censor-conscious decorum, it was I who saw him in and out. In the finished picture, any superfluous action of mine was cut, and my friends who loyally went to see the film had to sit through it twice in order to make certain that the shrouded figure occasionally flashing across the screen was really I.

The day of my debut I arrived at the studio hours too early, got into my costume before anyone else was dressed and perspired off most of my make-up by the time they were ready to shoot my scene. Father, who was not in the shot, sat beside the director looking patient and not overhappy. Mother was somewhere off in the dark background. The scene was set in the vizier's palace. I was to stand in the shadow of a pillar while a half-naked eunuch, acted by a gigantic Negro, came down a corridor. When he had reached a certain point I was to step forth, stop him and ask him the identity of a man outside the gate. We were given no preliminary run-through. In fact, in those nontalking days only the scenes with the star were rehearsed. The director, an amusing Frenchman named Gasnier, who had a gay way of calling father "Mr. Kismet," megaphoned that they were set to shoot and was "Mees Keesmet" ready to register. I answered with a tentative yes and asked if, during the action, one were expected to say any sort of lines. Gasnier replied that speech was

"that's why we both chose a

DEXTER TWIN TUB

The only washer with two washing tubs. It does your weekly washing in only one hour or less. It gets clothes cleaner, whiter, brighter without hand-rubbing, soaking, or pre-treating. It saves soap, hot water, and electricity. It's the finest washer money can buy.

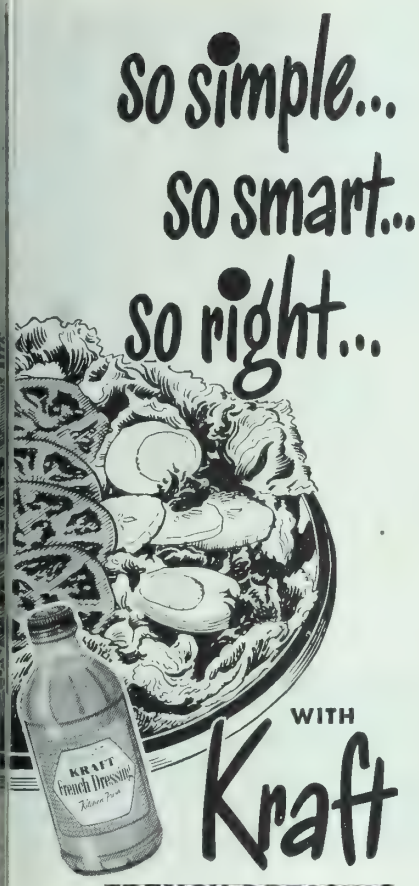
See your Dexter dealer for Free Home Demonstration or write for booklet—tells why double sudsing washes best.

FREE WRITE TODAY! TWO INSTEAD OF ONE

THE DEXTER COMPANY
Dept. L-98, Fairfield, Iowa

WASHES CLEANER • QUICKER • EASIER



Do Your Curtains Beautify Your Home?

Are they an asset or a liability? For curtains that retain their crisp loveliness, their sheer beauty, after repeated launderings, ask to see Queentex Washable Rayon Curtains. They wash like a handkerchief . . . no starching, no stretching, no special care in ironing.

Write for free Queentex Rayon Curtain Booklet now! QUEEN VALLEY FABRICS, INC., P.O. Box 634, Pawtucket, Rhode Island. For 20 years weavers and manufacturers of rayon curtains exclusively.

Queentex

QUEENTEX® Washable RAYON CURTAINS

FRENCH DRESSING

Perfect choice for any occasion is the "tossed" salad—but the dressing must be right. Get Kraft French! Delightfully seasoned, Kitchen-Fresh, and made with really fine ingredients . . .

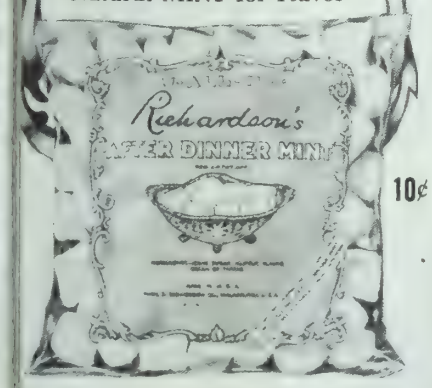
It's America's Favorite

NOTE: Kraft has another brand, Miracle French, for those who like just a tantalizing touch of onion and garlic.

U-ALL-NO Richardson's PRODUCTS

"We make 'em extra special good"

Richardson's Candy Chef



U-ALL-NO

Richardson's

AFTER DINNER MINT

Pure CANE Sugar plus Natural MINT for Flavor

Chas. D. Richardson Co., Philadelphia 34, U.S.A.

optional; some actors preferred keeping silent, others found it easier to murmur a few words appropriate to the pantomime. I decided I would murmur. The kleigs glared on, the cameramen stood prepared to crank and Mac, the accordion player, started a soft introduction to April Showers. As the eunuch reached the indicated position, I strode forth like Womanhood Triumphant and in a voice that would have filled the Metropolitan Opera House cried "Stay, slave!" The slave regarded me with astonishment and stayed. I continued, still at the top of my lungs, "Who is yon fair stranger without—the palace gate? Speak, else thy life be forfeit!" The slave's eyes grew to the dimensions of saucers, his jaw dropped and, in a voice of genuine earnestness, he said, "You kin search me, lady!"

My thespian initiations, instead of getting the theatrical bee out of my bonnet, merely whetted my ambitions to become an actress, and my family was at least reconciled to the prospect of my going on the stage. But not immediately. Nineteen they considered too tender an age, and mother felt I needed more educating. Agreeable as college had been, I balked at the prospect of another term, and any suggestion of dramatic school was loudly vetoed by father, who considered such establishments a waste of time and money. We compromised on a year abroad.

I wanted, of course, to go over alone. I had ideas about student life, emancipation and the postwar generation which in those early '20's had yet to consider itself lost. But mother had her own ideas about the same things. She raised a number of fanciful objections which wound up with "You can never tell about Frenchmen and then, baby, there's always your appendix." Mother had a lifelong obsession in regard to my appendix, which she decided would "kick up" in some inconvenient environment such as the high seas or halfway down the Grand Canyon.

The good man does not grieve that other people do not recognize his merits. His only anxiety is lest he fail to recognize theirs.

—CONFUCIUS.

We sailed in the fall and went direct to Paris. Be it to mother's credit that she tried valiantly to let me go on my own. She stopped at the France-et-Choiseul, while I stayed not in the romantic garret of my Murgeresque dreams, but with a highly respectable family who lived in the most banal section of Passy and took in an occasional paying guest.

However, my landlady and her household did not bother me greatly. There was all of Paris around me, and I was desperately aware of being abroad and young. I attacked everything—study, sight-seeing, even amusements—with conscientious enthusiasm. Twice a week I reverently entered an amphitheater at the Sorbonne to listen to a lecture on La Civilization Française, part of a popular course open to the public, intended to please rather than mentally overtax the attending student body, which was made up of persons of all ages and all nationalities.

But my chief study was acting. I took private lessons from one of the sociétaires of the Comédie Française, a cheery little man named Dehelly who for immemorial years had specialized in the Molière and Marivaux comedies, playing always jeunes amants, those curly young men with names like Dorante and Sylvestro who are constantly sweeping the floor with the plumes of their hats and taking more snuff than any snuff-box could begin to hold.

All winter I worked like crazy, practicing diction exercises, memorizing interminable speeches at the top of my lungs, muttering them to myself on bus or Métro, even saying them over in my sleep. Occasionally, by way of change, I'd be assigned poetry or a few La Fontaine fables. It was an exciting experience and I am endlessly grateful for it. Dehelly, to be sure, belonged to the mock-heroic overstilted school, but he had an inspiring gift of imparting the grand old manner and making it believable.

*Use at least half a jar of Borden's. Then, if you don't agree it tastes better than any coffee you ever used, send us the jar with the unused contents, and we'll refund your money. The Borden Co., 350 Madison Ave., N.Y. 17, N.Y.

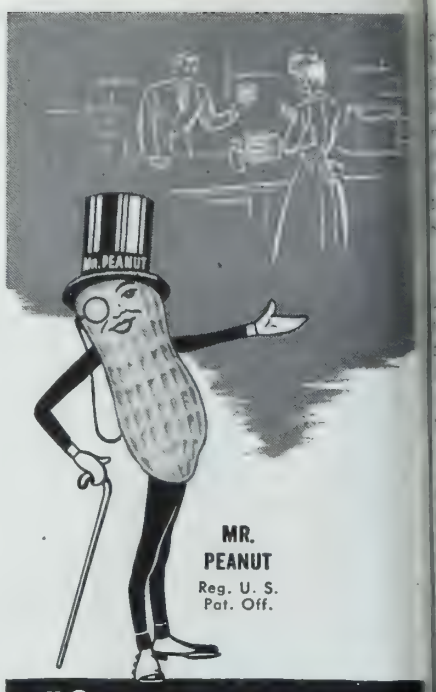
I wrote to father in New York, an arty letter which must have amused him, complaining about the old-fashioned fetters which I felt were tying down my ample cabin'd spirit. He wrote back soothingly:

Take it easy, kiddie. That's all fine training, exaggerated as you think it is—it's a loosening-up process, like a pianist stretching two notes above the octave. Don't make fun of it. It's a grand old school to learn—and then forget! Rather like the experience your sire had with Lawrence Barrett.

To offset this heavy dose of classicism, I decided I needed some grounding in modern methods. Jacques Copeau was running the Théâtre du Vieux Colombier, a Left Bank playhouse, and as part of his theater project was starting a dramatic school. I signed up for it—full payment, of course, in advance—the only American in a group of aesthetic French adolescents who didn't bathe very much. The girls were emaciated and had greasy hair and the boys wore flowing black ties and suffered from acne. Mother was sure the former were all phthisical and the latter all had "a disease we don't talk about."

The classes were held in a barren atelier up four flights of rickety stairs above the Vieux Colombier theater. The place had no heat of any sort, no vestige of ventilation, and the only illumination came wanly through a dirty skylight. We students would assemble at ten A.M. shivering with cold, for the temperature in the room was usually several degrees lower than it was outdoors.



After a time, a brisk young woman wearing what looked like a homemade skating outfit would breeze in with a curt "Bonjour, messieurs—dames." She was an institutrice de gymnase whose job it was to put us through twenty minutes of limbering-up exercises. Her Gallic brand of calisthenics, mild exertions interspersed with deep breathing done to the count of "*In*spiration! *Un! Deux! Ex*piration! Trois! Quatre!" were anything but limbering, especially as for some unaccountable reason we had to perform them in our bare feet.

As soon as our exercises had completely congealed us, we were permitted to resume our shoes, after which, with chattering teeth, we took our places on camp stools lined up in crescent formation to face a large thronelike chair. After an impressive pause, Copeau, swathed in muffler, galoshes, fur-lined coat and sealskin cap, would make an entrance, bid us good day and take his place on the throne, from which eminence he would deliver a brief discourse on some phase of the art of acting.

One day he told us to get out onto the floor, all at the same time, and imitate animals—whatever animals we liked—while he sat watching us with inscrutable speculation, saying nothing. It distresses me to admit that I chose to impersonate a swan, and the only comment upon my performance was passed by a pasty-faced youth who paused in his own interpretation of a bulldog long enough to whisper admiringly in my ear, "Mais c'est parfait, mademoiselle! Vous êtes absolument une giraffe!"

It was a fine year in the Paris theater and I went to everything. For about forty cents one could get a good balcony seat for Marthe Regnier, Victor Boucher, Max Dearly in his delicious absurdities at the Palais Royal, and the grand old reliables at the Odéon. The Guitrys were at the Edouard VII that season, and whatever may have been Sacha's subsequent behavior under Nazi influence, his plays—Debureau, Le Grand-Duc, Mozart, and so on—were a joy; Yvonne Printemps was enchantment itself; and to have seen the acting of old Lucien was, in my opinion, to have seen the greatest acting of our time.

In my tireless pursuit of culture, I bought a subscription abonnement to the weekly matinées classiques at the Comédie Française. That was theatergoing with a vengeance. Performances started at one-forty-five or, as the posters announced it, at fourteen hours

If you want the most delicious Salted Peanuts - say "PLANTERS"

If you'd like to find out how good salted peanuts can really be, just say "PLANTERS" at your favorite food store. You can use them scores of ways. For parties and motor trips—for salads and cookies—they're tops. Just the finest Virginia peanuts—tested by the electric eye—then toasted and salted as only Planters—the world's peanut experts for over 40 years—know how to do. Keep several cans handy always. They're Planterrific!

Also say PLANTERS for a different Peanut Butter—smoother and richer in true peanut flavor.

•

These PLANTERS products are also made in Toronto, and sold everywhere in Canada.

In Half-Pound Cans

PLANTERS is the word for PEANUTS

fteen, and lasted till well after dark. The vas a classical double feature, a traditional five-act tragedy and an equally traditional comedy, also of five acts. It was an thetic ordeal and a dorsal and posterior as well, for my subscription ticket was strapontin, one of those hard little folding seats that let down into the aisle, making e in case of fire completely impossible.

letter from father informed us that he signed up with Gilbert Miller for the ng season to play in Tom Cushing's natization of Blasco Ibañez's novel of the ring, Blood and Sand. He would come Paris in the spring and we'd all go to n, where he could soak in atmosphere.

ou and Bobs have got to personally conduct San Sebastian sounds good to me. We will he wealthy classes there, I presume, and vatch the bathing of the aristocracy. I want e the people who represent Spanish "so-"—not necessarily refined society, but you v what I mean. I want to get in touch with oull ring and what it means. I want to see oreros in and out of dress uniform. I want e the bulls. I want to attend the corridas. nt to wander and mix with people, to idle ng them. I want to see them marketing and heir devotions. I want to know the country icts and the peasantry. I want to find little equented chapels, and I want to get off the way of Mr. Cook! All the palaces, cathes, Velasquezes, El Grecos and the cabbages kings may go hang if I can't get what I'm g for. Spain's historical monuments are ely secondary affairs. I want an idle month he Peninsula with no necessity of a daily sultation with railway les. I want to be the hu- blotting pad, carelessly upon the ink of national —and I don't want to go student of art or history. atever comes I shall drink t the pores. Also I can ect a few costumes, shawls other appurtenances for production.

The two things in life which are really gratuitous are the grace of God and one's pedigree. The rest depends upon ourselves.

—JOHN OLIVER HOBBES.

t was a good excuse for a trip—not that er ever needed an excuse for any trip. t it salved mother's cultural conscience to nk that while he was absorbing atmosphere his role, she and I might get in a little thetic absorption, while her economic one s mollified by the comforting knowledge t the "costumes, shawls and appurtenances" could all be charged off to Gilbert ller.

We met up with Ibañez in Madrid. He oved to be a rough, affable creature with a unch equaled in enormity only by his ego, ich at the time was being fed by an orgy of ional adulation. He had recently been reled from serving a term of exile as punishnt for some revolutionary ideas expressed his Shadow of the Cathedral, and was be- welcomed back by each of the provinces, native Valencia in particular, with rounds celebrations. Testimonials were being profred him, holidays declared and fiestas held.

We saw a great deal of him. Intensely interested in the forthcoming production of ood and Sand, he turned his large self ine out to take father around to every place authentic local color. He took us to curis little shops, sort of select pawn establishnts, where star bullfighters, the vainest of ima donnas, turned in their dazzling ousand-duro suits which lesser toreros might rchase secondhand.

HE morning of a big corrida he took us on backstage inspection of the arena, the hters' quarters, the stable for the miserable rses and the darkened death-cell pens hich were being filled each with a beautiful tle Miura bull, his black coat quivering, s hoofs pawing the ground in savage terror. e met bull-ring managers and experts who plained the cape passes and sword thrusts, d he introduced us to a few star espadas. The only time Ibañez didn't come along th us was when we went to the fight itself. e had seen his last one, he said. And so, a w hours later, I could say, had I. The one attended was a gala affair held for the nefit of the Spanish Red Cross and patroned by the queen herself. I stood it through the slaughter of six horses and two bulls. Then, when they started taking out the gored horses that were still alive, stuffing them with straw and sending them back into the ring to be eviscerated all over again, I went to pieces. I covered my eyes with my hands, I cried, I sobbed, I bawled out loudly, "These are barbaric people! I wish they'd throw them to the bulls!"

MOTHER, who was anguished, too, but more controlled, patted my knee and said, "Hush, baby! Someone may hear you."

"I hope they do hear me!" I wailed back. "I hope the queen hears me!"

Mother, fearful that this might develop into an international incident, decided it was time for herself and me to go. Once outside the stadium, we looked about for a means of conveyance back to town. A number of taxis were drawn up in line. None of them was of much use, as their drivers were all inside watching the corrida. A number of private limousines were parked near one of the entrances. Their chauffeurs, too, were absent, with the exception of one, a handsome creature who lolled against the mudguard of an especially swank vehicle. He watched us for a time, then, prompted less by my hysteria than by mother's gestures of distress, ambled over to us and inquired in impeccable English if there were anything he might do for us.

Mother thanked him and said she was awfully sorry but that we were Americans and we knew we shouldn't leave so early but you see her daughter was so fond of animals—and had been working so hard all winter in Paris and did he know where we might get a taxi.

The chauffeur thought for a second or two, then he dropped his cigarette, ground it out, flashed a smile, strode back to his Hispano-Suiza, opened the door and said, "I shall take you to the tram line. Jump in. But quickly!"

Obediently we clambered into the car, which we found to be one of frightening elegance—the upholstery was of a delicate dove color, crystal vases attached to the walls with silver brackets contained live orchids, and the speaking tube had a carved-ivory mouthpiece. Mother and I perched gingerly on the edge of the seat, feeling that our mere presence was a contamination. Our unknown knight-errant drove us a short distance to a streetcar terminal, where he let us out and told us the number of the tram we should take.

Mother, profuse in thanks, started to fumble in her purse for a tip, but could find nothing smaller than a five-duro bill. The chauffeur, drawing himself up, made a gesture of haughty refusal. "Madame," he said, "I have the honor of being the queen's chauffeur. That is Her Majesty's car you have just ridden in." Mother gasped "Goodness!" and froze into immobility, the five-duro bill clutched in her hand. The man bowed, assured us it had been a pleasure, got back in the limousine and drove away. Gradually we returned to earth. Mother looked down to close her purse and uttered a small cry, half rueful, half amused. The five-duro bill was gone.

In August we loaded our paraphernalia onto the Paris and sailed for home. Father started in mapping out his preparations for Blood and Sand, and I started in earnestly working on the part which parental indulgence had vouchsafed me in the production. I was to have, in all, three speeches to say. I blush to recall the fact that I referred to it as "my role."

Rehearsals started the end of August in New York. I was very ardent and earnest about them and about beginning what I'm afraid I reverently called "my life's work." Every morning I'd arrive a good half hour ahead of time and, after the run-through of my brief scene, when those of us who were in it had been dismissed for the day, I'd stay on, avidly watching the director, B. Iden Payne, putting the rest of the performance into shape.

Salute to Sweeter Singing!

With French's Bird Seed and Biscuit aboard, these buff-breasted canary buccaneers will capture your heart at the first broadside! For there's bounding health in a package of French's, and a merry variety (12 tested ingredients) and these are the things that bring out a canary's most beautiful song.

Don't trust a few ordinary seeds. Your canary deserves a diet that has been tested—that is appetizing and complete. He deserves French's Bird Seed and Biscuit—a diet that has been favored for generations. This proved combination comes in one popular priced package. Try it for just ten days—then listen for new life in your canary's song!

His sweetest notes are in the Biscuit!

French's

BIRD SEED and BISCUIT

The Largest-Selling Bird Seed in America

Father's impersonation of the torero hero, Juan Gallardo, was undoubtedly fine, although it was never one of his greatest performances. He used to refer to it as "the last lover I ever played, thank God!" and when one considers the fact that he was sixty-three years old at the time, that in itself is no unremarkable feat. "My role" was that of a lady named Doña Sarasate, a character who had no remote connection with the plot. I was "discovered" at the rise of the second-act curtain, along with a few other select guests of Doña Sol, at a party which was giving every indication of being about to break up. I wore a Paul Poiret robe-de-style, waved an enormous blue quill fan, strummed softly on a piano situated well upstage, and sang a fifteenth-century canticle to which nobody paid the slightest attention. Father came on as the colorful bullfighter, the idol of the arena now suddenly ill at ease and himself a gauche taurus in the china shop of high society, the gentlemen snubbing him, the ladies gathering about him in shocked fascination.

I spoke three lines to him, the most dramatic of which was, "The bull can't help being a bull, can he?" after which I shook hands with Doña Sol in a willowy manner, called a languid, "Are you coming, Don Pablo?" to I forget whom, and exited left. And that was my part.

We opened in Buffalo and toured for a few weeks before coming into New York. My salary was $60 a week. Father charged me $5 a day and indulgently paid all hotel bills, including most meals. However, in the theater he showed me no favoritism and he saw to it that as the star's daughter I rated no special privileges. He offered little comment upon my performance, albeit on the matter of my make-up he offered plenty.

In my zeal, I had purchased a variegated assortment of grease paint, eye shadow, rouge and sundry cosmetics, enough for an army. Dabbling about with it for at least two hours prior to every show, I tried out all possible color combinations and a few impossible ones, piling on grease paint as thick as marshmallow icing, slathering my eyelids with blue, purple, brown and even green shadowing, beading lashes until they drooped beneath the load.

Father stood it for about ten days and then he sent his valet with a summons for me to report to him in his dressing room immediately. He stood waiting for me with a towel in one hand and a jar of Albolene in the other.

"Sit down," he ordered peremptorily, indicating the chair in front of his make-up mirror. Then in a loud, practical tone he remarked, "You look like hell," and with several vigorous swipes of towel and Albolene, cleaned off my lurid layers. Then using his own grease sticks and liners, he showed me a make-up which he said looked more like a human being and less like a face on a totem pole. I was subdued and, after a time, grateful.

We opened on Broadway at the Empire, that beloved gilt-proscenium and red-plush theater which really is a theater. It was a lovely and exciting temple in which to dedicate my novitiate. The show went over without any hitches. Father remembered all his lines and I neither tripped nor fell flat on my face. At the finish, the house was rewardingly enthusiastic. I took a bow with the general ensemble, then scuttled off to the wings where I stood to watch the rest of the curtain calls—the featured players, father and Catherine Calvert.

During one of his calls father caught sight of me standing off at the side, came over to me, snatched up my hand and to my panic and delight led me onto the set and down to the footlights, where he made a gesture which indicated that he was therewith introducing his daughter to the public, and we both bowed, first to the house, then to each other. The curtain came down.

Father squeezed my hand, dropped it, smiled and said, "Well, miss, you've made your New York debut. From now on"—he waved me off the stage—"you're on your own," and he strode back for another solo call.

THE END

Melody is not just relaxing. After long months of patient training, she's learned to obey the command of Sit and Stay!

Diary of Domesticity

By Gladys Taber

I WAS reading a book the other day by Arnold Bennett, in which he says, "You have all the time there is." Every single person in the world, says Mr. Bennett, has twenty-four hours a day, no more, no less, but we throw much of it away. He goes on to save fifteen minutes here, an hour there, and in the end saves enough time for a hard-working businessman to learn all about art or philosophy or whatever.

There is no doubt that time is the most precious commodity in the world. And it keeps running along, a river that never pauses. I was fascinated by Mr. Bennett's idea that I could use my own to better advantage. I would like, first of all, to reread all of Shakespeare, carefully savoring every word. And to learn Spanish thoroughly, beyond small bits like the General going to the war while the Queen stays home. And lots of other things.

But when I went into a huddle with my days, I just knew Mr. Bennett had never, never been a housewife. He should have had a postscript by Mrs. Bennett on just how she worked out all that timesaving. Those lovely hours left over from not reading the news on the commuting train.

What would Mr. Bennett do if he had saved up two days of time and the relatives from California came just those two days? Or if he sat down to think with Plato for a lovely hour and the washing machine suddenly began to flood the whole kitchen?

At Stillmeadow, no amount of planning can provide for Maeve's jumping the ten-and-a-half-foot fence and going A.W.O.L. Or Flyer and Saxon suddenly getting embroiled and having to be separated. Or the lawn mower dying in her tracks for no reason at all. I ask you, Mr. Bennett, what do you do when the bean beetles come in the night?

I fear we shall muddle along at Stillmeadow, unreconstructed. But when seven are coming for dinner, and the pickles must be made, and the dogs all need brushing, and the phone is ringing and the ironing lies undone, I shall, from now on, stop and say firmly, "I have all the time there is. Mr. Bennett says so."

This is the month of National Dog Week, the 19th to the 25th, and I would like to dash out to Tulsa for the big celebration there. I generally don't care much for all the kinds of weeks for this and weeks for that, but a week for dogs is something different. The organization does a great deal in the interests of dogs, and since Flyer and Buddy are Oklahoma cockers, I feel especially pleased that all the events will be staged right in Tulsa.

Our own private celebration was when Melody won her C.D. degree this summer at Longshore. Any kind of honor you can win pales into a dim fog compared with the feeling you have when your first little black cocker gets her degree, after qualifying in three shows. That day was a driving-rain-and-cold-bleak-wind kind of day, and we really gave up hope, because Melody hates to get wet and will not sit down on damp grass, and the show was outdoors, of course.

The ring was right by the water, too, and little boys kept throwing pop bottles in to make loud splashes right under the dogs' noses. I love children as much as any mother, but the children who hang around outside the obedience rings at a dog show and whistle and catcall and turn somersaults ought to be put to bed and the door locked until the show is over.

We sat around in the downpour shivering all day long. The breed judging went on under the nice dry tent, but the obedience dogs had to hurdle and carry the dumbbells and sit and stay right in the rain while the handlers sopped the water from their necks as best they could.

IT is true that a lot of work and thought go into raising a perfect specimen of the breed, but to my way of thinking they are nothing compared with the work and love and thought that go into your dog and you performing the obedience tests with success. You are doing it together, for one thing, and it represents a mutual achievement far above a mere conformation of bones.

Melody looked very wet with her black satin coat dripping and her small earnest nose sopping. Jill looked like an advertisement for Maine fishing with a sou'wester blowing. And when the long down came, and Melody finally did lie down and stay down, my teeth were knocking about and my heart exploding. (Continued on Page 123)

He gets a new crush!

Love at first sniff! Yes, Gro-Pup is a tasty blend of 23 wholesome ingredients—contains every vitamin and mineral a doggie's known to need. *Dog*gone good—for "go-and-get-it!" And only Gro-Pup comes in c-c-runchy Ribbon Form!

You get a new bargain!

Compare! Water is the biggest single ingredient in canned dog foods—most are 70% water—only 30% food dry weight. It takes nearly 5 1-lb. cans to equal 1 25-oz. box of Gro-Pup. You save almost half! Handier! Needs no refrigeration. (Made in Meal and Pel-Etts, too.)

The Biggest Box on the shelf

SIX MODELS: Cocker Spaniel (shown), Setter, German Shepherd, English Bull, Pointer, Boston Terrier. Solid metal, bronze finish. 2-3" high. Modeled from champions. Ornaments or paper weights.

For each statuette ordered, send 50¢ plus the diamonds from the fronts of 2 Gro-Pup packages. State the model or models wanted—include your name and address. Send to Kellogg Co., Box 246, Battle Creek, Mich.

BRAND-NEW FRIGIDAIRE DE LUXE
Big Super-Freezer Chest for frozen foods; large, convenient food compartment; full-width Hydrator for fruits, vegetables. Unique Basket-Drawer for eggs, small packaged foods. New design, for more food storage space in same kitchen space. Sizes: 7, 9, 11 cu. ft.

Here's just one of the great NEW FRIGIDAIRE REFRIGERATORS!

9 models to choose from!

It's only natural that the make of refrigerator which meets the needs of the most people—should be the refrigerator bought by the most people.

You'll see how true this is when you visit your Frigidaire Dealer. For you'll discover—not one, not two, but three brand-new Frigidaire Refrigerators... nine models to choose from. All powered by the Meter-Miser, simplest cold-making mechanism ever built. It's evidence that Frigidaire recognizes how important it is for every family to have the right kind, as well as the right size, of refrigerator.

So see the new Frigidaire Refrigerators—see the one that's just right for you. "Right for you" because it helps you cook your own way, keep house the way you like, store food the way that's handiest for you!

You're twice as sure with two great names

FRIGIDAIRE

MADE ONLY BY

General Motors

Find your Frigidaire Dealer's name in Classified Phone Directory. Or write Frigidaire, Dayton 1, Ohio. Leaside 12, Ont.

Listen to Frigidaire's "Man Called X." Sunday nights. See newspaper for time and station.

(Continued from Page 121)

hen the judge called the numbers of the who had qualified, and Melody and Jill e l back into the ring, I felt that life had more to offer. Melody, however, felt it t had chicken sandwiches and ham and cookies to offer her.

tember is a lovely month except for one It is time for fall clothes. I wish I were ind of woman who enjoyed buying s. It must make life very pleasant to hopping and to pick out the right s. I never seem to have a complete cos- of any kind. There is always a catch in ewhere. Then, too, I am never the same hree weeks in succession. Having, at l cost, lost almost thirty-odd pounds, I get a nice suit. Then for a couple of we have guests and I happily begin g meals instead of crisp lettuce salads. ain a few pounds. I buy a dress. Spartan , I drop off some more pounds. The is too long now, but the suit just looks iar. Just as I get everything fitted , a holiday comes up and there I go glazed ham, candied sweet potatoes and -apple pie.

has no hat. I at least am docile in , but she maintains her independence y cost. She goes into a hat shop, casts a despairing glance at the clumps of posies visps of gauze, claps a concoction on her and says furiously, "You see! I look perfect fool."

Here's a dramatic number," says the girl.

l screws herself around, peers in the mir- groans. "Fine for a circus performer," ays. She finally settles for a beret in a ent color.

ce she was sold down iver on a white hat white roses and pale veiling to wear to 's graduation. She it that one day, look- niserable, and I have it since at odd times. ever wear a hat, either, except for things hurch or luncheons, and this year Maeve bunch of violets off my best one. Some e hats are beautiful to look at, but I r feel at ease in any of them. I feel like a it peering out of a covert somehow. But ow women who find a new hat will make over for them. The way a new copper nen utensil does for me, or a piece of milk his is the month for last canning and ing, making the last pickles and pre- es. It is a fine feeling to garner the good gs from the garden and know you are ng them from frost. Then you have the ation of comfortable days ahead with ked freezer and shelves. Every basketful egetables is a special extra gift from ure; the tomatoes are sweeter, the corn e delicate, the lettuce crisper just at the his is the time to cut goldenrod for dry- when it is not too far out. The red velvet scomb or princess feather can be cut, and many autumn grasses. Any material e dried should be cut before it is too far loom, and dried in a cool, dark place. We g the bunches in the woodshed.

OPPER bowl filled with shining green and let peppers is a good decoration for a est supper. Purple and green grapes in ilk-glass compote are lovely. I like to basket of tawny corn, wine-purple egg- t, smoky squash and scarlet tomatoes he pine chest.

he wild asters are out along the country es, and with the goldenrod make a ple-and-gold path for autumn. Except for el time, the countryside is more beautiful n wild flowers than at any other season in nnecticut. The asters are two shades, a cate amethyst and a rich royal purple. n there are white, smaller varieties.

he swamp begins to flame with red maple our own overshadowing maples burn into gold. Nobody can ever explain to me just the colors are the way they are, nor why are never twice the same. Every autumn new glory, and a different color harmony.

Starting to school is a time that evokes memories in everyone. Exciting, breathless moment of finding your seat in assembly at high school is really next to your best beau! The first day the little children go off with a new red pencil box as a treat. I don't think anything is much more important as a gift than a new pencil box. The slim, elegant pencils, the little gooey rubber eraser, the tiny sharpener and maybe a small ruler, and all this in a partitioned box with a snap cover!

Jumping rapidly ahead, in the easy way memory can, there is the college campus, the football team loping importantly by, the band practicing, and the dormitory full of squealing girls. I never could squeal, but I could listen to the squealers. Exciting days!

Then there is the other side of the picture. Seeing your own children trudge away, stomachs out the way children walk, pigtails or short curls swaying in the breeze. The empty house, no sound, and a sensation that life is moving along too fast.

Or, if you are lucky enough to be a college teacher, the row of new faces in the seats, the smell of new pieces of chalk, the long sunlight on the campus, the reassuring sense of youth learning still, in this age and any age. It is a lot easier to have faith in tomorrow's world if you look at the students.

THE radio is always giving awards to special people. Monthly awards, weekly, even daily. Prizes or a box of coffee or cigarettes. It is a nice idea, and I would like to do an award of the month myself. I would give it to Laurence Olivier for the recording of Henry V. We were over at Fay and Andy's for supper the other night and Fay had an album and we sat in the kitchen by the old black glowing range while we heard the immortal lines and the superb music which interprets the whole of the play and the whole of England too. The battle music made cold shivers run up my spine, and the poetry was more splendid than the sound of the trumpets.

Hope is generally a wrong guide, though it is very good company by the way.
—LORD HALIFAX.

Sir Laurence Olivier may be a contemporary man, but I am inclined to believe he is really the reincarnation of—well, not Will himself, but maybe Kit Marlowe or Burbage.

We are very fortunate to live in a time when Shakespeare has come again, on the stage and in the movies, with a few great men to give him his due again. That's a nice thing to balance against the price of butter. And singing commercials on the radio.

There are still hot days in September, so we have salad platters and cool desserts. As long as the cucumbers and tomatoes hold out, meals are no problem. And when the night is cool, stuffed baked new acorn squash is elegant. I like it stuffed with sausage, but with baby Lima beans, or corn and green pepper, it is equally good.

I converted a fried chicken to a new dish yesterday when it was too warm to enjoy frying anything. I browned a clove of garlic in salad oil, added the chicken, cut in pieces and dusted with seasoned flour (I like the new flavored herb salt). When the chicken began to brown, I dumped in a can of spicy tomato sauce, added some hot water and simmered the whole, covered, about twenty-five minutes. Then I turned in a couple of cups of mixed vegetables (a can of assorted vegetables or frozen mixed would be as good) and simmered ten minutes more over a very low heat. I did the rice in the pressure cooker, and the whole made a good dinner with a green salad, and ice cream for dessert.

Late afternoon is wonderful in September. The slanting sun illumines the flame and gold of the leaves, the lawn is cool with shadows, and the blue air over the hills is faintly smoky.

Honey goes down to the brook with me. Esmé is talking Siamese to a frog in the reeds. There is a pure, clear look over the whole world. The brook water is amber and crystal cold. It flows on and vanishes under the bridge by George's barn. Flows like time passing, but I do not worry about that now. Not with Honey dipping her nose in to drink. Not in September! THE END

There are no complicated gadgets with EKCO . . . no fear of accidents. So easy to use it's guaranteed safest and simplest of any pressure cooker on the market. Take advantage of EKCO'S 10-day money-back offer and convince yourself. Sold at department, hardware, appliance stores, everywhere.

EKCO SAFEST BECAUSE . . .

Triple-guarded valve keeps liquids from spurting up or out. "Inside-Grip" lid locks tight under slightest steam pressure. Gentle hissing means "correct pressure"...loud hissing warns "too much pressure."

EKCO SIMPLEST BECAUSE . . .

There's nothing to watch. Gauge is built into the lid...nothing to lose, drop or break. No gadgets to fool with. Can be used blindfolded. Just push . . . turn . . . tilt . . . lift . . . your EKCO is open. Easiest to store.

A Wonderful Gift!

6 Qt. "Hostess" Model . .	$14.95
*4½ Qt. "Chef" Model . .	13.95
4½ Qt. "Hostess" Model .	12.95
2½ Qt. "Hostess" Model .	9.95
"Hostess" Table Service Cover	1.00

Prices Slightly Higher in West
*Includes Non-Pressure Cooking Cover.

EKCO PRODUCTS COMPANY
CHICAGO 39, ILLINOIS

New! Improved!
EKCO PRESSURE COOKER
ANOTHER GREAT PRODUCT BY EKCO

Kitchen REVIVAL

Where once the old sink sagged (above) a handsome cupboard now houses kitchen silver, linen and trays. Bench, table and chairs provide a convenient and delightful "place to eat" (below) where once the giant refrigerator loomed. Holiday memories set the theme for the Guatemalan colors.

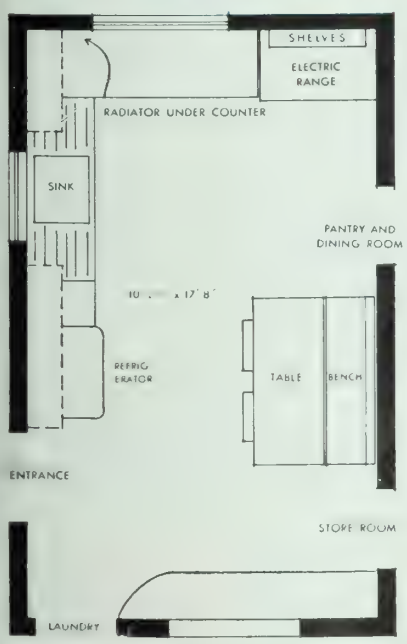
BY GLADYS TABER

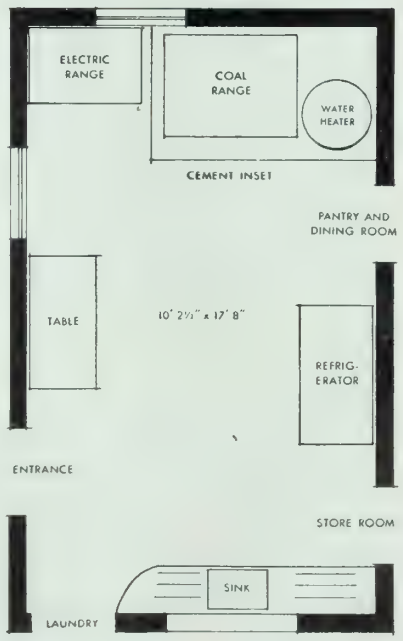
JOURNAL readers know Elizabeth Dunn as the creator of one of their favorite characters in fiction—that young, charming, lively wife and mother, Candy. That the author of Candy also had kitchen troubles may be a surprise, but it should be no surprise that she could describe them vividly.

"The Dunns," she wrote, "have a kitchen so horrible that it's fascinating. People come out and look at it and go into a sort of hypnotic trance. It's a disgrace; and to add to its squalor, the floor has begun to sink through itself, probably from sheer embarrassment. Finally, last month, we faced the floor situation squarely, and called in our local contractor, who looked around him and was brought to some time later with burnt feathers. When he could speak again, he suggested that we leave the whole matter in his hands. He said he considered it a challenge. This sounded fine—but after considering the suggestions he has submitted to us, we begin to doubt his ability as a kitchen designer. We agree with him that if we have to refloor, we'd better construct a first-class kitchen. But we don't seem to agree with him on what a first-class kitchen is. Nor do any of our friends. Is there the slightest hope of getting advice from the JOURNAL's kitchen planners on our problem?"

The JOURNAL accepted the challenge. Many nice old houses have kitchens like this, but seldom quite as (Continued on Page 142)

STUART





"Our 'before' kitchen combined the best features of a cold-water tenement and a peasant's hut. Dungeon dark, it had only one fair-sized window and one small slit, ceiling high, in the north wall. At one end of the room the sink, an early Duncan Phyfe model with original wooden drainboards. At the opposite end, a good fifteen feet away, the electric range in need of repair and a retired black iron stove, circa 1620, for which we were very grateful since there was no other counter or work space in the whole kitchen nor any cupboard or cabinet, not even a shelf except one we put in. The old black stove did everything but what it was intended for.

"Our final piece of equipment was a gigantic refrigerator of the Ming dynasty, which was run by magic and a small donkey engine in the cellar. This engine fainted dead away every 6 weeks; it cost $56 to revive it. The floors, pronounced possible but dangerous by our carpenter, were about to fall through. Above and around all this medieval splendor pipes, thousands of pipes, ran hysterically in all directions, no one knew where or why, least of all the plumber.

"Asking me what kind of kitchen I wanted was like asking the inmate of a dungeon how he'd like to have it decorated. I knew I wanted it clean, light and efficient above all, but at the same time I wanted to have it as gay and glamorous as Guatemala. Anyone who could achieve such a transformation belongs in the genius bracket."

AFTER

BEFORE

Completely rejuvenated, the new Dunn kitchen emerged from the old: work area L-shaped now, refrigerator at one end, range at the other. Between them, a generous double-bowled sink with double drainboards; roomy metal cabinets; counter worktable with storage space below. New windows for old let in more light by day; lights flush with the lower ceiling flood work areas by night. The linoleum-covered floor is new—and level! Passageways to pantry, hall and laundry are free and clear.

Now Floor Cleaning's Easy... STANDING UP!

WAX AS YOU CLEAN with
Bruce Floor Cleaner and the Bruce Doozit

1 Pour a small amount of wax-rich Bruce Floor Cleaner on your wood floor or linoleum. Then use the Doozit with its magic Pad to loosen dirt, erase spots and marks

2 Drop a cloth under the Doozit Pad and wipe up dirt, leaving the floor surface thoroughly clean, ready for polishing.

3 Replace the moist Doozit Pad with a dry one, then polish. The non-slip wax film left by Bruce Floor Cleaner polishes quickly.

for wood floors and linoleum ust these three easy steps, that's there is to complete floor beauty re when you use the modern ruce method—standing up. No ore sore knees, no more tired ckaches—no harmful water and rong soaps to destroy the beauty and lifetime of your floors. You can get Bruce Floor Products at stores everywhere. The Bruce Doozit costs only $1.89. Long-wearing, easily replaceable Pads are 19c each. Bruce Floor Cleaner, 68c qt., slightly higher in the Far West.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

BRUCE floor products

Bruce Tuf-Lustre Wax

Bruce Paste Wax

Bruce Self-Polishing Wax

E. L. Bruce Co., Memphis, Tenn. • • • World's Largest Maker of Hardwood Floors

WEDDING PRESENT

(Continued from Page 55)

now, and had a job in the Middle West, some kind of writing job on a magazine. She was doing quite well at it. Sandra was very beautiful and very smart and had a lovely figure and needed a great many clothes.

Cathy ate her egg and felt funny. Not because of the egg, but because she had a strange feeling that something was going to happen. Something very big and important. It did too. Right away.

Her mother read the letter as if her eyes were part of the paper, and her mouth opened just a little—it could be a very pretty mouth—and she turned the pages quickly, almost frantically. Then she began to smile, more and more, until suddenly she put the letter down and looked at her husband, and Cathy had never seen her face so bright, so very happy, so alive and alert. Not for a long time.

"Jim," she said, "Jim, she's going to be married. Sandra's going to be married."

He got up quickly, reaching for the letter. "She is?" he said. "To whom?" He was very tall and he still moved quickly, like an athlete. Her mother held the letter back.

"I haven't finished it yet," she said. "To"—she glanced at the page again—"a man named Maitland. Tim Maitland. She met him only a few weeks ago." She read some more. "He's a lawyer," she said, not looking up, "a young lawyer. Just starting. Very, San says, very brilliant. She would, of course. And—and from a very good family. A very old family."

Her father growled. "Never mind his family," he said. It always annoyed him, talking about the importance of families.

He got part of the letter to read himself.

"She wants to be married here, naturally," her mother went on, "in June, probably. She wants a big wedding. With everything. Of course she wants a big wedding." Her mother got up. Her face was flushed bright and her eyes sparkled keen and excited and she made quick motions with her hands, planning things. She had very lovely, very dainty hands, and her hair was blond like Sandra's. "We could have the reception at the country club"—she was thinking out loud—"and a good orchestra, a really good one, and the bridesmaids' dresses from Kent's, and the wedding party could stay here, most of them. Except that she will want a lot of bridesmaids, really a lot of them. We'll have to have a new rug for the hall. And perhaps ——"

Her father was still reading the letter. He seemed to be searching for something in it. Something that he did not see. Not right off. "I hope he's a good guy," he said finally, to himself, and her mother went on:

"We'll have to reserve the club—and about the invitations. Jim, will you call the club today, from your office? Will you be sure?"

HER father was just standing there. Cathy guessed he heard all right, but he didn't say anything. Not for a minute. He had on his gray suit and it was a nice suit, but he had had it for a long time. A very long time.

"Will you, Jim?" her mother prodded again, and her father straightened abruptly.

"Look," he said, and there was just that tinge of helplessness in his voice, that defensive helpless tinge, but a stubbornness still behind it all, "look, take it easy, will you? How can we throw any colossal wedding? How can we possibly do it? A nice one, sure. With a reception here in the garden maybe, but —— Anyway, that's not the important thing. The important thing ——"

Cathy got up then. She went upstairs to change her clothes for school. That was to get out of the room. She knew what was coming. Only this time it would be worse. Much bigger. She could see the look coming over her mother's face, starting at her eyes and going down through her tight little mouth and tensing her all over. That look. That "there are certain things that you have to do" look. That "we'll have to find the money—somehow" look. Cathy knew that.

SHE closed her door, but she could still hear the voices coming up the stairs, her mother's high and getting higher, her father's low and stubborn and, again, a little helpless. Then she heard the front door close, loud, and the straining cough and grind of her father's car and the rattle as it caught and went out over the hole in the driveway. Then everything was quiet. And she was sorry.

This was bigger than anything else that had been. This was Sandra getting married. This was really the climax. She sensed that, somehow. She put on the pink reversible that had been Sandra's many years ago, and went on down the back stairs as quietly as she could, because she did not want to see her mother now. She got her bicycle from the shed and pedaled out through the back lane. It was a little longer through the back lane, but it was past the old stable where Pandora would stick her head out the stall window and whinny softly as Cathy, as Cathy, rode past.

Pandora was Cathy's mare, and she was six years old and a chestnut and very lovely. She was more than just Cathy's mare. She was everything. She was Cathy's world because she belonged to Cathy, just to her, as had not been handed down. And because Cathy took care of her, all the care of her and had for three years, and loved her with a feeling so deep that it made her cry sometimes. And because they talked to each other and no one, no one else in the world knew what they said to each other in the fields or in the woods or when Pan stopped and gazed far down across the long hills and Cathy leaned her face against the mare's sleek neck and kept it there. Pandora was the only thing that Cathy had ever had really, that was hers. Pandora was her life.

She pedaled on through the grassy road now, and thought about Sandra and the wedding and the look that had been on her mother's face when her father had asked how they could do the big wedding. She understood, perhaps, a little, that look on her mother's face. She, Cathy, had felt that way—probably it was the same way—when the judge in a small show had given the ribbons to other horses and had left Pandora out. Maybe that was the way her mother felt.

Her mother had been brought up in the big place on the hill that was all cut up into small building lots now. There had never been any trouble about doing things in those days, about money. You just told someone and it was done. Cathy had heard about it often enough. And then her mother had married her father, and he had been quite a catch then, very glamorous because he was a big man at college and very handsome. At first everything had been fine and easy and her father had had good jobs. And then . . . it was not so easy.

(Continued on Page 128)

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Renegades

BY SJANNA SOLUM

No hand can hold the autumn back;
There is an end to summer.
A gracious heart acquires the knack
Of welcome to newcomer;

But my heart clings persistently
Unto the summer season—
And finds in every turncoat tree
The flagrant proof of treason!

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

THE Finest IN BASEBOARD RADIANT HEATING

New freedom in interior design—plus sun-like radiant warmth—are yours with the new Baseboard Radiant Panels by American-Standard. These panels are only 8″ high, replace baseboard, and can be painted to match wood trim. Note their use at steps and around solarium.

THE Finest IN RADIATOR HEATING

This Severn Oil Boiler is but one of many American-Standard units designed for radiator heating with steam, vapor or hot water. And for use with this equipment, you get a wide choice of baseboard radiant panels, radiators and convectors in attractive, modern styles—all by American-Standard. (In washroom, Compact Water Closet and Comrade Lavatory.)

THE Finest IN WINTER AIR CONDITIONING

One of the most popular Winter Air Conditioners is this gas-fired Wyandotte. Its beauty, compactness and efficiency typify the complete line of Winter Air Conditioners and Warm Air Furnaces offered by American-Standard and approved by our Institute of Heating and Plumbing Research. (In laundry, Alden Laundry Tray and Aeropel Home Ventilator.)

Any type of heating for any type of fuel

LOOK FOR THIS MARK OF MERIT

Do you want radiator heating? Warm air heating? Winter air conditioning? Would you prefer coal, gas or oil? Whichever you need for your home, you'll find the right answer in American-Standard.

No other name guides you to such a wide selection of heating equipment. No other name assures you such dependable performance at continued low fuel costs. Look for it—and the Mark of Merit when you buy.

AMERICAN-Standard

First in Heating and Plumbing

COLORFUL HOME BOOK describes America's top line of heating equipment and plumbing features—the finest, yet they cost no more. Sold through selected Wholesale Distributors to your Heating and Plumbing Contractor. Convenient time payments for remodeling. Write to American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corp., Dept. L89, Pittsburgh 30, Pa.

(Continued from Page 126)

Her mother's family had died and there was not, it had appeared, so much money after all—very little, in fact. The depression had come along, one of them, and her father's jobs had gotten smaller and less important. That was when the things had started, the unpleasant things. Cathy had heard that, too, through doors that were supposed to be closed.

It was not that her father was any failure. He did well enough, as well as he could. She knew that loyally. Well enough so that they had the old house in the country, and two cars usually, although they were pretty ancient and battered, and the other things like belonging to the country club, and it could have been fun, really. It would have been fun, except for her mother.

It was not her mother's fault, in the beginning. Cathy could see that. She had been brought up that way and she just could not get over doing things easily and automatically and without thinking about them and planning and saving. Things like charging clothes that she happened to like, and traveling when she decided to, and buying new furniture and giving big teas and parties. Things that she had always done just because she wanted to. It irked her not to be able to, and especially to see other people, people who had made their money more recently, doing those things all around her. Things that were her right, she felt, her born privilege.

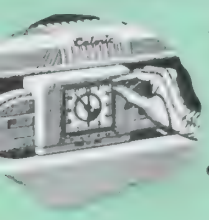
Cathy did not worry much about those things. She was happy enough with her horse and the long summer to play in, and the things to do in the country. Except that, sometimes, it made things at home unpleasant. Uncomfortable. And now, Sandra's wedding. That was really going to be unpleasant. She could tell that.

She had her ride late that afternoon, and it should have been fun, with spring coming out soft warm, the woods open without leaves as yet, so that you could see for great stirring miles, and the little mare dancing, playing with the bit, cavorting. But it wasn't quite fun. There was the evening ahead and the things that might be done, might be said. They came around you in a cold, depressing blanket.

Nothing was said at dinner. But there was that feeling. The feeling of her father eating with his head down, his great shoulders hunched. Her mother very straight, very poised and watchfully controlled. After dinner, when she had helped with the dishes, she went on up to do her homework. And then, waiting, she heard the voices.

At first they were just a low, then rising, blur behind closed doors, and she tried to concentrate on the lesson before her. And then there was one word, just one, that she thought she heard and her heart gave a great leap so that the breath came quick and sharp through her nostrils, and she had to hear. She had to be sure. She crept to the stairs and down. Just a few steps.

"There are ways—things like that that can be done, Jim," she heard her mother say. "And that you know can be done. I don't like to do them either, but this is the most important thing in Sandra's life—the biggest thing—the thing that she will look back on and remember all the rest of her years. And it must be perfect. It must be something that will carry her through—the thought of it—everything perfect."



And then her father's voice. "It will carry her through better," he said, "if it's the kind of wedding she ought to have: simple and straight and the kind of thing we ought to do—the kind of thing we can afford, and not be reaching for, trying all the time. If she's any good she'll want it that way. So will you." And her mother going on again about what must be done, and what her family had done always, and what was expected of them and how they couldn't let Sandra down.

"I'll give up things," her mother said. "I'll give up the car and any new clothes, afterward, and we can resign from the club. We can cut and scrape and pare. I'll do my part." She paused for a second. Then, "And Cathy must do hers too." There was a Entirely new and different cookbook. Recipes tested and timed by Jean Mattimore, shown at her new Caloric—America's easiest range to keep clean.

"COOKING BY THE CLOCK"
by Jean and Clarke Mattimore at all book stores.

"Automatic oven timer gives complete control over cooking results even when you're away."

"Top burners give any degree of heat you want, protect vitamins, minerals, save gas, speed cooking."

"Porcelain broiler is completely removable for easy cleaning, has extra-deep smokeless pan and rack."

All the Features you want—AND MORE

Flavor-Saver Dual Burners ★ Veri-Clean Broiler ★ Observador Oven ★ Hold-Heat Door Seals ★ Balanced-Action Door Spring ★ One-Piece Porcelain Burner Box ★ One-Piece Porcelain Front Frame ★ Porcelain Fluorescent Light ★ Hi-Lo Porcelain Broiler Pan & Rack (Pat. Pend.) ★ All Burners Guaranteed for Life.

Stove Corporation, Widener Building, Philadelphia 7, Pa.

CP Features available in every model. Specially engineered models for LP-Gas users beyond city mains. Dealers listed under CALORIC in Classified Telephone Directory

Ultramatic

Caloric Automatic Gas Ranges

REG U S PAT OFF

FRESH SCHOOL AN WORK LUNCHES!

WAXTEX

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

HEAVY WAXED PAPER

MARATHON CORPORATION
MENASHA, WISCONSIN

Solve Your Housing Problem - BUY GLIDER

Glider trailer coaches offer you everything you would want in a home of your own—plus mobility. Every room is equipped with the finest in living comfort. Your Glider dealer has a very liberal time payment plan for your convenience. Write today for the address of your nearest Glider dealer and free literature.

Member TCMA

GRACEFUL AS A BIRD IN FLIGHT

Glider Trailers

GLIDER TRAILER CO.

1826 W. KINZIE • CHICAGO 22, ILL.

"I dreaded shining silver until I found SILVENA"

ASK FOR THE GENUINE

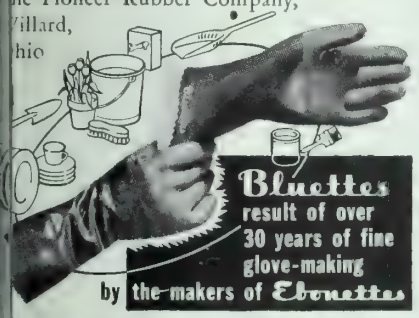
SILVENA POLISHING CLOTH

Only 50c—at better housewares and department stores everywhere.

One of the famous RITZ household cleaning cloths.

Since 1892, John Ritzenthaler, New York 13, N. Y.

MATERNITY DRESSES WRITE FOR CATALOG



Fall Styles

Smart, youthful styles for Morning, Street or Afternoon. Also Maternity Corsets & Lingerie.
CRAWFORD'S, Dept. A, 729 Balt. Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

...ged new
...ate to
...amous
...nettes
Bluettes
Home and Garden Gloves
New elastic knit-lining comfort!

...ou love their soft flexibility—tough liquid-...roof DuPont neoprene lined with two-...ay-stretch knit fabric, moisture absorbent. ...omfort in hottest dishwater, easy off when ...hone or doorbell rings. Short curved fingers ...r snug fit, non-slip finish holds slippery ...ings as if dry. For all hand-harming jobs ...house and garden. Keep your hands lovely ...ith extra-easy-to-wear Bluettes—buy them ... your drug, hardware, paint or depart-...ent store. (Note: Men like them, too!) ...he Pioneer Rubber Company, ...Villard, ...hio silence and Cathy froze, froze solid on the stairs. Knowing.

Her father's voice cut in. "I won't have it," he said. "I won't ask her to give up her horse. I bought her that three years ago, and it's all she's had, really, of her own. She's worn San's clothes that you've saved for years, and ridden San's old bicycle, and stayed at home from camp so that San could have money. I won't ask her to do this. I simply won't. She loves that horse, you know she does. I won't allow you ——"

And Cathy turned and crept on up the stairs and into her room, schoolwork forgotten now, everything forgotten except this terrible shock, this thing that couldn't be. That wouldn't be. She wouldn't give up Pan. Pan. Not Pan. Not Pan who was just everything and the reason for a glad morning and the last thing for a good night, and the one she could talk to and plan things with and care for. No, not Pan. And it was too terrible and she lay there, crying in great sobs, trying not to cry, trying to believe that she had not heard and that it was only a dream. Only . . . it wasn't a dream. It was true.

Because she knew her mother's voice. Her voice and the way she got things done. The way that started easily at first, and then urging, urging, crying perhaps just a little because you did not understand, urging always until—well, until you gave in, caved in. She had seen her father cave in that way. More often now, of recent months and years, because, she guessed, he was tired. Too tired to argue any more. He would be too tired this time too. She knew that. Pandora was gone. She realized that suddenly, Cathy did.

The wise woman doesn't tell what she does, but never does what cannot be told.

—CHINESE PROVERB.

Pandora was gone. And she sat up in bed and her sobs were dry now and caught in her throat and Pandora was gone.

She could think about it after a while. After the house was still and dark, and she could see the moon creep up and shadow the great and silent outdoors. She thought about it sitting at the window, and perhaps it was the thing to do. Perhaps it was right, giving her up. Perhaps it would mean all that to Sandra. She could almost have thought that it was right if it could have meant one thing. One thing that was so very important.

If it had meant that later, after San's wedding, they could be together again, all three of them, she and her mother and her father, and could have fun and laugh and do things together, simple things, very simple things. Things that did not mean trying and stretching and planning to keep up, straining always for something that never was really fun. There were so many of those things that were fun: quiet days and picnics and lazy evenings and that feeling—that so important feeling—that they liked one another, loved one another. If that could be, it would be worth giving up for—worth giving up anything for. Even Pan. Only—it wouldn't be.

It had been that way before and it hadn't worked. Not for very long. It had gone back again. Back to those wordless meals and the pall, the heavy pall, of things they couldn't do, of things they couldn't be. Only this time, she would have lost Pan. She had lost Pan now. And, during that long night, she decided what she would do.

She did her chores that next morning, took care of Pan, and, when she walked back to the house for breakfast, her steps were very sure, very straight and there was just that redness to her eyes to tell. That redness that went all through her and to her heart. Her father was just finishing, her mother sitting there, and the words between them stopped suddenly as she came in. She stood by the table and looked at them, very calmly, and

(Continued on Page 131)

This fresh, meaty aroma is one reason why Ideal is so very popular with women who have dogs and cats to feed. Ideal is a fresh, nourishing food that feeds instead of merely filling . . . No additional meat is ever needed . . . Remember this when you buy food for your pet.

Ideal
FEEDS YOUR DOG IN 7 WAYS

Processed by the exclusive Wilson's Balamac principle of *Bal*anced *Am*ino *Ac*ids, Ideal gives your dog full value in proteins. Ideal is the "7-Course Meal."

1. Meat by-products—for muscles and growth.
2. Bone—Calcium and phosphorus for bones and teeth.
3. Wheat and Barley—carbohydrates for energy.
4. Wheat Germ—for vitality and nerves.
5. Carrots—for clear eyes and glossy coat.
6. Cod Liver Oil, fortified—source of Vitamins A and D.
7. Soy Grits—for strong sinews and tendons.

Remember these facts when you are tempted by unknown or "cut-rate" dog foods. Be fair to your pet and—

REACH FOR IDEAL

WILSON & CO. INC.

Another WILSON Quality Product

Why not get one-third more refrigerated food storage in your new refrigerator?

The General Electric Space Maker gives you that much more . . . in the same kitchen floor space!

If you're about to buy a new refrigerator, here's an important thing to ask about:

How much refrigerated food-storage space do you get in relation to the over-all size of the refrigerator?

The General Electric Space Maker, you'll find, will give you one-third more space inside, compared with many refrigerators available today.

And, in addition, you get all these features for convenience and economy:

- Butter Conditioner—Keeps butter at just the spreading temperature you want.
- Big Freezing Compartment—Holds 24 packages of frozen food, plus 4 ice trays.
- Deep Drawers—6 inches deep. Will hold standing roasts and two-thirds bushel of fruits and vegetables under refrigeration.
- Bottle Storage Space—Holds 12 square, quart-size milk bottles. Space accommodates the tallest bottles.
- Sliding "Hostess Shelf"—Convenient for chilling and serving desserts and salads.
- Sealed-in System—More compact, more efficient, more economical than ever. Has 1/3 greater freezing capacity than the latest prewar unit.

In a General Electric, you can take dependability for granted!

On the basis of steady, year-in, year-out performance, General Electric Refrigerators have set a record unsurpassed by any other make.

The reason lies in the G-E sealed-in refrigerating system—oiltight, airtight, and unexcelled for efficient, economical operation. And today's system is more compact, efficient and economical than ever before.

See the new Space Maker models today at your General Electric retailer's. Wide selection includes both 8-cubic-foot and 10-cubic-foot models. Model NF-8 illustrated above. General Electric Company, Bridgeport 2, Conn.

Space Maker Refrigerators

More than 1,700,000 refrigerators in service 10 years or longer.

In the conventional 6-cubic-foot refrigerator—of the type you probably have in your kitchen today—you can store just this much food under refrigeration. Old-style design limits you to this amount . . . and no more!

In the new General Electric Space Ma look at all the food you can keep u refrigeration. Actually 1/3 more! this 8-cubic-foot refrigerator is alm exactly the same size outside! . . . fits same kitchen floor space.

GENERAL ELECTRIC

(Continued from Page 129)

t seemed, strangely enough and just for a oment, that she was older than either of em, more poised, more decided.

"I'm going to sell Pan," she said very ietly, and her father looked up, quick, d her mother's face went a little white. I am going to sell her today. Right now. Ir. De Angelis will buy her. He will pay ur hundred dollars for her, and he—he"—r voice shook, but only for a second, just r a second—"and he will be good to her. e will take care of her." Mr. De Angelis ran ıe hunt stables near by and he was a good an. Good with horses, good with people. Only," Cathy said, "only she has to go oday. She must go today. While I am at hool."

She stood there for a second, looking at ıem, and her father half rose and said, "No, athy, I won't ——" and she said, "But m going to. It's all decided. I decided it st night."

And her mother's face was suddenly roken and ready to cry, and, looking at her, athy almost broke, too, almost let those elings, deep and tight-buried, get away om her. Only . . . she didn't. She held ıem in, and was stiff and straight against er mother's arms around her, and her ears nd heart and mind ere closed tight gainst the words that er mother whispered. bout how proud she as, and how San ould appreciate it, nd how San would now. That didn't hatter. San didn't hatter. She wasn't oing it for San. She asn't doing it for nybody. She told erself that fiercely. he hated everybody, ddenly.

She hated San and his Tim Maitland nd her mother. Yes, he almost hated her oo. Everybody ex-ept her father. She urned and half ran om the room and ound her bicycle and as on it and pedal-ng furiously down the ath. Away from ome. Away from verything. Except hat on her way to school she ran into things wice, little things, just bushes at the side of he road and that she could not see.

Pan was gone when she got home that vening, late. Pan was really gone. And he let herself go then, Cathy did, let herself o just for minutes there in the stall that ad been Pan's. The stall and the old halter nd, there on their hook, the saddle and the ridle that had been Pan's. Those she still ad anyway. Those they had left her. And er face was hot and close into the hay that till lay piled in the small horse's manger, nd there was nothing now. Nothing.

Her father was very wise, very tender, in he days that followed. He didn't talk, he idn't say anything. Not about Pan. Just hat he patted Cathy's shoulder when he ould, and she would catch him watching her ometimes, with things in his eyes that neant he loved her. And that she looked ack to, telling him that she loved him too.

With her mother she was very straight, very polite, doing what she could and keeping he talk away from anything that she would ot, could not hear. Her mother was busy ow, occupied with the plans, the club, the hurch, letters to Sandra, all the things hat must be done. Except that, strangely enough, she did not talk about them when they were having dinner, when they were alone. She only did them.

And then they heard that San was coming on. She would be there, she wrote, ten days before the wedding, and Tim was coming with her. Tim could stay for only a day or two; he must get back to work so that they could have their three weeks for a honeymoon. They were going to Bermuda for those three weeks. Bermuda in the spring. It would be heavenly. San wrote that it would be heavenly. And the day came that they were to arrive.

Cathy stayed away that afternoon. She would not see them. She could not see them. She came home late from school, very late, and they had not arrived yet—her father was in meeting them and their plane had been delayed. She went on up to her room and got into bed and lay there, stiff and straight. Lay there thinking of the sounds that Pan had made, not so long ago. Pan moving in her stall and snorting, just a little, in the dark. Noises that were still now. All still.

She slept late that next day, Saturday, and, when she awoke, she heard voices downstairs, a deep new voice and Sandra's—so quick and bright and sure—and she couldn't see them. She simply could not, would not. She got up quietly and put on her dungarees and crept silently down the back stairs to get away and spend the day in the woods, out in the far fields. Perhaps, when the day was done, perhaps then she could come back and face them. Only, at the foot of the stairs, there was her father.

"I wouldn't, Cathy," he said, and his arm was big and strong and sure across her shoulders. "I wouldn't, honey. Come on in. You'll have to do it." And she clung to him, very close, just for a second. Then they went in. Together.

Sandra was there. San, tall and straight and very blond, with her blue eyes and her hair in that new, high way, and her skirt tight at the waist with a broad belt. San who took her in her arms and said, "Cathy darling, but you've grown. You're not my little sister any more," with the perfume that was so light, so tingling, and the sweater that was rough against her face. She let San kiss her and was very quiet and said nothing, almost, and then there was this man. This Tim.

And he was huge, his hair tight curly brown against his head, and he grinned at you and it was a warming grin. Tim she might have liked—she could have liked—and his hand was tremendous and calloused strong around hers, and she would not let herself like him. Not ever.

Then the talk went on about the wedding and the reception and the clothes and people and Bermuda and all, and it was a long time before she could escape and get out the side door and be away. It was their wedding, and they did not know what was all mixed up in it. They could never know, Sandra and Tim, this huge Tim. Not the way that she, that Cathy, knew.

There was a place far back among the wooded hills and she went there and the sun rose high and shifted and dropped low, and, late in the evening, she went home. And up to bed and no one noticed, because the house was full of people and there was music, gay and very loud through the open windows and out across through the May night. Music that was slow, sometimes, and that made her cry. That helped her to cry.

In the morning, because she had thought about it so much through the night, she went on down to the stable, and stood there by the stall. The early-morning sun made bright and dusty shadows through the cobwebbed window, and the straw was still deep on the stall floor. She turned, and there on the hook were the saddle and the bridle.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Days I Have Loved

By Isabelle Bryans Longfellow

Days I have loved come out at night like stars,
One by one, in the half-light over the hill,
Or lift as summer lilies under moonlight,
Ghostly and fragrant, virginal and still.

They are the petals lining each path of twilight,
Each rose I dropped within the close, cool jar;
Now they are one—one long, full breath of perfume,
One silver prick of a tremulous, small star.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Feast your eyes on these finest

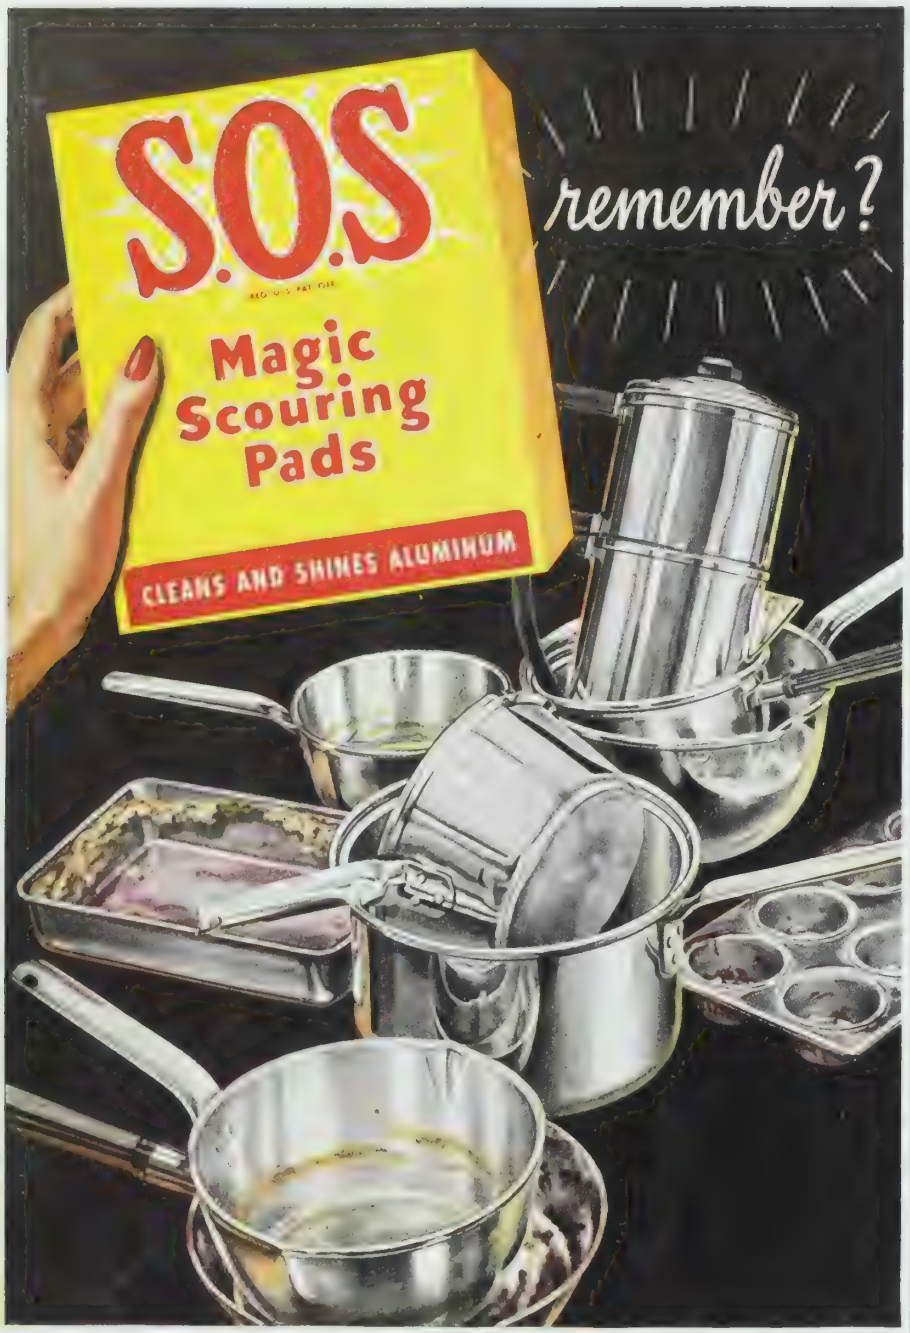
FLINT Stainless KITCHEN TOOLS

Lucky is the lady who has a set of Flint Stainless Kitchen Tools . . . the last word in beauty, design and efficiency. But rather than be envious of "her who has," get a set for yourself. You'll be so delighted you'll want to put Flint Stainless Kitchen Tools on your permanent gift list for any occasion. So, hurry to the nearest department, hardware or appliance store. Ask to see Flint Stainless Kitchen Tools—in sets or single pieces.

EKCO

FLINT Stainless KITCHEN TOOLS

SO GOOD THEY'RE GUARANTEED 15 YEARS



7-Piece Set Including Wall Rack in Gorgeous New Gift Box, $10.95

Single Pieces Individually Gift Boxed, from $1.50 to $2.00

ANOTHER GREAT PRODUCT BY EKCO

EKCO PRODUCTS COMPANY, CHICAGO 39, ILLINOIS

yes - remember S.O.S cleans pots and pans easier! faster!

Any scorch, stain or clinging grease simply "melts away" at the magic touch of S.O.S.!

Soap is right in each S.O.S. pad. Dip, rub, rinse—there's your shine—in seconds!

for pennies a month!

Yes—use S.O.S. every day for pennies a month. On aluminum pots and pans, S.O.S. is wonderful. Dozens of other uses. Try S.O.S.!

The S.O.S. Company, Chicago, Illinois, U.S.A., S.O.S. Mfg. Co. of Canada, Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

Those she had kept. She felt them, and they were stiff and drying. In the little room at one side there were saddle soap and a sponge, and she got them and went to work, softening the leather, working over it. And then there was a shadow dark at the door, and she looked up.

Tim Maitland was there at the door. Tim Maitland with his brown hair still wet from the comb, a sweater stretched over his great shoulders. And a smile, a very quiet and friendly smile replacing that broad grin. She looked at him and then away quickly, back to the tack that she was cleaning.

"Hello," he said, and his voice rumbled deep and very warm and nice to hear. "Keeping your gear in shape, eh? That's a good idea. I didn't know that you rode."

And she only nodded, keeping her eyes on her work, running the sponge up and down the softening reins.

"Do you ride a lot?" he asked, leaning against the door, and again she only nodded. He looked around. "Must be a horse here someplace," he said, pleasantly puzzled, and her head went lower, quickly, and she could feel the tears hot behind her eyes, and she would not cry. She would not.

She could feel him watching her there, his eyes on her, close, and then he said:

"Look, Cathy, you don't know me much. I'm just a stranger. A new guy. But I want to know you. You—you and I are kind of alike somehow. I don't know why, but I felt that yesterday. And there's something the matter, something bothering you. Isn't there, Cathy?"

If he would only go away, if he would only go away now and quickly. Before it was too late. But he wouldn't go away.

"Tell me, Cathy," he said, and his voice was very low. Too low. Too quiet. Too ——

And then the tears got away and she couldn't hold them back, and suddenly she was sobbing, wild and uncontrollable sobs that shook her small shoulders and loosened her hold on the reins that hung from their hook. There were arms around her all at once. Big, strong and very powerful arms, and very gentle somehow. And that did it. That did it all. And she was telling him, telling him everything in one great rush that came out and broke and poured on and on and let her heart out with it. All her feelings that had been in there so tight and that had to come out and that were coming now. With his hand very gentle on her shoulders and her face tight against that rough soft sweater.

It was a long time before the words stopped coming and the sobs calmed slowly and disappeared, and then he said, "I see," and his voice was different now and a little stiff and strange, "I see. Where is your horse now, Cathy?" and she told him. "Come on," he said.

THERE was a car in the driveway and they got in, and she looked at his face and wondered how it could change so, and how his mouth could be so sternly straight, his jaw set so stubbornly. They drove along the road she knew so well and up into the dooryard of the hunt stables. Mr. De Angelis was there. Mr. De Angelis had put her on her first pony.

"Could I have a word with you?" Tim said, and they went to one side and Cathy heard a sound. A low but calling sound. And she was through the door to the stable and there, in a far corner, was Pandora, head turned and nostrils nickering gently.

They found her there, Tim Maitland did and Mr. De Angelis, after a while, and Tim said, "You and I had better get back and have some breakfast, Cathy. Later you can come over and get your horse. There's something else I want your help on first."

His voice was very gruff and she looked at him and she had known somehow. She had known and she could only look at him. That was all and it was enough, and they turned very quickly and went on out to the car, and her hand found his and clung t it. Very tight. The sun was bright now a it was the new day and it couldn't be true d it was true. And then Tim Maitland sp e.

"Cathy," he said, "this is part of it. O something. Perhaps the least impor nt part. I want you to come with me for he rest. Will you?"

And she nodded, not knowing wha he meant, and they drove on home and u to the front door. There were voices within, he sound of dishes, breakfast. Tim led the w y.

THREE people looked up at them from he table. With expressions that, as they loo d. changed slowly. Her father's face that q s-tioned—and then waited. Her mother wi a look that went to apprehension, to un r-tainty. And San who didn't know, w o couldn't understand. Tim Maitland tal d to them easily, but with a note in his v ce that said this was a vital thing. To him.

"We're sorry to be late," he said, d Cathy watched him and he was her g d. "but we had a little errand to do. We — glancing down at her—"we had to go c r and get Cathy's horse."

There was a silence, long and tigh y strung. He looked at San.

"You don't know about this, I guess," he said.

He told her, briefly. Then he moved ward and his hands went tight around the b of a chair. They gripped it closely and h voice was very earnest.

"I'm a kind of a dumb guy," he said, " t some things seem awfully important to Others don't." He half grinned. "Our fam y lost their shirts, financially, some years a 'Twenty-nine, if you re member. And, for so reason, we've had a more fun ever since. live like this, in the co try, and we've got an horse or two and some d and a lot of dungarees a plenty of open country. have an awful good time people like us that way, well, we usually li them. That seems more important, sort o He paused again and looked at them ve straight. "To me," he said, "it seems a more important that Cathy have the ho she loves than it is for us to have a t mendous wedding. I might be wrong."

His eyes went to San and stayed there a this was important to him. The most imp tant thing.

"But"—and he waved a hand—"but i too late to do much about that. And it is really my business anyway. It's you Only"—and his eyes stayed close on San "only I've done something that is my bu ness. And San's." His hands moved up a clenched again on the chair top. "We we going to Bermuda, San and I. We had enou money for the trip. Except . . . that I just bought a wedding present. In one w it's a present for Cathy. In another, a perhaps a more important way, it's a prese for all of us. Particularly for San and me. think we'll enjoy it a lot. Later. More, reall than Bermuda. I've just," he said, "ju bought Cathy's horse back for her."

He spoke the next words just to San. A they were words that meant so much him. That meant everything.

"I hope you agree with me, San," he sai He watched her.

There was silence for a minute then, a lon minute, and the tall clock ticked solemn away. Then San got up and stood besi them, beside Tim and Cathy. She was ver tall and she did not smile. But she leaned t him.

"I think," she said, very softly, "that is the nicest wedding present anyone coul have. Ever."

And suddenly they were a close famil very close, and Cathy's mother was the with them, and she could feel, Cathy coul the tenseness, the tightness, the wall betwee them all, soften and break and drift awa And the sun was very bright through th faded drapes, and no one seemed to ca that they were faded. And never woul again.

THE EN

How can we venture to judge others when we know so well how ill equipped they are for judging us?

—COMTESSE DIANE.

Look, Ladies!

THE QUALITY, HOME-ENGINEERED BRAND THAT ASSURES LONG LIFE RESISTANCE TO SOAP, GREASE, HEAT AND WEAR

ID-RESISTANT! Rubbermaid Vacuum Cup thtub Mat—Slip-resistant even on wet soapy sur-es . . . improves your footing, reduces accidents. lovely pastel colors to brighten your bathroom.

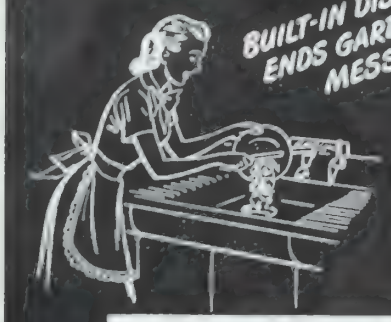
ILL-PROOF! Rubbermaid Toilet Top Tray—Fits y tank. High rim dams spilled toiletries, keeps throom tidy. Handy too for potted plants on ndow sills or anywhere in the house.

TWO-FACED! Rubbermaid Combination Stove Mat Cutting Board protects stove, refrigerator or table top. One side has resilient work surface, stamped with table of kitchen measures; other side, a hard cutting board where you need it—on the stove.

TABLE-SAV-ER! Rubber-maid Protector Pad... cushions meat grinder clamp. Never slips or twists.

FLOOR-HUGGER! Rubber-maid Dust Pan . . . don't stoop to sweep—skid-resistant feet hold pan securely in correct sweeping position—it's all rubber and can't scratch floors.

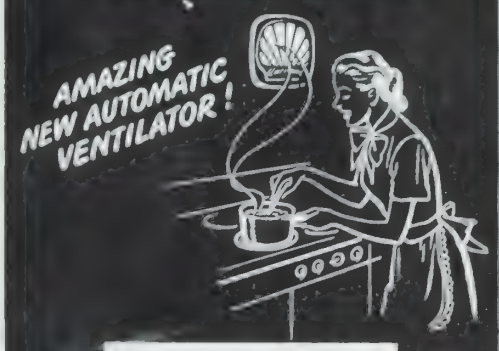
MATCH—OR MIX IN CHEERY KITCHEN COLORS! Rubbermaid Deluxe Dish Drainer—holds a lot more dishes than any other basket design—reduces chipping and scratching. Silver stands up, drains fast. Rubbermaid Deluxe Drainboard Tray—channels dishwater into sink. Rubbermaid Sink Mat—cuts breakage and clatter. Rubbermaid Sink Strainer—bang it! You can't chip it—it can't mar sink or step-on can.



THE WOOSTER RUBBER CO. DEPT. LH-2, WOOSTER, OHIO

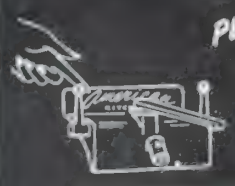
Rubbermaid Houseware

Send for Catalog showing complete line



WHEREVER HOUSEWARES ARE SOLD

You'll Find
ALL THIS and BEAUTY too... in your new American KITCHEN



BUILT-IN DISPOSER ENDS GARBAGE MESS!

Now—a perfected disposer! Ask your dealer how quickly it disposes of all kitchen waste—even hardest bones! Safe, odorless, won't jam nor clog! Costs less than 1c a day to operate!

AMAZING NEW AUTOMATIC VENTILATOR!

Say good-bye to cooking odors, kitchen heat and greasy walls! This new-type ventilator ends them all! Whisper-quiet, trouble-free! Uses less current than 60-watt bulb! Easy to install.

PLUS MANY, MANY OTHER MAGIC WORK-SAVERS!

Look at American Kitchens and you will see why more women want them! By comparison, other so-called "modern" kitchens are old-fashioned! See the all-new American Kitchen today!

NO OTHER KITCHEN BRINGS YOU ALL OF THESE WONDERFUL, EASY-TO-SEE ADVANTAGES!

You will save yourself up to an hour's work every day when you have a modern American Kitchen! For countless magic work-savers will be at your command . . . to help you tick off your kitchen duties quickly, efficiently. Imagine—having all your cabinet drawers rounded inside, as easy to wipe out as a bowl! Special lever-type faucets that flick on or off at the touch of your finger. Concealed drawer and door pulls that eliminate dirt-catching handles! Wonderful new combination Serv-Cart and movable work table (shown under counter at right above)! Double-action spring hinges hold doors fully opened or closed, they can't stand ajar! Usual dirt-catching rear ledge on sink bowls eliminated! Flush-sealed counter tops. Handy, divided cutlery drawer. Hidden cutting board, and cleanser rack! Extended counter tops allow plenty of knee-room! Drawers open and close silently, without effort. You get all these plus many more great benefits when you're the proud owner of a beautiful, work-saving American Kitchen—for only a few dollars a month! Send 25c for 2 full-colored booklets on smart new treatments for every type of kitchen. Address American Kitchens, Dept. LH-9, Connersville, Indiana.

For the Name of Your Local Dealer, Call Western Union by Number. Ask for Operator 25.

FREE KITCHEN PLANS!
No cost or obligation.
Come and see me.
Your American Kitchens Dealer

American KITCHENS
STYLED IN STEEL
American Central — Division AVCO Manufacturing Corp., Connersville, Ind.

PHOTOS BY STUART

Far above Cayuga's waters, near the beautiful campus of Cornell University, the girls of Kappa Kappa Gamma entertain.

Conversation Piece

SEPTEMBER and soirees—they seem to go together. The summer interlude is past. Clubs and societies pull themselves together and start a new season. The sorority rushing season goes into high gear. All these forgatherings mean parties and more parties. None of these occasions can be successful without eating, and eating well. And the kind of food that will register these out-of-the-groove effects isn't any ordinary bread-and-butter meal. To feed, say, a couple of dozen females on this level takes a bit of doing if one hostess must manage it all, but fortunately most of these affairs are handled on a share-the-work plan.

In planning a meal of this sort there are a number of points to be considered besides the No. 1 requirement that the food must be delicious: it should be reasonably simple to prepare, it should look pretty, it should require no last-minute effort except assembly and it must be easy to serve.

We'll build the meal around a hearty hot dish—shrimp creole. Served on the same plate there will be two salads, quite different in character. One will be a molded vegetable-and-egg salad and the other will be a combination of avocado and pineapple with a chutney dressing. With the one hot dish and the two salads-

(Continued on Page 136)

RUTH MILLS TEAGUE

s call for exciting food—and no matter how guests you invite, preparations can be simple his menu. The meal (right) centers around a hot dish of shrimp creole and two savory s, each quite different—one a combination of do and pineapple with a chutney dressing, the l a molded vegetable-and-egg salad. And for t (below) an extra-special treat—a big bowl illa ice cream with bowls of sirups, whipped , cherries and nuts standing near by, ready for e-your-own sundae. A wonderful time for all.

Peaches, fresh in August...

still fresh in February!

THE calendar has less meaning when you own a Philco Freezer. Below-zero storage keeps foods freezer-fresh the year around. Strawberries in January ... red-ripe and luscious. Corn-on-the-cob at Christmas ... tender and thrilling to Winter's jaded tastes. Fresh-tasting peaches in February ... orchard-ripe and delicious. The joy of a well-filled larder, no matter what the emergency of weather or pop-in guests. Get the full story from your Philco dealer.

Says Mrs. Frank Allison of Dallas, Texas

"I find so many uses for our Philco Freezer, I'd hardly know where to start telling you about them. The freezer idea sort of grows on you the longer you have one."

Keep Foods FREEZER-FRESH*

* FRESH AS THE DAY THEY WERE PICKED, CAUGHT, OR BOUGHT.

PHILCO MODEL AV-75. Deluxe Upright; large 7½ cu. ft. capacity holds up to 300 lbs. of frozen foods. 3 compartments. Patented sloping shelves and 2 position drop doors conserve cold. Temperatures as low as 15° below zero. Built-in Thermometer, Door Lock, Temperature Control and Guardian Bell. Hermetically Sealed Power-System. Philco quality throughout.

PHILCO FREEZER

Famous for Quality the World Over

we need only some relishes and bread-and-butter ribbon sandwiches to complete the main course.

The dessert will be pretty special and a lot of fun—and decidedly popular, I feel sure. In fact, it would stand alone as a dessert party for some occasion when you didn't want to have a whole meal. A huge bowl of vanilla ice cream with a studding of lady-fingers around the rim will be the center of attraction. Grouped around it will be bowls of chocolate, butterscotch and raspberry sirups—dopes, we used to call them, but I'm sure that's démodé now—a big bowl of whipped cream and a bowl each of maraschino cherries and chopped nuts. Make your own sundae to suit your own taste is the idea, and there's enough variety to satisfy anyone's taste.

There's the menu and we're ready for recipes, which will serve twenty-five people. If the party is to be larger or smaller you'll have to do some arithmetic.

SHRIMP CREOLE

Use 6 or 7 pounds fresh or 4 to 5 pounds frozen shrimps. More will do no harm but, unfortunately, shrimps are not inexpensive little numbers and you'll get a very good result with the quantities I've indicated. Recently a JOURNAL reader in North West Africa wrote me that she paid five cents a pound for the creatures—jumbo shrimps, at that. Maybe they don't taste so good when they cost so little, but I'd be happy to find out firsthand. Wash fresh shrimps through several cold-water baths and plunge them into a large pot of rapidly boiling water to which a cup of vinegar and some salt and whole pepper have been added. Boil 10 minutes, cool and remove shells and black veins. If they are extra-large, split in half the long way so that each half looks much like a whole shrimp. If frozen shrimps are used, thaw them and remove veins.

Wash 4 cups rice. Drain and spread on a towel.

In a very large skillet or Dutch oven heat 4 tablespoons salad oil. Add 5 slices bacon cut into cubes and 5 cloves garlic finely minced. Lower heat and cook, stirring often, until bacon and garlic begin to brown, and add drained rice. Mix thoroughly and let rice brown slowly, turning it over often with a pancake turner so that all the grains will brown evenly. When it is pale gold in color, stir in 2 medium onions, coarsely minced, 3 large or 4 medium green peppers chopped and 4 tablespoons chopped pimiento. Cook a few minutes longer, stirring constantly, and transfer to a large pot or casserole that will stand direct heat. Add 3 cups tomato sauce, 5 cups water, 2 tablespoons sugar, 1½ teaspoons salt, 3 teaspoons bouillon powder, 2 teaspoons chopped fresh sweet basil or 1 teaspoon dried sweet basil, 2 tablespoons chopped parsley, 1½ teaspoons freshly ground black pepper and 1 teaspoon gourmet or other Chinese seasoning powder. Return to very low heat and cook until most of the moisture has been absorbed, stirring occasionally to prevent sticking. Add shrimps and 4 more cups water and toss with two spoons until well mixed. Taste for seasoning.

Now the shrimp creole is ready for final cooking in a 350°F. oven—about 45 minutes. Cover tightly during baking and add a little water if mixture becomes too dry. When served, the shrimp creole should be quite moist but not runny.

Obviously this dish needn't be prepared the day before, but it can be, and that's a virtue. To reheat, put the utensil in which it was baked in a pan of hot water either in a 200°F. oven or over direct heat on top of range. A little water should be added before reheating, but be cautious about this. The mixture will appear to be very dry after it has stood overnight, but the moisture will reappear when it is hot. Serve in either casseroles or a chafing dish.

MOLDED VEGETABLE SALAD

Hard-cook 14 eggs. Put them in cold water at once and peel. Slice in half the long way and remove yolks. Mash yolks and add 3 tablespoons softened butter or margarine, 5 tablespoons vinegar, ⅛ teaspoon cayenne pepper, 2½ teaspoons salt, 1 tablespoon sugar, ½ teaspoon curry powder, 2 teaspoons prepared mustard and ⅛ teaspoon tumeric. Blend well and pass through a potato ricer or sieve. Fill center of egg

Enjoy the DELIGHTFULLY DIFFER flavor of the original KAUKAUN KLUB Cheese food

• FOR COOKING, LUNCHES, PARTIES, S

Look for the blue, self-serv carton or the familiar crock the refrigerator at your fo store. Select from...

FIVE UNIQUE FLAV

- Kaukauna Klub—Aged cheddar w hearty, mellow flavor.
- Kaukauna Klub-Hickory Smoked— gent, smoked flavor from genuine hickory w
- Kaukauna Klub Garlic—Just the right of garlic for added zest.
- Kaukauna Klub Appetizer—Onior paprika adds delightful zip.
- Kaukauna Klub with Port Wine—The bouquet of select wine.

made ONLY by the SOUTH KAUKAUNA DAIRY KAUKAUNA, WIS.

The Nation's Cheese Treat from Wisconsin's Dairyla

Meat goes farther when yo SERVE A STEW

Wilson's B-V makes stews, cas roles and leftover dishes extra r and meaty. Thicken gravy and a 1 to 2 tsp. of Wilson's B-V for ea lb. of meat.

Wilson's B-V is a rich meat and vegetable extract approved by the Rector Kitchens for stews, casseroles, gravies and as bracing hot drinks.

WILSON & CO. INC

The Wilson label protects your

THE BEST BUTTE comes i

Paraffined Carto

Most manufacturers package their highest qual butter in paraffined cartons. They rely on the sturdy, waxed packages to preserve fine flav

Also used to protect the quality and flavor of ice cream, margarine, lard shortening, and frozen foods.

For Finest Quality Look For The PARAFFINED CART

EARN $50.00* SELL $1 Bo

OF NEW, GORGEOUS CHRISTMAS CARDS

Take easy orders, earn big cash profits! Lovely, colorful Everyday or Christmas assortments feature glistening "Relative Seals," to personalize each card. Profitable "Business Getter Blotters" our gift to help you get more sales. Sell friends, relatives, business people $1 box—make 50¢ cash fast—100% profit! GREATEST VALUE EVER OFFERED. Write today for samples on approval.

HOUSE OF HARMON • DEPT. R-21 • HARMO

NABISCO PARTY NEWS

For fun and flavor-serve
"Funny Face" Sandwiches made with Old Fashion Ginger Snaps

SANDWICHES

Cream cheese Cream
Old Fashion Ginger Snaps

Soften cream cheese with cream and spread between two Old Fashion Ginger Snaps — then, with more cheese in a pastry tube, "draw" on the face. Here's a treat to make youngsters goggle-eyed—cause table talk with older folk. The spice-nice flavor of Ginger Snaps "lights up" the mild cheese filling... makes any plain dessert twice as tasty! Satisfy the children's between-meal yen for sweets with Ginger Snaps. Look for the red Nabisco Seal whenever you buy cookies.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

KVP Household PAPERS

Beauty and Utility United!

The Aladdin Teapot brings pleasure to all who love the golden beverage. It is a lovely, traditional design, enriched with genuine gold decoration. And, its use assures perfect tea every time, for it is made of secret process china that will never craze, stain, or absorb.

The Hall China Company—World's Largest Manufacturer of Decorated Teapots and Cooking China.

Hall Teapots
OF SUPERIOR QUALITY CHINA
Sold by All Leading Dealers

whites with this mixture, pressing it down firmly to make a neat flat top. There will be some filling left over, and if it isn't eaten on the spot by whoever is fixing the egg, use it the next day as a sandwich spread or mix it with salad.

Soften 5 envelopes unflavored gelatin in 1 cup cold water. Pour over this 4 cups boiling water and stir until gelatin is dissolved. Add 1½ cups vinegar, juice of 2 lemons, 5 teaspoons salt and 4 tablespoons sugar. Cut red radishes into thin slices to make 2½ cups, cut cucumbers into dice to make 3 cups and chop Bermuda onions to make ½ cup.

Nine-inch-square cake pans will be fine molds for the salad. Each pan will make nine 3-inch-square servings—just about the right size. Of course individual molds can be used if you prefer, and very pretty they look, but at serving time they present a problem and I'm picking the easy way. Rinse pans in cold water and shake out excess moisture. Pour a thin layer of gelatin mixture into each pan and put bowl containing the rest of it in a pan of cold water. Put cake pans in refrigerator, and when the aspic has begun to set arrange 9 stuffed egg halves in each pan, spacing them evenly, cut side down. Return them to refrigerator. When aspic in bowl is thoroughly chilled and has begun to thicken a little, mix it with the cut vegetables, taste for seasoning and add salt and sugar if needed. Now spoon this mixture into the cake pans so that eggs are completely covered and store in refrigerator.

To serve, turn molds out on a flat, cold surface and cut salad into neat squares, with an egg in the center of each. Use a pancake turner to transfer squares to a large cold platter, inverting them so that egg side will be up. They'll be manageable because in working out the proportions of gelatin and liquids I've allowed for the moisture that will seep out of the vegetables. That's a good hint. Always use a little more gelatin than you think you should when making a molded-vegetable salad. Garnish the platter with a lot of crisp salad greens and put a bowl of mayonnaise beside it on the table.

The difference between a man's sweetheart and his wife is about seven dollars per meal.

AVOCADO-AND-PINEAPPLE SALAD

Three No. 2½ cans sliced pineapple, 4 or 5 large avocados and plenty of greens will make a tremendous salad. The day before, drain the sirup from the pineapple and cut each slice into 4 pieces. Wash salad greens, wrap in towels or put in cloth bags and store in refrigerator. Make the chutney dressing—we'll come to that in a minute.

The salad can be arranged on its platter half an hour or so before serving. As you slice the avocados, submerge the pieces in a solution of ½ cup water and the juice of 2 lemons to prevent discoloration. The fruit can be cut into long slender slices or into cubes. Have a flat dish of paprika at hand and dip the rim of each piece of pineapple into it. This fancy touch of red looks pretty and it tastes good too.

Put a good bed of greens on the salad platter and arrange the pieces of avocado and pineapple in whatever pattern appeals to you. Hit-and-miss is fine, or the two fruits can be arranged in alternate sections. With the lovely pale green of the avocado and the yellow and bright red of the pineapple your salad is bound to be beautiful.

CHUTNEY DRESSING

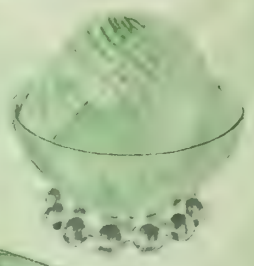
Mix together 1 cup salad oil, ⅓ cup vinegar, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 clove garlic, grated, and 1 cup chutney cut into small pieces. Put this in a jar, shake well and store in refrigerator. Serve the dressing in a bowl beside the salad platter, and give it a good shaking before you pour it into the bowl. Chutney dressing doesn't look very pretty—it's dark, as it would have to be—but oh, how it tastes.

STUFFED DILL PICKLES

Several days ahead of time cut the ends from 12 of the biggest dill pickles you can

(Continued on Page 139)

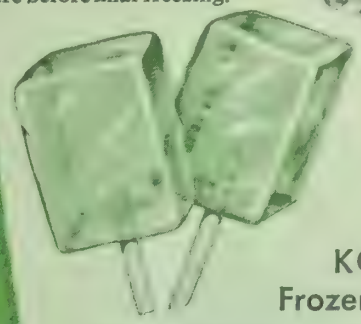
Enjoy Kool-Aid Home-Made Refreshers!



Kool-Aid
The BUDGET BEVERAGE
Less Than
1¢ A GLASS!

NO OTHER beverage at any price gives your children more delicious refreshment than Kool-Aid. One 5¢ package makes two quarts of thirst-quenching refreshment. No other beverage can match Kool-Aid for wholesome home-made goodness, SIX zestful flavors to choose from.

Kool-Aid
FROZEN DESSERTS



1 package Kool-Aid (any flavor)
1 cup heavy cream
2 cups milk 1 cup sugar

(1) Dissolve Kool-Aid and sugar in milk; turn into freezing tray and freeze ¾ to 1 hour (until slushy). (2) Whip cream (well chilled) until stiff. (3) Add partly frozen Kool-Aid mixture to whipped cream and whip just enough to mix well, but keep as cold as possible. (4) Return quickly to freezing tray and freeze at coldest point. Requires no more stirring. When frozen, set control back to normal. Makes over 1 quart. If desired lighter, beat 2 egg whites fluffy with 2 tablespoons sugar and fold into above mixture before final freezing.

6 DELICIOUS FLAVORS

KOOL-AID
Frozen Suckers

Dissolve thoroughly 1 package Kool-Aid and ⅔ cup sugar in 1 quart water. Pour into cube tray and freeze hard. Remove like ice cubes as wanted, or wrap separately in wax paper and keep in coldest section of freezing compartment. A sucker stick or paper spoon may be frozen in each cube to provide handle.

At Your Grocer 5¢

© 1948, Perkins Products Co.

"My A&P is a Wonderful Food Department Store!"

Marketing can be such fun at A&P. It's like shopping in a big, bright department store devoted only to the finest of foods. Hundreds of good things to eat are attractively displayed in neat departments . . . to make it so easy for you to make your selections. And it's simple to figure out just what you wish to spend . . . because every item is plainly priced. Then, too, department after department has its many different foods prepared and arranged for your choice by specialists. And so quality and freshness are carefully guarded.

Here is something else you'll like about A&P: it strives to keep its prices for all its foods at one attractive level all week long. This lets you shop any day you prefer and be sure of worth-while savings.

A&P Super Markets

A&P

YOURS FOR 43¢ TO 47¢ A PORTION*

September Buffet

(Serves 6)

Tomato Soup
Paradise Fruit Ring
Chocolate Mint Roll
Iced Tea Iced Coffee

PARADISE FRUIT RING

Prepare 2 packages strawberry gelatin according to package directions. Cool. When slightly thickened add 1 cup diced pineapple. Pour into ring mold. Chill until firm. Unmold on serving platter and surround with pineapple rings, avocado wedges, apple and grapefruit sections and cream cheese and nuts on salad greens. Serve with salad dressing or whipped cream. 6 servings.

*Menu and recipe tested and priced by A&P Test Kitchen. Cost based on average prices in A&P Super Markets at time of going to press.

A&P TESTED

(Continued from Page 137)

ıd, and gouge out the centers with an ıple corer. Put the hollowed-out pickles ı a dish with ½ pound light brown sugar ıd 2 cloves garlic cut in half, cover and ore in refrigerator. The sugar will draw ıt the juice and make the pickles very isp. Their position in the bowl or dish ıould be changed occasionally so that ıey'll all come in contact with the sugary ıice.

The day before the party, mix ⅓ pound eam cheese with 2 tablespoons finely ıopped onion, 14 tablespoons finely ıopped carrot, ½ teaspoon salt and 3 ıblespoons sweet or sour cream. Stir un- l thoroughly blended. Soften 1 envelope elatin in 2 tablespoons cold water and eat over boiling water until dissolved. dd the dissolved gelatin to the cheese ıixture and stir.

Stand the pickles upright on paper owels to drain and fill with the cheese, nd so on. Wrap each one separately in wax aper and store in refrigerator. To serve, lice into chunks with a very sharp knife nd arrange in relish dishes with carrot trips that have stood overnight in ice ater.

BREAD-AND-BUTTER RIBBON SANDWICHES

Iake three-decker sandwiches of thinly liced bread, crusts removed, and butter r margarine. Add a ew drops yellow egetable coloring to utter or margarine o that the bread nd the spread will ıave a nice contrast f color. The sand- iches can be made head of time and rapped first in wax aper and then in lamp towels to pre- ent drying. To erve, cut both ways liagonally to make triangles out of ach sandwich and rrange on serving lates, points up.

MAKE-YOUR-OWN SUNDAES

If you like, you can buy the sauces ready made. That's easier, I'll admit, but it's no trick at all to make them yourself.

Butterscotch Sauce. Put 2 well-packed cups light brown sugar in a saucepan with 7 tablespoons butter or margarine. Set this over medium-low direct heat and cook 8 minutes, stirring constantly. Add 1¼ cups boiling water and 1 teaspoon salt and cook 14 or 15 minutes more. Stir often, scraping bottom of pan, until sugar and fat have melted into water, then stir occasionally. Set pan in cold water and when sauce is really cold beat with rotary beater several minutes and store in refrigerator. The sauce will take on a lovely café au lait color. If it stands in the refrigerator very long it separates, but just a few whisks with the rotary beater will bring it back to its original consistency and appearance. This sauce has a rich butterscotch taste, but it isn't so gooey that it sticks to your spoon and gets involved with your chin if you aren't careful.

Chocolate Sauce. In a saucepan put ½ pound grated sweet chocolate, 3 tablespoons sugar, 2 tablespoons butter or margarine and 1¼ cups water. Bring to a boil and continue cooking for 2 minutes, or until chocolate is melted. Add 1 teaspoon cornstarch mixed with 2 tablespoons water and boil ½ minute longer. Add ½ teaspoon vanilla and when cold store in refrigerator. This makes a bittersweet sauce, so you'd better taste. You may want a little more sugar.

Raspberry Sauce. Thaw 2 ten-ounce packages frozen raspberries and press through a fine sieve to remove seeds. Add to pulp and juice 1 cup sugar, ½ cup water and 1 tablespoon lemon juice and boil 3 minutes. Cool and store in refrigerator.

These recipes will make plenty of sauce for a large crowd unless everyone wants the same kind—and they just mustn't do this to you. I don't have to tell you how to whip cream, but make it good and stiff and use a pint of heavy cream.

To serve the dessert, put the vanilla ice cream in a big bowl, and allow at least 1 quart of ice cream to six people—maybe more. This dessert isn't going to be fun unless it's opulent. Stick ladyfingers deep into the bowl all around the edge. Around this big center bowl arrange the three sauces, a small bowl each of maraschino cherries and chopped nuts and a fairly large bowl of whipped cream. For the nuts my choice is pistachios, because I'm crazy about their taste and they look so pretty, but any nuts are good, so take your choice. Whatever kind you use, be sure to give them a little drying out in a warm oven to make them crisp.

Service. The actual serving of this meal needs little comment from me. Buffet, of course, not only because it's the most efficient and easy form of service for a big crowd, but because it's desirable from the standpoint of fluidity. Everyone will want to talk to everyone, and with only a plate to carry about the shifts can be as many and often as any heart desires.

If the party is given in a sorority house, and the food prepared by the girls themselves, the whole thing can be accomplished without seriously disrupting the kitchen, where the daily routine of three meals a day goes right along, party or no party. Two or three girls can take over each of the cooking jobs, and a schedule can be arranged to let the groups have the kitchen for an hour at some non-busy time of day. The dessert sauces can be prepared several days in advance of the party, and so can the salad dressings and the pickles.

An hour in the kitchen the morning of the day before the party will take care of the molded vegetable salad, especially with two or three pairs of hands busy with the task. An hour in the afternoon will be long enough for another set of hands to produce the shrimp creole—and so on. With a co-operative spirit—and no manual co-operation—on the part of whoever presides over the kitchen, there should be no problems and no exasperation. And won't it be fun to produce the party food yourselves? After all, you'll soon be managing your own homes where entertaining won't be taken care of for you—and it will be up to you.

The division of labor for this affair will be truly simple if the food needn't be prepared in one kitchen. The various jobs can be parceled out, and no one—and no kitchen—will feel the slightest strain.

For the last-minute assembly—arranging of platters, and so on, and getting them on the table—it will be a good idea to work out a complete plan of action. You can't all be in the kitchen at once, but you needn't be. With everything carefully planned, shifts can operate on schedule without stumbling over one another and the meal will appear on the beautifully decorated table—of course there must be flowers—without anyone's being away from the gay scene in the living room long enough to be missed.

I've swung this meal alone, and it wasn't too much of a chore; but there's a certain satisfaction in co-operation for its own sake, especially when it's smooth co-operation producing a smooth result. And no matter how it's accomplished, a successful performance with this menu should set a September standard that will be an inspiration for the rest of the season. THE END

Valley Train

BY LORI PETRI

The valley train, whistling afar,
  Is usually pursed, aloof.
Tonight, like a dissolving star,
  Its silvery fringes reach my roof.
For now the air is swept of wings
  (Moth is on pane and bird in nest)
And of all vapory, voweled things
  (Song is in cheek and tongue at rest);
The winds are curled up into cloud,
  The drowsy air is drained of blue
And soft as a diffusing shroud
  Heaven fills up with faint halloo.

A Home of Our Own

Just as we dreamed it . . . a cozy table for two, John's favorite dessert for dinner, and our very own Reed & Barton Sterling! Like thousands of other young couples, we think of our Reed & Barton Solid Silver as something to live up to . . . a symbol of all the lovely things we want for our home.

HELPFUL HOSTESS HINTS: For fascinating and valuable booklet, "How To Be A Successful Hostess", send 10 cents to Reed & Barton, Box 990, Department L, Taunton, Massachusetts.

IT'S SMART TO CHOOSE THE FINEST STERLING

Reed & Barton

STERLING SILVER

Marlborough STERLING

A Group of the World's Most Beautiful Sterling Patterns

You can see what's cooking in Pyrex Ware

DOUBLE-DUTY CASSEROLE
1½ qt. only 79¢

Two sparkling Pyrex dishes for the price of one. Bottom is an open baking dish. Utility cover is a pieplate. Clear glass lets you see when food is done...keeps food hot on table. No wonder Pyrex ware makes anyone a better cook. 4 sizes from 69¢ to $1.19.

THERE'S ONLY ONE PYREX WARE AND IT'S MADE BY CORNING GLASS WORKS

PYREX OVENWARE

"PYREX" is a Reg. T. M. of Corning Glass Works in the United States and in Canada of Corning Glass Works of Canada, Ltd.

QUICK AND EASY for two

BY LOUELLA G. SHOUER

TIME to tuck the salad menus back in the kitchen drawer or wherever you keep your drawing account of menus for two. You can turn on the oven and broiler now without turning on the electric fan at the same time. Bring out the casseroles! Minus an oven or broiler? You can easily adapt baked and broiled foods to top-of-the-range cooking. Just as long as you have something to cook on, you can have a good dinner.

Magnet Meal

*Broiled Ham Glacé
*Norwegian Potatoes
Buttered Frozen Succotash
Coleslaw
*Ginger Icebox Dessert
Coffee

Pleasure for stay-at-homes revolves around a good dinner. Here's one to mention at the breakfast table—anticipate at night. It expands into a guest meal easily.

Make the dessert the night before, as it needs a good stand in the refrigerator—though it can be made in the morning of the day you wish to serve it. At the dinner hour start the potatoes first—then make the coleslaw. By that time you'll be ready to put the ham on to broil. Add seasonings to the potatoes and cook the frozen succotash. Your dessert is ready in the refrigerator.

GINGER ICEBOX CAKE

Whip ½ pint heavy cream and stir in 2½ tablespoons molasses. Open a tall can of the big round thin ginger wafers. Spread the ginger wafers generously with the molasses cream and stack them together in a long roll in a rectangular dish or on a platter. Use about 20 of the wafers, though you want to end up with ½ cup or so of the molasses cream to spread all over the outside. The number of cookies you use depends on how generously you spread them. Just be sure you have enough left to frost over outside. That's all there is to it. Chill overnight or at least 6 hours. Slice on the diagonal rather than straight across. The cookies will have taken on a delicate cake texture—the whole thing quite different from wh you started out with and thoroughly d licious.

NORWEGIAN POTATOES

Peel and dice 1 pound potatoes. Cook boiling salted water until tender. Drai Melt 1 tablespoon butter or margari and brown it a little. Add 1 tablespoo minced onion, 1 tablespoon toma paste, 1 teaspoon prepared mustard, teaspoon caraway seeds, 2 sour pickl chopped fine and 2 tablespoons crean Add potatoes and simmer 5 minutes.

GLACÉ NOTE FOR BROILED HAM

After ham is broiled to your liking—wit the fat browned and crisp — sprinkl lightly with sugar and let it carameliz and glaze the surface of the ham.

Top-of-range adaptation: Pan-broil th ham. In the last few minutes add a littl sugar. Turn ham several times to glaze

American Continental

Consommé
*Bread-and-Cheese Casserole
Green Salad
Concord Grapes
Coffee or Milk

In many European countries, good bread, a bit of native cheese and fresh fruit constitute a satisfying meal. Here is such a meal expanded ever so slightly to suit our American tastes. Hot canned consommé will be the appetizer. We'll have our bread and cheese hot in a casserole—simple and easy to make. With it, a good green salad. Cold blue grapes provide a fitting finish.

BREAD-AND-CHEESE CASSEROLE

…l cup grated sharp Cheddar cheese … well-beaten eggs. Add 1 teaspoon …z powder, ⅛ teaspoon salt and 1 …spoon prepared mustard. Remove … from 4 slices of bread. Cut each … in 4 pieces. Spread the bread pieces …ously with the cheese mixture. … one 8-ounce can tomato sauce. Al… e layers of cheese-spread bread with …o-sauce layers in a quart casserole … dividual casseroles. Heap any extra … mixture on top. Cover with strips …ked bacon broken in pieces. Bake … ow oven, 300°F., 20–30 minutes.

…-of-range adaptation: Make sand…s of cheese filling. Sauté in bacon …ings. Serve with tomato sauce and … bacon.

Plenty In Its Flavor

Tahiti Casserole
Italian Salad
Heated Italian Bread
Cantaloupe
Coffee

…s a meal you'll enjoy cooking. The …role dish is a quick put-together—has …w and different flavor, yet uses old …ars. The salad, hot bread and cold …loupe are its perfect complements.

TAHITI CASSEROLE

… ½ of a large peeled avocado or use 1 …e one if it is small. Arrange in 2 indi…d or 1 shallow casserole big enough …wo. Sprinkle ½ cup chopped water …s over avocado. Season well with salt …grate a little onion over the top. …and drain oil from one 8-ounce can …na fish. Break it up into pieces un…s it is the grated type. Thin 1 can con…ed cream of chicken soup with ¼ cup …. Heat it. Add tuna fish and 2 pieces …isp bacon, crumbled. Pour the hot …e over avocado and cress. Sprinkle …ered crumbs or crushed potato chips … the top. Bake quickly 10 minutes in …oven, 450°F., or broil under moderate … just until it begins to bubble and is …e heated through. Don't overcook.

…p-of-range adaptation: Make this a …ble-boiler special. Serve on toast.

…ote:* Heat Italian bread wrapped in a …r bag in bottom of oven or warming … in last few minutes before serving.

ITALIAN SALAD

… tomatoes on a bed of broken pieces …maine. Lay halves of anchovy strips …he sliced tomatoes. Sprinkle with …k pepper and dried crumbled orégano …asil. Pour a simple tart oil and vinegar …ch dressing over all. Don't drench …salad. There should be just enough.

Clearance

Réchauffé of Lamb
Buttered Broccoli
Raw Pear-and-Apple Salad
Cheese Toasts
Coffee

Even a small roast leg of lamb seems to last and last after it has made its initial appearance at the table for two. You can always use it in a curry—and there's always hash—but here is an interesting way to use leftover lamb. It isn't a true curry, it isn't hash. It's just what it is, and terribly good.

RÉCHAUFFÉ OF LAMB

Dice 2 cups leftover roast lamb in small pieces. Add 1 potato, diced. Be sure there are no chunks. Cut meat and potato carefully in quarter-inch cubes if you want your finished dish to look attractive. Add ½ cup green pepper and 1 small onion, finely chopped or minced, and 2 tablespoons chopped pimiento. Then add ½ cup tomato sauce or tomato paste thinned with a little water, 1½ teaspoons salt, a good grinding of fresh black pepper, ½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce and, if you like, ½ teaspoon curry powder. Heat all together and moisten with ½ cup leftover roast-lamb gravy. It shouldn't be too thick or too thin—but nice and moist and well seasoned. Serve in a casserole. Potato could be omitted, in which case you could serve this with mashed potatoes on top.

CHEESE TOASTS

When bread gets a little stale to serve as is, it makes very good dry toast. After toasting, cut in strips and spread with butter or margarine and sprinkle with grated dry Italian cheese. Heat in a warm oven until ready to serve.

Homespun Fare

Sausage Rice Cakes with Tomato Sauce
Scrambled Eggs with Chives
Celery and Pepper Strips
Toasted Split Corn Muffins
Prunecot Compote
Coffee or Milk

Sausage and eggs needn't always be considered in a morning category. They are a good foundation for a simple dinner too. The rice cakes make quite a thing of sausage.

PRUNECOT COMPOTE

To a No. 2 can stewed prunes, add 1 cup apricot juice and a slice of lemon. Simmer prunes 5 minutes. Serve hot with or without a spoonful of sour cream. Chilled, the compote can be served the next morning for breakfast. If you can't buy the canned cooked prunes, buy the quick-cooking dried prunes and simmer in apricot juice (18–20 prunes to 1 can apricot juice) instead of water until tender. You won't need to add sugar, as the prunes and apricot juice are sweet enough in themselves.

SAUSAGE RICE CAKES WITH TOMATO SAUCE

Mix 1 cup boiled rice (leftover rice from the previous night's dinner may be used) with 1 unbeaten egg, ½ teaspoon grated onion, ⅛ teaspoon salt and ⅓ pound raw bulk pork sausage. Shape into six flat cakes. Cook slowly on both sides in lightly greased skillet until brown on both sides. Drain off excess fat from pan. Add 1 can tomato sauce and simmer together 2 minutes.

Most Accomplished Kitchen-Helpers of them All

Get the most for your mixer investment! Just a few extra dollars for KitchenAid pay off . . . in results . . . in relief from scores of kitchen chores. Light, flaky pastries, fluffier cakes—they're always the range with Planetary Action. Extra attachments make kitchen work fun. Before you buy, see KitchenAid—built by Hobart, the world's largest, oldest maker of commercial food machines.

KitchenAid

THE FINEST MADE

No matter how you make it— Coffee's Best when Freshly Ground

There's nothing like freshly-ground coffee. Buy flavor-full whole coffee beans — fill the KitchenAid Electric Coffee Mill hopper — and just a flip of the switch tumbles fragrant-fresh coffee into the measuring glass. Your coffee is ready for brewing — in any desired grind — before flavor can even begin to fade. Try it—enjoy the finest coffee ever!

KitchenAid Division
The Hobart Manufacturing Co.,
Troy, Ohio

3 KitchenAid Food Preparers with complete attachment line — two KitchenAid Electric Coffee Mills. See them at better appliance, hardware and department stores everywhere.

KITCHEN REVIVAL

(Continued from Page 124)

bad. While the rest of the house had been restored, the kitchen had been "let go," as kitchens often are. It certainly called for major reconstruction before it could be even adequate.

As we surveyed the size of the room, the location of the doors, an L-shaped plan began to take shape. If the refrigerator could be placed near the entry, the sink under the window, the range near the serving-pantry and dining-room door, all cooking activities would be centered in an area that could be well lighted and as far removed as possible from other passageways.

Fortunately, a bathroom on the floor above made the change in the plumbing for the sink relatively simple, and the new location of the electric range required less cable than the old. The plan was settled.

THE first step in remodeling was to rip out the floor, install new supports and solid beams and lay a good level floor. The contractor was right about that—the floor had sagged until it was nearly three inches lower in the middle than at the sides. With the floor up it was much easier to bring heat to the kitchen and install a new radiator.

The next structural change was to get more light in the room. The one full-sized window was raised so that sill height came above the sink. The slit-in-the-wall window was replaced with two new ones that gave sunlight and a view of the garden.

The ceiling was next attacked. It was a network of pipes and loose hanging wires, for every time anyone had put plumbing in the house, more pipes were stuck along that ceiling, in a feverish criss-cross pattern. With all the pipes, there had been no heat in the kitchen! On a cold winter morning, you could see your breath as you broke the eggs in the pan.

> A wife is a logical creature who asks "Where did you have it fixed?" and goes there, and there it is.
> H. [illegible] in Detroit News.

Installing a new ceiling of wallboard to cover the exposed ugly pipes was found to cost less than removing or relocating pipes. Seven-foot ceilings are typical of old houses, and this added a livable look to the kitchen. New fluorescent-lighting fixtures set flush with the ceiling were located over the main work areas.

The equipment which this discouraged kitchen apologetically displayed was amazing. There was the old coal range—not warm and glowing with the pride of usefulness, but standing bleakly on a cement block, covered with oilcloth and used as a catchall. On one side of it stood an old water tank—idling, since a new tank supplied hot water from the basement. On the other side was the ten-year-old, two-oven electric range—the most modern thing in the kitchen, but in need of repair.

A giant old refrigerator filled the space between the doors to the storeroom and the service pantry. Years ago it had acquired an electric mechanism, but in spite of its size, it offered little storage space. At the farthest and darkest end of the room leaned an old tired sink with old sloping drainboards. Aside from the top of the old range, the only storage space was a small sway-backed shelf over the electric range. The supplies were kept chiefly in a storeroom across the room from the cooking center. The walls had been a dingy green. Painted off-white some years ago, they still showed the green undercoat in a ghastly tone.

The unused water tank, the ancient refrigerator, the coal range were sold for the junk they were. The old sink was saved for a future flower-arrangement center in the laundry. The old electric range was turned in toward a new model.

The double-bowl cabinet sink with drainboards which Mrs. Dunn had visioned was installed under the new window, the new range and refrigerator set in place at either end of the natural L-shaped plan. Cabinets and counters filled the space between. The counter below the new double windows over the radiator was left open providing room for the garbage pail and wastebasket, with sliding towel racks under that counter.

Along the wall where the old sink had been installed, a narrow cupboard was built with a linoleum table-top surface. Vertical slots for trays, drawers and cupboards provided storage for kitchen linen and silver, flowers and table appliances.

At about the time the new floor was laid, the selection of linoleum brought up the question of the whole color scheme of the kitchen. In revolt against the old kitchen, Mrs. Dunn had at first insisted that all she wanted of a kitchen was clinical cleanliness and streamlined efficiency. But as she saw the plan developing she suddenly realized that she might not like too much of these qualities either. She was just as vivid in her description of the kitchen she visualized as she had been in describing the old one:

"I realized suddenly this morning that I was going to have a really efficient kitchen. It hadn't seemed possible or quite real before. When I began to believe it, I also saw that you were quite right: I don't really want a clinical kitchen at all; I want the most glamorous, gay, unusual, dreamy kitchen that anyone could devise! I have been torn between lining the walls with mottled suits of armor (to pick up the chrome metal) with possibly crossed spears above, and the simpler and more practical device of just keeping cacocks. Not white ones. But now I've had a revelation—Guatemala, our favorite spot. Actually, I think I'd rather live with the colors that are characteristic of Guatemala than any others in the world—transparent blue sky, misty violet hills, and the scarlet and magenta blaze of bougainvillaea against deep green foliage and the sharp green grass. The Guatemans themselves must feel the endless charm of the colors of their country, because you see those colors in all their work—baskets, pottery, fabrics—repeated over and over. A Guatemalan kitchen would be heavenly—not only to work in, but to live in."

On their vacation the Dunns scoured Guatemala for fabrics, tin and pottery.

The foliage green went into the floor linoleum and was used in paint for the recessed shelves where the gay Guatemalan objects found their place. Two walls and the ceiling were painted sky blue, and two walls (on the lighter side of the room) were painted violet. A sturdy cotton plaid in violet, green and white which the Dunns brought back from Guatemala was used for cushions on the table bench and chairs. The magenta of the bougainvillaea which Mrs. Dunn loved so much was used in straight-hanging cotton curtains and in a simple wooden valance over the windows. The valance was stenciled in chalk white with a typical Guatemalan design.

Light green accents were carried in painted chairs, shelves over the sink for accessories. This green brought the two unusual colors into perfect harmony.

THE lovely patina of the tinware, a soft glow, and the decorative tin lamps, wired for electricity, were hung over the eating center.

Now on a cold winter morning, Mrs. Dunn can broil the bacon in a setting as colorful as her heart desires, and warm her spirit with the magenta of the bougainvillaea—at the same time warming her hands at the new radiator!

Many women may never see the mountain peaks of Guatemala—but all women have some cherished piece which could help them bring [illegible] an old stoneware plate or a favorite print, but whatever it is, it can help add your kitchen some special interest. You have a recipe for pleasant living. THE END

He'll have 3 wishes

WHEN YOU MAKE THIS CHOCOLATE NUT SUNDAE CAKE

His wishes? One: "Wish I had another piece of this swell cake!" Two: "Wish Mom could see it!" Three: "Wish you'd come here and get properly kissed!"

It's a man's cake, all right . . . this rich, ice-creamy-smooth Swans Down white cake, knee-deep in two shades of luscious chocolate frosting and a lavish drift of chopped nuts.

Any greenie can make it, too, and never miss, if she follows directions.

For it's a Swans Down "Mix-Easy"... no creaming, beating cut in half, measured and timed exactly. Fewer dishes to wash! Richer taste—and it keeps longer, if you can keep any of it!

• • •

Swans Down guarantees it . . . but not with any other flour!

Double the cost of your ingredients back—that's the Swans Down offer—if you don't think your Swans Down cake is better than any similar cake you've made with any other flour.

Try it! You'll see why more women choose Swans Down than any other packaged cake flour in America!

SWANS DOWN CHOCOLATE NUT SUNDAE LAYER CAKE

Preparations: [illegible] the shortening at room [illegible] layer pans with paper; grease. Start oven for moderate heat (350°F.). Sift flour once before measuring. (All measurements [illegible])

Measure into sifter:

2½ cups [illegible]
[illegible]
3 [illegible]
1 teaspoon [illegible]
1¼ cups [illegible]

Measure into mixing bowl:

⅔ cup shortening

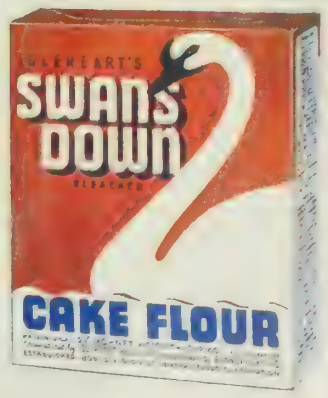
Measure into cup:

[illegible]
[illegible] vanilla

Have ready:

5 egg whites, beaten to meringue* with ½ cup sugar

*For meringue, beat 5 egg whites with rotary egg beater (or at high speed of electric mixer) until foamy; add ½ cup sugar gradually, beating only until meringue will hold up in soft peaks.



Now—Swans Down's "Mix-Easy" Part!
(Mix by hand or at a low speed of electric mixer.) Stir shortening just to soften. Sift in dry ingredients. Add milk and mix until all flour is dampened. Then beat 2 minutes. Add meringue mixture and beat 1 minute longer. (Count only actual beating time. Or count beating strokes. Allow about 150 full strokes per minute. Scrape bowl and spoon often.)

Baking: Turn batter into pans. Bake in moderate oven (350°F.) about 35 minutes.

To Frost: Spread Chocolate Sundae Frosting between layers and on top of cake, reserving ¼ cup frosting for decorating. Sprinkle ½ cup coarsely chopped nut meats over top of cake. Add 2 teaspoons hot water to the reserved frosting; heat and stir over hot water until thinned. Dribble from teaspoon over nuts.

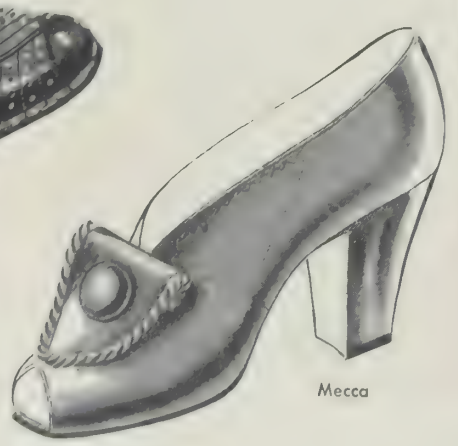
Chocolate Sundae Frosting. Melt 4 squares Baker's Unsweetened Chocolate in double boiler. Remove from boiling water, add 2½ cups sifted confectioners' sugar and 4 tablespoons hot water and blend. Add 5 egg yolks, one at a time, beating well after each. Then add 6 tablespoons butter, 1 tablespoon at a time, beating well after each amount.

No creaming!
Beating cut in half!
Fewer dishes to wash!
Richer taste!
Longer keeping!

A product of General Foods

Bake a better cake with Swans Down

so feminine



...yet so comfortable

SHORTBACK

Foot Saver Shoes

Lisbon

Mecca

Only Foot Savers are made over the Shortback* Last which provides low cut and gapping at the heel without pinching at the toe.

Foot Savers have a flattering "ladylike look," so becoming with the new feminine fashions. But don't be deceived by their soft, lovely lines—because they cleverly hide a long-lasting quality that's typically Foot Saver. And the comfort that is Foot Saver's alone since they're made over the exclusive Shortback* Last to hold your heel firmly, yet give your toes plenty of room. For that sheltered look . . . for sought-after comfort . . . these new, feminine Foot Savers. Write today for your copy of our Fall style booklet and name of the Foot Saver dealer nearest you. Address The Julian & Kokenge Co., 28 West Main Street, Columbus 15, Ohio.

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

SHORTBACK Foot Saver Shoes

WILL THEY COUNT YOUR VOTE?

(Continued from Page 53)

books election officials brought into the polling places on the day the people were to decide whether they wanted Kilgore or Sweeney in the United States Senate.

Now, who were these officials, and what does the law say about them? Does it require them to pass any examination, or give any other proof of fitness to supervise an election, the crucial function of our democratic society? It does not. Does it even demand that they be able to read and write? It does not. But there is one thing it does call for, and that is that they be chosen by the political leaders of both parties—in a word, that they be politicians themselves. That means they got their jobs on a straight partisan basis. In many cases, it also means they may never get such jobs again if they allow their consciences to override their sense of obligation.

As I have suggested, some of these guardians of the sacred ballot of democracy were gamblers. Some were ex-bootleggers. And a considerable percentage, in certain southern counties, were men and women who greatly admire the trick of outwitting the innocent voters. They would regard the theft of a dollar as criminal. But the theft of a vote is a proof of skill in a game.

According to the statute, there must be at least two Republican and two Democratic officials at every polling place. But in certain precincts on Election Day, 1946, the Republicans never showed up. What happened to them? Your guess is as good as mine. At any rate, I have sworn statements that their places were taken by registered Democrats. This put the polling places in absolute control of the party opposing my election. It also violated the already unsatisfactory registration law.

That was just the first point where the law was violated.

What took place in certain precincts when voters began to arrive? Did they sign the registry, cast secret ballots and go about their business? Not on your life. The clerks signed and voted for them. Then they were given evidence to prove that they were "all right." The evidence was exchangeable outside for $3, $5, $7 or a pint of whisky.

In some cases the clerks "voted the books" wholesale, forging registration signatures and casting stacks of ballots for the candidate they admired. Legitimate electors who turned up after this were told, "You've already voted. You can't vote twice."

We found 170 ballots in a single district, marked for my opponent in a style so characteristic that it was all obviously the work of one hand.

In other instances, carloads of floaters arrived to exercise the franchise for the dead, the absent and the insane. Then they rolled off to repeat the performance elsewhere. Floaters are the skilled labor of crooked politics. I've been told their emolument sometimes reaches $100 a day.

THE newspapers of my state have repeatedly called attention to the open practice of vote buying in the southern counties. As far back as 1940, agents of the United States Senate saw it going on and put their findings into an official report. But nobody went to jail for it. And no new laws were written to prevent it from happening again and again. That leaves the honest citizens of West Virginia, or Maine, or California, still unprotected against the dishonest citizens—the ballot buyers.

As for those who sell their ballots, here's the way a dozen who were interviewed feel about it. "Was it an honest election?" they were asked.

"Sure it was honest," they answered. "Every one of us here got a fair price for his vote."

It's worth noting that Luke P. Carroll, New York Herald Tribune reporter, once asked the mayor of Prestonsburg, Kentucky, whether it was true that miners sold their families' votes for $1. Here is the mayor's reply, printed in the Herald Tribune of September 2[illegible] 1946:

"That's a damn lie! Things have gone in the last few years. The price is now [illegible] as $5 a vote. And let me tell you, if [illegible] friends don't buy those votes, the Republicans will buy them. There are some people here who just won't vote unless they get [illegible]

The "Jack" referred to was Congressman Andrew J. May, who figured so prominently in an investigation of war contracts.

What happens to honest citizens who don't go home quietly when told, "You've already voted"? There are ways of persuading them. One of my affidavits states that a drunken deputy sheriff wandered around a certain polling place, ostentatiously wagging a revolver. In Jersey City, New Jersey, Mayor Hague's policemen have been known to escort overzealous objectors to jail. The Pendergast machine in Kansas City was even more forceful. Four persons were killed and 200 put in the hospital during the municipal election of 1934.

AND do you remember the murder of Salvatoriggio? He was killed on his way to a New York polling place to look for possible [illegible] supporters of Vito Marcantonio, the Communist congressman, and Governor Dewey described his death as "an attempt by left wingers to intimidate others working for a free election."

I spoke above of the theft of election records. We didn't have quite so sensational a show as they had in Kansas City recently when burglars hustled ballot boxes from the courthouse basement before the F.B.I. could get its hands on them. But in Jersey City a few years back, when pollbooks were burned to thwart a search that might have proved that then governor had no right to his office. Or in Athens, Tennessee, where veterans used Tommy guns and tear gas to get the ballot boxes out of the hands of those who had seized them unlawfully. But we had our own little parade nevertheless.

It began in a hotel corridor at 3 o'clock in the morning after election, when a bellboy overheard some suspicious shenanigans in one of the rooms. He caught enough to convince him that two men were in that room, changing Republican to Democratic ballots, and having stolen them from the courthouse. He called for help, but the men disappeared. So did 2600 ballots. Two men were arrested the next day on the basis of information supplied by several persons, including the new janitor of the courthouse. Who do you think went to the jail? The janitor.

The ballots, meanwhile, are still missing.

